Herman Cohen's message is somewhat different from what has previously been said in Washington. Instead of presenting what the Americans see as their proof of the Eastern states' arms deliveries to the guerrillas in El Salvador, Cohen has, during his talks with Swedish politicians, placed the emphasis on explaining, in general terms, the U.S. view on the war in the Central American republic. U.S. diplomats believe that they have been able to substantiate the U.S. accusations, particularly against Cuba and Nicaragua, of aid in the form of weapons, with the material published in Washington. The question of arms deliveries from the East is no longer the most important thing, Cohen said. Now negotiations must be started.

During his visit to Stockholm, Cohen has had talks both with the government, Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten, the Riksdag Foreign Affairs Committee, and with the Social Democrats and the Swedish Trade Union Confederation. This is how Ola Ullsten commented on his discussion.

[Begin recording] [Ullsten] Our analyses do not agree completely, but in one respect we adopted a joint stance and that is that it would be desirable--in my case, I mean, it is a must--to achieve a rapid solution to the conflict in El Salvador. He [words indistinct] hopes in that respect. I believe that the United States should contribute to such a solution, rather than prolonging the military conflict which is now under way, which is causing immense suffering and which rather alienates the parties from each other, thus making it more difficult with every day to contemplate a peaceful settlement.

[Question] Did Cohen say anything to make you, Mr Ullsten, change you view of El Salvador?

[Ullsten] No, I don't think so. He [word indistinct] the American position which I already know. What may be interesting is that they are doing this trip less to explain the American policy and more to prepare the stance which may finally take place, and this may be a source of optimism, if you like. [end recording]

Cohen himself believes that he has contributed to the fact that various governments and parties in Europe no longer view the United States as the only scapegoat in El Salvador but hold a less rigid view.

What do the Social Democrats say? The Swedish Social Democrats are right now playing a role, within the framework of the Socialist International, to get talks going. Bengt [name indistinct] Soderberg at the Workers' Movement's International Center said that Cohen's message does not tally. How can increased arms deliveries to one party contribute to a political solution based on a tolerable social justice, he asked.

NO INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR MILITARY DEFENSE

LD041105 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 27 Feb 81 p 7

[Erik Liden report]

[Text] There will be no more money for military defenses in the 1982 defense bill. Instead, greater resources may need to be given to the civilian sections of the total defense system within the framework of an unchanged defense budget.

This is the content of the 1978 defense committee's perliminary recommendation, which the committee will present to Defense Minister Eric Kronmark (Moderate Coalition Party) on Friday [27 February].

The Social Democrats on the committee express their reservations and recommend reduced funds for military defenses. They say, for example, that there is general agreement that the civilian parts should be strengthened. They also consider that military defenses could achieve an adequate level of efficiency at a lower cost than they do today. At the same time the Social Democrats want to give conscripts a considerably improved payment during basic training so that this can be given without significant private sacrifices. The Social Democrats also want to consider a working week of 40 hours with the exception of special exercises.

The nonsocialist members of the committee have not voiced any economic views about the different branches of total defenses, but are waiting until the final recommendations and put forward an increase in the total economic framework. Before that the question of a new aircraft, peacetime organization, fallout shelter construction and the question of index-linking will have to be resolved. Compensation for inflation and military wage increases do function smoothly, and the committee is therefore agreed on the abolition of the net price index used for the defense forces today.

The committee is also agreed that future defense legislation should span a number of 5,000 years to make possible planned activities adapted to the available resources.

Hans Linblad and Carl Tham (Liberal Party) want the civil defense to directly recruit young people per year during the eighties. Of these 1,000-1,500 should be women between 20 and 25, 1,500 conscripts in alternative service and 1,500-2,000 young conscripts selected directly at the draft for 4 to 6 weeks of civil defense training. This would, according to the Liberal Party, ease the transition to the smaller age classes which will come after 1985. It is also important, the Liberal Party says, to be able to vary training time more than today.

The defense committee has also revised the security policy recommendations put forward in June 1979. Insecurity and tension have increased in the surrounding areas. The arms race has accelerated at the same time as there has been no progress on disarmament questions. Sweden's role remains. We must fight for increased international understanding but at the same time maintain strong total defenses for the sake of the security balance. Measures to heighten readiness in the event of surprise attacks must be given priority, the defense committee says.

Protection for the whole population must be improved. Within a 10-year period there should be protective masks for all. The committee finds it remarkable that there is still no protection for the smallest children. The committee assumes that bulk protection of this type of equipment will be underway in 3 to 4 years.

DENKTAS SCORES KIPRIANOU'S REMARKS AS 'DECEITFUL'

[Excerpt] President Rauf Denktas has said that by promising the Greek Cypriot refugees that they will return to their homes, Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou is denying all the principles agreed upon by the two sides for the resolution of the Cyprus problem. Replying to reporters' questions on Kiprianou's remarks, Denktas said: The responsibility is all Kiprianou's. It is regretful that he should make such unilateral remarks, deceitful remarks to his people. President Denktas said that Kiprianou should know that he could not reverse the population exchange agreement implemented in 1975. The agreement later constituted one of the principles of the Denktas-Makarios agreement reached in 1977.

Denktas recalled that with the population exchange, some 65,000 Turkish Cypriots left everything behind in the south and went to the north, to freedom, but without forgetting the suffering of the past 11 years. He added that 150,000 Turkish Cypriots had established a state in the north, a state whose basis was the Turkish Cypriot community's partnership rights in Cyprus' independence and sovereignty. He pointed out that this state was now marking its sixth anniversary. Denktas stressed that no one had the right to eliminate these facts. The president also said that the Turkish Cypriot community was continuing to participate in the intercommunal talks with good will in line with Secretary General Waldheim's appeal. He added: The Turkish Cypriot side will continue to participate in the intercommunal talks with good will unless Kiprianou's deceitful remarks to his people are repeated at the negotiating table or unless they are declared to be the new Greek Cypriot policy.

Replying to another question, Denktas said that it was easy to allege past Turkish Cypriot [word indistinct] but that it was impossible to prove that. He added: [words indistinct] for peace in Cyprus. However, the Greek Cypriots did not show any understanding. This was because we did not renounce our status as partners [words indistinct] or Turkey's guarantees. We opposed the measures that would return our community to the sufferings of the 1963-74 period. That is the sign of our love of and (?debt) to our people. The existence of two peoples in Cyprus is our starting point. We are opposed to any formula that gives Cyprus to the Greek Cypriots only. The president also stressed that any proposal that could turn the Turkish Cypriots into second class citizens or a minority would also be opposed. He stated that the Turkish Cypriot side did not agree that the Greek Cypriot side had more political rights than itself.

Greek Cypriot Response

[Text] The government spokesman, commenting on yesterday's statement by the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr Denktas, by which he criticises the president of the republic, Mr Spiros Kiprianou, with regard to his declarations on the return of the refugees to their homes, has stated:

"We see no reason why Mr Denktas should express surprise at President Kiprianou's statement about the inalienable right of the refugees to return to their ancestral homes. What is astonishing is Mr Denktas' insistence that in 1975 an exchange of population agreement was made. We challenge Mr Denktas to clarify this statement and say when such an agreement was made, with whom and what its contents were. Our side has not made an exchange of population agreement, nor does such agreement exist for the government."

NEW AEGEAN AIRSPACE ARRANGEMENTS TO BE ANNOUNCED

[Excerpt] Greece is expected to proceed unilaterally and announce in the near future certain new "arrangements" for Aegean airspace. These arrangements will be "a gesture of good will" by the Greek side in return for the lifting of "NOTAM 714" by Ankara.

These "arrangements" will be made within the framework of regulations provided by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) and will concern the status of certain Aegean air corridors not in operation (mainly W14, linking Kavalla with the Dodecanese), limiting the length of the terminal area at Limnos airport and the operation of a new air corridor allowing an air link between Izmir and Libya (Tripoli and Benghazi).

These "arrangements" are expected to be announced before the meeting between the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries--to be held on 16 March in Ankara--and Greece believes it will contribute to improving the climate for the Greek-Turkish dialogue.

As is known, Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen made several statements recently, stressing that his Greek counterpart Mitsotakis had promised that there would be "a gesture of good will" by the Greek side. Turkmen also expressed his concern at the delay in announcing this.

Meanwhile, Turkmen will pay an official visit to Washington from 31 March to 2 April to hold talks with his U.S. counterpart Haig.

SOVIET AMBASSADOR BRIEFS MITSOTAKIS ON CONGRESS

NC051802 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 5 Mar 81

[Text] Today Soviet Ambassador in Athens Kaboshkin called on Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, whom he briefed on the resolutions of the 26th CPSU Congress. On this occasion Mr Mitsotakis and Mr Kaboshkin proceeded with a review of all questions of mutual interest to Greece and the Soviet Union and noted satisfactory progress. Also, both sides reiterated the wish to further develop relations between the two countries.

GOVERNMENT SEEKS IMPROVED RELATIONS WITH ALBANIA

NC041534 Athens NEWS in English 4 Mar 81 p 4

[Text] Greece intends to further improve its relations with neighboring Albania, and to this end the Foreign Ministry is preparing a bill for Parliament to lift all obstacles to such a move, especially the decree which still considers Albania a belligerent, Foreign Undersecretary Theokharis Rendis told Parliament yesterday.

He was replying to a question by PASOK deputies, who had also raised the issue of Greece's attitude toward the military dictatorship in Turkey and asked the government to contribute to the restoration of democracy in that country.

Mr Rendis said that it was the Greek Government's hope and wish that democratic institutions in Turkey may function again soon.

EVREN SENDS MESSAGE ON DEATH OF OFFICIALS

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has said that the Turkish nation insistently demands that care be taken to apprehend and punish those who killed the Turkish labor attache in Paris, Resat Morali, and the religious official, Tecelli Ari.

General Evren sent a message to Tourism and Information Minister and Acting Labor Minister Ilhan Evliyaoglu in connection with the martyrdom of Morali and Ari. According to the statement issued by the press and public relations office of the head of state, Evren's message is as follows: I was profoundly grieved by the martyrdom of our labor attache at the Paris Embassy and a valuable member of the Labor Ministry, Morali, as a result of an abominable attack yesterday, and by the wounding of religious official Ari and his subsequent death. The fact that these murderers are continuing their attacks against our country's representatives abroad and our missions, despite all our warnings and our numerous steps to prevent them, shows that these murders are determined to continue their base attitude and actions. We deplore this inhuman act. It is an inevitable obligation for countries that favor tranquillity and peace to take more effective measures against the international terrorism that manifests itself in different forms and dimensions each day. We, as a nation, insistently demand that officials and those concerned show the necessary interest in capturing the culprits as soon as possible and giving them the punishment they deserve.

At the end of his message, General Evren prayed for God's mercy for Morali and Ari and extended his condolences to their colleagues.

VOTCP: CIA SUPPORTS TERRORISM AGAINST DIPLOMATS

[Station commentary: "Bloody Provocations"]

[Text] Four Turkish diplomats have been killed in recent months. The intensification of these murders is in line with the increase of imperialist pressures on our country. Furthermore, the reactionary press has stepped up its campaign of enmity against the Armenian people, and its provocations and demagogy of trying to portray the Soviet Union as being involved in these terrorist incidents. Imperialist publications are waging a similar campaign. They are spewing out their anti-Soviet venom. There are some who go as far as to resort to lowly lies that internationally famous and respectable Soviet scientists are involved in terrorism.

However, these disgusting slanders are not believed by the Turkish public. Anyone who is realistic and who does not see things from behind anti-Soviet glasses knows that this stupid propaganda is just what it is--propaganda. Let us recall that the terrorist Tashnak Party was supported by the British intelligence service from the start. The magazine YANKI reported that the Western intelligence organizations have extensive information about these terrorist organizations. It also reported that the false rumors about Soviet help to Armenian terrorists were fabricated by British sources who intend, as they put it, to maintain the tense atmosphere between Turkey and the Soviet Union.

It is a very coarse lie that the Soviet Union is in any way connected with such terrorist organizations. The Tashnak Party, which constitutes the basis of the terrorist organizations, is a counterrevolutionary organization which has set up a "white army" and fought against the socialist revolution of the Armenian people, an organization which shed the blood of its brothers.

The British supported Tashnak not only against Turkey but against Soviet Armenia, which is more important for them. Later, imperialism fed this racist counterrevolutionary organization which is hostile to Soviet Armenia and which exists outside Armenia. Eventually, the CIA took the organization under its wings.

Today, one of the main centers of these terrorists is the United States. Their leaders and their addresses are known. They are supported overtly by U.S. circles.

Anyone who follows the developments realistically cannot ignore the fact that imperialism usually plays it both ways in order to attain its dirty goals. All these are undeniable facts that cannot be concealed.

U.S. and CIA dollars are the basis of the murders being committed against Turkish diplomats.

Meanwhile, reactionary circles are making counterterrorist provocations against Armenians inside and outside Turkey. A (?bomb-planting) anti-Armenian and fascist terrorist organization was uncovered in the United States. The daily TERCUMAN praised this organization.

Unfortunately, certain circles which generally seem to defend realistic positions now seem to be taken in by these provocations, perhaps as a result of the rage felt against terrorism. These circles are saying such things as: If there are no humanistic solutions then other radical solutions must be sought. Such an attitude can only serve the interests of the circles which organize the murders. Mutual escalations will step up this terrorism being perpetrated outside.

The Armenian people do not want terrorism, either in Turkey or in other countries. Nobody sees terrorism as an answer to the Armenian massacre and injustices. Nobody sees it as a solution to the problems of the Armenians living in Turkey. It is only the imperialists and the United States which want terrorism and which consider it useful. By means of terrorism, they are trying to incite anti-Sovietism and to impose adventurist U.S. demands more easily on Turkey. Any hostility, oppression or terrorism against the Armenian people can only serve the interests of U.S. imperialism and of its spying organization, the CIA.

ULUSU RETURNS FROM IRAN-IRAQ PEACE MISSION

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that the good will mission established in a bid to put an end to the war between Iran and Iraq has issued concrete proposals to this effect. Prime Minister Ulusu returned to Ankara today at 1800 after participating in the good will mission in Jidda and the capitals of Iran and Iraq. Ulusu was received at Esenboga Airport by State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara, Ankara Governor Mustafa Gonul and the Ankara mayor and garrison commander.

In a statement upon his arrival, Ulusu said the mission had made a four-point proposal to both countries in a bid to put an end to the war. Ulusu added that though there was no official reaction to these proposals, he hoped the two sides would exert efforts in a bid to reach a constructive result.

OZAL LEAVES FOR LIBYA FOR ECONOMIC TALKS

[Text] State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal today left for the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah as the official guest of the Libyan secretary of municipalities, Abu Zayd 'Umar Durdah.

In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport before his departure, Ozal said that he will discuss with Libyan Government officials the issues of oil and exchange of other goods between the two countries.

Pointing out that Turkish businessmen and contractors were engaged in significant investments in Libya and had assisted in the development of the country, Ozal noted that efforts are being exerted to further develop the existing relations with the other friendly Arab countries.

Certain officials from the Foreign and Commerce Ministries as well as the Central Bank accompanied Ozal to Libya. Representatives of Turkish contracting firms engaged in business in Libya are also included in the delegation.

More on Trip's Goals

[Text] Istanbul, 5 Mar (AA)--Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, during a stopover in Istanbul before flying to Libya on an official visit, announced Turkey's exports to Libya will amount to 500 million dollars this year and most of the exports will be manufactured goods. Ozal believed total exports to Libya could be raised to 800 million dollars within a few years. Referring to the increasing volume of contracts with foreign countries and of Turkish workers' foreign currency earnings, he said, "There has been considerable progress in our exports and currency earnings, which has surprised all the pessimists. Our task now is to make everything easy for Turkish businessmen who are working in foreign countries."

The total volume of contracts won by Turkish businessmen abroad approaches 4 billion dollars.

ECEVIT MEETS WITH FRG PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

[Text] Ankara, 5 Mar (AA)--The visiting group of Federal German parliamentarians met with former RPP Chairman Bulent Ecevit yesterday.

After the meeting, Ecevit told reporters there had always been strong links between the two countries and the most important link was their common devotion to democracy. Ecevit said, "Other factors can always be (?adjusted) to changes in the international situation but both Germany's and our devotion to democracy will always be the basic factor in our relations."

Head of the German parliamentary team Alois Mertes said they had heard one criticism about the behavior of Turkish political parties before 12 September. The target for this visit was to find out the facts about these criticisms. They visited Ecevit in order to learn his thoughts on this subject, he added. Mertes stressed that German parliamentarians did not come to Turkey for the purpose of control. Their aim was to examine the truth about the criticisms of Turkey as a "friendly team."

Delegation's News Conference

[Text] Alois Mertes, head of the FRG parliamentary delegation visiting Ankara, has said that the delegation would advise the FRG Government and Parliament to continue to grant aid to Turkey. Delegation members held a news conference in Ankara today and said their purpose is to have a better understanding of mutual defense issues, of problems of Turkish workers employed in the FRG and of problems that led to the elimination of parliamentary democracy in Turkey. They added that the purpose of their visit was not to conduct an investigation but to receive detailed information about the present situation in the country. They stated that they have had very beneficial contacts in Ankara and were convinced that Turkish officials were anxious to return to the democratic system as soon as possible.

Earlier, the FRG parliamentary delegation visited the headquarters of the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] for talks with confederation officials. In a statement following the meeting, Turk-Is General Secretary Ibrahim Denizcier said he had briefed the delegation on labor problems in Turkey and that the issue of the FRG requiring that visas be obtained by Turkish workers was also discussed during the talks. Denizcier said he tried to explain the damage caused by this resolution.

MILITARY COMMITTED TO EARLY RETURN TO DEMOCRACY

LD041725 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 25 Feb 81 p 18

[Erik Sagflaat interview with Turkish Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztirak: "We Want Democracy As Soon As Possible"; date and place not given]

[Text] The alternative to the 12 September military coup last year was that democracy would be lost for ever in Turkey. We want to get through the present situation and back to democracy in the shortest possible time and we expect our allies to understand us.

The Turkish state does not approve the use of torture. Many people have been arrested. But, widespread as the terrorism was, it is impossible to clean up with only a few arrests.

These are some of the statements made by Turkish Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztirak in an interview with ARBEIDERBLADET.

[Question] Does Turkey realize that its relations with West Europe will be worse after the military coup?

[Answer] We think that the situation need not get worse after the military takeover. The situation in Turkey is special, and one must not confuse Turkey with conditions in Latin America or in Greece under the junta. The military has intervened three times and every time they have said from the first day that they wanted to strengthen democracy and improve relations with their Western allies. We want to have a democracy, even though the situation in September last year forced the military to intervene. The alternative to this intervention would have been that democracy in Turkey would have been lost forever. We want to get through this situation and back to democracy in the shortest possible time, and we expect our friends and allies in NATO to understand us.

[Answer] Three days ago a police chief in Istanbul was killed by three terrorists. The three are known to the police; they have been arrested three times but have been released for lack of evidence. We want a just and democratic legal system, but we have to pay for it. In this case of the murder of the police chief, if we had used torture the three would have confessed the first time they were arrested. There have been no infringements. But show me a country where there are no infringements by the police. This does not mean that the state approves of such infringements. Turkish law forbids torture and, as soon as such allegations are made, they are investigated. In four cases we have found proof of maltreatment, and the guilty have been imprisoned and are awaiting sentence.

[Question] And what about the mass arrests?

[Answer] Since the coup, 140,000 pistols, over 3,000 automatic rifles (the majority Kalashnikovs), 25,000 rifles and 2,000 kgs of explosives have been confiscated. It is obvious that under such conditions it is impossible to clean up with one or two arrests. But all will be tried in independent courts, and what other country has had the courage to let all cases be tried in free courts? Does this happen anywhere in Latin America, Asia or Africa?

[Answer] In January in Ankara, 204 people were arrested in connection with a single case. With them were found 18 automatic weapons, 17 of which were Kalshnikovs, 80 pistols, 12,400 rounds, a grenade launcher, an antiaircraft missile, and a large quantity of dynamite. A total of 204 people arrested in connection with one case seems a lot to a West European, and it sounds a lot to me, too. But when we look at what they had in the way of arms and at what they did, we know that, if they had not been arrested, innocent people would have been killed. They had a list of 3,000 names, of state servants, police and judges, with addresses, pictures and descriptions of daily habits. It was planned that some of these 3,000 should be killed.

[Question] Before the coup, martial law had been introduced in 70 percent of the country. Why could the military not clean up then, without going as far as a takeover?

[Answer] The big political parties were each dependent on support from a wing on the right or left. They did not dare push through law and order, out of fear that they might lose this support. The security forces had no confidence in the government. The police force was split into two factions according to political sympathies. When raids were to be carried out, political allies were informed in advance. The judges were afraid to pass sentence out of fear for their families and themselves. It is impossible to effect a cleanup under such conditions.

[Question] Was it not possible to build further on the political parties which existed?

[Answer] The political parties had lost all prestige. Just imagine a parliament which was unable to pass a single law, which could not manage to elect a president. There were many good people among the politicians, but they were not in a position to do anything. Our goal now is that the transitional period should be as short as possible, so that power can be returned to the politicians.

[Question] How short?

[Answer] It will not take long. We can already see small symptoms that the process toward the reintroduction of democracy is in motion. In the course of this year, an assembly will be appointed to legislate on a constitution. A new constitution will be drafted, and a referendum will be held about it. And then it will be time for new elections. I was also a minister 8 years ago, and so, I am speaking from experience when I say that Turkey will return to democracy. The generals want to go back to the barracks and to their own profession as soon as possible.

[Question] Turkey has downgraded its relations with Israel. Does this mean a strengthening of its ties with the Arab world to the detriment of relations with West Europe?

[Answer] Relations with Israel have been downgraded, but they will be maintained. We have always had good relations with the Arab world; we have a common Islamic inheritance. But these good relations will not have any detrimental effect on our relations with West Europe. We will maintain our membership in NATO and in the Council of Europe; we want to expand our relations with the EEC. We want good relations with all countries. The downgrading of relations with Israel has nothing to do with our relationship to the Arab world.

[Question] How long will Turkey be dependent on foreign aid?

[Answer] Turkey has great resources, but like so many others we have suffered under the violent increase in oil prices. We have entered a stabilization process, and we hope to be managing on our own in 5 years' time. But until then we need help. Exports have already risen, we had a new record in December, and this has given us encouragement; it shows that we can solve our problems. Turkey has large agricultural reserves, and with modern methods we could be a food producer for the whole world. This would give us much-needed foreign currency.

COMMUNIST PARTY GREETS VENEZUELAN COMMUNISTS

TA061004 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 6 Mar 81

[Message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Venezuela on the latter's 50th anniversary]

[Text] Dear comrades, on behalf of the Turkish Communists and the Turkish working class, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee sincerely congratulates the brotherly Communist Party of Venezuela [PCV] on its 50th anniversary and extends its revolutionary struggle greetings. Since the day it was established, the PCV has been struggling for the economic, democratic, political and social interests of the Venezuelan working class. The PCV considers it its duty to wage a determined struggle against opportunism, both in legal and illegal conditions, as well as to protect the Marxist-Leninist principles and aims as the apple of its eye.

Today, the PCV is struggling to unite all the democratic forces in the country in one front against the sovereignty of the local and foreign monopolies, against imperialist demands and against the increasingly wild capitalist exploitation.

The military dictatorship in Turkey has arrested tens of thousands of democratic and progressive patriots since 12 September 1980. The junta, which has lifted the limited democratic rights and freedoms, is pointing the sharp edge of its attacks at the working class and the democratic forces.

Imperialism has stepped up its pressures on Turkey in line with its aggressive international policies. Through the reactionary circles inside and outside the junta, imperialism wants Turkey to play an active role against the Soviet Union in imperialism's adventurist plans in the Middle East and Near East.

The TCP is struggling with all its might to unite the widest democratic forces for peace, national independence, democracy and the interests of the working masses and against imperialism and the collaborationist monopolies, against the junta's proimperialist and promonopolies policies, against the most reactionary circles within the junta, the army and outside them.

The TCP is attached to the brotherly PCV with ties based on Marxist-Leninist and proletarian internationalist principles. We hope that the 50th anniversary of your party will be filled with victories against imperialism and in your struggle for a democratic transformation in Venezuela.

Please accept our communist greetings.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen, 5 March 1981

VOTCP: DISK UNIONISTS REJECT CALL TO SURRENDER

[Statement for the press, public and workers issued by unionists belonging to the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], the Turkish Mine, Metal Works and Machine Industry Workers Union [Maden-Is], and the Bank Workers Union [Bank-Sen] following an appeal for unionists to return to the country and surrender]

[Summary] The National Security Council issued a communique calling on DISK administrators to return to the country by 5 March; failing that, we would be stripped of our citizenship.

"However, we are in Turkey fulfilling our duty. The National Security Council cannot produce any evidence proving that we are abroad. Therefore, there are no grounds for denying our citizenship on the basis of the new citizenship law which is devoid of any legal foundation. However, we will not surrender to the martial law authorities." This is our most natural right and we should continue to struggle even under current conditions in order to fulfill the duties required by tens of thousands of union members who elected us.

"Our unions have been closed down by the National Security Council, our legal duties have been banned on totally unconvincing grounds, many of our union members and colleagues have been arrested and dismissed, and thousands of DISK members have been deprived of a union and abandoned to excessive exploitation and random treatment by the employers." Under these conditions we cannot abandon our workers and our members. We are, above all, responsible to the working class and its just struggle. "We will continue our struggle until we fulfill the duties assigned to us by our members for their economic and democratic rights, for union rights and freedoms and for the realization of the workers' wishes." The rights which are now being usurped were attained through many hardships. "Moreover, we do not trust the martial law authorities. We do not believe that it is possible through an impartial trial at a martial law court to show that the accusations levelled against us are unfounded. It is no secret today that antidemocratic and illegal measures are common practice at every level of judicial investigation."

Our unions have never engaged in any activity violating the law of unions or any other law. They have always aimed at protecting the interests of the working class. The members of the National Security Council and martial law commanders are accusing the administrators of unions affiliated with DISK of being union bosses and using the union institutions to serve their personal interests. If they are looking for real union bosses, then their attention should be directed toward the leaders of the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is].

The fact that the economic crisis is still continuing despite the ban on strikes, the prevention of wage increases and the elimination of union rights clearly demonstrates that the workers, the unions and the strikes are not responsible for the economic crisis and the decrease in production. The real culprits of the economic crisis are the employers, the capitalists and foreign companies and banks. As for the attempts to connect our unions with terrorism, these can be refuted through DISK's consistent attitude condemning all kinds of terrorism. It is the Confederation of Nationalist Labor Unions [MISK] that has close ties with terrorism.

The Turkish working class is currently experiencing a difficult period. We clearly see that the most basic workers rights are being usurped. If we had been united in the past, this process would not have been so easy. "Every worker and unionist should learn a lesson from this experience. We should unite. We should attain labor unity. We should create the free unified unions. Let us ignore past differences. Let us not allow the different political viewpoints among us to become an obstacle before our unity to protect our rights." We call on all workers: "Let us unite. Let us overcome the obstacles confronting labor unity. Let us create together free unified unions. Production is in the hands of the working class."

SPOKESMAN ACKNOWLEDGES RECEIPT OF BREZHNEV LETTER

[Text] Hamburg, 8 Mar (DPA)--Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet head of state and party, has addressed a letter to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. A government spokesman today confirmed the receipt of the letter, but refused to give details. Observers assume that the letter is connected with Brezhnev's latest speech to the Moscow party congress and with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's visit to the United States.

Schmidt informed Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher about the letter on Sunday. It was learned that Genscher and Schmidt reached agreement on their views on the letter prior to the former's departure for Washington.

Genscher is expected in Washington on Monday. He will have talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan on the same day. Thorough talks also are planned with Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Vice President George Bush. Bonn attaches the greatest importance to the visit by Genscher, who is the first member of the Federal Government to visit the United States to have talks with the new Washington leadership. The Federal Government intends to stress, vis-a-vis the Americans, its loyalty to the alliance, submitting at the same time its positions regarding the West's future joint policy.

It has been pointed out in Bonn that Reagan, following his inauguration, promised that Washington would have the closest consultations with its allies before the new government fixed its final "operative" foreign policy positions. Following trips to the United States by the French and Italian foreign ministers and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Genscher's trip completes the first round of deliberations with the most important European allies.

SCHMIDT ON SOVIET SUMMIT OFFER, ARMS EXPORTS

[Text] Bonn, 8 Mar (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt believes the Western counterarming in the strategic medium-range missile sector is "still avoidable." In an interview for Deutschlandfunk, Schmidt said on Sunday that the Soviet Union's lead is so great that negotiations to overcome this lead will surely not be easy. He is convinced "that these negotiations will come about." Schmidt added that he intends to recommend that U.S. President Ronald Reagan accept the proposal for a summit meeting made by the Soviet general secretary, Leonid Brezhnev.

In connection with the discussion surrounding the easing of German arms exports, Schmidt said it can well be that altogether different changes will be taking place and new decisions taken.

Schmidt underlined that he believes that the most important point in Brezhnev's latest party congress speech is that Brezhnev offered of his own accord negotiations with the United States. Brezhnev "is anxiously trying to find a way." Schmidt knows that Reagan is prepared to negotiate with the Soviet Union, especially on arms limitation. The chancellor called unjustified any suspicion, even in his party's ranks, that the Reagan administration is striving not for equilibrium but superiority. He has no doubt that the U.S. Government will overcome any such apprehensions. As soon as it begins negotiations with the Soviet leadership, it will become clear that it is negotiating not to secure on a contractual basis American superiority but to set an equilibrium.

The chancellor pointed out that the Soviets have in the meantime put up nearly 200 missile launchers. He has always been deeply worried about the imbalance on this sector since the Soviet missiles targeted on Europe represent one means of exerting political pressure on the European peoples and governments. The possibility to use such arms as a threat "can play a role in certain future political situations."

He will be able to take with him on his trip to Saudi Arabia, planned for the end of Arpil, only preliminary results of the Bonn discussion concerning arms exports. The decisions on arms export principles possibly to be changed might well be taken at a later stage. In fact, it looks at present as if the general trend in parliament as well as in public opinion points to the continuation of the restrictive line of German arms exports.

With reference to the protests against nuclear power stations, Schmidt said that he understands the fear of young people, but nuclear power stations have to be built. No one can tell just when and how soon the Federal Republic will find oil "prohibitive or out of reach." In connection with the rejection of the Brokdorf nuclear power station by sections of the north German SPD, Schmidt pointed out that the north German trade unions are by all means in favor of a moderate expansion of nuclear energy. In his view, no Social Democrat ought to entertain the idea of severing the close ties between the SPD and trade unions, their members and leaders.

DEFENSE MINISTER DISCUSSES NEW ARMS ACQUISITIONS

[Text] Bonn, 7 Mar (DPA)--The modernization of the Bundeswehr's equipment through the acquisition of a new generation of arms will be continued as planned and approved by the Bundestag, Defense Minister Hans Apel said. However, Apel, talking to journalists in Bonn Saturday, made clear that "an additional amount of about DM2.3 billion is urgently needed" for the 1982-84 period compared with the original figure. It is possible to reduce the additional amount required by DM1.3 billion to DM1 billion through postponements and cuts in a number of projects.

The largest arms projects, Apel said, among them the 1,800 Leopard II tanks, the 322 Tornado combat aircraft and 6 new multipurpose frigates, will be acquired as scheduled, on the condition that the defense budget inflation rate to 1984 will be fully compensated. The acquisition of a seventh and eighth frigate is planned for after 1987. The Patriot air defense system is planned for 1986. The army will receive 143 Roland arms systems on schedule, but the Roland system cannot be bought for the air force and navy.

Reorganization of the army, following the army "Structure 4" program, will be continued, according to Apel, in order to achieve the intended increase in the Bundeswehr's personnel and materiel, preparedness. The holdup in the placement of officers presently can be overcome only gradually. The extent of the German contribution toward support for the U.S. reinforcement troops, which presently is being looked into together with the United States, cannot yet be finalized.

Apel announced that the inspector general's competency for the Bundeswehr's planning will be strengthened. This also includes the decision and authorization authority for the total construction of the military sector. Apel has appointed a working group under new Secretary of State Klaus Dieter Leister and under the chairmanship of Inspector General Juergen Brandt. By the end of this year, the group is to submit to the (defense) minister alternatives on how the Bundeswehr, in view of the changing economic and technological developments, can maintain its personnel and materiel preparedness in the 1990's.

FOREIGN MINISTER LISTS TASKS OF WESTERN ALLIANCE

[Excerpt] Bonn 6 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher stressed 2 days before his Washington visit for his first talks with the new U.S. Government the aim of further strengthening the Western alliance. Genscher listed in a press release three central tasks facing the alliance.

The security-political equilibrium between West and East must be safeguarded, and where necessary, reestablished. It is important to continue the policies of cooperation and arms control on the basis of the equilibrium. The threats of conflict in the Third World must be challenged by a forward-looking policy. Genscher once more expressly welcomes the readiness of the United States and the Soviet Union to again intensify mutual talks on arms control. It must be possible to reduce once again the mistrust which has arisen between East and West through the massive arms efforts by the Soviet Union and its expansion of power in the Third World.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON GENSCHER'S U.S. VISIT

[Editorial by Bonn correspondent Klaus Dreher: "Genscher's Difficult Mission"]

[Text] Special skill is needed not only to read but to understand interviews given by Hans-Dietrich Genscher. The foreign minister gives several of them prior to certain events. As a rule, they are not characterized by originality of language or by particularly great ideas, but they always contain statements between the lines to which one must pay attention.

Prior to his visit to Washington, Genscher succeeded again in making several statements which made the amazed public hold its breath, statements with different nuances. Genscher's first reaction to the suggestions of Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev sounded like an extremely brusque rejection. Then the Federal Cabinet worked out a most detailed reaction under his supervision, indicating that the rejection involved only the idea of a mutual moratorium and explaining the reasons: The alliance rejected a suggestion last year that went even further, so Bonn therefore cannot approve something it previously had rejected.

In the interviews that followed, Genscher varied his approach even further until his ideas were centered on an immediate continuation of negotiations among the big powers on a reduction of medium-range missiles. "This philosophy could become a model," said the foreign minister. It certainly does not mean interpreting Genscher incorrectly or doing him an injustice by subtracting a considerable part of tactics from his statements. He will visit not only America, but later on Poland and the Soviet Union. And he will go to Washington as an envoy of the federal chancellor, who will follow him, rather late, in late May. Genscher noted that only the appearance has been created (Italy, France and Great Britain have already talked to President Ronald Reagan) that the alliance lines have changed and that the Federal Republic, once a most reliable pillar for America in West Europe, has now become NATO's number one trouble child.

Genscher also wanted to show concern for Helmut Schmidt, whose knuckles he rapped in passing--after all, it was the chancellor who got the discussion on a moratorium going last year and who did not want to immediately discard Brezhnev's suggestion. Nobody outside the SPD except the chairman of the FDP, the coalition party, is so well aware of the difficulties the federal chancellor has with his party where the resistance against the so-called counterarming decision is deeper than justified. In this matter also, Genscher has taken the part of the chancellor, reprimanding those who praised so highly the Soviets' preparedness to negotiate, while simultaneously voicing doubts with regard to the Americans.

In saying this, he can only have meant SPD Chairman Willy Brandt. The foreign minister's urging of Moscow to unilaterally stop the advance armament or even reduce it is aimed at setting up a Western standpoint with regard to negotiations. Genscher probably does not believe that the Kremlin would accept this. But the Soviets would be most surprised if the alliance did not keep to the usual ritual of answering suggestions with countersuggestions.

The substance resulting from Genscher's zigzag course between different poles lies in the effort to promote the process of these disarmament negotiations. In the White House, he will probably make himself a decided advocate of an American-Soviet dialogue. Genscher, who by the way is not tied down by any party congress decisions, in contrast to Schmidt, will thus just continue along the line he and Schmidt initiated last year when they visited Moscow. It is known that Reagan hesitates and that he wants to gain time to collect some trump cards. Genscher must aim at shortening this pause and at filling it with his own contributions.

No headway will be made if the West only blocks Moscow's moves without making substantial suggestions. It may seem strange to the Americans that some of their allies, including the Federal Republic, threaten to swim away from them if the Americans do not sit down at one table with the Soviets, but this danger is obvious.

This may contain a certain contradiction to the Reagan doctrine that NATO must become stronger and more vigilant again. It could be eliminated if the German foreign minister presented convincing evidence of the Federal Republic's contribution to "division of labor" in the alliance. He has become much more modest than "after Afghanistan," when he spoke of a global Western concept to contain Soviet expansionism. At any rate, the Americans have demonstrated their readiness to consult the European partners and to take up their arguments. Washington will expect more from its allies and particularly from Bonn than just being pressed to guarantee their security while simultaneously seeing to it that the arms aimed at the allies are reduced.

PAPER NOTES DECLINE IN RESETTLER INFLUX FROM EAST

[Article signed TGN.: "Constantly Fewer Resettlers in Friedland and Nuernberg"]

[Text] Hannover, 4 March--It seems that the readiness of the East bloc countries to allow Germans and people of German descent willing to emigrate to leave for the Federal Republic is constantly decreasing. This is indicated by the further decrease in the number of resettlers in February, the January figure having already been lower than that of December last year. During February, only 2,465 resettlers arrived at the two reception camps, the border transit camp at Friedland and the border transit point at Nuernberg. These camps had registered 3,052 resettlers in January and 3,672 in December 1980. Among the February arrivals, 1,516 came from Poland and the Polish administered territories, 489 from Romania, 275 from the Soviet Union, 81 from Czechoslovakia, 16 from Hungary, 4 from Yugoslavia and 3 from Bulgaria. As before, people willing to emigrate must file many applications and reckon with long waiting periods before the authorities of the East bloc countries grant them an exit permit. This is disclosed by a statistical survey compiled by the Lower Saxony Ministry for Federal Government Affairs and published Wednesday pertaining to the 26,728 resettlers from Poland assigned to the federal laender last year via Riedland and Nuernberg. To obtain an exit permit, these resettlers--who mostly came from Upper Silesia (14,582), eastern Upper Silesia (4,333) and from East Prussia (3,366)--on the average had to file 3.6 applications, in some individual cases as many as 71 such applications.

GISCARD VIEWS DOMESTIC, INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

LD061051 Paris LE FIGARO MAGAZINE in French 28 Feb-6 Mar 81 pp 46-51

[Louis Pauwels interview with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing in the Elysee Palace: "If France Chooses Chaos, It Is Lost"--date not given]

[Excerpt] Louis Lauwels: Mr President, I will address you in your capacity as head of state rather than as a potential candidate. However, the presidential election campaign has already begun, at least in part. From your standpoint, do you think this campaign is being conducted in a manner likely to enlighten the French people?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: No, definitely not. So far, the "precampaign" has been conducted "behind closed doors." It is as if the outside world, with its considerable dangers and risks, did not exist. It is as if our daily life were not affected by various events themselves largely determined from outside. In these conditions, the French people are not able to make the essential choice. The aim is to elect the president of the republic and not to discuss a particular point of our legislation while disregarding the fundamental elements of our internal situation and of the outside world.

A danger and a temptation have emerged in this "precampaign." The danger lies in a return to political instability. It lies in the belief that purely political decisions, changes of personnel or team would suffice to solve the fundamental problems or to fulfill the aspirations of a particular group. The danger also lies in chaos. For 7 years, I have tried to maintain order in France. There has been no May 1968. All elections took place at their normal time. Parliament was never dissolved. In 7 years, there was only one change of premier despite the political and economic difficulties.

Now some choices would lead to chaos in everyday life, in political life, in the economy and the enterprises.

The temptation consists in imagining that in this chaos a particular category could hope to find an individual or group advantage. In short, I am convinced that if France gives way to the temptation of political instability or if it takes the risk of chaos, it is lost.

Louis Pauwels: Regarding the economic and social situation, the essential criticisms addressed to the government relate to unemployment and inflation. Are these two problems inherent in modern economies? Are they merely temporary? Is there any cure?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: If you consider the verdicts which the French people are passing on the policy followed over recent years, you can make two striking observations.

First, the French people approve of almost all the policies followed, for example the energy policy, the defense policy, the action taken to help old people and the reduction of inequalities, among other things. But there are two important exceptions: inflation--price increases in common parlance--and unemployment. The public does not condemn the policies followed--quite the reverse, they approve the general lines--but they are showing their dissatisfaction with two situations: rising prices and unemployment.

There is no point in arguing about this issue, about which phenomenon, unemployment or inflation, caused the other. Back in Byzantium, people wondered whether the priests should have beards. In fact, the two elements are indissociable. It is always possible to reduce one by increasing the other. For instance, it would be possible to massively reduce the inflation rate, but only by accepting an additional 500,000 unemployed. A restrictive monetary policy could have that result.

In the very short term, it is also possible to reduce unemployment by increasing inflation. In Britain, the Labor Party created an artificial demand for a few months, but only by increasing inflation. It created temporary economic activity but without ultimately solving any employment problem, quite the reverse. France has decided to seek a balanced policy, maintaining activity and employment and hence reducing unemployment at the same time as gradually reducing inflation. France was on the way to obtaining this solution: Look at the situation in mid-1978. Inflation had fallen to below 10 percent. The number of people looking for work has virtually not risen for 1 year.

However, successive oil price rises, seven since the beginning of 1980, have been introduced. Of course, this is not the only cause of inflation, but this cause has affected bodies already hit by the crisis, hence, the sharp rise in inflation and unemployment. This effect has been seen in all countries, frequently to a greater extent than in ours. But it is true that French opinion has been deeply affected by it.

Today, combined action on both elements, unemployment and inflation, is necessary. We have not followed the extremist policy of "smashing" inflation at any cost. I repeat this. The policy of abruptly curbing inflation would pave the way for a popular front or for the implementation of the joint program. We must give priority to improving the employment situation and reducing the number of unemployed people. This action involves a series of initiatives. I have asked the premier to prepare them. He announced a major series of measures on Wednesday. This is just an initial stage.

Louis Pauwels: Let's stick with the economic and social sphere. You have put forward a plan for France, "advanced liberalism." Do you still stand by that solution? We have heard many criticisms in this connection, excessive economic planning, growing collectivization, excessive taxation. If I take these criticisms into consideration, I must ask you: How does advanced liberalism differ from social democracy?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: Advanced liberalism is fundamentally different from social democracy because it does not have the same principal objective. Advanced liberalism's fundamental objective is freedom in all spheres, while social democracy's aim is a semi-collectivist way of organizing society. A society oriented toward social democracy and one oriented toward advanced liberalism may have some points in common, but the differences are considerable.

It is important to realize that France is regarded as an example of freedom in the world. We can discuss this point at greater length if you wish. In our country, there is complete freedom of expression and I should know. No journalist or politician has ever been subjected to surveillance in the past 7 years. Our adversaries carefully avoid saying that.

In economic matters, the most important decision taken since 1945 was the decision to deregulate prices. All the other decisions were less vital. By deciding to free prices in the spring of 1978, we really moved from one economic system to another.

Louis Pauwels: You said you intended to reduce inequalities. The French seem to be haunted by the question of equality. My question has two aspects. Is it true, as people say, that France is one of the least egalitarian countries? Second, if inequalities should be reduced, by how much is it appropriate to reduce them?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: First, it is not true that, amid the Western democracies, France is a particularly inegalitarian nation. In fact, France is in an average situation. Elsewhere, in other countries, there are much bigger fortunes than in France and also much poorer families, and that includes the United States. Everybody knows that.

Regarding the second aspect of the question, while excessive inequalities must be reduced, I have never advocated an "egalitarian" society, bringing living conditions to the same level. That would be ridiculous.

Louis Pauwels: That is social democracy's aim.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: It is the aim of Scandinavian social democracy. It is not my aim. I have always taken care to say that "excessive" inequalities should be reduced; the ones which are not justified by the individual's special effort, his ability to create and invent. It is important to note that from 1974 to 1979 the most important excessive inequalities in society have been reduced, those which affect old people, the low-paid workers, single women. That is the direction being taken. In the previous period, notably during the period when France was growing wealthier, inequalities had been accentuated, and that was the cause of the 1968 situation, a situation which has not recurred during my term. Since 1974, excessive inequalities have been reduced. That is a verifiable fact.

Louis Pauwels: In your view, what is the positive record of your 7-year term in the economic and social spheres?

Giscard d'Estaing: That question should be addressed to a candidate. Regarding the social sphere, I will mention the transformation of the old peoples' situation, regarding the economic sphere, the creation of the right conditions for France's independence in terms of energy.

Louis Pauwels: Mr President, I would like to cite two statements made by you. In Verdun-Sur-le-Doubs, you stated that not enough was said about France's situation during the parliamentary election campaign. In 1974, you said you had looked deep into France's eyes. How do you see this France today? Has it changed? Will it change even more?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: It has changed. First, it has set its house in order--in its education system, in its army, in its big national institutions and in its economy. France is stronger than it was and in the past 3 or 4 years, it has started intensive and serious preparations for its future in many spheres. It has, therefore, evolved, and in a positive way. However, it is still politically fragile. I regard this as cause for great concern. In the coming months, France could play a major role on the international plane. At present, it is the chosen interlocutor of the two superpowers, the United States and the Soviet Union, and the reasons for this are, moreover, different. It is the U.S. interlocutor, as we saw with my telephone conversation with President Reagan last week, and I have already had the opportunity to show that it is the Soviet Union's interlocutor.

Louis Pauwels: What makes our country fragile?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: Two factors--the depth of its divisions and the excess of individual quarrels and rivalries.

Louis Pauwels: That has always been the case.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: Yes, but France could afford that luxury when it was a superpower. When you are a power which has to assert itself, things are different.

Louis Pauwels: Has the parties' influence increased or decreased over this 7-year term?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: Unfortunately, it has increased. We are witnessing a permanent struggle by the parties against the political institutions. These parties are not very representative if you look at their membership, but they are also the only ones to express their views in the national newspapers, the media, and the only ones to hold congresses. You hear nothing but them. And yet, every time France experiences a great national trial, the parties vanish. They sank completely in 1939-1940. After 1958, they faded from the scene in face of the Algerian problem and the institutional crisis. They also vanished completely following the 1968 events.

In a calm period, the parties maneuver toward power and they try to regain it. They have been trying to do this since 1968, particularly during elections.

Louis Pauwels: In your book "Democratie Francaise," you placed your hope in the existence of a big center grouping. Has this big center grouping of French people been expanded or reduced over the past 7 years?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: It has been expanded and consolidated. Look at your children or your friends' children and their friends. French youth is more homogenous than young people in previous generations, be it in what they do or the way they live their daily lives.

Consider two examples. In 1974, one private house was built for every three apartments; in 1980, the ratio was two to three. These houses are owned by people in the center group. By persistent effort, I also succeeded in having a law passed on the free distribution of shares to employees. This involves 1 million people who will increasingly belong to the center group. This group has not yet acquired its cultural, social or political identity but, from the sociological viewpoint, it is being formed. Many of your readers certainly fall into this category.

Louis Pauwels: I would now like to turn to France's position in the world. In the foreign policy sphere, the French people's big fear, rightly or wrongly, is the Soviet threat to Europe. They doubt the capability of France and Europe to ensure their independence.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: I am not sure that that is the French people's greatest fear. Their main fear is war and destruction. If a war breaks out in the world, it will be fought once again in West Europe where the accumulation and concentration of arms is such that it would be the end of West Europe, a relatively glorious end but the end just the same.

Louis Pauwels: Well, let's say that the French people's second fear is "Finlandization."

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: I do not like the word "Finlandization" and the Finns themselves detest it. They are in a difficult geographical and diplomatic situation and they have succeeded in reconciling real national independence with the facts related to their neighbors. The Finns consider the word "Finalandization" to be an insult.

Louis Pauwels: Nonetheless, I repeat that the French people doubt the capability to ensure their independence.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: France first had to have a strong defense. In 1981 and even more so in 1985, France will have by far the greatest military strength in its history. We are busy testing a MIRV'ed M4 missile for the strategic submarines. In 1985, France will have the greatest military strength it has ever had.

Louis Pauwels: People do not know that. They do not know it or do not believe it.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: And yet, I am saying that this is the case. We have decided to equip ourselves with the most modern weapons. We have carried out all the necessary testing. This has been said and published. Of course, we know that our security depends on an alliance in which we are a full partner and not merely a subject. Moreover, we have been able to verify how it operates in several crisis situations.

France wants to be and must be an interlocutor for peace. I know that when the word peace is used, some people compare it--referring to experiences like the Munich experience--to notions of resignation or national retreat. But it does not mean that. The search for peace consists of studying all possible ways of settling problems before their solution leads to catastrophe. If we need to defend ourselves, we will do so; but first, we must do all we can to explore the other possibilities.

You know, since you interviewed them, the U.S. leaders have used the word virility to describe the policy which France has followed over the past few years. It is the only country to which they apply that term. Some people in our country think that strength consists of banging an angry little fist on the table at the cafe du commerce. Where does that get them? Who are they frightening? Strength consists of following a high-level policy, clearly defining your objectives and equipping yourself with the appropriate means of action.

Louis Pauwels: A neutralist trend is now emerging in Europe, and not only in Belgium and The Netherlands--the Americans know about that and say so--but also in the FRG where it is affecting the SPD and the Christian Democrats. Does that worry you?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: I am very concerned about this trend. One of the worst impressions I had at the last European Council meeting was of hearing neutralist ideas expounded by a certain government chief. [as published]

Louis Pauwels: Can France do anything?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: It is not failing to do so. In a vast country like the FRG, there is a broad public opinion in which various currents of opinion, including the one which you mentioned, coexist. I am convinced that the vast majority of the German population is not neutralist. We checked that with the FRG chancellor during the last French-German summit. On the other hand, I admit that some leaders in other European countries are making neutralist statements.

Louis Pauwels: I seem to have shocked you before when I said: "People do not know it or do not believe it." However, I must observe that when I talk with people, in Paris and in the provinces, there is a lack of information about these vital defense issues.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: I think information on military matters--since that is what we are discussing--is widely provided, notably through the medium of television. I would like to remind you that when I was elected president of the republic, there were soldiers committees in the army and antimilitarist pamphlets were being distributed in Paris railroad stations to soldiers on leave. We took the necessary steps and there are now no such pamphlets or committees. This is fortunate since you cannot have a combat-capable army which contains soldiers committees.

Everybody has also been informed of the decisions I took on the MIRV'ed M4 missile, a strategic weapon. The decision to manufacture it was taken several years ago and it involves programs which take 10 years to implement.

Louis Pauwels: France's future cannot be separated from Europe's. Do you believe in the revival of a European consciousness?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: Not at present, unfortunately. It must not be forgotten in this interview that we are living in a period of serious economic and social crisis. This is affecting many situations and deeply influencing people's thinking. Thus, European building has encountered serious difficulties.

Louis Pauwels: Is that irremediable?

Valery Giscard d'Estaing: I do not think so, but it is a cultural problem. The European identity will emerge through culture and not through vague combinations of election laws or discussions on Community budgets.

FRANCOIS-PONCET: FRANCE NOT TO JOIN GULF FORCE

[Text] Paris, 6 Mar (AFP)--France has no intention of joining in a multi-national force to defend Western interests in the Gulf or of endorsing an extension of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's security zone, Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said today.

Mr Francois-Poncet also told newsmen here that the proposals did not come up during his recent trip to the United States, despite some reports to the contrary from Washington.

He made his remarks in response to questions on reports that the possibility of a multi-national Western force for the Gulf was discussed at length during his U.S. visit and that of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

"There was never any question of constituting a multi-national force in the Gulf, of extending the NATO zone to that region or of creating a new NATO," France's chief diplomat said. He added that defense of the region rested with the Gulf countries themselves.

Mr Francois-Poncet also condemned any form of outside interference in El Salvador, particularly the traffic of arms. He added "peace can only be restored by political action."

ENVOYS TALKING WITH MOSCOW, KABUL ON HIJACKED JET

[Text] Paris, 8 Mar (AFP)--France has approached both the Soviet Union and Afghanistan in a bid to help resolve the six-day-old crisis over the hijacking of a Pakistan international airline Boeing to Kabul, official sources said here today.

The moves, on behalf of Pakistani authorities, were undertaken in Moscow by French Ambassador Henri Froment-Meurice and, in Kabul, by French Charge d'Affaires Jacques Berthod, sources said.

COLOMBO REPORTS TO SENATORS ON U.S. TALKS

[Text] Rome, 5 March (ANSA)--The cornerstones of Italian foreign policy were identified as furthering detente, the balance and progressive reduction of forces and "a commitment to a path of unconditioned negotiations based on mutual considerations for fundamental interests in security and peace", in a statement delivered today by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

Speaking to the Senate foreign affairs commission on the outcome of his recently concluded talks with members of the new American administration and Soviet leaders, Colombo covered points ranging from nuclear missiles in the European theater, a possible U.S.-Soviet summit meeting and the situation in Poland and in the Middle East.

In comment on the keynote speech read out by Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev to the 26th Soviet Communist Party Congress in Moscow, the head of Italian diplomacy said he had doubts on the feasibility of a proposed moritorium to apply to "nuclear systems" in Europe.

"This would be the equivalent of making note that the deployment of the SS20 (the Soviet intermediate range missile) has been completed", Colombo said, and that the new Soviet bombers have been deployed, while no modernization of the Atlantic alliance's system has been provided for, nor could it be provided for in future.

Addressing himself to the prospects for a Soviet-U.S. summit encounter, Colombo affirmed that such a meeting could be scheduled only if the purpose of the talks have been made "clear" and "certain" and there is a reasonable certainty of achieving concrete results.

According to the foreign minister, Washington will make no concessions in single negotiations if there are no signs of Soviet willingness and "moderation" as regards not only nuclear armament talks but the entire spectrum of international issues, from Afghanistan to El Salvador.

With reference to Poland, the minister said that Italy expects the Soviet Union to not allow "the call for respect for non-interference" to wind up in the area of a "dialectical expedient" but to receive this call as "substantial as regards Poland".

In his statement today, Colombo also touched on the hostilities between Iran and Iran, and the European Conference on Security and Cooperation in Madrid.

ANDREOTTI COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH U.S., PCI

[Text] Rome, 6 Mar (ANSA)--Italian statesman Giulio Andreotti spoke out on a wide range of international problems in an interview published today by "CORRIERE DELLA SERA", one of the country's most authoritative newspapers. The former premier currently holds the post of head of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

With regard to relations between Italy and the Europeans on the one hand, and the United States and the new Reagan administration, on the other, Andreotti said that in his view the margins of variability in American policy are much fewer than commonly believed. He said that often the mistake is made of concentrating attention only on the White House, ignoring the Congress which counts as much as the presidential staff.

As to heightened U.S. military spending (the Pentagon will increase its budget by 16 percent this year), Andreotti did not see this as a sign of any growing aggressiveness on the part of the U.S.

Half of this money will be automatically transferred to research, development and industrial orders, he said. It is an easy and simple way to combat the American recession along classic models, he continued, adding that he would prefer to see the bigger military budget in this light than in a strictly military vein.

Another matter brought up in the interview was the recent polemics between the Soviet and Italian Communist Parties. In Moscow the head of the Italian Communist Party delegation Gian Carlo Pajetta was not allowed to address the Soviet party congress directly, but in a hall outside the Kremlin. Andreotti said that a clear distinction must be made between Italo-Soviet relations and those between the two communist parties. In his view, less intense ties between the two parties strengthened rather than weakened relations between the two states, "relations to which we must give careful attention", he added.

Andreotti refused to either confirm or deny reports out of the U.S. to the effect that he had drafted the agreement reached between Washington and Tehran for the release of the 52 American hostages. "This does not seem like the right moment to speak about this," he told the interviewer.

PCI'S PAJETTA COMMENTS ON MOSCOW CONGRESS

[Text] Rome, 7 Mar (ANSA)--The Italian Communists have no intention of "dramatizing" the snub received at the recent congress of the Soviet Communist Party Moscow where they were denied the right to address the congress, according to the leader of the Italian delegation there, Gian Carlo Pajetta.

In an interview to appear in the Italian Communist Party (PCI) daily, L'UNITA, tomorrow, Pajetta said that the delegation was "displeased with the impoliteness", but had a positive evaluation overall of the report delivered by Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev.

According to the prepublication version of the interview released today, the delegation saw Brezhnev's speech as containing the "most advanced concepts and the most critical openings and observations" compared to the other speeches.

Almost all the other speakers failed to "take advantage" of this and "did not give sufficient substance to the self-critical tone" used by Brezhev, Pajetta said. Pajetta also pointed to the large range and number of communist parties and liberation movements on hand in Moscow.

Replying to those who would like to see the PCI break with Moscow, he said that this "so varied presence" at the congress was testimony of the Soviet party's importance--"to which so many political forces and countries look as an essential factor for a possible new world order".

Despite these affirmations of support for the Soviet Communists, Pajetta was also at pains to defend the PCI's right to toe its own "heretical" line.

"Only in recognition and respect for diversity is it possible to establish relations of parity and safeguard one's own autonomy", he said.

"I have the impression that everyone esteems the PCI for its strength, for its coherence and also because it is seeking something new and expending some effort in doing so", he added in reference to his meetings with the representatives of other communist parties.

"Only fools can think that we were kept out of the congress", he concluded.

This congress of the Soviet Communist Party was the first to which the PCI did not send its party secretary.

ISRAEL'S SHAMIR PAYS VISIT, TALKS WITH COLOMBO

[Text] Rome, 9 Mar (ANSA)--Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir voiced assurance here Sunday that his encounter with Pope John Paul II has only been temporarily postponed and that the visit will take place at a future date.

In a statement made before his departure from Rome Sunday, Shamir said that "the visit with the pope was to have taken place Friday morning, but due to a technical flight delay, I was unable to keep my appointment with the pope at the established hour.

"I am very sorry for the mishap but I believe that it has only been temporarily postponed. The visit will take place. It has been agreed to by both sides, although a date has not yet been set". Official sources said Friday evening that the visit with the pope would not take place the following day because of the Jewish sabbath, which requires orthodox Jews to refrain from any physical or intellectual activity from sunset Friday to sunset Saturday.

Despite the Jewish ban against Saturday activities, Shamir met on Saturday informally with his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo for a review of international affairs and the Middle East situation in particular.

In his statement at the Rome airport before leaving for Tel Aviv, Shamir spoke of relations between the European Community and Israel and said that "we hope that Europe can accept our positions. It is our belief that it is necessary to support the Camp David agreements, the only path that can lead to peace.

"We are sorry that the European Economic Community (EEC) does not do this. Unfortunately, in its statements, in its attitude, the European Community encourages the most extremist elements in the Middle East, in other words, the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO), which fights against peace".

Referring to the United States' announcement that it will provide Saudi Arabia with new military equipment, Shamir underscored Israel's displeasure "not only with this war material, but with any other destined for the Middle East. There are already enough weapons in the area and this does not help peace. I care to add, however, that friendship between the United States and Israel remains strong".

The Israeli foreign minister went on to stress the validity of the solutions indicated in the Camp David agreements for the Palestinian problem, particularly self-rule. "By this", he explained, "Israel means self-administration of the interested Arab population and does not mean an autonomous state.

"For our part, we have accepted that after five years a final settlement of the territories in question will be decided by all the interested parties--Israel, Egypt, Jordan, Arab Palestinians and the United States".

According to Shamir, "the Arab Palestinian people are not without a state, (they have) Jordan, a state which is Palestinian in territory, population, religion, culture and in all other elements of national entity. The problem that must be solved", Shamir added, "concerns only the Arab population which lives in Judea, Samaria and Gaza, the territories west of the Jordan River, which does not want to submit to Israel's authority".

With respect to the problem of Jerusalem Shamir reiterated that "the Holy City unequivocally remains the capital of Israel in virtue of the overwhelming Jewish majority living there for more than a hundred years. It is only now", Shamir added, "that Jerusalem is freely accessible to all faithful to visit their holy places. There is therefore no justification nor possibility to change this reality. Even the king of Saudi Arabia can come and visit and pray in Jerusalem's mosques whenever he wants." the Israeli foreign minister concluded.

OFFICIALS MEET U.S. ENVOYS, DISCUSS EL SALVADOR

LD161956 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 6 Mar 81

[Text] Portugal today came out in favor of a peaceful solution to the civil war in El Salvador and reaffirmed the need for an end to all outside interference. A government source said that the Portuguese ministers of foreign affairs and defense this morning met the special envoys of the Reagan administration, who are currently touring Europe, to explain the U.S. stand on the matter.

The same source added that [Minister of Foreign Affairs] Andre Goncalves Pereira and [Minister of Defense] Azevedo Coutinho also advocated the principles enshrined in the UN charter concerning noninterference in the internal affairs of other countries. [Name indistinct], the head of a three-member delegation, is currently in Lisbon for political contacts aimed at informing the Portuguese Government of U.S. intentions concerning the situation in El Salvador.

Semiofficial sources said that Portugal is in no position to provide any kind of assistance to the Salvadoran junta because Portugal is still suffering the effects of a long drought which has already resulted in losses estimated at 60 million contos.

The same sources added that the United States has not requested any kind of financial assistance from Portugal. The special U.S. envoys are to meet the president of the republic, the prime minister and several party leaders in Lisbon.

PRESIDENT, ARMED FORCES CHIEF ON MILITARY POWER

[Text] In this democratic perspective, the armed forces cannot be a center of political power; but they cannot and must not be the instrument of any power which does not convincingly embody the will and interests of the nation, expressed and confirmed by universal suffrage, either. Those were the words of General Ramalho Eanes at the swearing-in of General Melo Egidio as chief of staff of the armed forces. The ceremony took place in Belem Palace this morning. General Melo Egidio said in his speech:

[Begin recording] The armed forces are a national institution at the service of the Portuguese people, and the future of democracy in Portugal will depend to a large extent on their conduct. Because they are strictly nonpartisan, they must not allow themselves to be manipulated by forces whose sole interest is to further their own designs. Our moral strength will continue to prevent this from happening.

The armed forces' future accountability to the legitimate political power is a corollary to the whole, sometimes uneven, process initiated on 25 April 1974 and reaffirmed on 25 November 1975. Conditions now exist for everything to go normally according to plan, because the military institution is ready, at all levels, to place itself within the framework to be assigned to it by the legitimate holders of constituent power. This circumstance will obviously [word indistinct] the structure of bodies in charge of national defense and the organization of the armed forces themselves.

[Words indistinct] it will be necessary for the competent bodies to define the methods, degree and way in which this dependence [of the armed forces on civilian power] is to come about, since the time limit for this process to be concluded depends on the revision of the constitution, to which the armed forces are extraneous but not indifferent.

The path ahead of us will not be without difficulty, given the circumstances which in our country have always surrounded relations between political power and the armed forces. But it will enable us, through an open, constuctive and permanent dialogue, to achieve the goals which will best suit the country and its armed forces. [end recording]

Next to speak was General Ramalho Eanes who, after elaborating on the defense of democracy, said: It is necessary for all citizens both civilian and military, to honestly accept the holding of free elections and their legitimate outcome. He also said:

[Begin recording] The military institution and all the military are, in the framework of their professional status, subordinated to the legitimate political power, not because it is a power, but rather because it is legitimate. It is, therefore, in the democratic legitimacy of political power that one finds justification for the subordination of the armed forces to the power which emanates from free and universal suffrage. [words indistinct]

For all these reasons, it is hoped that the debate which has been taking place in Portugal over the past few years about the role of our armed forces in a democratic system, will contribute to the creation of a solid national awareness, to the perfect clarification of the terms in which this issue is raised and (?being solved in a stable) and [word indistinct] manner.

The nature and role of the armed forces is always a problem for them and for the community, irrespective of the social and political system in which they are inserted. In the old Western democracies, which have successfully institutionalized their peculiar social and political problems, there is the belief that the armed forces will never turn against the people of which they are a living part.

The principle of the military power's subordination to the civilian power cannot be postponed without subversion and negation of the political order. In our political practice, one must accept that civilian power, even during the transitional period enshrined in the constitution, is not subordinated to military power. They are powers which coexist in conditions of interdependence with clear supremacy of the civilian power consecrated by the popular vote. [end recording]

PCP CENTRAL COMMITTEE"S GREETING TO CPSU CONGRESS

LD051319 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 26 Feb 81 p 9

[Text] The PCP Central Committee has sent the CPSU Central Committee the following greetings message:

Dear comrades, the holding of the 26th CPSU Congress constitutes a great event in the lives of the Soviet Communists and people and its of great significanc for the international communist and workers movement and for the struggle of all peace-loving revolutionary forces.

On this occasion, the PCP Central Committee conveys to the CPSU Central Committee and, through it, to the communists and the entire Soviet people, the Portuguese Communists' warmest and most fraternal greetings. The PCP Central Committee expresses to you sincere joy at the successes achieved by the USSR in building the material and technical base of communism, increasing the Soviet people's material and spiritual well-being and consolidating its economic and defense potential, and its high esteem for the firm and consistent policy of peace and internationalist solidarity of the party of Lenin and of the Soviet state.

Despite imperialism's tenacious resistance, the PCP views the development of the international situation with confidence. However, the dangers to peace must not be underestimated. In the light of the deepening general crisis of capitalism and the development of the world revolutionary process, U.S. imperialism and NATO's most reactionary and aggressive circles have been deliberately exacerbating international tension, intensifying the arms race, openly threatening aggression against the peoples struggling for their liberation and openly threatening to resort to nuclear weapons.

In order to thwart imperialism's warmongering plans it is of the utmost importance to strengthen cooperation among the great revolutionary forces of the contemporary era, namely, the socialist countries, the workers movement in the capitalist countries and the revolutionary liberation struggle of peoples of all continents, by firmly combating anti-communism and anti-Sovietism and all attempts of the class enemy to weaken the potential and cohesion of the socialist community countries and cooperation among all the anti-imperialist forces.

In Portugal the persistent struggle to defend the gains achieved in the April revolution and the democratic system enshrining them continues. The reactionary forces, which have a majority in the Assembly of the Republic and the government, hold strong positions. But the democratic forces, possessing a broad and militant workers and people's movement, are no less powerful. The difficulties and dangers confronting Portuguese democracy are very great, but the Portuguese Communists view the feature with a militant spirit and with confidence. It is with satisfaction that we ascertain that, on the eve of its 60th anniversary, the PCP, a decisive force in the Portuguese revolutionary process, is continuing to reinforce its ranks and to extend its influence among the masses.

Dear comrades, reaffirming to you sincere wishes for further great successes in implementing the program of the USSR's economic and social development over the next decade, we express our determination to continue to work for the strengthening of the traditional ties of friendship, fraternal cooperation and mutual solidarity existing between the PCP and the CPSU in the interest of our two peoples and of the two countries, the unity of the international communist movement and the common cause of peace, democracy, social progress and socialism.

Long live the 26th CPSU Congress!

Long live the friendship and solidarity between the PCP and the CPSU!

Long live Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism!

PRIME MINISTER ON COUP ATTEMPT, COALITION

LD070310 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2300 GMT 6 Mar 81

[Excerpts] The Council of Ministers met today for the second time since its restructuring. This evening Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo held a press conference during which he dealt with the abortive coup, the autonomy process, terrorism, and the rejected idea of a coalition government.

On the failed coup d'etat, the prime minister said:

[Begin recording] If I am asked to make an appraisal of the events then I would say that at this moment there is growing in the government the conviction that we were faced by actions that were absolutely localized, and within a general context of loyalty by the armed forces to His Majesty the king and to the constitution and freedom. If at any brief moment there might have been an impression of perplexity in some cases or confusion in others, the lines of command were restored very quickly in the military sphere and all went ahead with speed and efficiency. This is our present assessment of the events of 23-24 February and it can be deduced that one is dealing with events which are undoubtedly historic, are also very probably transitory episodes and which enable one to deduce, thanks to the steps of the government, to the reactions from the Spanish people and from the reactions of the political parties that the democratic system will emerge strengthened, the system which we Spaniards have given ourselves, which we are continuing to give ourselves. [end recording]

The question did not mention the events which took place on 23-24 February in the Congress of Deputies, but Calvo-Sotelo was then asked if he had the impression that he was governing with a sword of Damocles hanging over his head.

[Begin recording] In no way, and if the question seeks to refer to a situation of vigilant democracy, then I can say that I have the impression that I am presiding over a government, over a democracy that is vigilant, and if you will allow me to quote the words from my own investiture speech, a valiant democracy. There is not the slightest impression in the government and its prime minister of the pending threat which your question refers to. [end recording]

He was also asked if it were possible for the Spanish people to be told that they should shake off their fears about the coming spring, that is to say the fear of further coup attempts.

[Begin recording] I think that one can, in a responsible way, tell the Spanish people this and I would exhort you again that you should express your convictions and do likewise. [end recording]

But, and this from a foreign media correspondent, will barracks decisions have repercussions on the government's policy with regard to the autonomies and terrorism?

[Begin recording] Every politician must make his own decisions, taking into account the prevailing situation. And in viewing situations there will not be any special emphasis placed with respect to the state of mind, or of the preoccupations that might exist, in the words of my interlocutor, in military circles. But I must here remind my interlocutor that we now have in Spain for the first time in 45 years a government in which there is not a single military man. [end recording]

The prime minister also spoke about terrorism. Calvo-Sotelo said that this very morning he had entrusted a group of ministers with the task of studying the possible adoption of measures to combat terrorism. Our actions, he said, will be in the legislative field defining clearly terrorist offenses in the criminal code. But a reporter, interested in the subject, went on to ask about the possible intervention of the army in the Basque country.

[Begin recording] In the options looked at this morning by the government, no intervention by the army in the Basque country is considered. [end recording]

The prime minister was then reminded of the position of Adolfo Suarez in connection with negotiations with the Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group [ETA], but he was also reminded about the new stance of ETA Political-Military.

[Begin recording] I appreciate the efforts made by some legal political parties in the Basque country about the pacification of the country. I maintain the same stance of my predecessor and my government maintains the same stance of the previous government with regard to not negotiating with terrorist groups. [end recording]

Rejecting the possiblity of a coalition government, Calvo-Sotelo expressed gratitude for the offer made by Felipe Gonzalez last Wednesday. The prime minister said that he had not yet ended his meetings with the leaders of various political parties and that he intended to continue them during the coming week. Up to now, he said I have met with an excellent desire for dialogue on matters of state which transcend matters of party and which we are dealing with. But in spite of this, he was asked if there were conditions laid down about such a coalition government.

[Begin recording] There were no conditions, and I repeat energetically the reply I gave to one of the first questions. There was no laying down of conditions to the prime minister. There was the necessary dialogue with party leaders. And there was my personal decision to form the government quickly. It seemed necessary to me that the country should get out of a situation [words indistinct] [end recording]

In response to a question by a reporter for EL ALCAZAR newspaper, the prime minister said he did not know if there were means for closing down a paper because of the consequences of the coup. He said that he had not had access to the charges yet.

EIGHTY CIVIL GUARDSMAN RELEASED FROM DETENTION

[Text] Last night approximately 80 members of the Civil Guard who took part in the assault on the Palace of the Congress of Deputies on the orders of Lieutenant Colonel Tejero left the Young Guards College in Valdemoro, Madrid Province, where they had been held.

Reliable sources have told the EUROPA PRESS Agency that the 80 Civil Guard members have gone home and that some of them were at work this morning at the Civil Guard motor pool to which they belong.

As you will recall, one of the conditions laid down by Lieutenant Colonel Tejero when he surrended was that the Civil Guardsmen and noncommissioned officers who had taken part in the action would be relieved of any responsibility for their actions.

So far no indictments have been issued against these Civil Guardsmen and noncommissioned officers.

NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER ON EL SALVADOR

LD061948 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1230 GMT 6 Mar 81

[Text] The Nicaraguan foreign minister is in Spain. Hector Arenas interviewed him on his arrival at Barajas airport:

[Arenas] The minister of foreign affairs of Nicaragua, Miguel d'Escoto, will today meet with the socialist [Spanish Socialist Workers Party] leader Felip Gonzalez, and tomorrow with the foreign minister, Perez Llorca. He will probably ask the Spanish Government, as he did the FRG, to continue economic aid to Nicaragua.

On his arrival at Barajas airport, the Nicaraguan priest and minister denied that Nicaraguan territory is a staging point for the passage of arms from Eastern Bloc countries to the El Salvador guerrillas, saying that the U.S. accusation arose when the United States was increasing its military aid to the regime of Jose Napoleon Duarte.

At a time when the El Salvador president has offered opposition leaders a negotiated dialogue to pacify the country and avoid a civil war or an international conflict, the Nicaraguan minister told us that his government supports a political solution to the El Salvador conflict. This is what he said:

[Begin recording] We are all promoting the idea that a political solution to the conflict has to be found. We have been speaking in this sense for several months. (?We are pleased) to know that this is not only an idea of Nicaragua, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela, but also of Spain and Germany. So I am optimistic. [end recording]

[Arenas] Minister D'Escoto also said that the reduction of Nicaragua's governing junta to three members would result in greater scope for political operations and more support for the economic effort from foreign countries, especially The Netherlands, Sweden and Spain.

ARMADA COMYN RELIEVED FROM ARMY SECRETARY POST

[Text] According to a report today from official sources, Defense Minister, Alberto Oliart has signed an order which stipulates the termination of Maj Gen Alfonso Armada Comyn in the post of secretary of the supreme council of the army to which he had been appointed.

This termination has arisen because General Armada has passed to a status of forced unattachment and because he was arrested as a result of investigations which military authorities carried out after the assault on the Congress of Deputies by Civil Guard forces and the attempted coup d'etat.

The minister of defense has also decided to appoint Maj Gen Miguel Fontenla Fernandez to the post of secretary of the supreme council of the army as a replacement for general Armada.

FOREIGN POLICY DISCUSSION AT NORDIC COUNCIL

LD071956 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 7 Mar 81

[Text] There is great commotion in Copenhagen: The Finnish prime minister has behaved badly in the Nordic Council, reports our correspondent Sture Naslund from Copenhagen. Mauno Koivisto was advised to wake up following an amazing violation of the rules of the gave which so far have dictated that nothing sensational is supposed to happen at such a session:

[Naslund] Many years ago a chastened journalist named the Nordic Council, the Nordic paper tiger; by this he meant that both the council's elected members and the journalists practically drown in the amount of paper. This year's session here in Copenhagen does not differ on that score from its predecessors. But of all the issues that have been discussed at this session, two stand out: the one concerning Nordic security policy and the one concerning "Nordsat," the planned Nordic radio and TV satellite.

Since the launching of the Nordic Council in the fifties it has been an unwritten rule that foreign and defense issues should not be discussed at all, and for Finland this has been a precondition for any participation in the council's work. As we know, foreign policy is a sensitive sphere in Finland. For that reason, a justified commotion was caused when the Finnish prime minister, Mauno Koivisto, proposed earlier this week that new rules of the game should be found to be able to discuss these matters, which so far have been forbidden ground. The main reason was that a violent debate flared up about the north as a nuclear-free zone. (Lars Erik Haggman), you have been covering the Nordic Council on behalf of Radio Finland. How has Finland reacted to Koivisto's proposal?

[Haggman] The other Finnish politicians have pursued a different line. They have adhered to Finland's old terms, and afterward Mauno Koivisto himself noted that it was more a thought that he expressed aloud to get away from the embarrassing situation when forbidden matters are discussed anyway. But he has since stressed that it is not an actual proposal.

[Naslund] But this was a thought that he expressed aloud several times after all?

[Haggman] He did that on several occasions, first in radio interviews and then at press conferences and so forth. But the Finnish foreign minister said "no" and that is what the majority of the Finnish delegation has also said. Only the Communists are split in this case, and they favor a discussion, but they too are absolutely against any decisionmaking.

[Naslund] As regards "Nordsat," the council was due to adopt a stand to the proposal by the Council of Ministers that the whole issue will be decided next year at the session in Helsinki. Only one member voted against that proposal, but one cannot conclude from this that "Nordsat" will really be implemented. But if one is to assess "Nordsat's" chances of ever being launched into space, it does seem that interest in it has increased. But the question still remains where the Swedish Government stands. So far it has not been able to agree, but it is clear that strong industrial policy interests are now exerting pressure for a Nordic satellite to be launched. Sweden also has its own satellite interests to champion in the "Tele-X" project by Rymdbolaget, and when the final decision on "Nordsat" is made next year in Helsinki "Tele-X" may very well play an important and decisive role.

AID OFFERED TO EL SALVADOR, WEST SAHARA, EAST TIMOR

LD050945 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 1 Mar 81 p 16

[Text] On Thursday [26 February] the Foreign Ministry decided to give humanitarian aid worth 200,000 markkaa to El Salvador. The country is on the verge of civil war. The money will be distributed through the International Red Cross program.

The Foreign Ministry also granted 400,000 markkaa to the Red Cross program in the West Saharan refugee camps and 200,000 markkaa to programs in East Timor.

NORWAY

AFTENPOSTEN STRESSES COOPERATION BETWEEN COUNTRIES

[Editorial: "No Joint Strategy"]

[Text] In the Nordic Council's general debate much was said about how, in a time of growing unemployment and economic difficulties, it might be possible to preserve the welfare state and the prosperity which is characteristic of the Nordic countries. It goes without saying that there was general agreement in the council that the main task now must be to safeguard the Nordic social model. Hundreds of thousands of people have already been given tangible proof that the right to work and to an income, to economic and social security, can no longer been seen as an almost God-given gift. There can be no doubt that more will be required of us all to be able to secure the stability and prosperity which the Nordic peoples have been able to enjoy for most of the postwar period.

It seems obvious to us that this task would be easier to solve jointly, through mutual efforts, than if the individual Nordic countries pursued policies which in part were contrary to the interests of their neighbors. In constructive cooperation the state authorities would be able to implement measures and fix conditions which could have a stimulating effect in many directions. The authorities could of course arrange things so that the cooperation that already exists between countless independent firms could be expanded and accelerated. This could happen for example if the Nordic governments implemented the joint call from the Nordic conservative parties to clear away legislative, fiscal and administrative obstacles to this cooperation. That this idea seems finally to have had success even with the social democrats is shown by the fact that legislative measures to decrease the possible obstacles are included in the Norwegian-Swedish cooperation package which has been announced.

The departure point for all Nordic cooperation is that it should give reciprocal benefits, but in practice considerations of expediency are often decisive. The real goal is to achieve advantages without sacrificing anything and without being involved in anything which could be disadvantageous to oneself. If a measure does not give instantaneous and palpable advantages to each individual country participating in the cooperation, then, quite simply nothing comes of it. The reason is quite simply that each country has its own interests at heart, especially in a time of crisis.

Nevertheless, it would be most destructive to the idea of Nordic cooperation if the belief that cooperation and solidarity across national boundaries for the common good is abandoned. There was every justification for Norwegian Conservative Party parliamentary leader Kare Willock to make a strong attack on the protectionist currents which are making themselves felt in certain circles, in particular among the Swedish Social Democrats, who constitute the largest political party in the Nordic countries. Since the last Nordic Council session Olof Palme's Social Democrats have launched a serious attack on the free trade which is one of the most important foundations of Nordic economic cooperation. In a misguided attempt to save themselves from their own difficulties, the Social Democrats proposed that Sweden should impose import controls, which would obviously have hit its Nordic neighbors hardest.

In the name of Nordic cooperation we want to warn most strongly against the tendency to national egotism shown here. When responsible politicians make anti-Nordic drives like this, one can hardly hope for any joint strategy to solve Nordic problems. For everyone has his own interests closest to his heart.

SWEDEN

FOREIGN MINISTER ULLSTEN ON EL SALVADOR ISSUE

LD061219 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 4 Mar 81 p 12

[TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA report]

[Excerpt] Copenhagen, 3 Mar--The Nordic countries are critical of current U.S. policy on El Salvador. This view was expressed by all the Nordic foreign ministers who will now be meeting delegations from the United States.

The delegations have been sent to Europe to try to explain the Reagan administration's support for the regime in El Salvador.

Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten drew this conclusion on Tuesday [3 March] after he had met his four Nordic counterparts at a meeting in Copenhagen in connection with the Nordic Council session.

"The formulations of the various Nordic governments are perhaps a little different, but the conclusion is the same: The Nordic governments have a negative attitude to the U.S. position on the conflict in El Salvador," Ola Ullsten said on Tuesday.

"In our opinion, the most important thing is not whether arms are being sent from Cuba to the opposition in El Salvador. Our view is that there must be a negotiated settlement. This would not be helped by arms supplies from any quarter," Ullsten added. This week he will be meeting the U.S. delegation visiting Stockholm.

DEFENSE SECRETARY DISCUSSES RAPID DEPLOYMENT FORCE

LD081656 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1445 GMT 8 Mar 81

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] Defence Secretary Mr John Nott made it clear today that there were no plans for an independent British rapid deployment force outside NATO.

He was speaking on the ITV weekend world programme and his comments seemed designed to counter the impression which has arisen from Mrs Thatcher's announcement of British support for such a force in the United States last month.

Mr Nott said that a rapid deployment force had been talked of for some years. "We have some forces trained for this kind of intervention in combination with our allies. It would be an alliance question, it would not be an independent British role. No one believes we could go east of Suez again."

Mr Nott suggested the size of the British force might be company size, or if there were a naval task force, it could be marines.

"This kind of limited intervention capacity would be handled with our allies and need not be expensive, at all."

Mr Nott said: "What Americans really want, what the alliance really needs, is unity in meeting the Soviet threat throughout the world. There has been a period in which we have allowed the Soviets to acquire bases throughout the world. It must be stopped. It has undermined the stability of the world and endangered our oil."

Mr Nott said that in such a move by the Americans, "the Union Jack will be there." But he said: "There has never been any question in our mind, least of all Mrs Thatcher's, that we are planning to deploy large forces around the world."

Mr Nott said the Americans would not be disappointed to hear what he had to say about the limited nature of the force. "The Americans understand our position very well. They know the central threat is in Europe and the Atlantic and that must be the prime task of the United Kingdom--to defend the central front."

The interviewer, Mr Brian Walden, said that in view of Mr Nott's remarks, the cost would be less than the 350 million pounds some had suggested and Mr Nott said the cost would be "nothing like that."

Mr Nott said he would not be asking the Cabinet to provide more money for defence in the present economic position, though he added: "If the economy improves, then of course, I will demand it because the threat is growing the whole time and our defences could spend 50 percent, 100 percent more because, given the size of the threat, we will always be short of money."

Mr Nott admitted there were problems over the government's plans to raise defence spending 3 percent a year over the next ten years, but "I can see a way through the problems."

He said he hoped for better and more efficient deployment of forces in Europe and in the Atlantic which would involve a narrower range but greater numbers and a saving of money.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON PROJECTED EXPANDED BASES USE

CYPRUS WEEKLY Report

NC061832 Nicosia THE CYPRUS WEEKLY in English 6 Mar 81 pp 1, 32

[Excerpts] The giant British airbase at Akrotiri, semi-idle for years, may be reactivated soon following Britain's announced readiness this week to join the American Rapid Deployment Force to protect the Persian Gulf oilfields. But such a development might well disturb relations between Britain and Cyprus, and touch off a political controversy in view of the parliamentary elections here early in the summer.

"Certainly we shall be chagrined if the (British) bases are used against the interests of our Arab friends," declared Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis. Rolandhis said the Cyprus Government had received no notification as yet that the two British sovereign base areas in Cyprus, Akrotiri and Dhekelia, might be used for Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) operations. But a Western diplomat said it would be "logical to assume" Britain would use its Cypriot bases, because of the location of the island and its proximity to the Persian Gulf.

John Chambers, the chief spokesman of the British bases, told THE CYPRUS WEEKLY the use of Akrotiri for RDF operations "is purely hypothetical."

The conjecture arose following a statement by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher during her visit to Washington last week that her government would be ready to contribute to the American-proposed multinational force.

Rolandhis said the use of the British bases for such a purpose "is a major issue that will have to be decided by the government. We have made it clear time and again that we are against bases used for affronting the interests of our Arab friends," Rolandhis, who is visiting Bahrain and Qatar next week, said.

According to the 1960 treaty of establishment, the British bases can only be used by the British "for their own defence purposes," and this of course is a matter of interpretation, Rolandhis added.

The Cyprus Government, which pursues a nonaligned policy, supports the complete demilitarisation of the island. AKEL and EDEK, the island's Communist and Socialist Parties, both demand the dismantling of the British bases, charging that these are "imperialist" bridgeheads.

Akrotiri is only 1,000 miles from the vital oilwells of the Gulf region, compared to the remote Indian Ocean island of Diego Garcia, more than twice as far away, where Britain maintains its second closest base in conjunction with a very sizable U.S. Air Force presence.

Unlike Diego Garcia, the only aircraft based at Akrotiri currently have been three helicopters, used mainly for rescue purposes, and a U.S. Air Force U-2 high-flying reconnaissance jet used to overfly the Sinai demarcation line between Egypt and Israel. These overflights are carried out with the consent of all the governments concerned, including Cyprus.

With a total of 4,500 British airmen and other military personnel permanently based in Cyprus, however, both Akrotiri and Dhekelia, which together cover an area of 99 square miles, could become fully operational at a moment's notice.

TA NEA: Arab Reactions

NC070843 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 7 Mar 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpts] Yesterday, Arab diplomats in Cyprus reacted immediately to press reports that the British bases on the island will probably be used by the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force (RDF) as a springboard "for the protection of Persian Gulf oilfields."

Both the head of the Libyan People's Bureau and a Syrian Embassy spokesman in Nicosia described the likely presence of the RDF at the British bases as a "direct threat" against the Arab countries and the Persian Gulf as well as against Cyprus itself.

Dr 'Abdallah az-Zubaydi, head of the Libyan Bureau, said that "if it happens, it could create a dangerous situation, it would be unpleasant and unacceptable, and it would probably be a serious blow to the relations of the Arab countries with Cyprus." He added: "The Cyprus Government must avert the use of these bases against neighboring countries. Moreover, there is no guarantee that this force would not get involved in Cyprus' internal affairs in the future, or that it would not be supplied with atomic bombs."

Dr Abdallah az-Zubaydi believes that the presence of this force in Cyprus would, in all likelihood, become a direct threat to the relations between the people of Libya and the people of Cyprus, and would probably cause a rift in the political, commercial and economic relations between the two countries.

The Syrian Embassy spokesman stated that such an event would be tantamount to an "open violation of the Cyprus Constitution and of the Cyprus-British agreement of 1960. We do not believe the Cyprus Government would allow such a thing. If it happens, it would have unfavorable repercussions. We believe the Cyprus Government will react decisively if the bases become part of the RDF or if they are used by it. Britain must realize the reaction to such a move in the region."

The Syrian Embassy spokesman believes that all the Cypriot people, as well as the majority of political parties, must oppose this idea. It is clear that this would be a threat against the entire region. The presence of such a force in Cyprus would be directly aimed at the Arab countries and the Arabian Gulf." [quotation marks as published]

Dr Abdallah az-Zubaydi of the Libyan Bureau said the presence of the bases "already violates the Cypriot people's freedom and Cyprus' nonalignment."

It would be unnecessary to say that if the press reports are true and if the RDF is to be stationed here for intervention in the Middle East, this question would be immediately brought before the people's congress, he said.

Asked whether Cyprus would be held responsible if such a thing happens, he said, "We would consider anyone who would be involved in this affair and who would not react responsible."

In connection with the effects on trade and other economic relations between Libya and Cyprus, he recalled the breaking of economic relations between Libya and China last year when it was proved that the latter was sending military parts to Egypt.

Dr Abdallah az-Zubaydi added that "Britain has no function in this region, whether in the form of sovereign bases or not. What is Britain doing thousands of miles away from its coast, threatening peace in the region?

"In some cases, we suggested the demilitarization of the Mediterranean. We consider the use of the bases and the fleets as terrorism, in the real sense of the term. Moreover, the United States does not appear to be pleased with the 6th Fleet, which has provoked Libya's defense forces and which has repeatedly come very close to its territorial waters."

The RDF has already been trained in Egypt and it exists in Oman. Its presence at the British bases here would complete the triangle, he added.

He said: "The ideal solution would be the complete removal of the bases. Following the revolution in Libya, both the British and U.S. bases were vacated." He concluded: "We refused to compromise on this question."

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA Editorial

NC080817 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 Mar 81 p 7

[Editorial: "The 'Task Force'"]

[Text] It can be said with certainty that the appearance in some papers of so-called hypothetical assessments concerning the question of the use of the British base at Akrotiri by a multinational task force for the purpose of protecting Western interests in the Persian Gulf--a thing suggested by former U.S. President Jimmy Carter--has caused concern to our people, and this is so despite the assurance by the British High Commission that such a likelihood has not yet been discussed.

This justifiable concern is caused by the following:

1. If the base is used, this would be tantamount to a clear violation of the contents of the treaty of establishment dealing with the operation of the British bases in Cyprus, because the treaty irrevocably rules out the use of the bases for purposes other than those envisaged in the treaty. It is also noted that consideration of such an eventuality can only take place after consultations with the Cyprus Government.

2. The use of the bases for the purposes of the so-called U.S. task force would create additional dangers for Cyprus, in addition to the ones created by the occupation of 40 percent of Cyprus territory by the Turkish aggressor. Moreover, as Foreign Minister Rolandhis has very accurately said, Cyprus is firmly opposed to the use of the base for actions that would damage the interests of friendly Arab countries; that is, of countries with which we have excellent relations. It is against these countries that any attempt to implement the U.S. plan for the protection of Western interests in the Persian Gulf--as the reports say--will naturally be directed.

We are of the view that the government must watch with particular attention any developments that might be connected with the whole issue because, in addition to all the other reasons that could be mentioned, the very existence of the Republic of Cyprus as an independent and sovereign state would be threatened.

ROLANDHIS PROTESTS TURKISH FOREIGN MINISTRY ACTION

NC071401 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 7 Mar 81

[Text] Today, Foreign Minister Rolandhis instructed Mr Mavrommatis, permanent delegate of Cyprus at the United Nations, to deliver a protest at the international organization regarding the actions of the Turkish Foreign Ministry, actions that aim at giving the wrong impression regarding the existence and recognition of the so-called Turkish Cypriot Federated State.

According to a competent statement, Cyprus' protest to the UN secretary general, which will be circulated as an official UN document, refers to an action by the Turkish Foreign Ministry--unprecedented in diplomatic practice--to include in the list of foreign diplomatic missions in Turkey the so-called mission of the Turkish Cypriot Federated State.

The statement adds: The protest underlines that this action is a plot against the independence and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus. The statement concludes: It is also pointed out that this action undermines the efforts for a peaceful and agreed Cyprus solution through the intercommunal talks.

CUBAN FOREIGN MINISTER TO ARRIVE 11 MAR FOR VISIT

NC081637 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1610 GMT 8 Mar 81

[Text] It has been officially announced that the Cuban Foreign Minister, Mr Isidoro Malmierca, will arrive in Cyprus on Wednesday for a 3-day visit at the invitation of Foreign Minister Rolandshis. During his stay in the island, Mr Malmierca will be received by President Kiprianou and have talks with Mr Rolandhis.

Cuba is the current chairman of the Nonaligned Movement and before coming to Cyprus, the Cuban foreign minister will go to Geneva to chair a four-man committee set up by the Nonaligned Movement to try to end the Iran-Iraq war. The other members of the committee are the foreign ministers of India and Zambia and the head of the political department of the PLO. They will be attending a 2-day meeting in Geneva beginning tomorrow.

AKEL CONGRATULATES BREZHNEV ON CPSU REELECTION

[Text] AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou has sent the following cable to Leonid Ilyich Brezhnev:

"Dear Comrade Brezhnev,

"On the occasion of your reelection as secretary general of the CPSU Central Committee, the AKEL Central Committee extends warmest congratulations and cordial greetings for good health and many years of fruitful work in the service of Lenin's glorious party, the Soviet state and people and the noblest ideals of world peace and socialism, for which you are the great champion."

GOVERNMENT PRESSES FRANCE ON DIPLOMATS' SAFETY

Turkmen Remarks

[Text] Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has said that Turkey would consider taking all measures--including sending an official note to France--in a bid to provide for better protection of Turkish Foreign Ministry officials in France and for the apprehension of culprits that would attack them. Turkmen was speaking at Ankara's Esenboga Airport before his departure for an official visit to Bangladesh, Malaysia and Pakistan. Expressing his regrets over the killing of two Turkish officials in Paris, the foreign minister said: Such incidents can be stopped only by apprehending the culprits and punishing them in accordance with the gravity of the crime they have committed. We are awaiting the keeping of promises made in a letter to me by the French foreign minister. The promises were for prompt action to apprehend the culprits and for their punishment.

Turkmen said Turkey has close relations with Malaysia, Bangladesh and Pakistan, and added that these links had reached a new scope through coordination conducted within the framework of the Islamic countries' Conference. Turkmen said a cultural agreement would be signed with Bangladesh during his visit. He added that preparations for military cooperation between Turkey and Bangladesh had reached their final stage and that an agreement on this subject would be signed there.

On his visit to Malaysia, Turkmen said ways to promote economic cooperation between the two countries would be discussed during his stay. He added that some military hardware might be exported.

Turkmen said that during his visit to Pakistan, work conducted by the Islamic Conference's good will mission would be assessed and that prospects to develop coordination between the two countries would be explored.

Armenian Leader Condemns Slayings

TA061933 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 6 Mar 81

[Text] The patriarch of Armenians in Turkey, Kaloutsian, has strongly condemned the assassination of Turkish Labor Attache Resat Morali and religious official Tecelli Ari in Paris. In a message to Religious Affairs Director Tayyar Altikulac, Kaloutsian said that the cruel assassination of Morali and Ari by inhuman murderers has further increased the hatred toward the organizers of these murders. Kaloutsian said: The fact that a religious official was a victim this time is extremely sad and serious.

Government Protest Note

[Text] Turkey has made a representation to France following the attacks directed against Turkish officials in France. The French ambassador to Ankara was summoned to the Foreign Ministry this evening and an official note from the Turkish Government was given to him. According to a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent, the note demanded that the perpetrators of these murders be apprehended as soon as possible, that Turkish officials be more effectively protected, and that anti-Turkish publications in the French media be stopped.

Ulusu Representations

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said today representations are continuing to be made to the French Government for the speedy apprehension and trial of the murderers of the two Turkish diplomats in Paris.

Replying to questions by a correspondent from ANATOLIA news agency on the attacks against Turkish diplomats abroad, the prime minister said it was necessary for countries to establish close cooperation in order to eradicate terrorism from the earth. Referring to the condemnation of the murders by the French president and foreign minister, Ulusu stressed: The important thing is not to condemn such attacks but to establish close and sincere cooperation among countries for the eradication of such attacks. That is what we are trying to do.

Prime Minister Ulusu said it was inconceivable for any country to tolerate attacks by murder squads composed of international terrorists calling themselves by various names and exploiting the Armenian community which is faithful to its religion.

Alleged Giscard Remarks Denied

[Text] The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General has issued a statement in connection with the press reports on Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen's meeting with the French president. The statement describes as untrue the reports that at that meeting the French president said France cannot oppose the historic (?development) of the Armenians, nor their approach which is one of demanding their historic rights and settling accounts.

The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General statement says: Our foreign minister and the French president were alone at the meeting. Consequently, only our Foreign Ministry knows what was discussed at the meeting. No minutes were taken at the meeting. Not only did the French president not make the alleged remarks at the meeting, he stressed that all efforts would be made to apprehend the culprits.

The statement also says a message sent to Turkey by the French foreign minister confirms the French president's assurance that the culprits will not go unpunished.

Directive to UN

[Text] It has been announced that Turkey will submit a report to the UN secretary general on the details of the murder of Turkish Labor Attache Resat Morali and religious official Tecelli Ari in Paris. A statement issued today by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General says that directives have been sent to the Turkish permanent representative at the United Nations in connection with the report. It will be submitted in line with a decision adopted by the United Nations last year regarding the protection of diplomatic and consular mission representatives.

The statement says the UN decision calls on the country in which a crime has been committed against a foreign diplomat to submit a report on the incident to the secretary general as well. The statement says: The UN decision says that this report must contain information about the measures being taken to apprehend and punish the culprits. Consequently, we hope that France will report the results of the investigation to the UN secretary general.

GREEK AEGEAN AIRSPACE LIMITATION CHANGES PRAISED

[Text] Greece has lifted some of the Aegean airspace limitations imposed on Turkey since 1974. According to the Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] correspondent in Athens, the Greek Foreign Ministry has announced that the limitation area in the Limnos Island airspace has been narrowed. The Greek Foreign Ministry statement also noted that free passage is now allowed through the Aegean north-south air corridor and that limitations in the dangerous areas over the open sea have been totally lifted.

Meanwhile, replying to a TRT correspondent's question on the subject, the Foreign Ministry information director general said that this decision by Greece is a positive step toward the solution of the Aegean problem. The director general of the Foreign Ministry said: This decision consists of narrowing the Limnos control area from 2,485 square miles to 1,382 square miles, changing the floor and ceiling heights of the air route connecting the 14 Greek islands in the eastern Aegean and/or changing the floor heights of certain other routes.

Although these decisions do not fully meet the views presented by Turkey during bilateral talks, they have been evaluated as a step toward the solution of the Aegean airspace problems and an indication of good will. It is hoped that these decisions will be followed by agreements that will result in the settlement of the Aegean problems.

GREEK DEMANDS FOR BORDER GUARANTEES QUESTIONED

[Text] It was stated today that the guarantee which Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis requested from the United States for the security of Greek borders and for the maintenance of the balance of power in the Aegean cannot possibly concern Turkish-Greek borders. The Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General issued a statement today following press reports on Mitsotakis' remarks on the issue.

The statement says no official report has reached the Turkish Foreign Ministry regarding the issue. It says it is illogical for one member of a military alliance to ask for guarantees from a second member against a third member and that this would mean a lack of trust not only concerning Turkey but other NATO members as well.

The statement then says: In fact, a few years ago, the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministry secretaries general had discussed the signing of a political document between the two countries. At the time Turkey had posited that, if Greece wanted, an article could be added to the document stipulating that the two countries mutually guarantee that their present land borders and territorial water limits would never be changed. Greece did not respond to this proposal. It is, naturally, impossible to understand why Greece--which had considered such mutual guarantees unnecessary at a time when relations between the two countries were much tenser--should now seek such guarantees from another country at a time when there is a favorable atmosphere conducive to the solution of all bilateral conflicts.

The statement says that it is not necessary for NATO countries to maintain a balance of power among themselves. It adds that the balance of power mentioned in regard to the Aegean probably means the balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

CHANCELLOR ADVOCATES U.S.-SOVIET DIALOGUE

[Excerpt] Frankfurt, 9 Mar (DPA)--In the view of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt [SPD], the Federal Republic would have "reason to be afraid if the superpowers, the United States and USSR, were not prepared to talk to each other about arms limitation." Schmidt was speaking this evening at an SPD meeting for Frankfurt's local elections. He said that the Federal Republic will throw its weight into getting a dialogue underway again between the two powers.

SPOKESMAN ON BREZHNEV LETTER, GENSCHER TRIP

[Text] Bonn, 9 Mar (DPA)--While in Moscow this month, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher will discuss Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev's latest disarmament proposals. Speaking to the press today in Bonn, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker named 25 to 27 March as the period for Genscher's visit to Moscow, which has been planned for some time.

Becker assessed Brezhnev's letter to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, which was revealed over the weekend, and letters to other Western heads of state and government as another "visible expression of the Soviet willingness to conduct a dialogue." Becker gave no details about the letter, which the Federal Government does not intend to publish, but he remarked that the letter contained "no aggressive comment at all." It expressly contained that passage in Brezhnev's Moscow speech describing the relations between Bonn and Moscow as being by and large favorable.

The government spokesman said that in the letter Brezhnev repeated almost verbatim and dealt in greater detail with all the proposals made in his speech to the CPSU party congress: readiness to continue Soviet-American talks on strategic arms limitation, inclusion of the European part of the USSR in a "confidence-building measures" zone, as well a "freeze"--already rejected by Bonn--on medium-range nuclear weapons.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON GERMAN-U.S. RELATIONS

DW091606 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1815 GMT 8 Mar 81

[Undated interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher by reporter H.J. Reiche; place not given--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] In a few hours, you will have talks with another interlocutor, the new U.S. administration in Washington. Mr Minister, is it possible for us to meet the expectations the new U.S. administration has set for us in terms of security policy?

[Answer] It is. It is possible because we consider our security to be part of the common security of the West. Naturally, it is known in Washington that the FRG together with the United States bears the main burden of Western defense within NATO. This also explains why we have every reason to say that the FRG plays a key role in U.S.-European partnership. We are aware of this responsibility.

[Answer] The Federal Government has shown that it can answer for and implement what is necessary for our security in our country and also in the alliance. This will also be so in the future.

It is very clear that we hold the view that security presupposes a balance. We want a balance on the lowest possible level of armament. Therefore, NATO's dual decision of December 1979, for instance, very correctly mirrors our security philosophy. In the interest of bringing about a balance, we propose counterarmament where the Soviet side has an arms lead. But at the same time we offer negotiations, which means that we do not wait to negotiate until we have completed our counterarmament, but we want to have both in parallel, with the intention of achieving a balance at the lowest possible level.

I do hope that the Soviet Union sees the big chance which now exists also for the communist states to safeguard a balance. The arms expenses burdening us undoubtedly are a much heavier burden for the communist states, which spend a much higher percentage of their gross national product on arms. We all must be aware of the fact that the arms race means a threat to peace, and the arms race also deprives us of the possibility to effectively help the Third World. Therefore, our clear position is bringing about a balance at any rate while trying through negotiations to keep it at the lowest possible level. It means firmness and the will to negotiate. That is what we have in mind and that also is the stance of the new U.S. Government.

[Question] Balance but not superiority, not even American superiority?

[Answer] We do not want superiority because superiority, no matter on which side, always has a destabilizing effect. We need to have stability, so that on the basis of stability we can also come to reasonable cooperation. In addition, it is necessary for all states to pursue the principle of moderation in international politics. This principle has been clearly violated by Soviet behavior and the intervention in Afghanistan.

[Question] Mrs Thatcher was in Washington recently, and Great Britain has stated its willingness to support the Americans in the Gulf region by supplying forces, fleets or troops. The Bundeswehr cannot be used outside the NATO area or in a deployment force. What could the Federal Republic offer as compared to what Great Britain does, for instances?

[Answer] I said that, together with the United States, we bear the main burden of Western defense. This means that our task is here in central Europe, and this task is big enough and important enough.

[Question] Mr Minister, to the United States, the stance of its alliance partners on El Salvador is something like a test of their alliance loyalty. Do we meet the U.S. expectations, above all with a view to domestic discussions here on the subject?

[Answer] Mr Reiche, the fact that the Americans send a high official to Europe to hear the opinions of their European allies on developments in El Salvador shows that they want to have consultations in all fields and to take into account what the Europeans think. In addition, the very clear refusal by the U.S. secretary of state to accept a military dictatorship indicates that the United States also prefers a political settlement of the conflict in this afflicted country. People in Washington are aware that El Salvador's position, the course it will pursue, will ultimately be decided by whether social justice can be created there, whether economic and political progress is possible there. Ultimately, all this must not be a question of military conflicts between the antagonistic groups.

[Question] Do domestic discussions here on matters like the counterarming decisions, the stationing of medium-range missiles and tendencies of neutrality burden the German-U.S. relationship? Do they make the Federal Republic less predictable for the Americans? Perhaps, this will also be discussed in your talks in the United States.

[Answer] Mr Reiche, as I said, our country has a key function for the alliance and also for European unification. The most important thing for German foreign policy is to be clear, unequivocal and predictable, not only predictable for the states in East Europe, but predictable above all for our European partners and for our allies in the Western defense alliance. Therefore, we place great emphasis on strengthening the role of the Europeans by setting up a European union and improving Europe's ability to act. We want to make an important German contribution to this. We see our future in a democratic Europe where we have united with the other West European democracies. We can guarantee our security only together with the United States and Canada. Therefore, the alliance and the European Community are the basis of all our political aspirations. They also are an indispensable basis of our efforts for good relations and cooperation with the Soviet Union and the East European states. Anyone calling this basis into question thereby would also abolish the prerequisites for promising stabilizing arms control negotiations and for cooperation on the basis of equality.

Therefore, it is so important for the Federal Government, with the backing of the Bundestag parties, to have a very clear and unequivocal position. I very much hope that all those who indulge in fashionable anti-Americanism and generously ignore the enormous rearmament in the East and that those who easily forget what has happened in Afghanistan, become aware of the fact that our place is in the Western community, because we are allied with these states also with regard to our ideas of freedom and democracy. Therefore, I also consider it out of place to talk about the two superpowers as if they shared the same values. We are allied with one of them, the United States, not only through the alliance but also because we are both members of a community of democratic states.

KOHL REELECTED CDU CHAIRMAN, DISCUSSES U.S. TIES

[Excerpts] Mannheim, 9 Mar (DPA)--The 29th CDU congress, meeting in Mannheim this evening, reelected Helmut Kohl as party chairman by an overwhelming majority.

Kohl and [CSU Chairman] Franz-Josef Strauss gave express priority to reestablishing a close relationship of trust with the United States. Kohl said that the Europeans should at long last speak with one voice in order to become a genuine partner of the United States. He rejected the proposal by Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev to postpone the siting of medium-range missiles. It is unacceptable if it only serves to cement Soviet superiority. Referring to recent studies by several foreign policy research institutes, Kohl called for Europe to make a contribution of its own toward the security of Western interests in the Middle East. The Germans can ensure that "American resources are released for the Middle East."

Strauss warned against "differentiating" between U.S. and European interests and said that the United States and Europe share a complete range of interests as to their futures.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ON EL SALVADOR ISSUE

[Article signed CKN: "Americans Take Dim View of European Mediation in El Salvador"]

[Excerpt] Bonn, 5 March--CDU Deputy Chairman Biedenkopf, upon his return from a visit to the United States, warned against criticism from Europe, and in particular from the Federal Republic, of the U.S. course of action in El Salvador.

If the Europeans in general and the Germans in particular base their security and the preservation of their freedom on the U.S. guarantee of protection and thus expect the United States to be capable of bearing great responsibility, then they cannot at the same time deny the Americans the ability to solve a problem like El Salvador along the lines of democratic objectives "even if this has to be done in crooked ways." Biedenkopf, who spoke in Duesseldorf, referred to the grave concern conveyed to him by U.S. trade union leader Kirkland, namely, that the European friends with whom the Americans are allied to fend off communism now support the communist enemies in America's "backyard." In the long run, the alliance will not bear this. It is Biedenkopf's impression that Washington is determined to do everything in its power to make the "Duarte experiment" successful for a democratic development of El Salvador.

On the some day that the high-ranking U.S. officials in Bonn identified Nicaragua as the main territory for the arms transfer to El Salvador, D'Escoto Brockmann, the Nicaraguan foreign minister was in Bonn and rejected these "speculations and contentions" as unproven. Asked about his talks with Federal Foreign Minister Genscher, in which the Federal Government, according to an announcement by the Foreign Ministry, had condemned arms deliveries by communist states to El Salvador and welcomed the Nicaraguan Government's statement that it does not tolerate any such deliveries via its territory, D'Escoto Brockmann was evasive. He said he could not recall that Genscher had said that such shipments were made. Genscher did condemn the principle, but did not say that communist states were violating this principle. There was U.S. speculation about arms deliveries, but this has not been confirmed either by Genscher or by other high-ranking officials with whom D'Escoto had talked in Bonn.

D'Escoto Brockmann said in this context that the United States is violating a basic principle of its constitution under which everybody is innocent unless proved guilty. "They want us to prove our innocence." As for the documents submitted by the Americans, he said the arguments no doubt had been invented to elicit a response, showing where readiness exists to believe these accusations. The United States, said the foreign minister in Bonn, is a country "full of anxieties, fixed ideas and hallucinations." It has always been easy to hoist the flag of communism as soon as interests turned against the United States, he said.

The foreign policy spokesman of the FDP Bundestag faction, Schaefer, on Thursday came out against any one-sided support for the Salvadoran Government. Schaefer is visiting Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica for talks. The FDP press service said that to go by what Schaefer has learned, the contention is wrong that these is a one-sided purposeful shipment of arms to the guerrilla fighters in El Salvador via Nicaragua. In talking with Schaefer, Costa Rica's president once again stressed the need for efforts on the part of the European countries, and particularly the Federal Republic, toward mediating in the preparation of political solutions in El Salvador.

GISCARD 'SATISFIED' WITH FIRST REAGAN CONTACTS

LD100941 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 Mar 81 p 9

[Excerpts] The cabinet met at the Elysee Palace on 4 March under Mr Giscard d'Estaing's chairmanship. At the end of its deliberations, a communique was issued which stated among other things: The foreign minister reported on his recent visit to the United States, his talks with President Reagan and the secretary of state and the many contacts which he established on that occasion. The president expressed his satisfaction with the quality of the first contacts between France and the new American administration. He noted that both sides expressed the desire to maintain close consultations between France and the United States in a spirit of friendship, independence and mutual respect.

The economy minister reported on his talks in Mexico, Ottawa and Washington.

FOREIGN MINISTER ON POLAND, EL SALVADOR, MIDEAST

[K.D. report on press conference given by French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet to the French Diplomatic Press Association in Paris on 6 March: "There Is No Reason To Think That the Principle of Nonintervention in Poland Will Not Be Respected"]

[Text] Jean Francis-Poncet arrived in Caracas on 6 March for a 3-day official visit during which, he said, he intends to raise "all the major issues of an international situation characterized by tensions." In a speech on his arrival, the minister paid tribute to the "leading role which Venezuela is playing in North-South relations" and on the American continent.

Before his departure from Paris, the French foreign minister discussed several aspects of the government's foreign policy with the French Diplomatic Press Association.

"At present, there is no reason to think that the principle of nonintervention in Poland will not be respected," Mr Francois-Poncet said in reply to questions from the French diplomatic press on 6 March.

Asked whether the president of the republic, by stressing on television Poland's membership in the "Soviet bloc," had "reintroduced into politics the bloc concept which France has been rejecting for 20 years," (Note: In his interview with French television channel 2 on 27 January, Giscard d'Estaing had said in particular: "Poland lies between the Soviet Union, with which it has a very long border, Czechoslovakia and East Germany. It is, therefore, inside the Soviet bloc and the Soviet bloc's communications pass through Poland. Anything which ignored those geographical and strategic facts has no chance of being acceptable to the Soviet Union." Commenting on this statement to the diplomatic press on 18 February, Marie-France Garaud concluded that the president of the republic had "accepted both the existence of the Soviet bloc and the thesis of limited sovereignty" for the countries comprising it. "We have calmly abandoned 20 years of foreign policy at a stroke," she said.) The minister replied: "The president of the republic has never said what you attribute to him.... He said that we must let Poland live.... Nobody must interfere in Poland's events from outside.... If there were to be an intervention, it would be a very deep, serious and lasting shock to international relations."

In talking of a "bloc," Francois-Poncet explained, the president of the republic "referred to Poland's geographical and strategic position which is known to all. He said only what Polish leaders from all the political units have said themselves, including the trade union leaders."

Asked whether the latest Moscow communique on Poland did not constitute an intervention, Francois-Poncet replied: "It is desirable for there to be not only no intervention but no pressure on the Polish process."

Finally, asked whether Mr Walesa would be received at the Elysee, Francois-Poncet replied that his invitation was a "trade union" one and that the Polish trade unionist and his hosts wanted it to remain such.

The following are other subjects discussed by the minister:

French-American relations: "France," he said, "is happy to see a strong and stable United States, and the new U.S. administration is showing its intention to take full account of Europe's opinions, views, interests and concerns.... The talks which I had in Washington confirmed my belief that French policy is known, understood and appreciated. Its defense and energy policies and also many other aspects of its policy are regarded as a positive contribution by the Western community.... France's policy is not based on alignment but on fidelity in diversity. Solidarity does not mean uniformity."

El Salvador: "The situation in El Salvador," Francois-Poncet said, "is characterized by great inequality which calls for fundamental economic and social reforms. In El Salvador, as in other countries, notably African countries, we are witnessing an arms traffic which is helping to maintain or increase instability and civil war." This traffic, the minister continued in substance, is an interference which France condemns; at the same time, "civil peace can only be restored by political action which depends on the Salvadorans and them alone."

With regard to the decision to send in U.S. military advisers, the minister said: "In 1977, the United States stopped all military aid to El Salvador. At the beginning of 1981, the new U.S. administration decided to restore military aid following the arrival of vast quantities of arms." Therefore, he concluded, we must not "put the United States in the dock," but he repeated that "the solution must be sought by political means."

The Gulf: Francois-Poncet said that France, "in consultation with its allies," sent ships to the Indian Ocean to ensure that freedom of navigation is respected in the Strait of Hormuz, but it supports the states in the region who think it is up to them to ensure their own defense. The Americans, for their part, are proposing to set up a rapid deployment force but, the minister stressed, "there is no question of setting up a multilateral force. There is no question of extending NATO's zone to that part of the world or of creating a NATO zone in the Gulf."

Africa: "There is no bilateral dispute between Libya and France," the minister said. "The dispute which exists concerns African policy and especially Chad." France, he recalled, conformed to the Lagos inter-African agreement and withdrew its forces from Chad. "All France wants is to see the Africans' will respected."

North-South dialogue: "It is fair to observe," Francois-Poncet said, "that the North-South dialogue is in deadlock. This is a serious deadlock. It is important to break it. North-South relations must be reexamined in detail." The minister confirmed that he will take part next week in the Vienna preparatory conference for a North-South summit which is to be held next summer.

Near East: After recalling the nature of the European initiative, the minister said: "It has never been directed against the Camp David agreement and has never been seen as an attempt to strengthen Camp David. It stands alongside the Camp David agreements."

Amman Report

JN070821 Amman Domestic Service in Arabic 0500 GMT 7 Mar 81

[Text] French Foreign Minister Jean Andre Francois-Poncet has stated that his country is pursuing a firm and independent policy toward the Middle East peace efforts.

In answer to a question from the PETRA Paris correspondent during a meeting with the Diplomatic Press Association members, the French foreign minister said that the European Middle East initiative has actually begun with the French president's visit to the Middle East and with his statements and stands on the definition of the mainstays of the just and all-out peace in the area.

He added that the European initiative's features were clearly pinpointed by the resolutions of the two European summit conferences in Venice and Luxembourg and as a result of Gaston Thorn's contacts with the parties concerned with the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The French foreign minister pointed out that during their June meetings, the European leaders will take practical and more effective steps concerning this initiative. He explained that the diplomatic role must be preceded by a definition of the clear-out principles of the pillars of peace in the Middle East. This is actually what the Europeans have worked for, he added. He said that the European initiative is independent from the Camp David accords. France, supported by the EEC states, continues to reiterate that the peaceful settlement should be based on the need of Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories, on the achievement of security and stability for every state in the area and on giving the Palestinian people the right to determine their future. He said that France's stands on Middle East peace have not always been welcomed by Israel, but the truth always hurts. France, however, will proceed with its stands because these stands are evenhanded and sound.

The French foreign minister said that during his talks with the U.S. President and the U.S. secretary of state, he was convinced that the U.S. administration intends to consider Europe's stands on the current issues. He said that France has never hesitated to voice its stands on these issues.

PREMIER BARRE DISCUSSES PRIMACY OF TRADE BALANCE

LD051351 Paris LE FIGARO in French 28 Feb-1 Mar 81 pp 1-2

[Second "exclusive" article by Premier Raymond Barre: "Priority of External Balance"]

[Text] A policy can have various objectives--expansion, full employment, price stability or external balance. The ideal would be to achieve a "magic square," namely, all of these four objectives at the same time. Experience has shown that it is not easy to achieve this, except in theory. The compatibility of these objectives cannot always be ensured. Circumstances have often made it necessary to give priority to one of them.

As far as France is concerned, the profound and lasting international crisis resulting from oil upheavals has set us a priority objective--restoration of the external balance. In view of the many difficulties facing us--price increases, unemployment and the slowing down of economic activity--what is the reason for such a choice which some people will probably see as clumsy or even provocative? There is both a political and an economic reason for this decision, both of them of major importance.

Regarding the political reason, if France wants to pursue an independent policy consistent with its fundamental interests, to exert an influence on the EEC and to preserve its position in the world, it cannot let itself become prey to an external deficit for any longer period of time.

Recourse to gold and foreign exchange reserves are expedients which cannot be used for long. Our country has learned this from experience. In present times, people in charge of a country's foreign policy do not count for much if they are not supported by a credible defense, a well-defined energy policy and a strong and well managed economy. It is from this viewpoint that you should consider the matter if you want to understand the importance of the external balance of France.

As to the economic reason, an external balance represents the best guarantee of regular expansion and lasting high employment. This is a proposition obviously contrary to theses widely accepted in our country, according to which concern for our foreign balance is an obstacle to rapid growth aimed at full employment. It is these long-prevalent theses which have caused a certain vulnerability of our economy and of the fragility which has long affected our currency. Furthermore, the strength of major industrial countries depends on a close connection between their external balance, restraint in price increases and currency stability.

These general thoughts can be illustrated by the development of France's external economic situation since the first oil shock. This shock brought about a serious deterioration in the trade balance and the balance of current payments in all oil importing countries. Attention has often been centered, especially in France, on the trade balance whose monthly results are, just like the price index, the subject of sometimes triumphal and sometimes despairing but always shortsighted commentaries.

And yet, it is the balance of current payments which represents the most appropriate term of reference for assessing a country's external economic situation since, in fact, it takes into account not only exchanges of goods but also of services (engineering, large-scale works, international trade, international transport, technical cooperation, financial services, insurance operations, tourism and so forth) and what is usually called "invisibles" which are especially important in a developed country.

The evolvement of France's trade balance and balances of current payments since the first oil shock has been very instructive. Four phases can be distinguished in it. The first phase extends from the beginning of 1974 to the fall of 1975.

The oil price increase at the end of 1973 resulted in a big external deficit. In January 1974, the franc left the "European monetary snake" and weakened. As a result of the implementation of a plan for cooling the economy from the summer of 1974 onward, the trade balance was gradually restored. It was finally achieved in February 1975. This improvement was mainly due to a strong decrease in imports resulting from a slowing down of economic activity in general and of a sharp drop in investments in private enterprises in particular. The franc recovered in the spring of 1975 and was reintegrated in the monetary snake in July 1975.

The second phase extended from the fall of 1975 until the end of 1976.

The development plan, whose implementation was initiated in September 1975, provided for a massive increase in budget expenditure and a considerable increase in money supply. It rapidly led to a deterioration in the trade balance as a result of a considerable increase in imports. In March 1976, it was again necessary to withdraw the franc from the "European snake" in view of the fact that our foreign exchange reserves were considerably depleted. This time, oil could not be blamed for a deterioration in the external balance since the price of that product remained stable. It was the consequence--the unavoidable consequence--of the type of economic policy which people in France have chosen to call "voluntarist."

During the third phase, which took place in 1977-1978, our external balance was restored.

As a result of wage increases being kept down, credit and the budget being kept under strict control and the franc being stabilized, the trade deficit was gradually reduced in the course of 1977. The trade balance was restored in 1978. The balance of current payments moved in the same direction and showed a considerable surplus in 1978.

The external balance was restored while the French economy expanded steadily (3.1 percent in 1977 and 3.4 percent in 1978). Our imports continued to increase but our exports increased even more.

And fourth, since 1979 we have again witnessed a deterioration in our external balance. This has mainly been a result of the second oil shock caused by the Iran events.

Whereas our foreign trade remained balanced in the first half of 1979, our trade deficit started growing from the summer onward, reaching Fr13.6 billion for the whole of 1979. However, our balance of current payments still showed a surplus.

In 1980, the full impact of the second oil shock was felt. But even though the trade deficit reached Fr60 billion, the deficit on the balance of current payments was limited to Fr30 billion as a result of the brilliant results achieved in our balance of services.

The growth of imports can be explained by a massive increase in our oil bill but it was also a result of our purchases abroad of both consumer goods and especially equipment. In fact, the expansion rate in 1979 and the first months of 1980 was very satisfactory but decreased slightly in the course of the following months. Nonetheless, it remained higher than that of our partners. According to the OECD, the gross national product of the six major countries increased 1 percent on average in 1980 whereas that of France increased 1.75 percent.

Those who deplore with a kind a relish the deterioration in France's exchange rate and balance of payment and assert that oil has played no role in this development should be reminded, in addition to the amount of money spent on energy, of a few facts illustrating some of our economy's achievements which have been ignored only too often:

In 1979-1980, exports of our goods increased 10.5 percent in volume despite a depressing international economic situation. Our nonenergy trade balance has never before achieved such a big surplus.

In 1980, France became the second biggest exporter of services in the world. Over a 10-year period, its share of the world market increased more than 40 percent. The surpluses on the balance of services more than compensated for the deficits on our trade exchanges with major industrialized countries. In 1979 and the first half of 1980, France's balance of current payments with the FRG, the United States and Japan was favorable. Over this 18-month period, we had a surplus of Fr1.5 billion with the FRG, Fr7.7 billion with the United States and Fr6.3 billion with Japan.

In 1980, the deficit on France's balance of current payments amounted to less than half that of the FRG ($7.75 billion compared with $17.25 billion). This explains the franc's very satisfactory behavior on the foreign exchange market, especially within the European Monetary System, since March 1979.

France, which has been affected by the situation just as much as any other oil importing country, has been facing up to its difficulties relatively better than many other countries. Political passion cannot justify systematic disparagement of the effort made by the entire nation.

How can we restore the balance of our external payments? We cannot expect to achieve this in the short term. Even if we optimistically assume that the price of oil will be stabilized, the current deficit is too big to be rapidly made good. Furthermore, the slowing down of international economic activity, which could prove more prolonged than some people expect, will not encourage any strong international demand which would enable us to rapidly build up our exports. Finally, the employment situation has forced us to maintain a certain rate of economic activity and this cannot encourage any reduction in imports--the cyclical gap between our main partners and ourselves which results from this limits the possibilities of any improvement in our exchanges in the short run. Consequently, the restoration of an external balance can only be a medium-term objective which should continually be treated as a matter of priority.

Therefore, a "strategy of pressing on regardless," which has often been advocated with the generous intention of improving the employment situation, must firmly be ruled out. Its advocates want to simultaneously stimulate economic activity by means of the budget and credits, finance a recurring external deficit out of our reserves and through foreign debts and devalue the franc. As we know from experience gained in 1975-1976, such a strategy would soon weaken the economy and it would become absolutely necessary in some 12-18 months to adopt a policy of strict stabilization, that is, a policy leading to even more large-scale and painful unemployment.

The increase in the number of people seeking employment in France is a consequence of demographic factors (the appearance of young people on the labor market), sociological factors (the fact that women are seeking employment), international economic factors (the depressing effect of the oil levy on the world economy) and structural economic factors (indispensable changes in the French industrial apparatus). This phenomenon cannot be totally controlled by means of faster growth which, while encouraging the creation of artificial and therefore precarious jobs, would soon result in a deterioration in our external payments situation. In addition to a general policy of support for economic activity and a policy aimed at a renewal of our productive apparatus, it also calls for specific measures adapted to various categories of people seeking employment.

However, the objective of external balance can be achieved through a strategy of independence and progress based on five meausres which are now being taken with a view to ensuring:

A reduction in our energy imports through the implementation of our nuclear power program and a policy aimed at saving energy;

The rejection of protectionism and steady efforts to improve the competitiveness of all our agricultural and industrial products through control of production costs, quality improvement and innovation--becoming competitive on foreign markets is the best way to win back the domestic market;

The development, under sound conditions, of future industries capable of facing up to competitors in the international sphere;

Further expansion on foreign markets, especially through commercial and direct investments;

Strength of our currency which is both a result of and a precondition for external balance.

What you currently read or hear about the franc is astounding. Whereas more artful people hope for a return of monetary manipulations, barroom monetary experts uninhibitedly demand that the franc be considerably devalued. Unfortunately, they have failed to understand two things which are after all obvious.

First, we live under a system of fluctuating exchange rates. The franc fluctuates in relation to the dollar, yen, pound sterling and Swiss franc. Under such a system, the international value of currencies depends on the balance of payments situation, interest rates and the assessment of various countries' overall policy. The relation between the dollar and the franc cannot be changed by any decision made by the French Government. It mainly depends on the U.S. interest rate policy and general economic policy. Exporters rejoiced when the dollar became worth FR5. If they still feel so pleased with this, let them at least show more aggressiveness on international markets; but we will have to pay more for the oil, gas and raw materials which we import. I am not sure that our export gains will compensate for the import surcharge to which we will be subjected. In any case, monetary decisions cannot depend merely on exporters' short-term interests.

The second thing which should be realized is that it is difficult to devalue the franc against the German mark when on the foreign exchange market it is the franc which is strong and the German mark weak. The European Monetary System ensures, through flexible mechanisms, the stability of the relationships among the main EC currencies. If it did not exist, the German mark would depreciate even faster and I cannot see what advantage our enterprises would derive from this. In any case, I am sure that the very people who now complain about the franc's strength within the European Monetary System would be certain to denounce the government's inefficiency if our currency were to edge nearer to its minimum exchange rate in relation to other European currencies. What strange but constant fickleness.

In the unstable monetary world in which we live, the government's objective has been to ensure that the franc is a strong currency. It has pursued an interest rate policy consistent with the demands of our economic situation, it has taken care not to participate in the interest rate escalation and, as a result, has been able to ensure for French enterprises great stability in the prime rate for some months. It has ensured, while showing respect for conventional relations and without stirring up any trouble in the social sphere, a wage increase reduction which was bound to favorably impress the foreign exchange market. It has decided to participate in the monetary stability area as represented by the European monetary snake in order to encourage the development of exchanges within the Common Market on the one hand and consolidate the functioning of the agricultural common market, which depends on the restoration of price unity, on the other. It has taken care to replenish and increase our foreign exchange reserves not to sacrifice people to money, as certain people have alleged, but to give our country, which is greatly involved in international exchanges, the means to enable it to face up to any situation. This policy has borne fruit--the franc has emerged undamaged from recent phases of monetary instability. Let us hope that it will remain a strong currency as a result of the efforts of all the French people.

A strategy of independence and progress is a strategy consistent with France's interests which can be understood and implemented by the French people. It is a strategy which events and necessity would force us to readopt if we were to yield to idle dreams and facileness. It is a strategy which has ensured and will continue to ensure world authority and respect for France.

MOROCCO'S KING HASSAN CONCLUDES 4-DAY VISIT

No details were disclosed of the discussions Thursday that were part of ongoing consultations between the two leaders, but King Hassan said they touched upon the situations in Africa, the Mediterranean, Middle East and bilateral relations. The talks focused on a possible role for France in efforts to end the conflict in the Western Saharan, pitting Morocco against Algerian-backed Polisario guerrillas, the king said.

"I think that France would be willing to play a role in a Western Saharan peace," he said Friday. But he added quickly that no such request had been made of Paris so far. The same day, French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said that France was barred from taking part in the conflict, but would consider helping in the search for peace if asked.

POLL SHOWS MAJORITY WELCOMES GISCARD CANDIDACY

LD090943 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 5 Mar 81 p 1

[Text] The French people welcomed Giscard's announcement that he will be a presidential candidate. Nearly two out of three people either saw him on television or heard him on radio. Even though 30 percent of the people asked refused to answer a question on the opportuneness of this candidacy, 60 percent of those who agreed to answer stated that they "welcomed it."

A clear majority of the French people believe that his being a candidate will not prevent him from continuing to fully exercise his functions as president. Nearly three out of four French people feel sure that success awaits the head of state at the end of the campaign.

Finally, even though two-thirds of the French people have not altered their voting intentions (whether for or against Giscard) following his appearance, 8 percent have changed their intentions in Giscard's favor.

These are the main results of a FRANCE-SOIR-IFRES opinion poll carried out on 3 March among a national sample of 837 people.

FRANCE-SOIR REPORTS INTERNAL CGT DISAGREEMENTS

LD091051 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 6 Mar 81 p 6

[Paul Parisot report: "Five CGT Leaders Have Rebelled"]

[Text] Five CGT leaders have accused Georges Seguy and other communist officials of "taking over the main French trade union organization for the PCF's benefit."

Following last Tuesday's executive committee meeting, Janine Parent, Dinah Caudron, Pierre Carassus, Claude Germon and Pierre Feuilly--all of them PS members--published a statement challenging the attitude adopted by the CGT toward the presidential campaign. The executive committee meeting was stormy.

Secretary General Georges Seguy and his right-hand man Henri Krasucki made the committee reject a proposal put forward by Mr Feuilly, suggesting a democratic debate within the trade union organization, the opening of a discussion forum in its organs--LE PEUPLE and LA VIEW OUVRIERE--and even the submission of the problem to the rank and file in enterprises. Only one PCF activist, Robert Gevaudan (finance trade union), voted with the minority members.

The statement published by those minority members emphasizes that Seguy and Krasucki "miss no opportunity to support the PCF campaign at a trade union level." The same statement attacks, in particular, two themes propounded by the CGT communist leaders--that of "convergences between the CGT program and the communist candidate's program" and that which insists on the need for the inclusion of communist ministers in any Socialist-led government.

"Even though the CGT has often been the only organization to fight alongside the workers," the five state, "its membership has considerably declined. In 1976, the CGT had some 2.4 million members whereas today it has hardly more than half this number. Such a change cannot be explained by either unemployment or repression....

"It is a matter of urgency to allow activists to express their opinion to prevent a tool indispensable to the workers, namely, the CGT, from being broken and to preserve its independence."

FR31 BILLION TRADE DEFICIT RECORDED FOR 1980

[Unattributed report: "Return to External Payments Defecit"]

[Text] Goodbye to a strong Franc? The strength of the national currency, which was mentioned by the president in his candidacy announcement, is especially closely connected with the preservation of balance in France's external accounts. Now, in this sphere, the year 1980 was not free of disappointments.

The trade balance, which is an indication of a country's fundamental strength, already showed a big deficit. The oil bill undoubtedly represented a considerable burden, but the results also showed a deterioration in France's industrial position compared with that of its most important partners and competitors. No one is immune to economic decline.

For the first time in 3 years, the deterioration in the trade balance led to a current payments deficit which reached FR31 billion in 1980, even though earnings from "invisible" transactions actually increased nearly 50 percent compared with 1979--income derived from tourism, funds placed abroad, large-scale work carried out outside France, and also the slowing down of fund transfers by foreign workers and a reduction in the transfer of public funds (contribution toward the cost of EEC operations and aid to developing countries)--the results of which were not sufficient to restore the balance of exchanges.

In order to make up for the current deficit, more money was borrowed from abroad--some FR21 billion, that is, nearly double the amount borrowed in 1979. However, France is still well thought of abroad--in any case, better than by many French people. Furthermore, the results of France's current balance are better than--or rather not quite as bad as--those of the FRG whose deficit amounted to FF 5 billion. A small consolation for the authorities....

PRIME MINISTER RECEIVES MESSAGE FROM BREZHNEV

LD092156 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 9 Mar 81

[Excerpt] A message from Soviet leader Brezhnev has been delivered to the prime minister. Here is a report from the Chamber of Deputies by (Innocenzo Cruciani):

There have been no leaks as to the contents of the message which Brezhnev has addressed to the Western heads of state and government--a message which the Soviet ambassador handed to Prime Minister Forlani a short while ago. What is known is that Brezhnev's message is very important, contains good news for Italian business and is concerned with problems of disarmament and relations between Washington and Moscow.

Soviet Ambassador's Comment

[Text] Rome, 10 Mar (ANSA)--Premier Arnaldo Forlani, through the Soviet ambassador to Rome, Nikolay Lunkov, received a letter Monday, March 9, from Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev.

Speaking briefly last night to newsmen, the diplomat said that the message was, in substance, similar to those sent to other Western heads of government. "However, Italy is an independent nation, a great European and Mediterranean country, and for this reason the document is not the same as that sent to the others." "I dare only say this: That the message is very clear and precise; the idea is to ensure a stable peace," he added.

The ambassador also said he outlined in detail for Forlani his personal impressions with regard to problems discussed at the recent Soviet Communist Party Congress in Moscow. He said he was very favorably impressed with the interest Forlani has shown in those problems, be they internal or international.

Questioned further about his talk with Forlani, he said that both sides realized the seriousness of the international situation and the need for measures that will keep it from deteriorating further.

"We are deeply against a nuclear conflict and such a prospect surely does not appeal to Italy either," he said. Therefore a joint approach to the problem is needed, he added.

The ambassador did not reveal the content of that part of the letter having to do with economic relations. He noted that the mixed Italo-Soviet committee is meeting in Rome on Wednesday, however.

"We do not want to see Italy as an adversary but as a partner with whom cooperation in all fields can and must be broadened," he said. The keen interest that Soviet leaders have in relations between the two countries would emerge in the work of the mixed committee, Lunkov concluded.

EL SALVADOR'S UNGO SEEKING SUPPORT FOR MEDIATION

PA100303 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0038 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] Rome, 9 Mar (EFE)--Four days in Rome have allowed the leader of the Salvadoran Revolutionary Democratic Front [FDR] to contact Italian political forces who could mediate a peaceful solution to the Salvadoran conflict. Guillermo Ungo, who is also secretary general of the Salvadoran Social Democratic Party [PSD], has not revealed the outcome of his meetings, but he has said that "U.S. military aid is the main obstacle to a peaceful solution to the crisis."

Ungo was received Saturday by the Italian foreign affairs minister, Christian Democrat Emilio Colombo, but most of his stay in Rome has been dedicated to discussing with the socialists the possibilities of a mediation effort.

According to the Italian magazine PANORAMA, Ungo's main objective is to have the Social Democrats put him in contact with Christian Democracy [DC] and convince them to withdraw their support for the military junta headed by Napoleon Duarte. The DC is not only the main Italian political party but is also one of the most influential within the world Christian Democratic Union headed by Italian Mariano Rumor and aligned with the Salvadoran Government.

In an interview on state television, Ungo said there are possibilities for a "peaceful solution" with the mediation of international forces, but he said it is practically impossible to establish a dialogue with the present administration, which in his opinion represents only the military right and the oligarchy.

LIBYA'S JALLUD COMMENTS ON RELATIONS, TERRORISM

[Text] Palermo, 10 Mar (ANSA)--If insinuations of links between Italian terrorism and the Libyan Jamahiriyah do not stop, Italo-Libyan relations will have to be reviewed, including the question of oil supplies, according to the number two man in the Libyan regime, Major 'Abd as-Salam Jallud.

In an interview published by a Palermo daily today, Jallud appealed to the Italian people to oppose this "defamatory campaign" which seems to link his country with international subversion and with Italian terrorism in particular. The Libyan leader said that current relations between the two countries were "difficult" and "delicate", but that the Jamahiryah hoped they would improve given the trade prospects that have been opened by Tripoli's new economic plan.

The Libyan Jamahiriyah is one of Italy's biggest oil suppliers; around 12-13 percent of imports. Moreover, the North African country owns 10 percent of Fiat stock.

PCI DELEGATES ADDRESS MOSCOW INSTITUTE MEETING

LD061521 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 3 Mar 81 pp 1, 16

[Renzo Foa dispatch: "PCI's Stances Reasserted in Moscow"]

[Text] Moscow--Paolo Bufalini has publicly reasserted the PCI's "regret" over the fact that the PCI's greetings message was not read out in the Congress Hall within the Kremlin, adding that "we failed to understand and are surprised" at the decision. He did so yesterday when he spoke, together with Pajetta, at the Social Sciences Institute, where he clearly reasserted the Italian Communists' positions. He did so on the same day as PRAVDA, 24 hours late, published, in full and with a faithful translation, the text of the speech which Pajetta delivered in Friday at the Hall of Columns, following Sunday morning's visit to CPSU Central Committee headquarters by Pajetta and Bufalini to discuss with Ponomarev all the problems concerning the PCI delegation's attendance at the 26th CPSU Congress.

Also, yesterday two CPSU spokesmen, Zagladin and Zamyatin, expressed esteem for the content of Pajetta's speech, in which they saw "many elements of convergence with Brezhnev's report on international issues." Answering a question about divergences, Zamyatin said, citing Brezhnev, that "there is a diversity of situations, which partly explain the existence of differing assessments."

But in reply to a question about the treatment given to the Italian delegation, Zagladin denied that there was any discrimination and justified PRAVDA's delay as being due to lack of space. However, there was no mention of the fact that Pajetta did not deliver his speech at the congress.

But to come to yesterday evening's meeting of the Social Sciences Institute, where Bufalini was invited to give a lecture on the Italian situation and on PCI policy: In front of an audience of several hundred people, after an introduction from institute director (Pamkov), Bufalini outlined the Italian scene, the problem of the country's governability and of the "communist question" and Italy's economic and social situation, with special reference to the government's economic policy and the present social conflict; next, he discussed the far-reaching struggle which the PCI, more than any other force, is waging against terrorism and concessions and the present tasks in the struggle for detente.

"We are committed," he said, "to the struggle for peace, disarmament, the salvation of mankind and solidarity with the peoples struggling for their full emancipation against colonialism and imperialism, against all forms of oppression. At this 26th CPSU Congress," he added, "we made a positive assessment and were satisfied mainly with the first part of Comrade Brezhnev's report, devoted to the major international issues. He has imparted a new thrust to a platform of peace and detente, of the quest for negotiation and understanding, and made a number of specific proposals for resolving conflicts, for arms limitation and reduction, and for strengthening and extending measures of mutual trust."

Bufalini described them as "important proposals" and added: "May we be permitted to say that in general they are close to many essential needs which we ourselves have felt keenly and often outlined, not only in our own country and in parliamentary forums, but also in international meetings among communist parties?"

"We are particularly committed," he continued, "to the unitary struggle in Europe for negotiations that will make it possible to introduce an immediate moratorium with regard to the deployment of theater missiles in Europe, whether Soviet SS-20's or U.S. Pershing and cruise missiles, and to reach an agreement that will bring about a balanced limitation and reduction of these weapons to the lowest possible level, as Comrade Brezhnev proposed in his report."

Next Bufalini explained the policy of national democratic unity, broaching the issue of the "historical compromise," which he described as "a method, a general approach to the quest for cooperation among all the major Italian workers and people's currents for the democratic and social regeneration of society." We have not yet rejected this strategy, he added: We have adopted a political stance of struggle against a DC which is proving itself to be incapable of extricating itself from its own crisis, and we aim to cooperate in Italy's Government with all the progressive and honest democratic forces.

Having illustrated to the audience the data regarding the PCI's organizational and political strength, Bufalini added that with this struggle and "along our national path--in association with other West European communist, socialist and social democratic forces--we are fighting to thoroughly realize democracy and to render it effective." Then he turned to Eurocommunism. "Eurocommunism," he said, "implies a combination of valid demands, a path to socialism which we consider suited to the West European countries, in which the full realization of democracy and the realization of socialism combine and form a single entity. There is nothing rhetorical or merely formal about our internationalism. We have always contributed and still contribute a real strength to internationalist battles, and this has exerted and still exerts an influence even in international political developments."

Having recalled the major battles of international solidarity, from Korea to the latest violent attempted coup in Spain, Bufalini concluded by saying that "we did not understand and were surprised by the fact that it was not possible at the 26th CPSU Congress for us to speak in the Congress Hall itself, although Comrade Pajetta's speech, which recalled our known position on Afghanistan and Poland, among other things, was published in full in PRAVDA today. However, our regret will not, of course, diminish our commitment to the battle for peace, disarmament, the peoples' freedom and socialism."

After the talk, many questions were put to Pajetta and Bufalini, who spoke for a total of almost 2 and 1/2 hours, and many of the questions remained unanswered--but only for reasons of time. Innumerable issues were broached, starting with China.

Pajetta spoke about this. "We have always said," he pointed out, "that the break was prompted by the Chinese attacks and their unwillingness to discuss mutual criticism. When a meeting was possible we attended, on condition that we could mutually express our respective positions. There is no doubt that there are thorough changes in domestic policy in China today, and Brezhnev himself has said so. It is possible that these changes could also be introduced into foreign policy, and this is why we heeded Brezhnev's specific proposals with interest."

Next Pajetta talks about the PCI delegation's visit to China last year. "As is our custom, we spoke frankly with the Chinese leaders. We discussed this also in a 30-minute television interview with Comrade Berlinguer and a press conference that we were able to hold with 120 journalists, both Chinese and from all over the world. When we asked what differences still exist between the CCP and the PCI, Berlinguer replied: The first and foremost of these differences lies in the fact that the Chinese Communists regard the USSR and the CPSU as a danger and an adversary. We do not agree with this.

"As you can see, Pajetta added, "we are able to present and defend our positions anywhere."

"This CPSU congress," Pajetta also pointed out, "is being attended by at least half-a-dozen parties and liberation movements that have relations with the CCP. At least five of these--Mozambique's Frelimo, the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, the Algerian National Liberation Front, the Romanian Communist Party and the Korean Workers Party--have spoken from the congress rostrum."

Another question was: What does new internationalism mean?

Pajetta said that it means "not being a fickle friend, but being a force capable of extending its friendships to liberation movements and to parties that are still split, of finding unity even with social democratic forces and forces of a religious inclination," citing Iran and pointing also to the pope.

Bufalini added that internationalism is always new because it passes through historical phases. "The dissolution of the Third International," he recalled, "was an option for a new internationalism. Then the Cominform was formed. When I came to Moscow for the 26th CPSU Congress in 1956 I witnessed the dissolution of the Cominform. We cannot reason according to abstracts schemes. Following the 20th congress there was a period of polemics and attacks on 'national paths,' as if there were general laws to be observed and national characteristics to be taken into account--in other words, the structure of a building, on the one hand, and its surface, on the other. We must not oversimplify. Now we esteem the part of Brezhnev's report which asserts the idea of national paths to socialism and cites the case of Yugoslavia, which, however, was considered a deviation for years."

So what specifically does new internationalism mean to us?

"It means," Bufalini said, "that we must consider the breadth assumed by the revolutionary movements throughout the world today, with differences and even in anomalous forms, as in Iran. So if you proceed from the idea that we are all the same, conflicts will result, whereas if you acknowledge the differences, cooperation can be established. So we believe that it is necessary to recognize the existence of a large number of revolutionary forces, including atypical ones, and that their diversity and autonomy must be respected.

"We also believe," Bufalini continued, "that internationalism must now shoulder a number of fundamental tasks--the defense of peace, arms reduction and the solution of underdevelopment, which implies a new distribution of resources."

The PCI's stance on Afghanistan was the subject of several questions.

Bufalini said: "We have confirmed and still confirm--without any opportunism--the disagreement which we have already expressed. But we are also considering the problem of how to resolve this crisis, what kind of solution must be found. We have frequently indicated that we agree with various initiatives for the withdrawal of foreign troops by means of negotiations among all the sides involved to guarantee that there will be no infiltrations and to guarantee a nonaligned Afghanitan friendly with its neighboring countries and not a base or support for forces hostile to neighboring countries, with assurances to the Afghan people of their right to determine their own future."

Why did the PCI not attend the Paris conference on U.S. missiles in Europe?

"It did not seem to us to be a useful initiative," Bufalini replied, pointing out that Brezhnev said in his report that there must be no attempt to upset the existing military balances and that the real threat looming over mankind is the arms race. "We were presented with the proposal of a meeting of communist parties alone designed to issue a 'no' to U.S. missiles, whereas we believe that the only way to establish a ceiling is negotiation. We therefore put forward the proposal of a moratorium, which is now being taken up by Brezhnev and which enabled us to join up with many forces and to broaden the front for arms limitation negotiations."

There were many other questions, about the PCI's stance on the EC and NATO, its attitude toward China's attack on Vietnam, Kampuchea and the Horn of Africa--all issues on which the PCI's stance was clearly confirmed, as it was on the Middle East and on individual aspects of the nature of the PCI. One aspect proved to be of particular interest, as shown by the first question, concerning why the PCI is losing members. "Yes," Pajetta replied, "we lost 19,000 in 1979 and 7,000-8,000 in 1980. Of course, not all parties could afford to lose so many members without disappearing. Indeed, we are one of the few parties which discloses its precise membership, whether it increases or decreases."

This meeting marked the end of the Italian delegation's penultimate day in Moscow. The congress ends today. There will be a single session in the morning, when the new Central Committee and Politburo will be announced.

CIVIL GUARD DIRECTOR INTERVIEWED ON ASSEMBLY ATTACK

[Correspondent Luciano Fructuoso interview with the director general of the Civil Guard, General Aramburu Topete; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The director general of the Civil Guard, General Aramburu Topete, was one of the key figures in the events of 23-24 February, which began with the attack on the Congress of Deputies by a group of Civil Guards. His presence in the vicinity of the congress from the onset was a decisive factor in resolving the regrettable situation which disturbed all of Spain. General Aramburu, what was your reaction on hearing of what happened in the congress, and what attitude did the Civil Guard forces under your command take at the time?

[Answer] The first thing I did of course, was to get in touch with all the Civil Guard areas in Spain to establish a channel for information and to keep all Civil Guard posts and units under my direct command at all times. Then I gave a number of orders with the aim of assembling a number of units to penetrate to the heart of the conflict so as to be able to nip it in the bud.

[Question] So your presence in the vicinity of the congress was part of a specific mission. Briefly, how was this mission carried out?

[Answer] The tactic, as I clearly saw at the very beginning, was to avoid starting a shoot-out at all costs. This could have had terrible, catastrophic consequences, because inside the congress there were nearly 400 hostages held by the attackers and there was no way of knowing what would happen if fighting started outside. My second conclusion at the time was that we should keep an open line of communication from those inside, that is the rebels, the attackers, with the outside, in order first of all to find out what had happened, since our information then was scanty, and second because we were convinced, more than convinced, we were sure, that almost all of the Civil Guards who had been taken along to carry out this attack had been deceived and did not know where they were going. It was only because of their discipline, which is one of the basic qualities of the Civil Guard, that they followed their officers. The great majority of those Civil Guards would certainly realize in time what was going on and then the situation inside would come to a head.

[Question] General, according to reports at the time, you and Generals Saenz de Santa Maria and Armada, and even General Prieto, tried to talk to Lieutenant Colonel Tejero to try to get him back down. What were these contacts and what truth is there in the story that Sr Tejero supposedly threatened you personally?

[Answer] I was threatened. When I tried to persuade Lieutenant Colonel Tejero to change his attitude and give himself up, he refused categorically and in a violent manner. The newspaper report which said that he would shoot and kill me first is true. The point is that they had their weapons in their hands and we did not.

[Question] Why was there a partial withdrawal of the Civil Guard forces surrounding the congress early in the morning, and their apparent replacement by forces of the national police?

[Answer] As director general of the Civil Guard, I think and I will always think, that it is the job of the Civil Guard to deal with [word indistinct] that which goes against our honor. For this reason, I tried throughout, despite pressure to replace the first line with other forces, to ensure that it was the Civil Guard which was in the front line. This was a family matter, as it were. It is true that at a meeting chaired by the director general of state security, the chief inspector of the national police, General Santa Maria and myself agreed that if we had to make a forced entry, an attack, it would be better for the special operation group of the national police to go in rather than the Civil Guard, basically because they had a much larger unit than we and for the obvious reason that a clash between two groups in the same force would be much more painful.

[Question] General, this weekend it was unofficially reported that around 80 Civil Guards who had taken part in the attack on the Congress of Deputies have left the Young Guards College in Valdemoro where they had been since 24 February, and moreover, that some of them have rejoined their units. What is the situation as regards these and the others who are still being held in Valdemoro?

[Answer] For a start, the figure is not 80. The figure is higher. All those who took part in the assault were held for just over 2 weeks while investigations were carried out. The investigation showed that more than 90 percent of the guards who took part in the attack on the congress were misled into participating and they did not know where they were going. Their presence during the attack was due exclusively to their sense of discipline, which is one of the great qualities of the Civil Guard. Their commanding officers told them they were going on a different mission than the one they actually carried out. Therefore it would be very serious indeed to punish people who only did what they were obligated to do. Investigations have been undertaken; the behavior of each and every one of them has been clarified. Or at least partly clarified, and what happened was that all of them have been released and allowed to resume their duties, although they remain at the disposal of the judge appointed to conduct the general investigation, General Garcia Esudero. This does not mean that everyone has been released; only those who apparently took part merely because of the discipline incumbent upon them. There are still a large number of Civil Guards in custody, including commissioned and noncommissioned men, who have been arraigned and are being held pending judicial action.

[Answer] Well, I would say that the total number of those who took part in the congress incident, including officers, noncommissioned officers and ordinary guardsmen, was 288. At the moment 16 noncommissioned officers, 32 corporals and around 15 or 18--I do not remember the exact number, ordinary guardsmen are still being held and some of them, like all the officers, have been arraigned. This is because we think they could have been personally involved.

[Question] General, now that these incidents are behind us, what is the mood of the Civil Guard?

[Answer] It must be said that the mood of the Civil Guard is the same as always. Only I should tell you that this incident is distressing for the Civil Guard, as you will understand, as anyone could understand, it is distressing. In practice the Civil Guard at the moment, the whole corps, (?wishes) to get over this regrettable incident, but its mood remains intact and it is ready to fulfill all the fatherland asks of it, in the best service of the fatherland, and only wishes to continue demonstrating the qualities which for 137 years, if I remember correctly, have been fidelity, honor and above all discipline.

[Question] To conclude general, how do you personally view the immediate future of Spain?

[Answer] I am not going to deny that what happened was very serious and of tremendous significance. But I think that it should make us all think and learn the proper lessons. These lessons are that we must leave behind attitudes which can take us nowhere, I think the lessons should help lead us onto the path of honest work in the service of a better Spain.

PCE'S CARRILLO COMMENTS ON COALITION GOVERNMENT

LD091601 Madrid ABC in Spanish 5 Mar 81 p 8

[Pilar Urbano interview with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo]

[Excerpts] "I see a very bleak future without a coalition government. The present government, weak in parliament and throughout the country, is the same one that brought us to this situation and will be exhausted in a few months' time; this will lead to early elections, which could provide the opportunity for another coup."

We were told this by Santiago Carrillo yesterday at a "luncheon at the Ritz." There was the added bonus of having the presence of another political leader, [Popular Alliance leader] Manuel Fraga, who followed Carrillo. The obligatory topic of conversation was "the political response to the coup d'etat." Carrillo's remarks, extremely carefully weighed and prudent, were entirely in line with the policy of good sense and responsibility which the king has requested from the political forces. They seemed to express an implicit word to the wise: If you wish to prevent the effects, prevent the causes.

"It has become clear that the main priority in this country is to defend freedoms. For the time being everything else is subordinate. For this we need a policy and a government.

"The king's appeal to the parties deserves to be heeded and we must examine the errors that have recently been committed so as to correct them. The putschist element in the army must be isolated and diminished and its causes eliminated: Terrorism must be combated and an effective policy on the autonomies implemented."

He paused to sip his coffee, then told us of his concern regarding the immediate future: "I am worried that this government has insufficient strength and support...and I do not know whether it is even willing to tackle the necessary task, which cannot be postponed. A government 'capable' of dealing effectively with the present situation would have to be composed basically of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and Spanish Socialist Workers Party, while the rest of us could provide outside backing on the basis of an agreed program." "But the UCD does not seem willing to govern in a coalition," he pointed out. Carillo replied: "If Calvo-Sotelo is going to resist, I will insist."

With regard to the drafting of this plan, Carrillo said that "we must not continue to be so lenient with those who defend terrorism, no matter who they are, even the 'Tejeros' [allusion to coup conspirator Tejero Molino]. It will be necessary to consider whether certain parties which represent the other side of terrorism should continue to be legal.

The following "ironic" question sprang to mind: "Has fear of the coup converted the Communists into monarchists?" Carrillo replied: "No...and I would point out that it was comrades of mine who, shouting 'long live the king,' quelled the attempt by certain groups brandishing republican flags, to enter and disrupt the rally on Friday 27 February.... We Communists have not become monarchists, but we have rated highly the role performed by the king throughout the transition and during the recent dangerous events. The alternatives here are not between monarchy and republic, but between democracy and dictatorship." Next he discussed the mysterious attempt "by certain extreme rightwing sectors to involve the king in the coup, which at our meeting with him, the king himself called a 'sibylline maneuver' and which obviously--or so it seemed to me--annoyed him considerably." We returned to the topic of a "government by consultation." I asked him: "What will you say to Calvo-Sotleo if he calls you?" "I will tell him: Sir, we have been holding 'consultations' for the past 5 years and it is not enough. Consensus has already produced its results."

Of course we discussed the attempted coup. "The danger is not over. I am not concerned with who was or was not at the head of it; but I do believe that there were at least three putschist plans. The one prepared by Tejero, who wanted a Chilean-style coup to install a military junta; the Civil Guards' plan for a more 'Turkish-style' coup...and possibly a third plan.... The main points, having said that the political errors and causes of 'provocation' must be rectified, are that the armed forces' leadership be entrusted to soldiers who will sincerely honor the constitution; that the police services not be entrusted to incompetents; and that there be a responsible agreement on the autonomies among the parties to avert any separatist threats."

PCE WANTS NEW POLICY ON REGIONAL AUTONOMY

[Marcel Niedergang dispatch]

[Text] Madrid--The PCE intends to publicly propose a revision of the regional autonomies policy to the country and the Cortes. That is what PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo told us in Madrid on Tuesday, 3 March. The Communist leadership's intention is not to return to the previous situation and to oppose the autonomy status given to Catalonia and the Basque country. According to them the aim is to be much more attentive to "official demonstrations of autonomy." To cite Mr Carrillo, it is necessary that "the political and administrative decentralization involved in the autonomy process should come about while respecting the national flag, which is the Spanish flag."

This spectacular stance, which the Spanish rightwing and army chiefs would not repudiate, not only reflects a return to the PCE's "Jacobin" tradition. First it is one of the conclusions drawn by the PCE leadership after a pessimistic analysis of the attempted coup d'etat on 23 February and of the serious threats which still hang over a democracy which, when it came to the crunch, proved more fragile than had been thought.

The PCE leaders are advocating a genuine investigation into those responsible for the putsch and a fair trial for the guilty parties. But they also think that the situation is too serious for "gratuitous incidents" and "irresponsible attitudes" to be allowed to give ready arguments to the officers who oppose the democratic institutions. In the PCE's view the "proliferation of regional banners" in the four corners of the peninsula is leading to excesses, and the increasing number of small regional parties represented in the Cortes is likely to distort the political game.

It is true that last year we saw Mr Suarez "negotiate" for the votes of the small Andalusian Socialist Party to prevent a censure vote in parliament. It is also true that many incidents, described by the army as "offenses to the flag," have in the past few months contributed to increased tension in the barracks. The theme of the "nation's unity" is one which mobilizes the military most readily. Mr Carrillo, who is very concerned by the putsch on 23 February and especially by all the serious flaws which this abortive coup abruptly brought to light, is demanding "a more responsible attitude," and he said: "Autonomy yes, Spain's dismemberment, no."

He can probably now make such remarks without being accused of giving in to military pressures, as was demonstrated by his personal conduct during parliament's occupation by the Civil Guards: He, together with Mr Suarez and General Gutierrez Mellado, was the only man to remain in his seat without flinching while the assailants opened fire to intimidate the deputies; physical courage is still definitely valued in this country.... Mr Carrillo, who was convinced the other week that he could be summarily executed at any time, said repeatedly: "The revision of autonomy is a question of form, not of content."

A Pessimistic Analysis

This stance is not very far removed from that of the Socialists who share the PCE's pessimistic analysis. "The threats against democracy," Felipe Gonzalez said, "could last another 2 or 3 weeks...." Renewing its offer to participate in Calvo-Sotelo's government, the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party said that one of the main questions which will be raised if a coalition government is formed will be that of "the state's construction of the autonomous regions." It is essential the Socialists say, "to clarify the state government's structures" and to clearly define "the central government's responsibilities and those of the autonomous communities."

In addition, the Communist Party leaders are embittered by Moscow's reactions to the attempted putsch, the "attacks on the Eurocommunists" having continued during the 26th CPSU Congress. They are not much gentler toward some Western communist parties or toward Mr Reagan, who described the attempted coup as an "internal problem."

Mr Carrillo still thinks Calvo-Sotelo's government is too weak to tackle the situation. This opinion is now shared by broad sections of the political class, both on the right and the left. On Tuesday, 3 March, a section of the employers added their voices to this chorus of imprecations against Mr Suarez' successor, who has only just been installed at Moncloa. The solution of a government with a broad parliamentary therefore, gaining ground. The Union of the Democratic Center parliamentary group contemplated it without hostility on Tuesday. But Calvo-Sotelo continues to suggest that the military are hostile to any Socialist participation. That is probably what he was to tell Felipe Gonzalez this Wednesday when he met him for "consultations" which are still not "cooperation."

PSOE URGES FORMATION OF BROAD-BASED GOVERNMENT

[Excerpt] Madrid, 2 Mar--In light of the danger experienced by the democratic institutions, Spain needs a government with a broad parliamentary majority and widespread social support because only a government with these characteristics will be able to complete resolutely the democratic blueprint envisaged in the constitution, states the political document issued at the conclusion of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] federal committee meeting held in Madrid over the weekend, thus confirming the offer of a coalition government made on various occasions to the ruling party by Socialist Party Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez.

In its final conclusions the Socialists' top body maintains that "at this difficult but also hopeful moment in Spain's history the stance of the Socialists and of all the democratic forces should be to move forward firmly in the democratization of the state, the modernization of society, the surmounting of the economic crisis and unemployment and the eradication of terrorism, violence and totalitarian temptations."

It also condemns the attempted coup, "drawing attention to the need for the judicial bodies to assume the role assigned to them by the constitution," and warns the public "that the grave seditious actions against the constitution must not be confused with the general conduct of the armed forces and security forces, which have performed the task which the constitution entrusts to them."

In addition, the PSOE federal committee cites as the principal problems to be tackled by this proposed government with a broad parliamentary majority: "The democratization of the state and the solidary building of the autonomies, the surmounting of the economic crisis and the struggle against unemployment and the defense of freedoms and public safety by eradicating violence of every kind and by citing terrorism as the worst deterrent for coexistence in peace."

Last, it highlights the role played by the king in the crisis "as a firm guarantor of democratic freedoms, judiciously and meticulously using his constitutional powers and those stemming from his capacity as commander in chief of the armed forces," and also acknowledges the "exemplary response of the citizens and news media, as well as of the civil institutions, in defense of freedom."

BRIEFS

NEW APPOINTMENTS--The Council of Ministers yesterday appointed five new secretaries of state: Don Gabriel Cisneros, secretary of state for relations with the Cortes, he has held this same post since 25 January 1980 with the rank of under secretary; Luis Sanchez Harguindey, secretary of state for health, he has been under secretary at the Ministry of the Interior since 13 July 1980; Manuel Nunez Perez, secretary of state for employment and labor relations at the Ministry of Labor, he has been the secretary of information, electoral activity and organization of the Union of the Democratic Center; Agustin Hidalgo de Quintana, secretary of state for trade, he was born in Madrid on 31 March 1932, a law graduate and state trade expert since (?1961); (Eloy Ibanez Buenos), secretary of state for tourism, his last public post was that of under secretary for health to which he was appointed in April 1979. [Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0700 GMT 7 Mar 81 LD] The Council of Ministers appointed Luis Angel Sanchez-Merlo--a frequent collaborator with the prime minister, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, as secretary general of the prime minister's office and Eugenio Galdon Brugarolas as director of the prime minister's office. SOVIET AMBASSADOR DELIVERS BREZHNEV LETTER

[Text] Soviet Ambassador Mr Victor Popov met Mrs Thatcher at 10 Downing Street today and spent 45 minutes in what he described later as "useful and interesting" exchanges.

He gave her a personal letter from President Brezhnev which was almost certainly connected with the Soviet leader's proposal of a summit meeting with U.S. President Reagan.

Mr Popov told reporters after the meeting that he was not authorised to disclose the contents of the letter. But he said the main point of the letter was connected with the peace proposals, made in Moscow last month.

"The main aim of these proposals is to maintain peace and stability in Europe and certainly to improve Anglo-Soviet relations," he said.

Mrs Thatcher has so far counselled caution about Mr Brezhnev's summit proposals, and has urged Mr Reagan not to "dash" into one.

The Soviet leader has also sent messages to French President Giscard d'Estaing and West German leader Helmut Schmidt, clarifying his proposals.

Herr Schmidt has said he will urge President Reagan to go ahead and hold summit talks.

U.K.-ROMANIA TRADE PROTOCOL SIGNED IN LONDON

AU062002 Bucharest AGERPRES in English 1853 GMT 6 Mar 81

The protocol of the session comprises the measures to be taken for increasing and diversifying the bilateral trade exchanges, as well as the actions of common interest on the line of cooperation between the two countries and on third markets, especially in machine-building, electronics and electrotechnics, aircraft, oil and coal, agriculture, scientific research and other domains of mutual interest.

The protocol of the session was signed for Romania by Alexandru Margaritescu, minister secretary of state, the Ministry of Foreign Trade and International Economic Cooperation, chairman for his country of the joint commission, and for Britain by G.C. Dick, under secretary of state for trade, chairman for Britain of the commission.

On the occasion of the participation in the session, the Romanian minister had also interviews with the Ministry of Trade, John Biffen, and with executives of the Foreign Office, the departments of industry, energy and of some British companies.

GOVERNMENT STARTS NEW AEGEAN AIRSPACE ARRANGEMENTS

Papandreou Briefed

[Text] The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has announced that in order to facilitate the quick and harmonious movement of aircraft in the area under the responsibility of the Greek authorities certain arrangements have been made that became valid today at noon. These arrangements are related to the extension of air corridors, formulation of ceilings, exploitation of certain air corridors and the space required for the servicing of aircraft that move through Limnos airport.

The arrangements decided upon by the Greek Government are absolutely in line with existing international regulations and serve both the country's interests and the needs of national and international air navigation, and specifically the air navigation of the countries in the area. In accordance with relevant reports, the airspace arrangements were decided upon independently by Greece, which is exclusively responsible for the safeguarding of normal air traffic in the area of responsibility of the Athens Flight Information Region.

The government has briefed leader of the official opposition Papandreou on the issue of the arrangements in Aegean airspace. Papandreou was visited in the Athens suburb of Kastri by Secretary General of the Foreign Ministry Roussos, who also used the occasion to brief him on the course of the Greek-U.S. bases negotiations and on the issue of nuclear weapons.

Mitsotakis Statement

NC072036 Athens ELEVTHEROS KOSMOS in Greek 7 Mar 81 p 8

[Excerpts] The Greek Government "independently" decided and yesterday announced certain arrangements in the airspace of the Aegean Sea. The announcement was made in a Foreign Ministry statement and relevant statements of clarification by Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis which, however, are not sufficiently comprehensible for public opinion because they contain special aviation terms.

Explaining the purpose and significance of the arrangements, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis made the following clarifications to political editors:

"The government has decided to take a number of measures to improve air navigation conditions within the Athens Flight Information Region. As is well known, the Athens Flight Information Region is the area of responsibility of the Greek air traffic authorities and includes national and international airspace, as is the case in many other Flight Information Regions. This decision was made after many conferences by all responsible departments (Ministry of National Defense, Civil Aviation Department and Foreign Ministry), during which our country's interests and the needs of air traffic in the area were carefully assessed.

"The arrangements were independently decided by Greece, which is exclusively responsible for safeguarding normal air traffic inside the Athens Flight Information Region, and are such that the safe movement of aircraft is not impaired, Greece's defense capability and Greek operational needs are not unfavorably influenced, and no interest of our country is impinged upon.

"The regulations and practices of the international civil aviation organization were adhered to during the planning and making of this decision, and demands that at times had been expressed by countries adjacent to the Athens Flight Information Region (naturally Turkey) were taken into consideration.

"We hope that these arrangements will be considered a contribution to the effort that is being exerted for the improvement of Greek-Turkish relations in addition to the fact that they will facilitate even more the quick and harmonious movement of aircraft inside the Athens Flight Information Region."

Also on this issue, Papandreou made the following statement: "As is well known, Turkmen has been expecting a 'goodwill' gesture from the Greek Government connected with the Aegean airspace, and it is also well known that this promise was given by the Greek foreign minister at one of their recent meetings. Yesterday, Secretary General of the Foreign Ministry Roussos briefed me in detail regarding the specific unilateral administrative facilities that the government ceded to Turkey today through its statement. Both the reduction of the Limnos terminal area and the modification of the minimum and maximum ceilings of certain air corridors inside Aegean airspace significantly facilitate Turkey's civil and military aviation.

"If relations of 'good neignborliness' existed with Turkey, these unilateral concessions, without anything in return, would perhaps have a meaning, but currently they certainly do not have any meaning. On the contrary, these concessions increase the temerity of Turkish expansionism, since Turkey not only persists in occupying 40 percent of Cyprus but aggressively advances its claims in the Aegean. It is no longer possible for us to follow government logic."

In reply to Papandreou's statement a government spokesman stressed the following:

"Having carefully assessed both the country's more general interest and specifically its security, the government proceeded with the unilateral arrangements concerning which it has not undertaken any obligation toward Turkey or a third party."

Papandreou Comments

NC081622 Athens NEWS in English 8 Mar 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Main opposition leader Andreas Papandreou yesterday accused the government of rewarding Turkish arbitrariness with its decision to unilaterally lift some of the restrictions imposed on the use of the Aegean airspace by Turkish aircraft.

Papandreou charged that the government's response to Friday's statement by the main opposition leader was deceptive. He reiterated his earlier contention that the new arrangements are, in essence, concessions to Turkey.

Turkey has not given up on any of its claims in the Aegean, Papandreou said. It does not accept the current status of the Aegean airspace, does not comply with international flight regulations, and does not submit flight plans each time Turkish aircraft enter the Aegean airspace.

"As long as the Turkish Air Force can move freely over the Aegean our country's defensive capability is undermined," Papandreou said.

He took issue with the government's position that the latest step was a good will gesture in return for Turkey's lifting of NOTAM 714/74. He said this NOTAM was in violation of international rules, and Turkey was forced to lift it under international pressure.

"With its act, the government has struck one more blow against national interests. And has once more demonstrated that it has no power of resistance to pressure, giving in to foreigners' demands," Papandreou said. "It is remarkable that the government chose to take this action at a time when the Greek people's attention is concentrated on surviving the destructive forces of nature."

A government spokesman, replying to Saturday's statement by the president of PASOK, Andreas Papandreou, made the following statement:

"Yesterday's statement by the government was not deceptive. The president of PASOK knows that, and he also knows that the security of the country is not affected in any way. The sole motive of government activities is the well-being of the state. What the government does not know is what happened between yesterday and today to make Mr Papandreou come back with such a strong statement."

KKE-Interior Objections

NC071958 Athens I AVYI in Greek 7 Mar 81 p 1

[Statement by KKE-Interior press office; no date given]

[Text] The "unilateral arrangements" the New Democracy government has announced governing airspace constitute unacceptable concessions at the expense of national sovereignty in the Aegean.

In reality, they constitute a consequence and continuation of the concessions that were made with the return to the NATO military wing and the expected U.S. bases agreement.

The government has entered the road of impermissible activities down which threats are expanding against our national integrity and independence from the chauvinistic aims of Ankara and the U.S. plans for the country's involvement in their adventurism.

These new commitments must be reversed without delay, and the slide toward unbounded Atlanticism that is becoming increasingly dangerous under the demands of the new Reagan leadership must be stopped.

The issue must be immediately debated in the Chamber.

PROTEST TO GUINEA ON DETENTION OF FISHING BOATS

AB061921 Paris AFP in French 1831 GMT 6 Mar 81

[Text] Athens, 6 Mar (AFP)--The Greek Foreign Ministry on Friday protested to the Guinean authorities against what it describes as the forceful detention in Conakry of the crews of five Greek fishing boats.

In a telegram to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Guinea, the Greek Government demands that boats and crews be released immediately.

BRIEFS

ELECTRICITY FROM USSR--A new agreement with a Soviet organization was signed today by the Public Power Corporation [DEI] for the supply of 200 million kilowatt-hours of electricity to meet the country's consumption demands. The cost will amount to about $4.5 million. The electricity will be transferred to the Greek power grid through the power grids of Romania and Yugoslavia in a period of about 3 months. The $4.5 million includes the cost for the transport of the electricity. Last year DEI bought 195 million kilowatt-hours of power from the Soviet Union. SOVIET DELEGATION TO DISCUSS ALUMINUM PROJECT

[Text] A Soviet delegation has arrived in Turkey for talks on the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum works. The delegation, which is headed by the chairman of the Soviet State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, Semen Andreyevich Skachkhov, was received at Ankara's Esenboga Airport by Industry and Technology Minister Sahap Kocatopcu.

In a statement at the airport, Kocatopcu said the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum works and the payment conditions for the loan extended for the purpose will be discussed with the Soviet delegation in accordance with the protocol signed in Moscow in January. Kocatopcu noted that the government attaches importance to the development of cooperation between Turkey and the Soviet Union in accordance with mutual interests in the field of economics as well as in other fields. In his statement, Skachkov said his government wishes to further develop its good-neighbor relations with Turkey and this wish was recently voiced by President Brezhnev as well.

The Soviet delegation, which will leave for Izmir tonight, will conduct studies at the Aliaga oil refinery during the weekend and then go to Ankara. The official talks in Ankara will be held on 10 March. A protocol was previously signed during the joint Turkish-Soviet economic committee meetings held in Moscow to double the production at the Seydisehir aluminum works.

Delegation Visits Aliaga

[Text] The Soviet delegation which is in Turkey for talks on the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum works today toured the Izmir refinery in Aliaga. The regional director of the Izmir refinery, Oztan Mentes, said at a briefing session with the Soviet delegation that the refinery's 3.7-million-ton capacity would be raised to 4.2 million tons following work to be conducted in May and June this year.

Recalling that an agreement was signed with the Soviet Union last year for the construction, in the refinery, of a second fuel oil unit with a capactiy of 5 million tons, Mentes said that this second unit would cost $53 million. He added that 8,500 tons of the 36,000 tons of material the Soviet Union would supply for the construction of the second unit had already arrived in the refinery. Skachkov, the chairman of the Soviet State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, said he was pleased with the work being carried out at the Izmir refinery. He also said that the material necessary for the construction of the new unit would be delivered to Turkey in accord with a predetermined schedule.

Talks Begin

[Text] The Soviet delegation which is in Turkey for talks on the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum installations has begun its contacts in Ankara. The delegation called on Minister of Industry and Technology Sahap Kocatopcu this morning. In a statement during the meeting, Kocatopcu said that the latest agreement on the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum installations will be signed at the end of Soviet delegation's visit and that Turkish-Soviet economic relations will thus be further developed.

Skachkov, the chairman of the Soviet State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, said that new factories, which will support the installations realized through joint Turkish-Soviet cooperation, should be built, and expressed the belief that developments will be achieved on the issue at the talks to be held in Ankara.

He added that developments were achieved concerning the expansion of the Izmir oil refinery installations following the talks held in Moscow in January, and that new technical equipment for the installations have begun to be sent to Turkey. The Soviet delegation will continue its contacts this afternoon as well. The Turkish-Soviet agreement on the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum installations is expected to be signed tomorrow.

FRG PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION ENDS VISIT

[Text] Romanian Minister of Transport Vasile Bulucea left Turkey today after ending an official visit here. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Bulucea said that positive results had been achieved at the talks held in Ankara between the Turkish and Romanian delegations. He said that according to the agreement signed with Turkey during his visit, cargo arriving from Western Europe would be gathered at Romania's Constanta port and then sent to Turkey's Samsun port where it would be transported to Middle Eastern countries. Bulucea added that according to the agreement International Highway Transport [TIR] trucks would be ferried between Constanta and Trabzon.

FINANCE MINISTER RETURNS FROM ISLAMIC BANK MEETING

[Text] Finance Minister Kaya Erdem returned to Turkey today after attending the annual meeting of the Islamic Bank governors in Khartoum, Sudan. In a statement at Ankara Esenboga Airport, Erdem said that at the meeting he was elected chairman of the Islamic Bank Ministers Council for a 1-year term. Noting that next year's meeting would be held in Istanbul, the finance minister stated that the Islamic Bank would extend a $45-million loan to Turkey for the purchase of oil this year and that it would contribute capital to four private sector projects as well.

Kaya Erdem said that at the meeting the Islamic Bank capital was raised to $2.6 billion. Erdem noted that during his stay in Khartoum he held bilateral talks with his colleagues and with officials of the World Bank who attended the meeting as observers. He stressed that the $700-million loan the World Bank is extending to Turkey this year has been confirmed.

SCHMIDT ON MILITARY BALANCE, SUMMIT, ARMS EXPORT

DW101128 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1000 GMT 8 Mar 81

[Reporter Klaus Voigt interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt--recorded; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, according to an opinion poll published recently, three out of four federal citizens advocate a balance with the Warsaw Pact states as a long-term military aim to be strived for by the Western Alliance. Only 16 percent are for Western superiority, whereas 8 percent would put up with the East bloc's superiority. Thus, a massive three-quarters majority supports the policy of equilibrium which you have advocated for years now. Has this unequivocal magnitude not taken you somewhat by surprise?

[Answer] No, I was not taken by surprise. You said quite correctly that I have been advocating the concept of military balance in Europe for a long time. I can even number it exactly--for more than 20 years, through the spoken and written word and in a large number of Bundestag debates. It is a very obvious concept and it wasn't devised by us Germans. It is obvious because only the insight that the other side must not become any stronger than I am makes it possible to arrive at arms limitation agreements. Nobody is prepared to submit a treaty to his parliament for ratification, which from the beginning acknowledges, in the treaty, that the other side should be stronger than one's own country or one's own alliance. Such treaties cannot be reached. Arms limitation presupposes that both sides may be sure that the other side is not superior. This is why the principle of equilibrium is a necessary prerequisite for arms limitation. It likewise is a necessary prerequisite for the safeguarding of peace.

However, two remarks must be added: First, even if a military balance is a necessary prerequisite for any peace that does not mean submission to the will of the other side, this equilibrium alone does not suffice to safeguard peace. What must be added is the sentiment for peace, the will for peace, the willingness to understand the other side, the willingness to take his interests, his requirements into account, the readiness for compromise. And the second remark that I must add is that it is easy to speak of the need for balance, but that it is much more difficult to define it concretely and to state what it actually means: equilibrium in the Middle East or equilibrium in Africa or, what must be most obvious for us, equilibrium between West and East in Europe.

[Question] Could you list some examples?

[Answer] When it comes to the mutual military threat, for instance, geography is of great importance. The Americans and their reserves are far away from Europe. In between is the entire Atlantic Ocean. The Russians are much closer and there is no water and no ocean in between. That means that geography is not balanced. Nevertheless, one wants to achieve such a balance. The same holds true for the industrial possibilities of the various countries. The same applies to the density of population. Hence, there are many factors, which, proceeding from the general principle of balance, call for a much more detailed definition as to how a balance can be actually achieved in a certain situation.

[Question] As a matter of fact, the apprehension exists that America's Reagan administration does not strive for equilibrium but for superiority. This can be heard also within the ranks of the SPD. How can this fear be overcome?

[Answer] I believe that such fears are unjustified. I cannot remove them; I am not the public relations man for the new U.S. Government. The U.S. Government itself will remove them.

I do not doubt this at all, and this is bound to happen. The moment the new U.S. Government under President Reagan enters negotiations with the Soviet leadership will show that it does not negotiate so that American superiority can be confirmed by the Russians or embodied in a treaty, but everybody will then realize that it negotiates to put an equilibrium into writing. But this process will also show--and I repeat myself--that it will not be that easy to define what an equilibrium between the United States and the Soviet Union actually ought to look like in concrete terms.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, you expressed the view recently that along with the increasing Soviet superiority in the field of Eurostrategic medium-range missiles, the probability for mutual limitation on the same level will decrease. The Federal Government actually does not consider acceptable the proposal made by General Secretary Brezhnev in his speech at the CPSU party congress for a moratorium on medium-range weapons during the period of negotiations. Is Western counterarming in this field in conformity with NATO's dual decision of 1979 avoidable at all?

[Answer] I believe that it can still be avoided even though the Soviet Union through its undiminished arming has achieved such a great lead in the field of Eurostrategic weapons that negotiations on removing this lead, negotiations on the creation of equilibrium, will not be easy, to be sure. I am convinced that these negotiations will materialize. Unfortunately, the offer made by Mr Brezhnev in this respect in his speech at the party congress does not go far enough. It even lags behind ideas he stated once before in East Berlin on 6 October 1979. At the time, he was ready to also withdraw a large part of the Soviet Eurostrategic missiles behind the Urals in addition to the moratorium. Though this would not have meant much, because the range of these weapons reaches roughly 4,000 km, it would have been a gesture toward removing the pressure exerted on Europe. He has not talked of this since then.

The term moratorium means nothing less than: We Russians have now installed almost 200 missile-launching pads. You don't have them, and now we should both stop. This is something the West could not accept, neither then nor today. At the time, I proposed in talks with the Soviet general secretary as well as publicly that the Soviet Union should impose a moratorium on itself. I also outlined the way this should be done, namely, neither the East nor the West should deploy additional weapons for a specific period of time, with everybody being aware that the West was not even in a position to do so, because at the time it did not have these weapons.

But that was 1 and 1/2 years ago, or over a year ago, and in the meantime the Russians have deployed additional large numbers of Eurostrategic missiles. I have always been highly concerned about this imbalance which I foresaw by the end of the sixties--you find that in my essays and books--because these missiles which are targeted on Europe are an instrument of political pressure on the European nations and governments.

[Answer] I do not think that the Soviet Union toys with the idea of waging war against the West European nations or of destroying our cities with these missiles. But the possibility of using such weapons as a threat may play a role in specific future political situations. It is this possibility that worries me.

[Question] General Secretary Brezhnev in his speech at the Moscow party congress proposed a summit with President Reagan. The President first wants to consult his most important allies on this proposal, some of whom, he said, were only a bus ride away from the Soviet military power. He wants to consult you, for instance. Are you going to advise him to accept the proposal?

[Answer] I will quite certainly do that. In my view, the most important point in Leonid Brezhnev's speech at the party congress is the fact that he offers negotiations with the United States on his own. He almost asks for such talks.

Ronald Reagan told me in a talk shortly after his election and prior to his inauguration in Washington that he is prepared to negotiate with the Soviet Union, in particular on arms limitation. At the time, he said: We are prepared to negotiate and negotiate and negotiate, meaning, with much emphasis and much time, with patience. Surely, he will not be an easy negotiating partner who can be taken in--thank God, no. By the way, the Russians will not be easy negotiating partners either.

[Question] Mr Federal Chancellor, you yourself have pointed repeatedly and emphatically to the great importance the Gulf region in the Middle East has for the security of the West and in particular for the Federal Republic. Indeed, this region supplies about 60 percent of the European oil requirements. A key role in this respect is also played by Saudi Arabia. Will your talks in that country in April be focused on an intensified development of cooperation between both states?

[Answer] The term focus may be a bit too much. There will be a number of very important topics, including also the world situation, the security policy situation in the Persian Gulf and the Middle East and naturally also the political and above all economic cooperation between our two states. We have very good political and economic relations. Naturally, the question will also play a role as to whether Saudi Arabia, which buys military equipment in Britain, the United States and other Western states, can also get part, a small part, of such equipment from the Federal Republic. During the Saudi King's visit to the FRG last autumn, the subject was broached, and I told him that we have very restrictive laws and guidelines on arms exports which make it extremely difficult for us to really make the exceptions that are possible on principle in one case or another. We frankly described the enormous difficulties we see. This has not changed.

Meanwhile, there has been a broad public debate in Germany on the subject. It seems to me at this point that the general tendency in parliament and also in public opinion is in favor of retaining the restrictive line in German arms exports. Regarding arms exports, Germany is known to be more reserved than any other of the big industrialized countries of the world. This is based on principles and guidelines on the drafting and introduction of which I worked myself as defense minister a decade ago. However, we will have to avoid one thing--it must not be permitted that some at home and abroad give the impression that under the pressure of Israeli ideas, we treated Saudi Arabia differently than we would by ourselves. This is unthinkable. Saudi Arabia is and remains to the Federal Republic an equal political and trade partner. By the way, I must tell you that I have always felt great respect for the dignity of Saudi politicians.

[Answer] I think, Mr Voigt, there will only be preliminary results, as I described them earlier. Any decisions on possible modifications of the principles on arms exports in the light of domestic discussion would very likely be made later than in April. I will go to Saudi Arabia in April, and it is also possible that there will be no substantial changes and new decisions at all.

[Question] Consider security interests in the Gulf region. In a recent study, four leading Western foreign policy institutions, including the German Society for Foreign Affairs, submitted proposals on a more intensive Western division of labor. According to this study, a group of five key states--the United States, France, Great Britain, the Federal Republic and Japan--is to assume special political responsibility for security in this region. Do you consider the idea of such a group of key states becoming active there feasible?

[Answer] To begin with, I have no objection to the idea. However, if it amounted to military operations by this group of states in the Persian Gulf area, I must say I would not want to see the FRG there, also for constitutional reasons, for reasons which have to do with our basic law. I am not so sure either whether the adjacent states on the Persian Gulf, whether the emirates, Iraq, Iran or Saudi Arabia agree. It is useless to force military aid on others.

[Answer] Of course they don't. On the other hand, regarding this concept, I find quite positive the fact that the institutions of other countries have now accepted by idea about the division of labor. I never held the view that the Germans, the Americans, the British, the French, the Japanese, the Italians and all the peoples of the West should have the same tasks at the same place at the same time. Many things that the Americans can do can be done only by them and not by us. Many things that the French and the British can do cannot or must not be done by us, for instance in the fields of nuclear arms or of guarantees for Berlin. There are other things that we can do better than others. We gave, for instance, much more financial aid than the United States and France or Britain to Turkey and Pakistan, which are two key states in the Middle East, extending from Anatolia to western Asia and Southwest Asia. We were in a position to help them; at the time, we were financially stronger and this is the centerpiece of our part of the labor. Division of labor is a proper key word for international cooperation of the West.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES WASHINGTON TALKS

[Text] [Question] Actually, only things on which there is agreement came up here in Washington. What happened to the differences?

[Answer] I believe that nobody will be surprised that both governments are interested in strengthening cooperation and in pointing out common positions. This also applies to the aim of safeguarding the balance through one's own defense efforts as well as through arms control on as low a level of arms as possible. The talks were held in this spirit.

[Question] Is the U.S. interest really as urgent as that of the Federal Government to implement, for example, both elements of the counterarmament decision and to negotiate on it?

[Answer] Yes, it has become quite obvious that the U.S. Government, like us, attributes the same importance to both sides of the decision. It means that one must make parallel headway with regard to both parts of the decision.

[Question] Are you convinced that the new administration will respect the different interests of the various European allies more than before?

[Answer] Well, I consider it a gain that the new government asks for the opinion of its allies on important matters prior to fixing a final position. We should not complain about the time that is lost thereby. We ought to consider it a gain that the government here attributes considerable importance to consultations with European states. This demonstrates particularly clearly that great importance is attributed to the word of the Federal Republic of Germany as a country located in the heart of Europe, one which particularly experiences the division of Europe, and that consultations with our country are considered as particularly important.

Reports to Cabinet

[Excerpt] Bonn, 11 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher returned to Bonn today from his 2 days of talks with U.S. leaders. Immediately after his arrival, Genscher went to the chancellor's office, according to the Foreign Office, to give an initial report during the cabinet session on his talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan, Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and other leading U.S. politicians.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON GENSCHER'S U.S. VISIT

DIE WELT

[Commentary signed CO.: "Doubts at Home"]

[Text] Doubts remain even after Genscher's success. Reagan and Haig have convincingly supported German-American friendship and Bonn's central role in the Western alliance. That is Genscher's personal success. Washington does not intend to push the Federal Republic on a political side track where the rapid trains of the British and the French would whiz by, as has been suspected since the Washington visits of Margaret Thatcher and Francois-Poncet. Former NATO Commander in Chief Haig knows the weights in the alliance too well for that.

And yet, there is no reason for Bonn to feel euphorical. One knows in Washington that the federal foreign minister, who is esteemed in Washington because of his firmness in counterarmament matters, is being supported by Federal Chancellor Schmidt, but that the latter's support has become brittle in his own Social Democratic Party. For the sake of harmony, Haig abstained from a detailed discussion on Bonn's saving measures in arms procurement. Defense Minister Apel will feel in his forthcoming Washington visit that explosive conflict material is smouldering here. That pertains also to such ticklish and still open issues as Namibia and the Middle East. And will the SPD leftists accept Genscher's moderate statements on El Salvador? Doubts in this respect relativize his success in America.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

[Commentary signed G-N.: "Not Just Flexible"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Haig was handling the talks with his German colleague Genscher in a most flexible way. Washington accepts that some European allies believe that domestic-politically they could support a policy of reestablishing the military balance only by stressing the (natural) preparedness of the West with regard to disarmament and arms control. It is also important on the other hand that Bonn declare through Genscher in an unrestricted way that the moratorium for nuclear medium-range missiles suggested by Brezhnev is unacceptable, without pretending to see a good beginning in this foul offer. It is also correct to link Brezhnev's demand for a summit conference with certain Western expectations, such as Moscow's policy vis-a-vis Poland, without being hurried on to a summit by the cracking of Moscow's whip. But the Federal Government would be understanding Haig and Reagan incorrectly if it expected that the U.S. demands for European cooperation and clearly greater defense contributions could be eliminated in negotiations. On the contrary, America's new will with regard to consultations demands more responsible reactions from the Europeans.

DER SPIEGEL REPORTS ON APEL'S ARMAMENT PLANS

DW101318 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 9 Mar 81 p 16

[Text] Hans Apel needn't go emptyhanded to America. The German defense minister in late March can report in Washington to his U.S. colleague Caspar Weinberger, who has just presented the highest military budget in the history of America ($178 billion), that he will have to cut down his armament programs but little. Even his seventh and eighth frigates can be built for the Federal Navy (costs: about DM1 billion)--although by the end of this decade.

Using several mathematical tricks and with budget shifting, Apel will try to carry on with regard to the Bundeswehr's prestige projects--some 322 Tornado fighter planes, 6 F-122 frigates and 1,800 Leopard II tanks. The prerequisite is, however, that his budget continues to increase above the average.

Apel agreed on principle with his top military men and top officials in the course of the 3-day closed session last week on some future projects: new Pershing II missiles whose range, in contrast to the American missiles, will be limited to 740 km, the Patriot antiaircraft missile and maybe a U.S. successor model to the Phantom fighter plane of the air force.

No contracts will be concluded with industry for the time being. Money will be so scarce up to 1983 due to the high Tornado costs that every penny will have to be turned over three times. The inventory showed that it will be 1984 before there is some breathing space in the defense budget.

The inspectors of the army, the air force and the navy have to scratch big parts of their lists of requests--particularly with regard to new shells, missiles and bombs for their expensive tanks, planes and ships. The ammunition reserves cannot be increased either, although this is being demanded by NATO. More funds are envisaged in the coming years only for fuel and for maintenance of materiel.

Therefore, no optimism is gaining ground among those involved after the Hardthoehe battle for marks and pfenngs. A general said: "We can make it--but only with the greatest difficulty."

PAPER EXAMINES ARMS DISCUSSION, APEL CONFERENCE

[Ulrich Mackensen editorial]

[Text] It has been true all the time and not just in the past several months that the post of Federal defense minister is one of the most difficult "jobs" in the cabinet. First, this is because the armed power is much more closely watched by the public, and justly so, than is perhaps the Ministry of Agriculture, and second, because in the minds of many FRG citizens the soldiers are accepted, to be sure, yet the fact is pushed aside that they cost a lot of money as well. This is why the responsible minister is saddled with cost explosions even if he could not even have prevented them. And in the third place, finally, the defense minister is always a foreign policy man to a considerable extent--whether Hans Dietrich Genscher likes it or not--because of the solid mooring in NATO and because of the necessary close cooperation with the United States. Conflicts that begin to take shape, because of consultations, are therefore easily put in line through the pertinent cabinet member.

The central question that posed itself during and after the arms conference at Bonn's Hardthoehe, therefore, was the question concerning the minister's leadership ability. On this point, Apel proved that he has a "firm grip" on the ministry in this, undoubtedly difficult, situation. The inspectors of the three branches of service, the army, the navy and the air force, have "swallowed" his austerity program, and rash speculations that a great scandal might occur did not pan out. Still, Apel will yet have to go through the Tornado investigating committee before one can say that he is out of the woods.

Should this likewise happen, then the defense minister will more strongly than before be dependent on support from the cabinet and, above all, from his own party. As early as in the next few months, the question will no longer be whether the Tornado as a system will cost DM72 million or DM80 million--bad as this development is--the discussion instead will concentrate on how much sense such high defense expenditures make. Inspector General Brandt also clearly realizes this.

It may be that financial gaps can be plugged by means of stretching, cutting and discontinuing individual projects. But above all, it will be necessary to justify for posterity and generally more logically than before what sense there is in defense. This might possible be aggravated considerably by developments under the government of Ronald Reagan in the United States. It has been bluntly said already that the billions the United States is adding to its investments in armament are intended for emulation by the Federal Republic and other NATO states. Yet, this is neither militarily necessary nor psychologically justifiable, let alone financially possible.

The closed arms conference, which drew attention to financing problems for weapons systems and obviously also to planning errors and the egotism of some branches of service, for these reasons merely opened the gate to a much more far-reaching discussion clear across the Atlantic and in our own country. FRG politicians will be knocking on Washington's door in the next few days and weeks. They will sound out U.S. positions and elucidate their own viewpoints. In this respect, security policy will be a central issue in which it will be highly important that it be supported and understood by the people, a policy which also indicates that the "detente" pillar, jointly with "defense," continues to make up "security." It cannot as yet be clearly determined whether this word [detente] has largely disappeared from the vocabularly of U.S. policy. After all, Secretary of State Alexander Haig is one of those who best knows how important this part of security policy is for the Europeans and, above all, for the Federal Republic.

Now, after the closed conference, Hans Apel has the way clear for the foreign policy-security policy component of his office. This, too, is definitely an important result of the 3-day conference.

DIE WELT VIEWS REAGAN'S ARMS OFFER TO AFGHANS

[Commentary signed VL: "Counteroffensive"]

[Text] Reagan's offer to supply arms to the Afghans upon request does not mean that America is seeking a new Vietnam in Hindu Kush. It means instead that America will not limit itself any more to withdrawals or at best to the defensive wherever Moscow launches an attack. The last one was in El Salvador--following the Brezhnev motto: Peace or no peace, all "liberation movements" will be supported by the Kremlin. America at least reserves the right for itself to enter the worldwide liberation offensive. Why, for example, should Doctor Savimbi be left to himself in the Angolan bush? That is more than just a "linkage." That is the long neglected matter of course that no special privilege should be given to Moscow with regard to worldwide subversion. Eventually, there will be an equality of arms here also.

QUAI D'ORSAY 'SURPRISED' BY ISRAELI STATEMENTS

[Text] The Quai d'Orsay has expressed surprise at the statements made by the Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman on 3 March "because they related to the private conversation between Mr Francois-Poncet and Israeli journalists on 2 March."

"These statements," the ministry communique indicated, "relate to remarks taken out of context and hence completely distort. France's stance on the settlement of the Near East conflict is well known and does not need to be recalled."

On Wednesday, Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Inbar described as "regrettable and surprising" the remarks made by a "senior Quai d'Orsay official" who, according to the Israeli press, described Israeli policy as "suicidal." The Jerusalem POST indicated that the "senior official" was none other than the French foreign minister.

The Israeli Embassy in France has, however, denied that one of its representatives was present during this conversation, as some Israeli newspapers wrote.

MARXIST PHILOSPHER BALIBAR EXPELLED FROM PCF

[Text] Paris, 10 Mar (AFP)--Marxist philosopher Etienne Balibar has been thrown out of the French Communist Party following publication of an article criticizing the party for its recent hardline stand on immigrants.

Mr Balibar, 39, gained popularity among the French left through his writings after the events of May, 1968. He co-authored the controversial study "On Capital" with prominent Marxist philosopher Louis Althusser. His current critique of the party, which he joined in 1961, focused on recent actions such as the pre-Christmas bulldozing of an immigrant hostel by the Communist mayor of a Paris suburb and immigrant "quotas" set by municipal officials in various Communist-led communities.

A professor at the Sorbonne, Mr Balibar was among the public figures who signed a petition, launched in December 1979, for all leftist candidates to form a united front in the spring, 1981, presidential elections. Several other signatories of the petition have also been thrown out of the party.

LE MONDE COMMENTS ON U.S. EL SALVADOR STANCE

[Andre Fontaine article: "Who Is Testing Whom?"]

[Excerpts] Sovietologists are fond of saying that any U.S. President has his determination and sangfroid tested by Moscow in the early days of his term. Judging from the trial of strength going on over El Salvador, there is reason to think that the proposition should be reversed this time and that it is Mr Reagan who is busy "testing" Mr Brezhnev and, at the same time, the NATO members and Latin American countries.

Nobody should have any illusions about the new President's objectives. As Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Percy said: "We must show that we are prepared here and now to very clearly draw the line" (beyond which the communists must not venture--Fontaine note). General Haig has pointed to documents seized from secret hiding places (this is reminiscent of the good old days in Vietnam) proving, according to him, that Moscow is supporting international terrorism, in violation of the Soviet-American "code of conduct" adopted in 1972.

Envoys have been sent to the four corners of the world, bearing information on the 800 tons of weapons which Communist Party of El Salvador leader Shafick Handal allegedly bought from communist countries last year. Since only 200, coming essentially from stocks of U.S. arms captured by the communists in Vietnam or Ethiopia, have apparently reached their destination, the Americans warned Moscow that, if Cuba and Nicaragua do not stop passing on the arms in question, they would make it their business to stop them.

The USSR, of course, replied that these accusations were completely unfounded. Strictly speaking, that proves nothing. It is not so very long ago that Mr Gromyko, who is still foreign minister, swore to John Kennedy that there were no Soviet missiles in Cuba, where they were being installed for weeks. Since 1917, Moscow has constantly claimed the right to use any means to support revolutionaries throughout the world. But this is not sufficient reason to accept the assertions of people like Mr Reagan and Mr Haig at face value. Whether over Poland, Afghanistan or the Gulf, they have every reason to make the Soviets understand that in a way they hold Cuba hostage and that, in any case, they do not intend to allow the Reds to install themselves in their famous backyard.

Judging from the content of his report to his party's congress, Mr Brezhnev at present has no intention of overdramatizing the situation. Contrary to what he said quite clearly a few months ago, he seemed prepared to renegotiate the SALT II agreements on strategic weapons which the Americans no longer want to accept. He proposed a summit meeting to that end. According to U.S. NEWS [AND WORLD REPORT], the Kremlin has also shown its readiness to offer the United States "all the guarantees it might want" regarding its Near East oil supplies. The Kremlin apparently showed that "it fully realizes that any break in those supplies could quickly lead the United States into war."

Mr Reagan reacted like an angler who hopes he has hooked a big fish and does not want to let it escape for anything in the world. Applying for the first time the principle of linkage between the various areas of Soviet-American contention so dear to Henry Kissinger, he posed the assurance that Moscow will give him a free hand in El Salvador as a precondition to any meeting. That presupposes, of course, that Cuba will not meddle either, hence, the importance of the meeting between Mr Brezhnev and Fidel Castro behind the scenes at the CPSU congress. The lider maximo knows from experience that the Kremlin has always shown great caution when it comes to advancing pawns on the American continent. It is impossible not to be struck by the contrast between the violently hostile tone he has taken toward Mr Reagan in his recent public speeches and the Kremlin's moderation.

Compromising the Allies

The new U.S. President has also made it known that before replying to Moscow's invitation, which in any case would take time since his advisers were only starting to study their diplomatic files, he intended to consult his allies. The latter, who had so many opportunities in the past to deplore the fact that Washington failed to ask their opinion, are, at first sight, bound to be satisfied with this. But they must also realize that the aim is to compromise them as much as possible in order to strengthen the U.S. position with regard to the USSR at a time when the latter, as Mr Brezhnev's speech to the 26th congress has just confirmed once again, is seeking more than ever to chisel away at the Atlantic network.

Even Mrs Thatcher, of whom Mr Reagan has just declared himself a fan, is forced to show some reservations owing to the fact that Belize, formerly British Honduras, is to gain independence in a few months and that Guatemala has designs on this tiny state (22,000 sq km and 113,000 inhabitants). Thus, she has stated her intention not to interfere in what is, in her eyes, El Salvador's "internal affair." Amid the torrent of flattering words he addressed to the new U.S. leaders during his recent visit to the United States, Mr Francois-Poncet was rather cautious about Central America. Of course, he condemned all arms supplies to the guerrillas, but he stressed the need to give priority to solving the economic and social problems which are clearly behind the fighting.

The FRG, for its part, has simply offered to mediate between the junta, which does not seem to want its mediation, and the revolutionaries. Generally speaking, to cite the TIMES, "The European members of the Atlantic alliance think that the troubles in El Salvador are essentially indigenous in nature." This opinion is shared by President Lopez Portillo who was prompted by Washington's warnings to Fidel Castro to declare publicly, possibly with an element of blustering, that Mexico would not allow anybody to attack Cuba or Nicaragua. Virtually no one but the Chinese, hitherto rather cautious in their attitude toward Mr Reagan, owing to his past links with Taiwan, has clearly approved the U.S. stance.

Most U.S. presidents have sought to place responsibility for their direct or indirect interventions in the Third World on their allies' shoulders. They succeeded once in Korea. This time they are alone, as in Vietnam. As Joseph Kraft writes in the Los Angeles TIMES: "If the Salvadoran junta collapses, they will look ridiculous in the eyes of the world.... If they win, they will immediately benefit in the region... and their European partners will stand to attention and salute them."

This shows that the test to which Mr Reagan and Mr Haig have decided to put Moscow and their allies applies first and foremost to themselves.

FRANCE MAINTAINING CONTACTS ON HIJACKED PLANE

[Text] Paris, 10 Mar (AFP)--France has contacted with Moscow, Kabul and Damascus over the hijacking of the Pakistan International Airlines Boeing to Damascus, it was announced here today.

A spokesman at the French presidential palace said that this followed a personal message from Pakistani President Mohammad Ziaul Haq to his French counterpart, Valery Giscard d'Estaing asking him "to intervene in favour of the hostages" held on the plane.

France approached the Soviet Union and Afghanistan when the hijacked plane flew to Kabul, and is now in contact with Syrian officials as the plane sits on the tarmac at Damascus airport, the spokesman added.

KAMPUCHEA'S SON SANN TO CONSULT WITH EXILE GROUPS

[Text] Paris, 10 Mar (AFP)--Cambodian ex-Premier Son Sann has arrived in France from Bangkok to consult with exile groups about the Sihanouk plan for a united opposition front, diplomatic sources here said today.

He flew to Nice at the weekend and will continue to Paris this week, the sources said.

Mr Son, leader of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front, recently spent several months with nationalist anti-Vietnamese forces near the Thai border.

While in France he plans to consult with anticommunist Cambodian exiles about former head of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk's plan for a united front against the Vietnamese presence in Cambodia, the sources said.

SOVIET REQUEST FOR PORT OF CALL CHANGE REFUSED

LD101922 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 10 Mar 81

[Summary] Soviet cruise ships of the Morflot company have so far always called at Marseilles. However, the company has requested a change in port of call, wanting to land its passengers in Toulon.

The official reason given by the Russians is that Marseilles is such a large town that people easily get lost. Russian or Romanian tourists on several occasions have slipped away from their guides and asked for political asylum in France. But perhaps there is another reason--Toulon is a military port. The Morflot company has an ambitious program for 1982, with plans for five ships, including the Belorussia, to leave Toulon for Mediterranean cruises. The French Government and Navy refused the request. It should be recalled that the Mediterranean squadron has just been equipped with tactical nuclear weapons onboard the aircraft carrier Clemenceau, and the first nuclear attack submarines will be located in Toulon in 1982.

LE MONDE ON NICARAGUAN 'GOOD WILL GESTURE' TO U.S.

[Editorial: "Message From Nicaragua to Washington"]

[Excerpts] The Nicaraguan Government junta reshuffle in Managua 4 March carries a subtle message intended for Washington. The appointment as ambassador to the U.S. capital of one of the two outgoing junta members, Arturo Cruz, a moderate who can count on firm friendships in the United States, even within Mr Reagan's entourage, constitutes a good will gesture toward the new Republican administration.

Despite the accusations recently leveled by the chairman of the Nicaraguan Human Rights Commission and despite the assassination of businessman Jorge Salazar Arguello and many political mistakes, the young Nicaraguan revolution has so far shown remarkable moderation, considering that it took power after 40 years of bloody dictatorship.

Fidel Castro's traditional reaction, for instance, when faced with a tougher U.S. line was to make a "leap forward" in the Cuban revolution, going so far as to throw himself into Moscow's arms in 1968. Is it on the basis of this example that Managua is seeking different courses?

The U.S. European allies, especially France, would be well advised to try to convince President Reagan that the Third World is not simply the ground for East-West confrontation. It would be no more decent to be scandalized at the radicalization of a revolutionary regime which you have made every effort to destabilize than it is appropriate to bewail deaths you have done nothing to prevent.

DEPUTIES, PRESS REACTIONS TO BREZHNEV MESSAGE

[Gian Battista Fenu report from the Chamber of Deputies--recorded]

[Text] Brezhnev's message to Prime Minister Forlani was delivered yesterday by Lunkov, Soviet Ambassador to Rome. A message from Brezhnev was delivered to 19 western capitals, beginning with Washington. It deals with the problems of coexistence between the two blocs and with the international situation. The official content of the message is not known, although the newspapers and statements by the politicians make it to be understood that it is centered on relations between NATO countries and the Eastern bloc, the resumption of a constructive dialogue, and on bilateral relations between the Soviet Union and each of the 19 governments concerned. The message was discussed today by Forlani and Piccoli and between Forlani and the secretaries of the government parties.

Although not on the agenda, the matter will certainly be discussed at tomorrow's meeting of the Council of Ministers, which will also have to appoint new ambassadors to Washington, Moscow and Paris. Apart from this, Italian-Soviet economic cooperation will be discussed at the meeting of the mixed Italian-Soviet commission which opens tomorrow. The inaugural speech will be made by the minister of foreign trade, Manca, who today received Soviet Ambassador Lunkov and other Soviet personalities. A similar meeting was held at the Foreign Ministry. As regards trade relations between the two countries, the Foreign Trade Ministry today announced the latest data referring to the first 11 months of last year which show a strong Italian deficit amounting to 1,448 billion lire compared with 636 billion for the same period of 1979.

Brezhnev's message will certainly be debated in Parliament. Liberal deputies put forward a request for this, and they want Forlani to report on it to the Foreign Affairs Commission. The deputy secretary of the Liberal Party, Patuelli, commenting on the news of Brezhnev's message, said that the Italian reply to the Soviet message must be coordinated with those of other NATO countries in the conviction, Patuelli said, that peace is being threatened by the USSR's military superiority. According to the Liberal exponent, the (?resumption) of detente is desirable and possible provided that it does not legitimize the Soviet policy of accomplished facts.

According to Tremaglia, member of the Secretariat of the Italian Social Movement, Brezhnev's letter to Forlani apparently promises good business with the USSR in exchange for Italian disarmament within the framework of fragmenting and weakening the defensive position of NATO and the West.

According to the Social Democratic newspaper, UMANITA, the letter apparently omits certain themes contained in the messages addressed to other heads of state and government. According to the paper, it refers to the economic relations between the USSR and Italy and to the dangers which our country faces in case of conflict. UMANITA adds that while our country is interested in maintaining and increasing economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union, it certainly is not prepared to put them above the security of Italy and the duties emanating from the Atlantic alliance.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON VISIT TO EGYPT

[Unattributed interview]

[Text] Defense Minister Comrade Lelio Lagorio has just returned from a 6-day visit to Egypt--"a friendly and working visit," as he himself has described it. On his return we asked him some questions.

[Question] Why have you been to Egypt? Why has the Italian defense minister been to Cairo?

[Answer] Egypt is a country of great interest to us. In its region--which is a delicate European, African and Asian intersection--Egypt is pursuing, amid great difficulties, a policy of stability, tranquillity, noninterference in other countries' affairs and observance of borders and agreements. This is why we must help Egypt more than we have hitherto.

[Answer] As-Sadat has told his people that he wants special relations with Italy. Vice President of the ruling National Democratic Party Husni Mubarak told me that Italian-Egyptian relations could not be better; but I added that something more can always be done. We agreed on this.

[Question] Were there any specific results?

[Answer] We agreed to draw up a bilateral protocol designed to step up exchanges and cooperation between the countries in all fields. The details of this international agreement are already being examined. At present, Italian-Egyptian trade is in excess of 1.5 trillion lire a year. Italy is Egypt's second largest customer and third largest supplier in Europe. The implementation of the protocol will take us much further ahead. I therefore believe that I can say that there will be increased opportunities for work for many Italian industries in all sectors.

[Question] Did the Egyptians mention Libya?

[Answer] The Egyptians presented to us their viewpoints on the principal issues of the moment. Within this framework they referred also to Libya, with which Egypt has very tense relations. We confirmed our conviction that every effort must be made in the Mediterranean and adjacent areas to ensure that critical situations are patiently resolved. Our relations with Libya differ from Egypt's. Our relations are mainly economic and are fairly substantial. Nevertheless, there are some unresolved problems. We do not like everything that the Tripoli government does. In this connection, the Egyptian leaders were very cordial and understanding with regard to Italy's policy of trade and peace toward Libya. "Better you than someone else," they told me.

[Question] Did you only visit Cairo?

[Answer] The Egyptians prepared a very intensive agenda of visits. I visited the Libyan border and the Sudanese border in Sinai. I spoke with many high-ranking officers. They all have great national pride. In El Alamein, I wrote the following entry in the Italian war cemetery's honor roll: "The Italian people remember with unchanging reverence the citizens who gave their lives to give Italy's name an honored place in the most courageous chapters of the people's history."

PCI DIRECTORATE STATEMENT ON CPSU CONGRESS

[Girgio Frasca Polara report]

[Text] Rome--The PCI Directorate met yesterday. The following communique on its proceedings has been released: "The PCI Directorate heard a report from Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta on the 26th CPSU Congress and expressed its praise for and full agreement with the positions, assessments and conduct of the PCI delegation.

"The Directorate heard a report from Comrade Ugo Pecchioli on the recent serious events in Spain and confirmed the Italian Communists' most complete solidarity with all Spanish democratic forces.

"The Directorate urges all party organizations to discuss the problems of the international situation and to examine initiatives and action with respect to the major topics of detente, disarmament, solidarity with the peoples struggling against reaction for their freedom and independence, and international economic cooperation on the basis of the line established by the 15th PCI Congress."

Later Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta reported to journalists on the Directorate proceedings, emphasizing first that the meeting was a lengthy one "because we discussed," he said, "not only the 'incident' but PCI-CPSU problems and relations as a whole and, more generally, the major topics of foreign policy, as shown by Pecchioli's report on the dramatic events in Spain."

Confirming that the debate on international issues will involve the entire party at all levels, Pajetta stressed that "the communists do not want to make a drama out of what happened in Moscow, although they do not underestimate the political significance of those events." "We expressed our position and confirmed that there are divisions between our party and the CPSU even on major issues," Pajetta added. "Our autonomy means that we have no organizational links with any other party and that we have no other reference point apart from our own autonomous political and ideological formulations. This very policy is one of the things that enables us to make our contribution to internationalist solidarity."

One journalist asked him: What is the specific meaning of internationalist solidarity?

Pajetta said: "With regard to Afghanistan, our contribution implies expressing a stance opposed to the Soviet intervention in that country. With regard to Poland, it implies supporting the regeneration policy which that country's leaders are implementing on the basis of the workers' just demands and which has affected the mass organization's structures and even party and government bodies. With regard to El Salvador, it implies backing the current liberation struggle and supporting it in our country with very extensive action action--involving all the democratic forces--of internationalist solidarity, which has strong and ancient traditions in Italy; even Garibaldi visited South America to concern himself with other countries' affairs."

Last, with regard to Spain, "it implies expressing every day our support for that country's young democracy so as to defend it from reactionary attacks."

Pajetta was asked for a verdict on the CPSU congress.

"It was positive," he said, "as far as Brezhnev's report is concerned--especially the part devoted to international issues. However, I did not feel that the debate reflected all the innovations; indeed, on the basis of the forms in which it took place, it was not as advanced as the report."

Pajetta was also asked for information about the PCI grassroots reaction to the events connected with the CPSU congress.

"The comrades," he said, "have reported almost unanimous adherence to the party line and above all a desire to understand and comprehend the events. There is above all a widespread demand that, even if others adopt formalistic or spiteful stances, we restrict ourselves to the debate on real issues, whether we agree or we disagree. In any case," Pajetta added, "I have always been more concerned with politics than protocol...."

Lastly, the journalists asked for information concerning the results of the poll conducted by the party regarding voting intentions in the referendums. "From the available data," Pajetta said, "I believe it is possible to draw the conclusion that the pointers issued by the Central Committee have been largely accepted, albeit with a few differences of approach or even votes, from federation to federation, particularly with regard to life sentences, arms licenses and courts martial. I would rather stress," Pajetta concluded, "what I regard as the most important political pointer of the poll--namely that when we say that we must debate, we really do so and that when we say that we must vote, we really do so."

In an interview with Italian Radio 1 Newsreel yesterday, [PCI Secretariat member] Comrade Bufalini said with regard to the CPSU's treatment of the PCI delegation that "we protested" that treatment and that the Soviets replied by ruling out "political motivation." "Their reply," Bufalini explained, "failed to convince us," adding that there is no "need to stress that the PCI has always been autonomous" and "has confirmed its fully autonomy and independence of judgement, national dignity and steadfastness even with respect to the CPSU."

With regard to future relations, Bufalini said that he could make no forecasts, but did point out that "the episode undoubtedly shows that there is something hindering relations between us and the CPSU."

Asked next about allegations that our party manipulated the divergences with the CPSU for twofold ulterior motives, namely to lend credit to our autonomy and to reassure "pro-Soviet elements" in the PCI, Bufalini replied that "to attribute totally coarse and naive underhand approaches to us--a major party with a long history--demonstrates a Machivallian mentality." "Why for domestic ends? Because we would be admitted to the government if we showed ourselves to be arguing with the Soviets? Don't make me laugh! "The fact is," he stressed, "that the people who do not want us in government do not want us not because we are not railing against or arguing with someone, the Soviets; they do not want us because they do not want things to change." Next, Bufalini attributed a broader view of international relations to the PCI; "our foreign policy stances," he specified, "(and I want to point this out to whoever is arguing in terms of an alleged deplorable and humiliating Italian provincialism) are dictated by a view of world relations and of the major issues affecting the world and every individual country."

With regard to the other aspects of the alleged manipulation, Bufalini stressed that "in our party--this is often not understood by other people, and perhaps not even by the Soviets--we are accustomed to open discussion and open criticism of the party line and party leaders. So if there are pro-Soviet feelings why should this cause surprise? The contrary would surprise me. We the PCI, a revolutionary force, originated from the 1917 October," he said, "from the great October Revolution." In other words, he concluded, we are the offspring of the hope that opened up in the world following that historic break.

PINTO BALSEMAO VIEWS EEC ADMISSION SCHEDULE

[Text] Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao has said in an interview with ANOP, the Portuguese news agency, that if there is to be a delay in the admission of Portugal into the Common Market it should be clearly understood that Portugal cannot be blamed for it. He said that the Portuguese Government intends to comply with the originally agreed timetable for entry, although it is aware that the current problems within the EC over its agricultural and budgetary policies could retard the process of Portugal's admission.

The prime minister said that the Portuguese Government considers it necessary for the Community to have its house in order when Portugal becomes its member.

On his talks with The Netherlands prime minister, who is the current president of the EEC Council of Ministers, Pinto Balsemao said that he had sought the EEC's facilities to import some of its agricultural products, particularly cereals, whose production in Portugal was hit by a long drought.

PCP SECRETARY GENERAL SPEAKS AT ANNIVERSARY RALLY

LD072210 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portugal 1930 GMT 7 Mar 81

[Excerpt] The celebrations of the PCP's 60th anniversary ended today with a rally at the Campo Pequeno bullring in Lisbon. The rally was presided over by Jose Vitoriano, member of the Central Committee's political commission, and was attended by Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal and numerous local PCP delegations and delegations of invited organizations.

In his speech to the rally, the PCP secretary general spoke of the party's 60 years of struggle to overthrow fascism. He considered the PCP's struggle as encompassing three different political periods: 1921 to 1926, 1926 to 1974, and the period since 25 April 1974.

The PCP secretary general claimed that the Communists played the major role in organizing and leading the outbreaks of strikes in Portugal and, after harsh words of criticism directed at the Socialist Party and its secretary general, pointed to the overthrow of the Pinto Balsemao government as the principal course of action towards resolving the problems of the Portuguese.

Proud of the PCP's past record as a clandestine party, Alvaro Cunhal reaffirmed his unswerving belief in its orthodox line and voiced his definite rejection of Eurocommunism.

At one stage in his speech, the PCP secretary general stated that, quote, the action of our party in the Portuguese revolution is the living assertion that all lengthy struggles necessitate sacrifices in a clandestine existence, unquote. Further on he stated: The PCP derives its main dynamic force from its ideological line faithful to Marxism-Leninism. We all remember how the Socialist Party's secretary general used to say that what stood between him and the Communists was not Marx but Lenin. And now, Cunhal went on, one cannot detect even the slightest whiff of Marxism in the Socialist Party's stand. Alvaro Cunhal declared his loyalty and friendship to the CPSU and criticized those who, in his view, are serving the interests of imperialism by wanting the PCP to adopt the Eurocommunist line.

BREZHNEV MESSAGE GIVEN TO PRIME MINISTER

[Text] Soviet Ambassador to Spain Yuriy Dubinin today handed Spanish Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo a message containing the proposal of Soviet head of state Leonid Brezhnev on East-West relations.

Similar messages, whose contents have not been reported officially, have been handed over in the last few days to the heads of government of the United States, France, Italy, the FRG and Great Britain.

AL-QADHDHAFI REMARKS ON ETA DRAW REACTION

[Text] The Diplomatic Information Office of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has just issued the following communique:

UPI has just transmitted the synthesis of statements by Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi to an Italian radio station in which, it seems, he reportedly expressed a certain understanding for the Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group [ETA] organization, in spite of recognizing that it carries out terrorist actions.

These statements entirely contradict those that Colonel al-Qadhdhafi gave to EFE last November in which he referred to the Basque separatists with the following words: We are a country which defends national union; we are categorically against separatism; the Basque people are part of the Spanish people.

Two months later, one of his main collaborators, 'Abd al-'Ati 'Ubaydi, said in the Canary Islands that Libya had never helped ETA.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs immediately sent instructions to the Spanish Ambassador in Tripoli to request the necessary clarification and, should it be necessary, the appropriate rectification, because it considers such words to be harmful to the excellent relations which exist between the two peoples and governments.

NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER GIVES PRESS CONFERENCE

[J.A.V. report on Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto 6 March press conference in Madrid]

[Text] Madrid--"Weapons are not reaching the Salvadoran guerrilla forces via Nicaragua. That is completely untrue. It is an invention by the Washington government to justify freezing the loan granted to our country by the previous U.S. administration," Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto said in Madrid yesterday, during his visit to several European countries to seek political and economic backing.

The Nicaraguan delegation met yesterday with Spanish Socialist Workers Party Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez, who is chairman of the Socialist International's committee of support for Nicaragua. Mr d'Escoto will have a meeting today with his counterpart Perez-Llorca at the Santa Cruz Palace.

Asked about his government's stance on the Salvadoran crisis, the Nicaraguan minister said that "we believe in the peoples' right to self-determination." He stressed that "as lovers of democracy and freedom, we believe in the peoples' right to self-determination" and explained that "we are helping El Salvador as a friendly country and desire a political solution to the present conflict, but there are times when changes are impossible through peaceful means and the violent path seems inevitable."

Relations With United States

With regard to relations with Washington, he said that "we want them to be the best possible," though "to achieve this we will not yield an inch in our aim of achieving the legitimate objectives for which so many people have died in my country." He also said that Nicaragua is at present performing a stabilizing role in Central America, despite certain friction with the Honduran Government. He also stressed that the U.S. diplomatic offensive in Europe and Latin America to provide information about alleged Soviet and Cuban backing for the Salvadoran guerrilla forces "is not very successful, since very few people have believed the charges are true."

Commenting on the recent changes in the Nicaraguan junta, which has lost two members--Sandinist Moises Hassan and Artura Cruz, who has been appointed ambassador to Washington--he said that it was not a "purge of non-Sandinist elements" from the leadership, but "a step forward in the political process in which we are involved. It was simply an initiative taken by the junta itself to improve its functioning. Nobody can assert that pluralism has disappeared from the junta since the change, because Doctor Cordoba Rivas, for instance, belongs to the conservative party and is not a Sandinist."

Economic Situation

With regard to the economic problems affecting the country--Nicaragua will have emergency regulations for the next 3 years--the Nicaraguan foreign minister pointed out that over the past year the GNP has grown 10 percent--more than in any other Latin American country--more than 100,000 jobs have been created and more than 400,000 people have been taught to read and write.

"Of course," he added, "one must remember that following the revolution we were faced with a country with a foreign debt of $600 million and that $700 million had been illegally removed from the country."

The minister of economic cooperation, who was also present at the press conference, stressed that following Reagan's arrival at the White House, the U.S. attitude has changed radically: the delivery of a remittance of $75 million in economic aid has been frozen and an already finalized agreement to purchase corn has not been signed. "Friendly countries are helping us to a major extent, though still insufficiently," he concluded.

Next, the foreign minister justified the recent detention of the chairman of the Nicaraguan human rights committee, Jose Esteban Gonzalez, arguing that "this man is a charlatan, with no prestige outside the country. In any case his organization is not recognized by any similar international body. In Nicaragua there is a human rights committee recognized by Amnesty International. Mr Esteban Gonzalez used his organization for political ends. UN and even Amnesty International observers were invited to his trial." The foreign minister stated categorically that there are no political prisoners in Nicaragua. What prisoners there are, as the Red Cross itself has verified, are "prisoners of war" that is, elements actively planning our people's genocides.

Last, Mr D'Escoto confirmed that general elections will be held in Nicaragua in 1985. "At present there is not an adequate infrastructure to hold fair elections, since for over 40 years we have lived under a dictatorial regime in which free elections were obviously not a frequent occurrence."

DEFENSE SECRETARY JOHN NOTT INTERVIEWED ON NATO

LD061325 London NOW! in English 6-12 Mar 81 pp 12-13

[David Loshak interview with UK Secretary of State for Defense John Nott; date and place not given]

[Text] Britain is already overstretched in meeting its commitments to NATO, according to the newly-appointed secretary of state for defense, John Nott. He was speaking in an interview against the background of Mrs Thatcher's promises in Washington of British support for President Reagan's tougher Western defense stance and her call for an extended NATO role.

Mr Nott made clear the government would not be deflected from its decision to press on with the 5,000 million pounds Trident replacement of the Polaris nuclear deterrent. Nevertheless, he agreed that there was a danger that "we shall try to do too much with too little resources."

Question: Your appointment was seen in political terms as a signal of the government's determination not to exempt defense spending from public expenditure restraints. What is your approach to defense spending?

Answer: The first thing the prime minister told me was that I was taking over exactly where Francis Pym left off. It was understood from the very first moment that the 200 million pounds reduction in the planned increase had already been announced and that there were to be no further additional financial changes. It was never true that I was put in as a treasury axeman to carve the place up. Next week's public spending figures will show that the three percent increase in real terms in defence expenditure is confirmed for the future years.

Question: Can we still regard ourselves as a world power with a world role in an extended NATO?

Answer: We are certainly a world power in the sense of the influence we wield, though clearly not in the sense of military, financial or economic strength. We cannot claim to be what we are not. But in defence terms, we still devote a greater proportion of our gross national product to defence than any other European nation and in this current year we will be shown to have devoted about the same amount of our total budget to defense as the U.S. We are in a crucially important position as a bridge between our American allies and our European allies and our influence in NATO is greater than our actual military strength might suggest. On the extended role, there is no thought of actually extending the boundaries of NATO.

As a government we are certainly not suggesting that the UK, which is already overstretched in meeting its obligations and commitments to NATO on the central European front and in the north Atlantic, is able to become a world policeman again. But we should consider giving every possible support to President Reagan's stated policy of greater concentration on sensitive areas in other parts of the world. There is increasing preoccupation about the Soviet threat to our key minerals, especially oil.

Question: On the point of our being "militarily overstretched," are we meeting the threats to our security as effectively as we might?

Answer: We have to defend ourselves. Our whole way of life is threatened by the Warsaw Pact. It is an ugly fact that cannot be avoided. But I do accept that there is a growing danger that as the price of sophisticated equipment escalates, we will tend to spread our efforts too thinly, nothing could be more damaging to the morale of the services than to have a situation in which we do not have sufficient funds to enable the men to fire their modern weapons on the ranges, to train with them in operational conditions, or fuel with which to run tanks, planes and warships. What we have got to do is to concentrate our defense efforts in those areas where we can afford it within an alliance context.

The defence white paper, which is coming out before Easter, will not contain much speculation about future policy--it will come too soon for new decisions. But after I have been to Washington for the first time as defence secretary and to my first NATO meeting, I will get back to the work of looking at long-term costings.

Question: Last year's white paper devoted only a sentence to Trident, possibly the biggest single decision about British defence in the 1980s. There are many critics, and nuclear disarmament is again a focus of deep public concern. What are your views on this?

Answer: It is very important that we have a wideranging debate about deterrence and that we get across to the people of this country, that NATO is a defensive alliance. Deterrence has been a successful policy and it would be a mighty gamble to discard it, especially given the build-up of conventional and nuclear forces that is going on. Flowing from that, we must make it clear that we are committed to arms control. We want to achieve a lower level of risk and confrontation. But it cannot be achieved if we allow the Soviet Union to go on adding to its advantages over the West.

So, in the meantime, we must decide what our deterrent capability should be, and that brings [us] to the Trident decision. If you believe in an independent nuclear deterrent then it is a pretty cut and dried case in favour of Trident as opposed to another system. That is not a very difficult argument to sustain. Alternatives like a second generation Polaris are right of the question.

Question: Isn't cost-effectiveness a problem in NATO too? The Russians seem to get a lot more out than we do from what is put in.

Answer: Yes this is a by-product of the fact that they do not pay their conscripts as well as we pay our servicemen, who all volunteer, so they can afford a greater proportion of their total expenditure on equipment and research and development than we can. There is also the question of standardisation of equipment. But you cannot have an alliance of likeminded democratic states and also have the benefits of being totalitarian. However, there is room for discussion within NATO over this year on whether it is performing in the most cost-effective way.

Question: There seems to be some renewed public concern about the balance of terror, the prospect of megadeaths and our use of nuclear weapons in the sense that we are using them by holding them as a threat. How do you defend that morally to those who say that this is a prospect which is so dire and dreadful that it should not even be contemplated? Can deterrence continue to work?

Answer: Nuclear weapons may have been regarded as a threat in the early postwar years but they have actually become in some strange way the opposite of a threat. They have become the guardians of peace, in a way. That may sound perverse but people tend to forget that 50 million people died during the Second World War and that is a figure I shall go on quoting. People forget that war generally is horrific, not only nuclear war. Therefore, it is war that we must avoid. I think one must say it is a very difficult argument. But as secretary of state for defence I naturally think about these matters more than many people do, including CND [Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament], and in the end I come back to saying that nuclear weapons have maintained the peace.

DAILY TELEGRAPH: NATO MUST SHARE DEFENSE BURDEN

[Editorial: "Rearming America"]

[Text] There is something heroic, a reminder of America's reputation for doing things in a big way, about the rearmament programme that President Reagan has presented to Congress with every prospect of approval, despite painful cuts across the rest of the board. It breaks out of what has become a debilitating NATO habit of relating defence budgets less to what Russia is spending on her palpably growing military threat than to the calls of other departments and the worst example set by allies. The increase of 6.2 per cent this year and seven per cent next year are more than double the NATO target of three per cent, but America's military effort will still only be half of Russia's in terms of national product.

The emphasis will be on restoring America's world-wide military capability in the face of Russia's rapidly growing power in terms of men, ships, aircraft and bases. Highest priority will go to the building up of the controversial rapid deployment force, especially for the protection of the free-world's interests in the Persian Gulf and on the main oil routes. The sense of urgency is indicated by the de-mothballing of the old battleships as platforms for long-range cruise missiles. Mr Weinberger, the new defence secretary, promised a switch to a more active American global strategy, involving the exploitation of Russian weaknesses instead of merely reacting, or failing to react, to Russian adventures.

Mr Weinberger put his case frankly and convincingly. America, he said, was abandoning unwarranted illusions, but not hope of arms control. It had been amply demonstrated that it would not be possible to limit the growth of Russian strategic missiles unless America was hereself ready to compete. "We are being forced into a continuing and, apparently, long-term military and political competition with the Soviets." This is a simple but necessary statement of sad reality. The rest of NATO must face up to it and, as Mr Weinberger urged, play an appropriately greater part in burden-sharing in the wider world as well as in Europe.

GOVERNMENT REJECTS U.S. PLANS FOR DIEGO GARCIA

[David Adamson report]

[Text] Britain has effectively turned down a $1,000 million (453 million pounds) American plan to go ahead with turning Diego Garcia into a major base from which B-52 bombers could operate.

The British consider the B52 a high-profile weapon whose presence would cause an emotional and hostile reaction in the Middle East and India that would outweigh any military or strategic advantages apparent at the moment.

The original American plan would have involved building accommodation for thousands of servicemen and strengthening and widening the existing runway. It would have been necessary to store nuclear weapons in the island in case it was used operationally by the bombers.

The proposal was first discussed at top level last June, when Mrs Thatcher met Mr Harold Brown, the then American defence secretary, in London.

There were indications then that the British Government was far from enthusiastic about the scheme despite the Soviet move into Afghanistan some six months earlier.

The British response has not been an outright "no." It appears to have been on the lines that "the time is not opportune," but it is clear that approval will not be given unless the threat to the Gulf becomes much more persistently dangerous than at present.

British doubts about the plan were reinforced by what the government felt was an American failure to consult it over use of the island concerning the attempt last year to rescue the American hostages in Tehran.

The Royal Navy commander who is in charge of the 25-strong British liaison team in the island was told that aircraft involved in the operation were there on a "routine movement."

Despite a Foreign Office denial on Thursday that the existing runway can be used by B52s, it is strong and wide enough to take them provided they are not fully loaded.

The truncated American plan for improvements disclosed this week will add a taxiway.

O AGON ON POSSIBLE EXPANDED USE OF UK BASES

NC110846 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 11 Mar 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "The Bases"]

[Text] The possible use of the British bases in Cyprus for military action in the Arab gulf area would undoubtedly endanger our friendly relations with the Arab countries and create additional problems for us. Therefore, it is right to oppose any such use of the bases and particularly for the purposes of the proposed Rapid Deployment Force which is being discussed by the big powers.

Nevertheless, it should be admitted that the government can only exercise minimal control over how the bases are used.

According to the treaty of establishment, the bases are to be used exclusively for Britain's defense requirements. This term is very broad and open to many interpretations. Britain can certainly justify many of its activities by classifying them under the term "defense requirements." The only thing that the Cyprus Government can do is oppose the use of the bases by forces other than those of Britain.

We have cited this basic provision of the treaty of establishment in order to point out that we can partly intervene in the use of the bases. This does not mean, however, that we should not point out--actually outline officially--our views to the British Government on the consequences. At the same time, we should also explain the situation to friendly countries so that they will be fully aware of it.

HUNGARIAN DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR COMMITTEE MEETING

[Text] Today a three-member Hungarian delegation arrived in Cyprus to participate in the first meeting of the permanent Cypriot-Hungarian intergovernmental committee which has been established on the basis of the agreement for cooperation in the economic, technical and industrial fields. The Hungarian delegation is led by Mr Tibor Antalpeter, director general of the Ministry of Foreign Trade.

During its stay in Cyprus, the Hungarian delegation will have meetings with Finance Minister Avxendiou and Commerce Minister Kittis.

The intergovernmental committee will review the cooperation to date between the two countries and will examine ways and means to further develop and strengthen the existing ties of friendship and of trade, industry, tourism, transportation and agriculture.

DENKTAS DECRIES KIPRIANOU DENIAL OF AGREEMENT

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that by denying the existence of the population exchange agreement, Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou is denying his own (?position) in connection with the Cyprus problem. Denktas added: The Greek Cypriots themselves will suffer the harm being done by these remarks.

Replying to questions on the denial of the population exchange agreement by a spokesman of the Kiprianou administration, Denktas said: The Turkish Cypriot people are not affected by this denial because that agreement concerns the rehabilitation of 65,000 Turkish Cypriots and it constitutes a basis for the establishment of a bicommunal and bizonal [last word in English] system. Both Kliridhis and Makarios accepted this agreement. Kiprianou was also among those who accepted it.

Denktas recalled that he had discussed all these problems with Makarios in 1975. He added that during their meeting in 1979, Kiprianou had not seemed to be rejecting the population exchange. Denktas said: Had he rejected it we would not have been able to achieve any results from that summit meeting.

Denktas said the exchange of population was one of the basic questions at the meeting with Kiprianou but that it had not been discussed and no discussion was made [words indistinct]. He stressed that at the basis of the bicommunal, (?bisectoral) and bizonal [last word in English] federation lay the population exchange agreement and the 11 years of Greek Cypriot attacks and tortures as well as the terrorism perpetrated in the name of enosis for 25 to 30 years that necessitated this population exchange.

The president stressed that Kiprianou should stop running after wild dreams and acting as a big hero and begin to work toward the establishment of a Cyprus federation within the framework of the agreements reached in the past. That is the only solution, Denktas added.

He said: Any formulas that envisage taking the Turkish Cypriots back to the period before 1974 are like sand castles. They are meaningless and yield no results. The present situation is the result of the exchange of population. Denying that will not serve the Greek Cypriot community. To be realistic one must accept the present situation with good will, a situation that is the natural result of the crimes committed against the Turkish Cypriots from 1963 until 1974. The fact that the Greek Cypriots--who used the Turkish Cypriots as political hostages and denied their basic rights and freedoms for 11 years--are denying the existence of the population exchange agreement implemented by the United Nations is causing us grave doubts as to the value of any agreements to be signed with them in the future.

Denktas stressed that the Turkish Cypriots, who had left the south for freedom in the north at the risk of death and who had left behind 11 years of tortures, were now determined to live within the borders of their own state in the north. He added that it was natural to discuss at the intercommunal talks the issue of mutual compensation which was a consequence of the population exchange.

Denktas Stand Criticized

[Text] Commenting on Mr Denktas' fresh allegations regarding the so-called agreements on a population exchange, the government spokesman made the following statement:

Mr Denktas' allegation that the late Makarios and Mr Kiprianou have accepted in any way the population exchange is a shameless lie. This is the usual distortion of reality to which Mr Denktas frequently resorts.

The statement stresses: On the contrary, the 19 May 1979 agreement between President Kiprianou and Mr Denktas includes as a basis for the solution of the Cyprus problem--in addition to other things--the inalienable human rights and the basic freedoms of citizens, as well as the UN resolutions that categorically include the refugees' right to return to their ancestral homes. The 19 May agreement does not allow any misinterpretation.

The government spokesman's statement concluded: It is categorically stated that there has never been any agreement for a population exchange and that President Kiprianou does not intend to betray, under any circumstances, the refugees' right to return to their ancestral homes.

TURKMEN DEMARCHE TO FRANCE ON PROTECTION MEASURES

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has sent a letter to French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet saying that everybody in Turkey is impatient to see the murderers of Turkish officials in France apprehended.

According to information received from the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, Ilter Turkmen sent a letter to Francois-Poncet in reply to his message of condolences following the recent murder of the two diplomats in Paris. In his letter, Turkmen said: You are undoubtedly aware of the deep resentment, indignation and reactions these abominable murders have triggered in the Turkish public. These reactions did not come as a surprise, because 5 of the 10 abominable attacks against Turks in France resulted in death. None of the culprits have been apprehended so far.

As you say in your letter, you had stated in our recent meeting in Paris that the French Government is willing to struggle against terrorist organizations from wherever they come. I am pleased about the assurances you gave about the efforts to be made to ensure that the crimes committed do not go unpunished. Everybody in Turkey is impatient to see the results of these efforts. I am convinced that you will agree to the necessity of taking urgent mesaures to closely protect the members of the Turkish missions in France.

In his letter to the French foreign minister, Turkmen recalled that a note had been submitted to the French Embassy in Ankara in connection with the murders of the Turkish representatives in France. Turkmen said: I hope that the representations we made with your government will be studied with the care they deserve and that the necessary measures will be taken about this intolerable situation in order to ensure that the lives of innocent people are protected and that the mutual confidence between our two countries is maintained.

TERCUMAN Article

NC101509 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 9 Mar 81 p 4

["This Is the World" column by Zafer Atay: "France Is To Blame"]

[Excerpts] France is a country where terrorists, particularly Armenian terrorists, are free to act as they wish. None of the crimes perpetrated since 1975 has been solved. We are of the opinion that the French police are deliberately failing to catch the Armenian murderers, because we do not believe that the French police are as helpless and unskilled as it appears. The truth is that the police are pretending to be honestly investigating these attacks on the Turkish diplomats, but in reality they have shelved the dossiers, never to pick them up again.

We also believe that harsh protests and warnings and moving messages of sympathy are no longer valid. Turkey is facing an open war. Armenians living abroad have declared war on Turkey in all corners of the world--from Sidney to Vatican City.

The Armenians are supported by Western public opinion, which has been influenced by hearsay history. The Armenians are also backed by the KGB, the Soviet Union's secret police. Brutens, one of the KGB chiefs, is the organizer of the terrorist attacks on the Turkish diplomats. Reports on his complicity are in the secret dossiers of the U.S. State Department and NATO.

The only thing that can be done under the circumstances is to hurt the enemy. The enemy should know that he will be punished and that his attacks will not go unretaliated. Israel and the United States can serve as examples.

In addressing the hostages at the White House, President Reagan emphatically said: "From now on, any attack on U.S. diplomats will be met with reprisals." This means that there is no need to be bothered by the attitude, "We wonder what the world will say?"

The basic principle of human rights is the right to live, and it is the duty of the state to protect this basic right of our fellow countrymen.

SOVIET DELEGATION AGREES TO EXPAND ALUMINUM PLANT

[Text] A Turkish-Soviet agreement was signed in Ankara today concerning the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum and alumina plant. The agreement was signed by Industry and Technology Minister Sahap Kocatopcu on behalf of Turkey, and by Semen Skachkov, the chairman of the Soviet State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, on behalf of the Soviet Union.

Under the agreement, the annual aluminum production of the plant will be raised from 60,000 tons to 120,000 tons and the annual alumina production will be raised from 200,000 tons to 260,000 tons. Turkey will receive a loan of $200 million from the Soviet Union for the expansion of the plant. The loan will be repaid in 10 years at an interest rate of 5 percent.

Kocatopcu said the following at the signing ceremony:

[Begin recording] Today we reached the final stage of the clause on the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum plant--a clause of the fifth joint protocol we signed in Moscow. We signed the agreement today. I feel very (?hopeful) about that both personally and on behalf of the Turkish Government.

Today, we have implemented another very important part of the cooperation being carried out between the two friendly countries for a long time--cooperation for Turkey's industrialization. Industry is thus rendering the country a great service in paving the way for the cooperation between the two friendly countries in other fields as well. The best result of this work will be the speedy implementation of this agreement. I am convinced that the Turkish and Soviet technicians will work hand in hand and achieve this result as soon as possible. [end recording]

Skachkov said: [Begin recording in Russian fading into Turkish translation] Mr Industry and Technology Minister, Mr Energy and Natural Resources Minister, honorable guests: I am very pleased that the efforts we started together with Mr Kocatopcu in Moscow last January have already yielded results in the form of the signing of an agreement under which the Seydisehir aluminum plant will be expanded. This is a great step in the development of Turkish-Soviet economic cooperation. The Soviet Government will value this step very highly.

Another point worth mentioning is the fact that the new intergovernmental agreement was signed in 1981--a year important for our peoples. It is the 100th birthday anniversary of Ataturk, the founder of the Turkish Republic. Ataturk is known in the Soviet Union as a farsighted politician and a patriot who waged a national independence war. The Ataturk year is being celebrated in the Soviet Union as well.

The year 1981 is also the year when the 26th Congress of the CPSU was held. Speaking at the congress, Party General Secretary Brezhnev pointed out that the Soviet Union is trying to develop relations based on mutual interests and cooperation with equal rights with other countries. He stressed that the Soviet Union is ready to further develop its good relations with Turkey. We have proved this attitude by extending economic and technical aid to the Turkish economy's main branches.

I am fully convinced that the Soviet and Turkish sides will fulfill the requisites of this agreement on time. I am also convinced that economic, technical and commercial relations between Turkey and the Soviet Union will further increase and develop based on mutual interest. [end recording]

OZAL, LIBYA'S JALLUD DISCUSS INCREASED COOPERATION

[Text] 'Abd al-Salam Jallud, one of the leaders of the Libyan revolution and a member of the General People's Congress, has said that Libya is ready to do all it can to make it easier for Turkish labor, capital and technology to play a more advanced role in Libya's development efforts. In a meeting he held with Turkish Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, who is on an official visit to Libya, Jallud pointed out that Libya attaches great value to its friendly and brotherly relations with Turkey.

An announcement by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General says that Jallud stressed that Libya was pleased that Turkish-Libyan cooperation was developing but that this cooperation had not yet reached the anticipated level. He added that the officials of the two countries must create new methods and mechanisms for the further development of the Turkish-Libyan relations.

Ozal Returns From Libya

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal completed his 5-day visit to Libya and returned to Turkey at 1900. In a statement at Yesilkoy Airport, Ozal talked about his contacts with 'Abd al-Salam Jallud, a member of the General People's Congress, and some ministers during his visit. Ozal said that they reviewed the various cooperation agreements between the two countries and agreed to look into new possibilities of cooperation. He added that two cooperation protocols were signed during his stay in Libya.

Ozal disclosed that an agreement was reached to enable Turkish contractors in Libya to work in industrial and infrastructure installations in addition to the present housing investments.

Turgut Ozal also said that Libya would raise the amount of oil it sells to Turkey from 2 to 3 million tons annually. He noted that they had discussed the possibilities of Turkish-Libyan cooperation in petrochemistry, and Turkey's supply of technical personnel to the petrochemical installations in Libya.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY OFFICIALS ARRIVE FOR VISIT

[Text] The chairman of the North Atlantic Assembly, Jack Brooks, and Assembly Secretary General Philip Deshormes arrived in Ankara today. They were received at Esenboga Airport by the U.S. ambassador to Ankara and other officials. Representative Brooks, a member of the U.S. Congress, said on arrival that he was very happy to be in Turkey. Pointing out that, like all countries, Turkey had its problems, Brooks said that the United States and NATO would continue to help Turkey solve these problems. He said that the positive developments in Turkey were being observed with satisfaction and that NATO was proud of Turkey's membership.

The Belgian parliamentarian, Philip Shormes, said that during their contacts in Turkey they would try to eliminate the small problems that had arisen between Turkey and the assembly. The two officials will begin their contacts in Ankara on Monday.

Meet With Officials

[Text] Ankara, 9 Mar (AA)--Speaker of the North Atlantic Assembly and United States Congressman Jack Brooks today began an official visit in Ankara.

Brooks and assembly secretary general, Belgian parliamentarian Philip Deshormes, met with Deputy Chief of the General Staff Necdet Oztorun, Defense Minister Umit Haluk Bayulken, and the Foreign Ministry Secretary General Kamuran Gurun. Brooks told reporters that Turkey has an important place in NATO and as NATO parliamentarians they wanted to maintain the dialogue between NATO and Turkey. Turkey had an important role in NATO, and they hoped to exchange views with Turkish statesmen during their visit, Brooks said.

[Text] Ankara, 9 Mar (AA)--Premier Bulent Ulusu met with North Atlantic Assembly Speaker Jack Brooks and Assembly Secretary General Philip Deshormes on Monday. After the meeting, U.S. Congressman Brooks said they acknowledge the important role Turkey played in NATO so far and they wanted to participate in the development of Turkey. "We want to support Turkey on its efforts for military and economic development," he commented. Brooks and Deshormes also met Deputy Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak Monday.

MILLIYET: GREEK ENVOY DISCUSSES ECONOMIC ISSUES

NC110907 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 5 Mar 81 p 9

[Text] Ankara, (ANKA)--Yeoryios Papoulias, Greek ambassador to Ankara, has stated that "his country's influence on the EEC's agricultural sector would be rather limited and that in the industrial field it would not have any adverse effects on Turkey's exports to the EEC countries."

Papoulias further said: "We hope that Turkey will reach the stage where its participation in the EEC will be feasible, because we shall share the benefits the EEC will provide." Papoulias added: "Turkey can benefit from the Greek market whenever it wishes. The liberalization of the Greek market would be extremely important to a neighboring country like Turkey. Greece's annual imports amount to $10 to $12 billion. If we resume trade between our two countries, this could lead to the revival of cooperation from which we would mutually benefit."

The Greek Ambassador also said that Turkey's participation in EEC would be to the benefit of both countries. He added that Greece's participation in the EEC does not prevent Turkey from exercising its legitimate rights and that Turkey's participation would serve the interests of both countries. The Greek ambassador concluded: "Positive developments are expected."

COMMUNIST PARTY CONGRATULATES FRATERNAL PARTIES

PCP Anniversary

[Message sent by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the Portuguese Communist Party on its 60th anniversary]

[Text] Dear comrades, on behalf of all Turkish Communists, the Turkish working class and toilers, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee sincerely congratulates the brotherly Portuguese Communist Party [PCP] on its 60th anniversary and sends its fiery greetings. Since its establishment, the PCP has waged many arduous class struggles. It has always struggled for the interests of the working class and the country's toilers. Many have been sacrificed, under illegal circumstances, in the struggle against dictatorship.

The role of the PCP in the 25 April 1974 revolution and its decisive steps toward the overthrow of fascism constitutes a strong basis for defending democracy in Portugal today. The PCP is in the frontline of the struggle waged by the Portuguese working class and the toilers against domestic reaction and imperialism in a bid to preserve and develop the gains of the April revolution. The PCP is continuously strengthening its frontlines as an inalienable force in the solution of political problems in Portugal and in realizing a democratic turn in the country. It is being strengthened under all kinds of conditions. It is organizing the struggle of the masses. It is leading a principled movement to secure the unity of all democratic forces.

The TCP greatly values the internationalist attitude of the Portuguese Communists and their arduous struggle for peace, international detente and disarmament. The military dictatorship that seized power on 12 September 1980 has abolished the limited democratic rights and freedoms in Turkey. While the number of those in detention has exceeded tens of thousands, many democrats and patriots are being killed by torture. U.S. imperialism and the most reactionary circles in NATO, which are exerting efforts to undermine international detente and to implement the policy of clashes, have stepped up pressure on our country by taking advantage of the conditions prevailing under a military dictatorship. They want Turkey to assume an active role against the Soviet Union and in imperialism's adventurist and aggressive plans in the Near and Middle East. The TCP is trying to secure the unity of all democratic forces in the struggle against imperialism, collaborationist monopolies, the proimperialist and promonopoly policy pursued by the junta and the most reactionary forces within and outside the junta, and for peace, national independence, democratic freedoms and the social and economic rights of the toilers.

Dear comrades, the TCP and the PCP are linked with strong ties based on Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. These ties are getting stronger through the joint struggle against our enemies--imperialism and reaction, anticommunism and anti-Sovietism--and for the unity of the world communist movement, peace and socialism, which is our joint cause. We wish that the 60th anniversary of the PCP will bring new successes on this path. With our communist greetings.

Swiss Labor Party

[Message sent by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen to the Swiss Labor Party Central Committee on its 60th Anniversary]

[Text] On behalf of all Turkish Communists and toilers, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee sincerely congratulates the brotherly Swiss Labor Party on the 60th anniversary of the establishment of the Swiss Communist Party and extends its revolutionary struggle greetings.

The Swiss Labor Party, the leader and organizer of the struggle waged by the Swiss working class and the toilers against the monopolies, is keeping alive all its 60-year-old communist traditions. It is waging an arduous struggle against the adventures of U.S. imperialism and NATO sovereign circles against world peace and the policy of detente and disarmament and their aggressive attacks against the world revolutionary process, the socialist countries and especially the Soviet Union.

All democratic rights and freedoms were abolished in Turkey with the 12 September military coup. The number of political prisoners has exceeded tens of thousands and many democrats have been killed and are still being killed through tortures. The junta has directed its sharp attacks against the working class and its mass organizations. U.S. imperialism and the most reactionary circles of NATO have increased their pressure on Turkey through collaboration with the most reactionary forces within and outside the junta and the armed forces. They want Turkey to assume a more active role in the region and against the Soviet Union in line with imperialist policies. The TCP is struggling to secure the unity of all democratic and patriotic forces in Turkey against all these policies.

The TCP and the Swiss Labor Party maintain brotherly ties based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. We wish the 60th anniversary of the establishment of the Swiss Communist Party to be a year of new successes in the struggle of the Swiss Labor Party, with our communist greetings.

TOTAL WHEAT EXPORTS--Ankara, 7 Mar (AA)—Turkey's wheat production this year is expected to reach an alltime high of 18-19 million tons, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry Sabahattin Ozbek said. He said 1980 was also a good year as far as the harvest of cereals was concerned. Last year, wheat output per decare reached 187 kilos, and the global figure 17.4 million tons. He said Turkey would feel no shortage of chemical fertilizers in the coming planting season. Weather conditions have also been favorable, he added. GOVERNMENT, PARTIES REACT TO GENSCHER'S U.S. TALKS

Officials' Comments

[Excerpt] Bonn, 11 Mar (DPA)--The Federal Government expressed its "full satisfaction" today at the outcome of the talks between Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and leading U.S. politicians. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt congratulated Genscher, who gave an initial briefing to the Bonn cabinet immediately after his return from Washington, on the "agreed summary" in which both sides laid down their largely common views on essential foreign, security and disarmament policy issues.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker announced after the cabinet session that the chancellor described this document as a "noteworthy document." Genscher himself spoke of "perfect agreement" between Bonn and Washington and stressed that the Federal Republic continues to occupy a top position in the eyes of the Ronald Reagan administration--not least because the United States recognizes West German defense efforts.

Parties' Views

[Excerpts] Bonn, 11 Mar (DPA)--The CDU/CSU opposition today welcomed some results of Genscher's visit to the United States, while at the same time making some critical observations, CDU Parliamentary Group foreign policy spokesman Alois Mertes, for example, opposed a Soviet-American summit meeting, which Genscher had assessed positively whereas the U.S. administration had been reserved in its comments. Mertes said at present such a summit meeting is only in the East's interests, and that Genscher's attitude was taking consideration for the SPD too far.

Speaking for the SPD Parliamentary Group, foreign and security policy spokesman Peter Corterier stressed the importance for European security of the common ground achieved in Washington. This applies to arms control in the medium-range sector and to a European disarmament conference.

Wolfgang Mischnick, chairman of the FDP Parliamentary Group, assessed the course and results of the Washington talks as an important success for Genscher, as proof of the correctness of the German foreign policy line and as an expression of the strength of German-American relations.

SPOKESMAN ANNOUNCES CONTINUED AID TO TURKEY

[Excerpt] Bonn, 11 Mar (DPA)--The Federal Government wants to continue its financial and military support to Turkey this year. This was announced today by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, following the cabinet session during which the factfinding visit to Turkey by a delegation from all three Bundestag groups was discussed. The parliamentarians also advocated continuing aid to Turkey as a NATO partner.

Becker stressed that like the parliamentary delegation the Federal Government also expects the Turkish military government to take steps toward returning to democracy and to give stronger consideration to human rights. Another opportunity to urge this will be provided next month by Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen's visit to Bonn.

Becker made it clear, however, that as far as the Federal Government is concerned, there is no interdependence between democratic progress in Turkey and the aid to Turkey. It is possible, however, that "certain expectations" will be expressed to the Turkish Government regarding the economic utilization of the funds.

PAPER ON REAGAN'S AFGHAN OFFER, GENSCHER VISIT

[Werner Holzer editorial: "The Art of Poker"]

[Text] Poker is an American game of chance even if it does have fans all over the world. What makes this game so very fascinating is that one must not rely on luck alone but also on one's ability to bluff. In this game, a poker face and a seemingly unlimited endurance are just as important as the hand one holds. This can be observed in any movie.

Ronald Reagan, America's new President, definitely is American enough to enjoy poker. Since his inauguration, he seems to be making a point of transposing these rules and behavior to world politics. At this time, neither the allies of the United States nor its world-political antagnoist in Moscow can tell for sure how good his hand is and how much he is bluffing. Certainly how, the men in the Kremlin must rate Reagan's hand--or at least his display of determination--quite highly, at least to date. If it were different, they surely would react with a much harsher tone to all Washington's charges and warnings addressed to them.

The latest, quite purposeful threat of this nature involves Afghanistan. Just as in most preceding cases, Ronald Reagan again did not use the conventional political or diplomatic channels but chose the U.S. television screen to promulgate his "message." The President said that he is considering the future delivery of U.S. arms to the Afghan rebels who are fighting against their own government and above all, against the Soviet troops in the country. And besides, he said, these are not rebels but liberation fighters.

Surely in this Reagan let his heart speak, not having duly considered that most Afghan resistance fighters are thinking along similar lines as the followers of Iran's Ayatollah Khomeyni. And definitely, it did not cross his mind that the guerrilla fighters in El Salvador could well call themselves liberation fighters with a similar right.

But this probably was not what mattered to the President. What he wanted was to again signal Moscow that a different breeze is now blowing in Washington where people no longer are prepared only to take blows but to deal them out as well, if necessary. Washington probably is prepared to run the risk of another aggravation of international tensions--presumably quite in keeping with the poker game. That is to say, in the hope that the antagonist will back down in the face of so much determination.

As far as Afghanistan is concerned, by the way, nothing has as yet been decided; all the U.S. president did was mention that he is considering arms aid. A direct confrontation of the two superpowers over Afghanistan is highly improbable anyway. And yet, the American stakes are high.

The President's statements came at a time when not only the Soviet leadership is urgently signaling readiness to talk, but also the U.S. European allies are urging such talks between the two great powers. In such a situation, a bluff may well produce the opposite of what was intended because the other side may take it seriously.

At the same time, Bonn Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher is in the process of finding out in talks with his counterpart Alexander Haig and the President where the points of concentration of future U.S. foreign policy really are and what the options are for introducing European ideas into American concepts.

How ticklish and difficult this task is can be derived from a correction disseminated by a large news agency which at first had reported from Washington that the foreign minister of the Federal Republic had spoken of a "far-reaching conformity of views," just to correct this soon thereafter to read "basic conformity of views," just to correct this soon thereafter to read "basic conformity."

No matter what is interpreted into such subtleties, it is definite despite all protestations to the contrary that fundamental differences in judgment do exist between the Federal Government and presumably also the other European cabinets on the one hand and the government in Washington on the other. Not only Bonn is concerned that the one-sided emphasis on military strength and military efforts by the U.S. Government will aggravate rather than alleviate the international problems. Unlike the United States, the Europeans so far have not believed that the Soviet Union already has attained a decisive superiority. This is why they insist on military balance and on the continuation of the dialogue of the two great powers on arms control. At this time, it is the most important and most difficult task of the Federal Government to convince the Americans that poker playing has its limits.

DIE WELT REPORTS ON 'PLANNED GDR PRESSURE'

[Report by BONN correspondent Heinz Vielain]

[Text] According to secret reports by the Federal Intelligence Service (BND) available in Bonn, the "GDR" plans to link the further development of inner-German relations with the Federal Republic's attitude vis-a-vis NATO's decision to close the arms gap, in case Bonn wants to continue making the agreed contribution to the stationing of nuclear medium-range missiles in Europe. No East Berlin concessions are to take place particularly in the field of human alleviations between both parts of Germany.

According to BND information, the "GDR" wants to make considerable efforts to promote all forces in the Federal Republic which plan to undertake protest actions against the implementation of NATO's decision to counterarm. The report from the German intelligence headquarters says that East Berlin has in mind giving considerable financial support to the adversaries of the counter-armament decision. The report containing the BND information from East Berlin was handed to the Office of the Federal Chancellor, the Foreign Ministry and the Ministry of the Interior.

DIE WELT learned from SED policy analysts that East Berlin has obviously changed its German policy priorities--presumably at Soviet request, but certainly in agreement with the Soviets.

So far, better inner-German relations had been made dependent on Bonn's rapprochement on the citizenship problem, but now the slogan is: No Better Relations In Case of Counterarmament. The BND report even mentions an East Berlin "linkage": renunciation of counterarmament for better relations.

Since Bonn must adhere to NATO's counterarmament decision for strategic reasons and out of alliance policy commitments, the changed East Berlin tactics can also mean that the adversaries of further rapproachment between both German states have prevailed in the SED. With unfulfillable demands, Bonn is to be made responsible for the fact that no improvements of inner-German relations will be achieved.

CORRESPONDENTS VIEW LAW OF SEA CONFERENCE

[Correspondents' articles: "America in No Hurry Regarding New Law of the Seas"]

[Text] JS, New York, 8 March--At the UN in New York, the fact has been noted with great disappointment that the Reagan government will delay the end of the Law of the Seas Conference.

The conference will meet in New York today for its 10th session. Work on a new convention on the Law of the Seas which was started in 1974 has advanced to a point where the convention was expected to be finalized during this session which will last until 24 April, so that it could be signed by all member states in Caracas next year. U.S. companies which are interested in extracting resources from the bottom of the seas reportedly have caused the new government in Washington to delay the conclusion of the convention, because they do not agree to the envisaged provisions on the exploitation of resources on the bottom of the seas and want to have more leeway for private initiative. However, conference circles have the impression that the United States will gain much more than it will lose through the convention and therefore ought to be interested in having it passed soon.

K.B., BONN, 8 March--The Federal Government will try in New York to achieve an improvement of the new draft convention on the Law of the Sea in favor of the Federal Republic. But Bonn has not concealed that the basic decisions have already been made. In the convention, the use of the seas and the bottom of the seas is to be newly regulated and a comprehensive international system for navigation, fishing, research of the seas' environmental protection and deep sea mining is to be set up. Bonn points to the fact that the Federal Republic, being a country with poor raw material resources and a short coastline, is put at a disadvantage by the new Law of the Seas convention. But a better result could not be achieved against the majority of the 163 participating states.

The Federal Government also has considerable political doubts about the envisaged system of deep sea mining, which has a planned economy basis. Deep sea mining is to be regimented perfectly by an international bottom of the seas agency. Individual states and enterprises will have access to the raw material resources of the seas like manganese, cobalt, nickel and copper only together with the agency. The traditional raw material producers thus far have been able to enforce their demand that price reductions for their metals be prevented through production restrictions in deep sea mining.

The oceanic technology industry is to be forced to make its extraction technology for deep sea mining available to the agency. Bonn sees this as the beginning of a mandatory technology transfer which the Third World has demanded in vain to this day at other international conferences. The opposition in Bonn says that the whole planned economy system of deep sea mining meets the demands of developing countries for a "new world economic order" too much. Federal Economics Minister Lambsdorff has expressed concern about the Law of the Seas draft convention containing too many diretgistic[possible derivative of 'dirigisme'--economic planning and control by the state] and protectionist elements.

In New York, the Federal Government will above all safeguard German interests in deep sea mining. Negotiation guidelines will be resolved by the cabinet this week. The government above all wants the German economy and its highly developed oceanic technology industry to get investment protection for opening up the new raw material resources. A preparatory commission will be set up to make it possible for deep sea mining to be started prior to the conclusion of a convention. This is considered necessary because after conclusion of the Law of the Seas Conference, it will be 5 or 7 years until a minimum number of states (between 50 and 60) will have passed the convention. However, it is not yet clear whether the present draft convention can already be finalized for resolution.

PREMIER BARRE RESPONDS TO CHIRAC CAMPAIGN STANCES

[Report on speech delivered by French Premier Raymond Barre in Lyon on 6 March: "Mr Barre Attacks the Credibility of the Paris Mayor's Economic Program"]

[Text] From the start of his speech, Mr Barre clearly indicates that his main target is the mayor of Paris, who is constantly denouncing the control which the state and bureaucracy has over the citizens. "I will not dwell on the ideas and motives of those who want to increase the state's influence on society and the economy.... Those are old-fashioned views which have always resulted in failure.

"At the other extreme, it has become very fashionable to demand the state's disengagement and a move away from rules and regulations, as if people had suddenly realized that the state is the cause of all our troubles.... Business heads have too much judgment to allow themselves to be taken in by the snares being placed around them."

Without once mentioning Mr Chirac's name, the premier then replied point by point to the RPR candidate's criticisms and proposals.

Mr Chirac's criticism of the government for constantly increasing state taxation? Untrue, Mr Barre replied: "The objective which I set myself when I was appointed premier was not to increase state taxation. That objective has been met. The proportion of state taxation in the gross industrial product, which was 17.8 percent in 1973 and 18 percent in 1976, is 17.9 percent in the 1981 budget. Company tax rates have not been increased. They will even be reduced over the next 5 years by the measures giving tax incentives for investment. Taxes on households have been adjusted: VAT has been cut and income tax levels have been made more gradual by modifying the increases in the stages of the tax scale. The tax on oil products has remained unchanged since 1979."

Mr Chirac's proposal to eliminate the employment tax [taxe professionwelle]?

"Back in spring 1978, I asked parliament to examine this whole question. That resulted in the law of 10 January 1980 which was passed by deputies from all majority parties. At that time, nobody suggested eliminating it."

Mr Chirac's proposal to replace the employment tax with an increase in VAT? "That would," Mr Barre said, "mean replacing a tax for which local communities are responsible with a state subsidy to those same communities. It would therefore limit their responsibilities and increase state control over them.... Cutting social contribution rates and making up the corresponding loss of resources by a levy on VAT would mean adopting the course of permanent and institutionalized budgetary subsidy to social security....In addition, an increase in VAT is a levy which is both burdensome and unjust because, like all indirect taxes, VAT is not a scaled tax and hits low wage earners hardest."

Mr Chirac's advocacy of a "new path?" Mr Barre referred ironically to "the stunning success of a new doctrine: 'Reaganism,'" explaining: "I do not want to discuss the policy implemented by the new U.S. President...." The premier concluded: "I leave it up to the experts to examine whether the economic program proposed by the new U.S. administration is completely convincing. As an economist, I wonder about the real scope of the 'supply theory' according to which it would be enough to reduce taxation and controls and to cut public spending for production to be increased, price increases moderated and unemployment reduced....

"The actions proposed by the Reagan administration are in no way an innovation compared with the action taken in France; their magnitude is due to the need to rectify an economic and financial situation which has deteriorated much more than ours. But we must not make a universal doctrine out of a policy based on the situation in a country at a given time.... A badly understood mistakenly transposed 'Reganism' would be likely to spark off a disastrous swing of the pendulum in France at the very time when we need more than ever to work patiently to release the forces of freedom and creativity in a country which has for many centuries been accustomed to state intervention, controls and protectionism."

LE FIGARO POLL ASSESSES GISCARD PRESIDENCY

[Charles Rebois report: "How the French People Assess the President's 7-year Term in Office"]

[Text] Having declared himself a candidate for a second term of office, Valery Giscard d'Estaing is now faced with two requirements--he must draw up a positive balance sheet of his 7-year term and present credible prospects for the next one. To throw light on the debate, we asked the French opinion polling company [SOFRES] to ask the French people about the first of these two aspects. Generally, the results can be deemed satisfactory.

The first question, which concerns various aspects of the president's activity, caught unaware a large number of the people questioned; 35 percent of them expressed no opinion. The candidate will have to win them over in the course of his campaign.

It appears that Valery Giscard d'Estaing has been assessed favorably with respect to the spheres in which the president of the republic plays a traditional role, especially maintenance of state authority and respect for civil freedoms. Criticisms advanced by the opposition and a faction within the majority with respect to the freedom of the press, radio and television, for instance, have not been generally accepted.

Reservations are greater with respect to political problems. The failure of the open-door policy aimed at the left and dissensions among the majority have been entered on the debit side of this balance sheet. It is significant that negative assessments emanate from among both UDF and RPR members. It will be impossible to avoid this question during the election campaign.

However, Francois Mitterrand will have to shift some of his targets. For instance, the French people do not follow him when he accuses Valery Giscard d'Estaing of despotism since 48 percent of them believe that the president's powers during his 7-year term have been neither more nor less extensive than when De Gaulle and Pompidou were in office. True, the head of state cannot be taken to task at one and the same time for establishing a monarchical regime and for having pursued a lax policy.

During an interview, Valery Giscard d'Estaing stated that he regretted that, because of the unwieldiness of French society, he had been unable to implement all the reforms which he had hoped to implement. Our opinion poll has confirmed that this disappointment is shared by public opinion whose views in this sphere have not always been consistent since they have been dictated by the interests of specific groups.

However, the French people acknowledge that the president's 7-year term in office has made it possible to implement some important social reforms such as the simplification of the divorce procedure and the liberalization of the abortion law. Strangely enough, however, lowering the age of majority to 18 is less widely approved.

As we know, the president gave priority in his program to the removal of inequalities and he has resolutely pursued this objective during his term in office.

Some social categories are grateful to him for this. They can be listed in the following order: old people, large families and women. His action in favor of manual workers has also been well received.

That assessments concerning the economic sphere are much more guarded will cause no surprise. The world crisis has affected in a concrete manner many aspects of the daily life of the French people who have not always been prepared to take external factors into consideration. Undoubtedly, it has not been made sufficiently clear to them that they have been relatively spared, compared to most of their neighbors.

Obviously, the struggle against unemployment and the struggle against price increases continue to receive black marks.

As for the categories which have benefited most from Valery Giscard d'Estaing's action, they are obviously those in whose favor some positive measures have been taken, measures whose benefits were acknowledged in replies to the preceding question. These categories again include old people, large families and women. Managers and farmers are also relatively happy.

But this does not apply to office and manual workers, small storekeepers or cadres who believe that they have been neglected during the president's 7-year term of office. This is maybe an unfair view to take inasmuch as low wages have increased considerably more than wages as a whole, but it is nonetheless true that in a crisis period these categories find it most difficult to make sacrifices.

This is a summary picture of the positive and negative aspects of the president's 7-year term in office as seen by public opinion 3 months before the presidential election (this opinion poll was carried out from 23 through 29 January). Candidate Giscard d'Estaing will find among them some aspects which can be put forward with a view to boosting his chances of reelection, but also some less positive ones which will require explanation and deserve to be included in any program for the coming 7-year term.

MARCHAIS DELIVERS CAMPAIGN SPEECH IN PERPIGNAN

LD111613 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 4 Mar 81 pp 4-5

[Report on speech delivered by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais in Perpignan on 3 March: "No to the Billionaries' Europe"]

[Excerpts] In his speech at Perpignan, Georges Marchais recalled our party's unswerving opposition to the law to expand the Common Market.

"To the multinationals' Europe," he said, "to the Europe of Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand, to its expansion to Spain and Portugal, we are not saying 'yes, if' or 'yes but'. We are saying and will continue to say no: a hundred times no!

"We are saying this because we are fully aware of what consequences such an expansion would have. The Brussels Commission recognizes it: It would mean more vines pulled up, more unemployment, even greater exploitation, more waste, more mine, steel works and shipyard closures....

"In saying this, we are thinking primarily of France and its people. That is the PCF's vocation.

"Does this stance mean that we feel some kind of indifference or even hostility toward the Spanish workers" Obviously not. I would like to repeat what I said a short time ago with regard to the immigrant workers: Our solidarity with the Spanish people is based on a long tradition of joint struggles. It is based on the struggle which so many fighters from the two peoples waged side-by-side on Spanish soil during the antifascist war and on French soil in the resistance to the Nazi occupier, and this class solidarity is reflected in the struggles which the Spanish workers living in our country are waging with the French workers against capital's power and the man who embodies it--Giscard d'Estaing.

"Therefore, it is also because we know that the Spanish people can expect no good from the Common Market that we are opposing its expansion. We have experience. We know that the workers and peasants are always the losers in capital's Europe.

"That is why we say no to the Europe of technocrats, billionaires, the Europe of safes which prevents the building of a human Europe."

Choice on 26 April

After explaining the main points of his struggle plan, notably his "first choice: full employment," Georges Marchais explained the conditions in which the presidential election is situated.

"The choice is important," he stressed. "It can be summarized in the following way:

"On the one hand, there is the continuation of the policy of unemployment, high living costs and national abandonment which conforms with the wishes of the employers and all privileged people. To be more specific, it is not only the continuation but the brutal aggravation of that policy.

"That is what the bourgeoisie's leaders want, hoping to make the workers bear all the consequences of the crisis in an even heavier burden. Since they are facing discontent and struggles, they have this objective: to use the presidential election to form a coalition including Giscard d'Estaing, Jacques Chirac and Francois Mitterrand's PS for implementing capital's policy. In short, they want to do in our country what is already being done in countries like Belgium and Italy.

"The other choice is change, real change which will bring the improvements you expect in your lives. How can this change be brought about? It requires three conditions."

New Policy Must Be Put Forward

"The first condition is to put forward a really new policy satisfying the people's main demands and providing the means for doing so, in other words, for implementing major anticapitalist and democratic reforms. That is what I do in my struggle plan.

"This is a clear answer. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said of Francois Mitterrand's attitude. What policy is he proposing? He does not say. But when you look at his party's specific stances or some of his statements, it has to be noted that they show more desire to find an area of agreement with the right than a desire for change.

"For instance, the PS advocates accepting sacrifices and calls on the workers to adopt a calm attitude, directing most of its blows against the CGT's initiatives. It calls for some wage increases to be abandoned. Francois Mitterrand is not even adopting the demand for a minimum wage of Fr3,300 proposed by both the CGT and our party. The other day, it put forward its proposals in the employment sphere: It is extremely vague regarding measures to help the workers, but it is very specific regarding the employers, that is, it plans to give them additional help....

"At foreign policy level, the PS leaders take part in drawing up plans to dismantle the national economic potential within the European bodies. One of Giscard d'Estaing's two representatives on the Brussels Commission, Claude Cheysson, is a PS leadership member, he is now officially one of Francois Mitterrand's personal advisers for his election campaign. The latter supports the Common Market expansion. He approves of manufacturing the neutron bomb and deploying nuclear missiles in Europe. He visited China, his visit ended with a joint document in which we read that Francois Mitterrand 'supports the process of building Europe, advocates strengthening the defense potential in the West European countries and hopes that Ronald Reagan's government will establish a partnership relation with the West European countries.' Those are Francois Mitterrand's positions.

"The second condition for bringing about change is rallying behind the new policy which our people and country need and the forces which are capable of leading it to success and implementing it.

"This is what I want and what we Communists want. We want the policy of change to be backed by a majority people's movement on the basis of which a strong and lasting left-wing union will be established. We want a government capable of implementing the new policy by defeating capital's resistance and maneuvers. In other words, we want a government comprising Communist and Socialist ministers. I have already said and I repeat that we are prepared to assume all our responsibilities to bring about the change the workers want, including responsibilities in running the country's affairs. If I am elected, there will be Communist and Socialist ministers.

"With whom will Francois Mitterrand govern if he is elected? Will he include Communist ministers in a leftwing union government? His friends Lionel Jospin, Pierre Mauroy, Gaston Defferre and Jean-Pierre Chevenment have answered no to this question. Francois Mitterrand himself has supported them.

"But in France, no political party can aspire to govern alone. A coalition is necessary. If, therefore, the PS does not wish to govern with Communist ministers, the crucial question is: With whom does it envisage governing?

"The PS abandonment of the leftwing union policy and its renunciation of the joint government program in 1977; its convergences affirmed since then with the rightwing forces in economic, social and foreign policy--which I have just demonstrated and its clearly expressed opposition to running the country's affairs with the Communists show that there is once again a danger of seeing the PS cooperate with the right."

Defeating the Giscard-Chirac-Mitterrand Cooperation Plan

"Giscard d'Estaing asserted that this was his objective back in 1974. Moreover, it is obvious that it is to this end that he is accommodating Francois Mitterrand and his party, if only through the television time he gives the PS compared with the PCF.

"Chirac, for his part, is discovering that he has areas of agreement with the PS. He has just stated that "there are points in the Socialist program where its analyses are very close to those of the RPR."

"As for the employers, they dream of cooperation between Giscard d'Estaing, Chirac and Mitterrand.

"In these circumstances are we to abandon hope of change in the near future? Certainly not. But on one condition: It is imperative to support and strengthen the PCF.

"This is imperative because the PCF is the party which is doing and will continue to do all it can to defeat the Giscard d'Estaing-Chirac-Mitterrand combination.

"It is imperative because the PCF is the party which is channeling all its forces into the battle to introduce an entirely new policy serving the workers and their needs and aspirations.

"It is imperative because the PCF is the party which, to attain this objective, is resolutely fighting to build a majority people's movement on the basis of which a strong and lasting leftwing union will be established--a union which must be taken as far as a Communist-Socialist government to run the country's affairs.

"Not a week, not a day goes by without a new petty political operation being launched against our party and its candidate. They are not content to conceal our policy and proposals from you; to purely and simply ignore the 45 meetings in which I have taken part throughout the country since I was appointed candidate by my party--meetings attended by some 360,000 people.

"No. They go further than that. They use any pretext, even the most unjustifiable, to distort, caricature, sometimes crudely, our positions in an attempt to combat us more effectively. They use any means, even the most sickening, like those used by television channel 2 and the Matra-Hachette-Europe 1 trust, led by 'manager' Lagardere.

"The attacks come from the right but also from the PS. This confirms that the [apparent line drop] apprehensions of the PS to the class collaboration policy are not groundless.

"None of that frightens us. Quite the reverse; we see it as additional proof that we have chosen the right path.

"Indeed, they are shouting so loud because they fear the PCF's action and the growing support for its candidate's campaign.

"They fear the PCF and its candidate because the latter are democratically submitting to the French people for consideration and discussion clear, specific proposals whose implementation would make it possible to steer the country out of the crisis, to satisfy the needs and aspirations of workers in both cities and rural districts.

"They fear the PCF and its candidate because they know that the workers will always find the Communists at their side in struggles to defend their interests.

"They fear the PCF and its candidate because the latter are fighting to the end to thwart the maneuvers aimed at permanently dividing the people's forces, at depriving the workers of change and leading them into the blind alley of support for rightwing policy.

"That is why it is so important for the employers and politicians opposed to change to try to weaken our party."

Determining Factor in Election

"Well, the manual and intellectual workers and the peasants can only draw one conclusion from all these facts: If they are to see their interests defended most effectively; to defeat the plan for a new coalition between the right and the PS; to impose the union and change, they must support the political force which opposes the employers' dirty tricks, the political force which is fighting and will always fight with them to overcome the obstacles to change and union: the PCF. In short, they must support the Communist candidate. The forces which he rallies behind him on 26 April constitute the determining factor in the election.

"If the PCF were, by misfortune, to emerge in a weaker position, change would be set aside and the door would be open for aggravating the difficulties faced by France and its people. On the other hand, the bigger the forces backing the Communist candidate, the better the conditions for ending present policies and replacing them with a policy of justice, progress, democracy, independence and peace."

LE MONDE ON U.S. 'THREAT' TO ARM AFGHAN REBELS

[Editorial: "A Political Card"]

[Text] Since its troops entered Afghanistan on 27 December 1979, the USSR has been engaged in a trial of strength. Everybody knows that it will not abandon its efforts to impose its law as long as it hopes to defeat the Afghan resistance. All the "political solutions" or international conferences being proposed in various quarters can constitute nothing more than an arrangement consecrating the balance of forces in Afghanistan.

As in all situations of this type, the Afghan nation's will to exist is the necessary precondition for its survival--necessary but not sufficient. The world is peopled with conquered nations. The sympathy which the West can show the resistance and the many condemnations of the Soviet interference are derisory. Only effective aid counts.

On 9 March, for the first time since he entered the White House, President Reagan publicly envisaged sending arms to the Afghan resistance fighters. He had always avoided this question even during his election campaign. So far only President as-Sadat--who can be assumed to have obtained the Americans' approval and possibly a contribution from them--has decided to send arms to the resistance movements.

Questioned during his press conference on 28 January, Giscard d'Estaing stated: "Should a country like France give military aid to the Afghan resistance? My answer is no." And he recalled that France advocates a "political solution."

The term "a country like France" implies that a different country would be justified in sending arms: The United States, of course, which is the only country to have an adequate financial and logistical capability and also the only country which could, politically speaking, run such a risk.

In such a dangerous adventure, the supplier does not only involve himself. The only practicable way of sending arms in significant quantities is through Pakistan, and it can only be used if that country feels it has credible guarantees against reprisals.

In any hypothesis, such an operation poses considerable problems. Pakistan's reaction to Mr Reagan's remarks is not known. It is difficult for a country facing serious political difficulties and which is a champion of nonalignment to take a decision. The Afghan resistance, comprising very diverse elements, is incapable of uniting. So far the orthodox Muslims, who are fairly close to Iran, have been most active militarily. In the military sphere, specialized weapons would be needed to counter the Soviet tanks and armored helicopters.

It should be noted that if the United States under Mr Reagan has changed its t[illegible] on Afghanistan as on everything else, it is above all a question of words so far. [illegible] U.S. President has avoided any binding statement. He did not say that he would sen[illegible]s. He simply "thinks" that "it is something which should be contemplated." He has [illegible] yet taken an irreversible course. He is only threatening to do so. On Monday evening, he merely ensured that he had one more card in his hand with a view to major East-West negotiations.

RED BRIGADES SHOOT ALFA ROMEO PLANT OFFICIAL

[Text] Milan, North Italy, 12 Mar (AFP)--Gunmen shot and wounded an Italian car firm official today in an attack claimed by the Red Brigades, police said. At least two men ambushed him in the staff parking lot of Alfa Romeo's plant at Arese in Lombardy and he was hit in the left knee. Police named him as Alberto Vallenzasca, 27, a supervisor at the plant. The Red Brigades later claimed responsibility in a message to a radio station.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS COMMENT ON BREZHNEV LETTER

LD111744 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1600 GMT 11 Mar 81

[Excerpt] The Council of Ministers today held a meeting at which Foreign Minister Colombo reported on the international situation. As regards to contents of Brezhnev's letter to Forlani, the government decided to study, together with NATO and the EEC, the questions relating to the reduction of nuclear arms and the East-West dialogue.

The Council of Ministers also increased the fund available to the commissioner for the earthquake zones by 500 billion lire and authorized the expenditure of another 1,000 billion lira to finance loans to local authorities for the purchase of prefabricated buildings.

Foreign, Defense Ministers' Views

[Gian Battista Fenu dispatch from the Chigi Palace]

[Text] Although not on the agenda, Brezhnev's letter was--as expected--in the center of attention of this morning's meeting of the Council of Ministers. Before the government meeting, Foreign Minister Colombo was received by President of the Republic Pertini at the Quirinal. However, let us hear from Minister Colombo himself about the contents of Brezhnev's letter to Forlani. Soviet ambassadors forwarded similar messages to the heads of government of West European countries, the United States and Sweden.

[Begin recording] The message mainly repeats the themes which were already outlined by President Brezhnev at the Soviet Communist Party Congress, with some subsequent specifications which, however, do not essentially alter the picture of this readiness, so to speak, for negotiations contained in the letter. The essential element of the letter is this desire for negotiations. The terms, of course, of such negotiations--expressed at the moment in a rather generic manner--will have to be examined not only by individual governments--we started doing this today and we shall have to study them in greater depth--but also by other allied countries. [end recording]

The messages by the Soviet premier will be the subject of immediate discussions between European countries. This was confirmed by Colombo himself: [Begin recording] It is likely this will begin at the next meeting of the EEC Council of Ministers which will take place next Monday and Tuesday. [end recording]

One point on which the Italian Government, and also other NATO countries, are not in agreement with Brezhnev's message is the way the Soviet Union understands the term nuclear moratorium. In this connection, Minister of Defense Lelio Lagorio told us: [Begin recording] The moratorium talked about by the the Soviet Government is static, that is, let us leave the things as they are. As this cannot be, this too will be a part of negotiations.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH MALTA

[Text] Rome, 11 Mar (ANSA)--The international agreement for the declaration of the neutrality of Malta and its place in Italy's Mediterranean policy were outlined in the evening by the Italian foreign minister, Emilio Colombo, in a statement to the lower house. Colombo explained that the international accord will become effective through a declaration made by the Maltese Government to be followed by a statement from Italy recognizing the neutrality of Malta. "This is a matter of an understanding for the purposes of peace and cooperation", the foreign minister said and added, "one of its aims is to gather recognition for the neutrality of Malta from other neighboring countries to strengthen and broaden stability in the Mediterranean."

Colombo then noted that Italian foreign policy is especially sensitive as regards problems in the Mediterranean because of the importance of stability throughout the region for maintaining peace. "What is evident, therefore," the foreign minister said, "is our interest in advancing those relations, which are characterized by a common Mediterranean background, and in forging closer and more productive relations with the countries of the region. Thus, every Italian contribution toward stability responds not only to national interests but is also of great significance for all of Europe," he declared.

Tracing out the history of the accord, Colombo mentioned the Franco-Italian meeting in San Rossore, near Qisa, in December 1976, in which France first began taking part in discussions on a political-juridical agreement and Libyan involvement in the "committee of guarantors," created by Italy and France in 1979. The foreign minister recalled that the La Valletta government expressed its willingness to issue a declaration of neutrality in May 1980 and that this statement coincided with the strain in relations between Malta and the Libyan Jamahiriyah over the limits of territorial waters between the two countries in June 1980.

Colombo then underscored the point that if Malta enters into understandings with other countries which might prejudice its neutral status, Italy would not hesitate to withdraw its recognition of neutrality, would disavow all commitments to the island republic and interrupt all forms of economic assistance. The bilateral financial protocol provides for contributions of 12 million dollars annually beginning in 1979, a 15 million dollar credit alone earmarked for development projects to be jointly agreed to and further financing of at least 4 million dollars annually to be utilized before the end of 1983 for economic and cultural cooperation programs. House debate on the measure will continue today.

PCI CONGRATULATES PCP ON 60TH ANNIVERSARY

[Unattributed report]

[Text] Rome--The PCI Central Committee has sent the PCP Central Committee the following message: "Dear comrades, on the PCP's 60th anniversary kindly accept the Italian Communists' fraternal and warm greetings. Your party presents a very substantial record to the country and the workers movement on your 60th anniversary--from the difficult and long night of clandestinity against fascism to the victorious April revolution, with its social and democratic gains, and now the consistent action you are waging to safeguard and consolidate the gains and to strengthen the unity of the working class and democratic forces. It is significant and important that your efforts and those of other democratic forces have enabled Portugal to reelect a president of the republic who invokes the constitution created by the April revolution. Dear comrades, on the most important occasion of both our parties' 60th anniversary, permit us to wish you further successes and to express hope for the further development of relations between the PCI and PCP and between the Italian and Portuguese people, in the shared interests of the struggle for peace, democracy and socialism."

PSD CALLS FOR END TO COUNCIL OF REVOLUTION

[Text] In a communique issued by its national standing committee today, the Social Democratic Party [PSD]--the largest party in the present ruling coalition--says revision of the constitution depends exclusively on the Assembly of the Republic.

The PSD says further that, having been imposed by the pact between the MFA [Armed Forces Movement] and the political parties, the Council of the Revolution is an organ which does not emanate from the people's will, as the latter can only be gauged by suffrage. Therefore, until the council is disbanded, the PSD does not accept the Council of the Revolution as a democratic interlocutor and will not enter into any negotiations aimed at perpetuating that organ of sovereignty under a different designation or guise.

In the same line, the PSD rejects any moves aimed at any target other than the subordination of military power to civilian power.

IRAQI FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR 2-DAY VISIT

LD112000 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 11 Mar 81

[Text] Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi arrived in Lisbon this afternoon for an official 2-day visit to Portugal. The Iraqi foreign minister, who was received at Lisbon airport by his Portuguese counterpart, Andre Goncalves Pereira, said that he came to Portugal to discuss bilateral relations and political matters on which, however, he declined to elaborate.

Sa'dun Hammadi also expressed the conviction that the talks he will hold with the Portuguese authorities will be fruitful for both sides.

DEFENSE MINISTER ATTEMPTS TO OBTAIN NATO SUPPORT

LD042240 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1950 GMT 4 Mar 81

[Text] Portuguese Defense Minister Azevedo Coutinho this morning returned to Lisbon from Brussels where he discussed with NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns the agreed program for the reequipping of the Portuguese Armed Forces. During his visit to the Belgian capital, Azevdo Coutinho also met with several leading NATO officials with a view to obtaining financial support for the reequipment program which at this stage is centered on the acquisition of three frigates for the Portuguese Navy.

DEFENSE MINISTER OLIART VIEWS POSTCOUP SITUATION

LD111333 Madrid YA in Spanish 5 Mar 81 pp 28-29

[Juan Molina interview in Madrid with Spanish Defense Minister Alberto Oliart; date of interview not specified]

[Text] [Question] How do you appraise and view the armed forces' role in Spain at the present time?

[Answer] It seems to me as important as it has always been in Spanish life. That is, they are an important part of the state structure. They are a very important part of the Spanish people, since the forces are well integrated into the people, and, following what has happened, I believe that the loyalty and discipline which they displayed around the natural chain of command and around the leader designated as such in the law--who is the king--were a guarantee, and, more than a guarantee, a demonstration of continuity and ability to support the democratic institutions.

[Question] Does this support represent the armed forces' absolute respect for the constitution?

[Answer] I believe that it can be asserted that it represents absolute respect for the state's legal order, both because of what that constitution represents and because of the absolute loyalty to the throne, which is a part of our constitutional system.

[Question] In accordance with what guidelines will the Ministry of Defense act henceforth with respect to envisaged or future military legislation?

[Answer] You ask me this question perhaps too early, because as you know, I took up the post last Friday; that is, I have held it for 4 working days--5 including Sunday, because I was also here working Sunday morning. We will conduct a meticulous and punctual--in the strict sense of the word with respect to time--implementation of the laws which were envisaged, such as the implementation of the law of basic principles of defense and of the organization of the armed forces. This is one of the guidelines; that is, the legal reorganization necessary for bringing the armed forces legislation into line with the constitutional order. And I deem to be as important as these matters the modernization of our armed force' equipment in order to fulfill the aims laid down in the constitution, which we would term the combined froce target which, in short, is the attempt to ensure that our armed forces are technically equipped to cope with the task which they must perform over the next decade. This will take concrete form in a law of a financial nature, which can be expected in the course of the next few years, and which will be added to the budget of each of the annual outlays in accordance with the procedures of the overall budgetary law. This is a task of the utmost importance. I would say that these are the two guidelines of methodical and systematic work which were already being carried out and which we will merely continue, in addition to others which will emerge in due course.

[Question] From your position as defense minister, how do you assess the difficult situation which the country is experiencing?

[Answer] When you say "difficult situation," are you referring to the coup?

[Question] Exactly.

[Answer] I believe that, as matters are becoming known and without going into details, which naturally should be kept secret with respect to the trial which is being prepared, it is quite clear that the 23-24 February coup was staged by a certain specific and not very large group of field and company officers in the army. I would say that the vast majority, most of the armed forces, kept out of the coup, and, as I said earlier, demonstrated their loyalty to the country's legal and constitutional order and their obedience to the commander in chief of the armed forces--the king--and to their natural senior leaders, and for this reason nothing happened; although what did happen was serious and grave, but it made clear the existence of that group and the preparation for that coup.

Now it is also true that there are a number of issues which are worrying all of us--civilians and military personnel--and which created over the last few months an actual psychological and social situation at the national level which must be taken into account and which is composed of various factors which converge in time but do not necessarily stem from the same causes or have the same origin or the same development. What factors are they? Well, an unprecedented economic crisis in the Western world, with a gradual increase in unemployment in all the OECD countries, and in Spain, unfortunately, which is among the foremost countries afflicted, for a number of reasons which I will not explain now because this is not the time. However, I do not wish to fail to say that precisely because Spain's development took place during the sixties and seventies, and is therefore very young, and because it took place precisely in those industrial fields which the most technologically advanced countries are abandoning because of the massive consumption of energy--that is, oil--which was very cheap at the time, our industrial structure and economic model are being more affected by the economic crisis than, for instance, the FRG's industrial structure, which is based on an extremely strong technological structure, or the French structure, which is on a path of development far more advanced than ours.

[Answer] In addition, we have terrorism and public order, if you like. I believe that the successes achieved in 1980 against what we would term ordinary breaches of the public order were spectacular. According to the statistics which the public prosecutors' office of the supreme court will publish in its annual report, except for drug offenses, which are unfortunately increasing--and this is a sad and dismal honor which we share with other European and Western countries--all the others are clearly decreasing. Moreover, it was everybody's experience that bank robberies were previously increasing and rarely was anybody caught. At present, it is not only that they are being caught; it is that there is rarely a bank robbery without there being a shoot-out in which the robbers are caught more or less badly wounded. That is, this has fortunately changed completely.

[Question] And in the case of Basque Fatherland and Liberty and Basque country?

[Answer] In the case of Basque terrorism, the fact is that on the one hand the hoped for political consequences were occurring: The implementation of the autonomy statute and the normalization of political life in the Basque country, as a result of which there was a gradual isolation of the more radical stances of certain patriotic [abertzales] political parties, which were becoming far more isolated than they had ever been. And also, from the police viewpoint, the struggle is on two or three fronts. In the police struggle the same thing was happening: The number of armed commandos, the number of military commandos, properly speaking, who were being killed or captured, was very high.

[Question] How do you assess the visit by the king and queen to the Basque country and its consequences?

[Answer] The visit by the king and queen was a success for the development of Spanish democracy's institutional life with respect to resolving the Basque problem. However, the Arregui affair was a step backward. But overall, I would say that the balance sheet for 1980 and the beginning of 1981 is positive. At least it was becoming no worse. Nevertheless, at that point the coup occurred, and it occurred specifically at the moment when the nomination of prime minister was being approved for Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, who had clearly demonstrated that he was man with authority, strength and ability to govern, and had a policy which could by no means justify and attempted coup such as that which occurred.

That is, the country's political, social and economic situation is difficult, but the institutions have shown that they have very considerable support, influence and ability to react, by demonstrating the balance among the various Spanish political powers at the service of the throne and by showing the necessity of continuing that institution which is the monarchy and which is the king in order to harmonize the entire Spanish political life. We will have enormous difficulties, just as they have had in other countries, but I believe that we have the means, if we act realistically, without disregarding the problems, of making the necessary reforms and retouches in what has been done and in what we must do to resolve those issues: I believe that the country can perfectly well lay very sound foundations during this decade of the eighties for industrial takeoff and for the security we all desire.

[Question] With respect to the events of 23-24 February, is the issue being handled objectively with respect to public opinion, or is there a move toward extremism?

[Answer] In general, I believe that the news media have reacted with a good sense of responsibility following the events. Well, there are some exceptions, but my impression is that they have reacted with the responsibility incumbent on all of us in order to succeed in calming people down in this situation and to lay the foundations so that we can work and govern over the next few months with a sounder foundation than that which we had previously. However, I believe that this is an effort which is not over in a moment. Spanish people may have the fault that they react well to a major challenge but do not perhaps have the virtue of tenacity afterward.

All this should be seen from the viewpoint that we are building a society and a political model, that this could take a decade--years of work--and that democracy is not merely laws or merely political actions and verbal statements. It is above all customs and habits acquired by citizens with a sense of responsibility. Acquiring them is not a matter of a day or two but of years, and we must all help each other.

[Answer] To ensure that the implementation of the autonomies is the orderly implementation which the prime minister announced, it is crucial and essential that they come about as soon as possible, be submitted to the Cortes as soon as possible and be approved as soon as possible in order to form what I would term the state's basic legislation. The autonomies and the autonomous communities also form part of the state, but the central state to which Article 149 of the constitution refers, as the prime minister very properly pointed out, needs, in my opinion, needed previously and continues to need--now, perhaps, more urgently--a precise definition. That is, we must define the structure of the state, from which the autonomy statues, their implementation, the transferences [of powers] and the development of the powers transferred, emanate and on which they depend.

[Question] The prime minister clearly spoke in favor of joining NATO--an issue which worries people. How do you view it?

[Answer] I defined my stance on this issue a long time ago. In my opinion, when NATO originated in 1947 [date as published]--and I refer to its origin because it is essential in order to understand its significance--it originated in order to defend the West European countries against possible destabilization or even invasion by the armed forces of the Soviet Union. And it originated after those armed forces had occupied Czechoslovakia and violently ended a democratic system there. In the North Atlantic Alliance's treaty, the very first article says this: It is a union, an alliance, of countries which wish to defend a political, social way of life in the Western democracies such as the French, Dutch, Danish, Luxembourg and Norwegian democracies, and such as that which we now wish to be finally built in Spain. That is the origin of the North Atlantic Treaty. It is not an exclusively military alliance, and if I advocate Spain's entry it is not in order to attach the Soviet Union but because I believe that it is within that alliance that a political way of life and a set of moral and spiritual ideas which I personally hold and which I would prefer to prevail in my country and in the West European countries can be preserved. Moreover, from the viewpoint of military technology, it is clear that the most modern is that which is now developing within the North Atlantic alliance--within NATO. Not taking part in that alliance means not taking part in the decisions on matters ranging from strategy to arms, and this means being left outside what is now the most modern in military technology. There is a third aspect, which is that a multilateral alliance such as that linking the countries which are in NATO seems to me to be the firmest for stabilizing Spain's position in a key geopolitical location such as that which we occupy. For this reason, subordinating my words to the final decisions which must be made by means of the consultations and the decisions in the chamber, I believe that it is better for this country to join NATO than to stay outside it. Analyzing the possibilities of a Third-World neutralism, the past positions of the Third World's great leaders have virtually disappeared. Perhaps after Nehru, An-Nasir and Tito, all this has changed the world scene in such a way that this Third-Worldism, which had a certain feasibility and played a certain role in the fifties, no longer exists. I personally do not believe in the Third-Worldism of Havana; I believe that it is a Third-Worldism which is tilted very sharply in a certain direction.

[Question] It follows from what you say that entry into NATO would mean support for Spanish democracy.

[Answer] Of course; that is certain. NATO is composed of Western democracies. It is true that changes of regime can occur, such as that which took place in Greece or that which has taken place in Turkey. But Greece returned to democracy. Turkey has undergone an absolutely exceptional historical, social, political and terrorist experience which bears no comparison. Basically, the alliance would mean a consolidation of democracy and of what our country is and represents.

[Question] Returning to the military issue, can it be said that the issue of the military amnesty has been shelved in any way?

[Answer] Yes, yes; we, as the government, have opposed this issue being debated in the Cortes, and it seems to me to be clear and not necessary to enter into the details of the issue.

NORDIC OFFICIALS COMMENT ON BREZHNEV LETTER

LD111034 Helsinki International Service in English 0930 GMT 11 Mar 81

[Text] Finland's President, Urho Kekkonen, has also been among the European heads of state to receive a letter from Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev during the last few days. Denmark's Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen, in an official statement on Monday concerning Mr Brezhnev's letter, noted that special emphasis has been placed on such issues as the desire of the Soviet Union for a European disarmament conference and the Soviet proposal for a moratorium on the deployment of nuclear arms in Europe to come into force as soon as negotiations on the matter are under way. In Norway, the office of Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brunotland has commented that the Norwegian Government will study the Soviet president's letter and, together with its NATO allies, [word indistinct] seriously (?in the) hope for new progress in the promotion of detente, arms control and disarmament.

GOVERNMENTS TO SIGN ACCORD ON THRID WORLD AID

LD101101 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 5 Mar 81 p 12

[Excerpt] The Nordic nations' governments will today sign a new Nordic agreement on cooperation in Third World aid.

The reason for the revision is principally to simplify the administration of joint Nordic aid projects in developing countries. At the same time a consultative committee, composed of politicians, will be set up and this will aid the Nordic Council of Ministers in their treatment of aid questions. The agreement will replace the so-called Oslo Accord and will be called the Copenhagen Accord.

NORWAY

AMBASSADOR, FOREIGN MINISTER ON LOS CONFERENCE

Ambassador Evenson

LD101059 Oslo AFTENSPOTEN in Norwegian 6 Mar 81 p 4

[Per Egil Hegge Dispatch]

[Excerpt] Washington, 5 March--Ambassador Jens Evensen on Thursday [5 March] briefed the Nordic countries' Law of the Sea ambassadors on the situation which has arisen on the eve of the opening of the next session of the UN Law of the Sea Conference, now that the United States has announced that it is not ready to negotiate on the outstanding questions.

"This came as a complete surprise to us, and the reaction here at the UN headquarters is especially strong among the developing nations. Their views polarize around two extreme positions--either to postpone the whole session or to abandon the consensus principle and vote on the individual paragraphs," Evensen told AFTENPOSTEN.

"Our view is that both would be unfortunate. Norway has therefore taken an initiative which would mean that the session would be held and that work would continue as if nothing had happened, to the extent that this is possible. There are a number of questions which can nevertheless be discussed, and we just have to accept the fact that during and after the election campaign the new administration made commitments on so many points that it will have to have time to shape its policies."

"But we are fully intent on avoiding unnecessary trouble about this. We are actually running the risk of destroying everything if we now hold a session which would lead to an outcry against the United States. In my opinion, we should meet again in Geneva in July/August after this session and then see if it is possible to work further on the basis of the consensus principle," Evensen said.

The consensus principle presupposes that the Law of the Sea convention is so shaped that all participating countries agree on its individual paragraphs.

Ambassador Evensen also said that the developing countries find it incomprehensible that the new U.S. Government should want to renounce its commitment to sections which have already been negotiated. "There have been changes of government in a number of countries in the 7 years which have passed while we have been busy with this task, without these countries' representatives reneging on earlier commitments. Also a great deal of the work has been done by and under Republicans. It began in Richard Nixon's time, continued under Gerald Ford, and throughout Jimmy Carter's term the U.S. delegation was led by Elliot Richardson, who is a Republican and was a member of Richard Nixon's government."

Foreign Minister Frydenlund

[Text] "I do not think that the United States intends to stop the Law of the Sea Conference," Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund told AFTENPOSTEN.

"The new U.S. administration's request for time to look into the matter is not unexpected. We see this happening in other areas. But it is our hopes that the Americans will continue work on the conference as soon as possible."

Frydenlund stressed that this is an example of one of the great international conferences and that it is also in its final phase. In the light of the fact that several previous U.S. administrations have been party to this work, Frydenlund believes that the United States does not want the whole thing to break down.

"Norway wants the New York session to be held as planned, so that the signing of a Law of the Sea convention can take place according to the prescribed timetable. But there could be delay here if the United States takes its time in reaching a decision," Foreign Minister Frydenlund said.

CARRINGTON ANNOUNCES BELIZE INDEPENDENCE AGREEMENT

IRELAND TO PERMIT OPENING OF PLO BUREAU IN DUBLIN

[Text] Dublin, 11 Mar (AFP)--The Irish Government is to allow the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) to open a bureau here, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry said here today.

This followed a meeting today between Irish Foreign Minister Brian Lenihan and a Palestinian delegation led by London PLO representative Nabil ar-Ramlawi.

The bureau, which was soon to open, would not be given diplomatic status, the spokesman added.

Mr ar-Ramlawi had announced his plans yesterday for the opening of a bureau here and the setting up of a "friends of Palestine association." He said the PLO expected Ireland to uphold "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people" and proposals for an independent Palestinian state.

IRAQ'S HAMMADI REJECTS RAPID DEPLOYMENT FORCE

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher and Lord Carrington have received a thumbs down from Iraq, a major Gulf oil producer, over plans for a rapid deployment force intended to bring stability to the Gulf and other areas.

The prime minister indicated after talks with President Reagan that Britain was ready to join the United States in the creation of such a force.

But today, Iraq's foreign minister, Sa'dun Hammadi, at the end of an official visit to Britain, said: Iraq is against a rapid deployment force. We think it would not work."

"We are a non-aligned country. Those who advocate this course think they would keep the Soviet Union out. On the contrary, we think it would mean an increased attempt by the Soviet Union to emphasise its presence in the area. It would create a vicious circle. It is self-defeating."

Dr Hammadi said Mrs Thatcher and Lord Carrington had listened to his views, but had not given him a "final answer" on the subject.

He believed that instability in the Gulf area stemmed from competition by the superpowers. "That is why we are against any moves to increase the influence of the superpowers direct or indirect," he said.

Lord Carrington also received a setback to his hopes of strengthening the European initiative on the Middle East. Dr Hammadi said: "There is a gap in our positions, particularly Iraq's position over Israel. We cannot and will not recognise the existence of the State of Israel.

"Palestine is part of the Arab homeland, colonised by Zionists. Neither now nor in the future can we recognise it. The European initiative includes recognition of Israel."

The European plan seemed to mean no more than persuasion. Israel had the upper hand militarily in the region, and commanded the support of the United States. "I cannot see how Europe can carry out this plan only with persuasion," he said.

Dr Hammadi could give no indication of when there would be a ceasefire in Iraq's war with Iran. He said: "The chances of a ceasefire are not very bright. It is not impossible, but it does not seem very close."

He advised Britain and other Western powers to be neutral in the conflict. He acknowledged that arms supplies had been discussed in his talks with Lord Carrington, but he said: "It was discussed from another angle."

"We made clear that the best policy for the war is if other countries keep neutral and away from the war. I did not come here to purchase arms."

Dr Hammadi said that Britain and Iraq were close to signing an agreement on economic and technical cooperation. This would provide a framework for trading and economic contact between both countries.

REPORTAGE ON MEXICAN SECRETARY'S LONDON TALKS

Meeting With Thatcher

PA111559 Mexico City International Service in Spanish 0300 GMT 11 Mar 81

[Text] The Mexican foreign relations secretary has met with British Prime Minster Margaret Thatcher. They discussed Central American affairs and the relations of the industrialized countries with the developing countries.

British officials said that the Mexican foreign relations secretary and Thatcher discussed the planned North-South summit between the wealthy and poor countries scheduled to be held in Mexico in July.

Regarding El Salvador, the prime minister said that her government opposes foreign intervention and the large-scale supply of military equipment for the government forces. She said she firmly believes that a political agreement is the only solution.

Talks With Carrington

FL112107 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2054 GMT 11 Mar 81

[Text] London, 11 Mar (NOTIMEX)--Mexican Foreign Relations Secretary Jorge Castaneda, who is on a private visit to London, today held talks with his British counterpart, Lord Carrington, on major international issues and particularly on preparations for the forthcoming North-South summit proposed by Mexico for July.

The Mexican secretary, who was received on Monday by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, and the foreign office secretary examined the situation in El Salvador and the Middle East and Namibia issues.

Lord Carrington informed Castaneda on the visit he made to Washington with Margaret Thatcher in late February. The foreign secretaries also examined developments of the North-South dialogue within the perspective of the forthcoming summit which was proposed by Mexico last August with the support of Austria.

Lord Carrington today hosted a luncheon in honor of Castaneda, who leaves London tonight for Vienna where he will participate in the North-South summit preparatory meeting on Friday.

CUBAN FOREIGN MINISTER MALMIERCA ARRIVES FOR VISIT

[Text] Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca arrived in Cyprus this evening. He will stay here for 3 days as the guest of Foreign Minister Rolandhis. The Cuban foreign minister was met at Larnaca airport by Mr Rolandhis, Cuban Ambassador to Cyprus Rodriguez Paz, and by other officials. During his stay in Cyprus, Mr Malmierca will be received by President Kiprianou. He will also have talks with Mr Rolandhis, House President Mikhailidhis and Greek Cypriot Representative to the inter-Cypriot talks Ioannidhis. He will also meet the committee of refugees and the committee of relatives of missing persons and undeclared prisoners. On Friday Mr Malmierca will sign a cultural agreement at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Welcoming the Cuban foreign minister, Foreign Minister Rolandhis said that Mr Malmierca's visit to Cyprus at this period, when Cuba is chairman of the Nonaligned Movement, is of particular importance. Mr Rolandhis said: Cuba has consistently supported in the past the Cypriot people's just rights, and on the occasion of Mr Malmierca's visit we shall have the opportunity to renew the contacts with him and to fully brief him on developments on Cyprus.

Mr Malmierca expressed pleasure at visiting Cyprus for the first time and said that the people of Cuba feel very close to the Cypriot people. We are confident that our visit will contribute to the expansion and the strengthening of the relations between the two governments and the people of our countries. He also said that he expects to have with Mr Rolandhis a useful exchange of views on the basic problems that concern the nonaligned world. He added: On this occasion we reassure the Cypriot people of our support for a solution that will safeguard the unity and territorial integrity of Cyprus.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS RESUME; OPPOSING ISSUES STATED

[Text] A new meeting within the framework of the inter-Cypriot talks is taking place at the Ledra Palace Hotel. Discussion on the territorial aspects of the Cyprus problems is being continued.

In a statement prior to the meeting, Greek Cypriot Representative Ioannidhis said that the Turkish Cypriot side has not yet submitted concrete proposals on the territorial issue. This, he said, is an obstacle in the way of development of a constructive dialogue toward achieving results.

Answering questions by newsmen, Mr Ioannidhis said that, according to the Turkish Cypriot press, submission of proposals on the territorial issue at today's meeting was not expected. He added that the Greek Cypriot side will insist on the submission of proposals.

Answering another question, Mr Ioannidhis said that nothing has happened during the last 2 weeks that would change the picture of the talks.

Answering a question on the missing persons, Mr Ioannidhis said that this question has been raised during the talks and that the Greek Cypriot side will go on raising it. Mr Ioannidhis added that the question of missing persons is a very tragic problem that can create good will if satisfactorily settled. He said: We are expecting the setting up of an investigatory body which will trace the fate of missing persons.

Answering questions by newsmen, Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan said that he would not submit a map at today's meeting and added that if no agreement is reached on the question of criteria for the territorial apsect, the map would mean nothing. Mr Onan described the question of criteria as very important and added that the submission of map is not as simple as it appears to be. For example, he said, the Greek Cypriot side has said that there has been no population exchange. He added: I do not know, but so many thousands of people are living on our side.

Asked whether he would raise this question, he said he cannot say whether he would do so. He added that the question is very much related to bizonality.

Answering another question, Mr Onan said that the criteria are not only the territorial but also the constitutional aspects, and that if agreement is reached on the constitutional aspect then the two sides would be closer to the criteria. Finally, Mr Onan said that there is also the question of practical measures and expressed the hope that the Greek Cypriot side will submit its proposals.

Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's representative, did not make any statement prior to today's meeting.

UN Communique

[Text] A UN communique on today's meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks says that during this meeting there was further discussion on the question of the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem and that a sincere exchange of views took place. With this meeting, which lasted 3 hours, five rounds of intercommunal talks were completed.

The next meeting will be held on Wednesday, 18 March, and discussion on the resettlement of Varosha under UN auspices will be continued.

DENKTAS SAYS GREEK CYPRIOT LEADERS DISTORT FACTS

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the Turkish Cypriot community has never felt the need to distort facts or resort to lies in order to defend its just cause.

Replying to journalists' questions on the statement made by the spokesman of the Greek Cypriot administration denying again the population exchange agreement, Denktas said that distorting facts and resorting to lies have become subjects on which the Greek Cypriot leaders are becoming experts.

Denktas recalled that the Akritas plan (?showed) what an inhuman massacre was planned for the 1963 incidents under the pretext of a Turkish Cypriot rebellion. The fact was the Turkish Cypriots were waging a struggle for survival. He said: The lies of Spiros Kiprianou, who is among the originators and executors of this plan, are recorded at the United Nations. The Greek Cypriot side had also alleged that the Turkish Cypriot side distorted the facts concerning the issue of bizonality. However, the lie of the Greek Cypriot leadership was exposed through the emphasis on bizonality in the opening speech on behalf of the United Nations during the resumption of the intercommunal talks.

Pointing out that the lies and distortions regarding the missing persons issue are also in the open, Denktas continued: We are exposing these lies by the Greek Cypriot leadership on this humane issue through documents. However, they are not ashamed and they continue with their games of deceiving the world. The documents on the population exchange are also in the open. The (?people) who changed their locations are there. Some 65,000 Turkish Cypriots did not come to the North for a picnic. These 65,000 Turkish Cypriots emigrated to the North in a bid to terminate the suffering of 11 years. [words indistinct], attain their freedom and have the right to live like human beings as necessitated by its cofounders and equal partnership rights. We are not discussing the return of the Greek Cypriots during the intercommunal talks and we will not discuss it. Those who bring this issue to the negotiating table in the form envisaged by Kiprianou will return emptyhanded. The population exchange has constituted the basis for the future Cyprus agreement. This basis cannot change. As long as this basis exists, the island will never be united with Greece.

Denktas added that the Turkish Cypriots are prevented from being dragged into a situation that prevailed from 1963 to 1974 through a federal (?solution) to be built on this basis and that no one will be able to change this.

FOREIGN MINISTER MITSOTAKIS LEAVES FOR PARIS

[Text] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis left at 0930 today for Paris, where he will make a 2-day official visit at the invitation of his French colleague, Francois-Poncet. This afternoon, Mitsotakis will discuss with Francois-Poncet, bilateral relations between the two countries as well as international and significant issues. In the evening, Mitsotakis will attend a dinner given in his honor by the French foreign minister.

Tomorrow at noon, Mitsotakis will receive the representatives of the Greek community, after which he will attend a luncheon given in his honor by Paris diplomatic editors. Mitsotakis is accompanied by a Foreign Ministry delegation, headed by the ministry's secretary general, Ambassador Roussos.

MITSOTAKIS DISCUSSES PENDING TALKS WITH TURKEY

NC111630 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 9 Mar 81 p 4

[Interview granted by Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis to AKAJANS correspondent Ahmet Senova in Athens--date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: What do you think of friendship and cooperation between the Turkish and Greek nations?

Answer: A cooperation based on sincerity and good will between two nations, and particularly between two neighborly nations, would undoubtedly serve their common interests. Cooperation between Turkey and Greece within the framework of NATO not only serves their common interests, but also helps to secure peace and safety in the area. Friendship and cooperation between the two countries is a prerequisite for constant development and progress.

Question: Honorable Minister, would you please enlighten us on the topics to be discussed at the coming Ankara meeting of the Foreign Ministry secretaries general of both countries?

Answer: The secretaries general of the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministries will resume the talks they started in Athens last December. The outstanding disputes between Turkey and Greece will constitute the main topic of the talks. Their aim will be to find a solution to the disputes by trying to converge on their views. The main issues will be the Aegean airspace and the continental shelf.

Question: Would you please now make the statement you promised the journalists in Brussels on the Turkish-Greek disputes?

Answer: I prefer deeds to words. The measures announced a while ago regarding the Aegean air traffic facilities were the expression of a sincere desire on the part of Greece to improve its relations with Turkey to the level their mutual interests as well as their friendship and neighborliness requires. The normal functioning of the Aegean airspace is in the interests of both countries. Efforts must therefore be made in this direction within the framework of international law.

Question: It is being alleged that because of the attitude of the opposition toward the settlement of the Turkish-Greek disputes and because of the approaching general elections in Greece, the Greek Government will be unable to adopt courageous decisions. Can you comment?

Answer: In a parliamentarian government like that of Greece the divergent views expressed by various political parties on issues concerning their country should not be deemed as strange. In Greece, everybody wants the improvement of relations with Turkey. Ways and means could be found for the settlement of certain disputes.

Question: Would you please comment on the statement of the Greek Government spokesman about the government's intention to extend the Greek territorial waters to 12 miles?

Answer: Every state has a sovereign right to determine its territorial waters in accordance with international law. Like all other countries, Greece too reserves this right. Turkey has exercised this right and determined its waters at 6 miles in some places and at 12 miles in others. Generally speaking, Greece has so far confined its territorial waters to 6 nautical miles. This does imply that Greece will not extend its territorial waters beyond 6 miles. Under the present conditions it does not deem it necessary to change the border of its territorial waters.

Question: Although it is said that the Cyprus issue is one which should be resolved by the two communities on the island, it is being argued that both communities receive instructions from their governments [in Turkey and Greece]. Would you tell us your views on this and on the way the Cyrpus dispute could be resolved?

Answer: it is not true that the Greek Cypriot community receives instructions from the Greek Government. This view is meaningless. The Cyprus Republic has a government of its own and the Greek Government respects the sovereignty and independence of the Cyprus Republic. The Cyprus dispute is being handled by the Cypriot Government itself. Greece tries to help this government as much as it can. Naturally, progress toward the solution of the disputes between Turkey and Greece and the improvement of conditions in the region could contribute to the success of efforts being made at the intercommunal talks in Cyprus. However, the settlement of the Cyprus issue should be sought not outside Cyprus but inside it. Turkey, which is in a strong position in Cyprus, can contribute to such a settlement. Greece will not refrain from making any contribution which would help to find a just and final solution to the Cyprus issue.

Question: Would you please state what your government's attitude is toward such matters as the trusts law concerning the Turkish minority in western Thrace, the schoolbooks sent to western Thrace from Turkey, and the settlement of Greeks in western Thrace?

Answer: Law No 1091/80, which governs the administration and management of the western Thrace trusts, envisages democratic management methods which would be in the interest of all those who benefit from trusts. A flexible system is being introduced by this law to meet present day needs. I have no knowledge that the distribution of books sent from Turkey is banned. Encouraging the resettlement of families in the agricultural areas of the country is intended to counter an influx of peasants into the cities. It is part of a campaign to prevent emigration.

Question: How can you explain the preposterous campaign which the Greek parliamentarians wage against Turkey on international platforms, particularly now that it is going through a critical period?

Answer: The Greek Government is aware of the fact that Turkey is facing transitional difficulties. The Greek Government sincerely hopes that Turkey will eventually return to a democratic regime. Greece has close experience of deviations from democratic administration. It is natural for the parliamentarians, who are elements of a democratic regime, to show excessive sensitivity in this respect. Every parliamentarian has a right to speak and act according to the dictates of his conscience.

Question: Will you please express your views on Ataturk's 100th birthday anniversary and the ceremonies to be held at Salonika?

Answer: Kemal Ataturk's 100th birthday anniversary reminds us of some important phases in our history too. In remembering Ataturk, we shall be expressing our respect for the great personality of our geographical region and for the great work he has achieved.

VOTCP DENIES ANY TIES WITH DEV-YOL, TERRORISM

[Text] Dear listeners: Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] has broadcast a statement issued by the Eskisehir, Afyon and Kutahya Martial Law Command. The statement is in every aspect (?unusual). This statement broadcast by TRT attempts to connect the Voice of Turkish Communist Party [VOTCP] and Our Radio broadcasts with terrorism. Without specifying the statements or slogans, the TRT broadcast claims that these originate from VOTCP and Our Radio broadcasts.

Dear listeners, if the alleged slogans refer to the slogans by the Revolutionary Path Organization [Dev-Yol], the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] is in no way related to them and this is a known fact. If these slogans are for peace, democracy, national independence, socialism and the unity of action among progressive, anti-imperialist and democratic forces, then it is evident that the writers of these slogans do not know the current stand of Dev-Yol.

Provocations consisting of confusing public opinion, involving the TCP with terrorist actions and connecting the TCP with Dev-Yol have so far been unsuccessful and they will continue to be unsuccessful in the future.

VOTCP LAUDS FRIENDSHIP, COOPERATION WITH USSR

TA110930 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 11 Mar 81

[Station commentary entitled: "Turkish-Soviet Cooperation"]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners: The friendship and cooperation which was founded by Lenin and Ataturk has developed on the basis of mutual interests and trust and has reached new stages on the same basis.

As stressed in the 24 December 1980 issue of MILLIYET, Turkish-Soviet friendship and cooperation agreements have always acted as a relief in difficult times. This is really the case, since the assistance extended to our country by the Soviet Union is not based on any vested interests or political conditions. It was repeatedly demonstrated during the past 60 years that every cent of aid extended to our country and our people by our neighbor serves our national interests. The talks, which are currently being held in Ankara, will add another cornerstone to building the cooperation which constitutes a great support for our national development.

The Aliage oil refinery, the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum works through the financial and technical aid of the Soviet Union, and the import of more machinery, agricultural equipment, chemical products and petroleum from the Soviet Union within the framework of the 5-year trade agreement are among the subjects discussed during these talks. In exchange for this, Turkey will export to the Soviet Union textiles and other industrial products that it cannot sell to Western Europe, as well as traditional agricultural products. This alone shows the benefits secured by Turkish-Soviet relations. This policy consists of aiding our people, who are excessively exploited by imperialists.

The fact that the Turkish economy is dependent on imperialism has driven Turkey to the verge of a national collapse. Through oppressive political pressures, imperialist organizations who control Turkey's economy like the IMF and the World Bank have stunted the development of the economy, increased the foreign trade deficit, exacerbated unemployment and inflation, limited the funds alloted to the public economic sector and increased the allocations to the monopolies. The following conclusions can be drawn from this: Directing the Turkish economy in accordance with the interests of imperialists and the local collaborationist monopolies leads to a dead end. This dead end can be averted only by opposing the pressures imposed by imperialists and the local monopolies and developing multifaceted relations with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries.

As stressed by Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Secretary General Bilen in his speech greeting the 26th Congress of the CPSU, the relations of good-neighborliness and cooperation between Turkey and the Soviet Union, and the development of these relations, assume greater importance at a time when U.S. imperialist pressures on our country have increased and Turkey is faced with a deep economic crisis. The number of persons who realize these facts is continuously growing in our country. Their circle is expanding. Both Industry and Technology Minister Kocatopcu and Foreign Minister Turkmen, before him, stressed that cooperation with the Soviet Union [words indistinct] and that this cooperation benefits both countries, and adopted an attitude in favor of developing these relations. General Evren noted that the Soviet Union bears a great responsibility for the issues of international peace and detente.

However, anti-Soviet and anticommunist provocations are also being staged at a time when these statements are being made and the Turkish and Soviet delegations are seeking possibilities to further increase the cooperation between the two countries. Dailies like TERCUMAN and SON HAVADIS, and reactionary and pro-American forces such as Matin Toker, Guneral and Coskun Kirca, who are opposed to the development of friendship and cooperation between Turkey and the Soviet Union, are attempting to obstruct this friendship and hinder the relations.

All anti-imperialist and democratic forces who are in favor of developing Turkish-Soviet relations and every person who is in favor of strengthening Turkish-Soviet friendship should firmly oppose the pressures against the democratic forces.

BORON EXPORTS RISE--Ankara, 10 Mar (AA)--The country with the largest boron mineral reserves in the world, Turkey will double her boron mineral exports in 1981. Boron mineral exports, which amounted to 500,000 tons annually for the last 5 years, rose to 1 million tons, Mineral Exploration Institute (MTA) experts announced to the congress of the Turkish geological society. Boron minerals sell for $300 a ton in world markets. [Text] [Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 10 Mar 81 TA]

MEAT EXPORTS TO LIBYA--Erzincan, 10 Mar (AA)--Turkey has begun exporting meat to Libya. Some 2,000 tons of meat were ready to be shipped by a private Turkish company, at $4,600 a ton. Transportation of the meat began this morning, company officials said. Turkey will earn $9.2 million from the meat exports. [Excerpt] [Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 10 Mar 81 TA]

IRAQI OFFICIAL DISCUSSES MILITARY COOPERATION

AU121300 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 12 Mar 81 pp 1-2

[Georg Possanner report on "exclusive interview" with Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq 'Aziz in Vienna--date not given]

[Text] Vienna--After other Arab countires, Iraq is now also displaying interest in Austrian arms production. "Naturally we are interested in military cooperation with Austria, because we need arms; not because of the war at this time, but rather because Iraq must increase its military strength, and we are seeking to diversify our arms sources." This was stated by Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq 'Aziz in an exclusive interview with DIE PRESSE. "One or two supply sources are not enough, we also want to cooperate with other countries," 'Aziz says, indicating interest in Austrian offers.

The high-ranking Iraqi politician is at present paying a several-day unofficial visit to Austria. As a "personal emissary of President Saddam Husayn", he is to elucidate to Chancellor Kreisky the Iraqi position in the current conflict with Iran, and at the same time to sound out possibilities for expanding bilateral relations, especially in the economic sector.

"If there are opportunities--now or in future--to cooperate with Austria in the military sector, then we will gladly do it," Tariq 'Aziz declared. He stressed that in the framework of its comprehensive economic plans Baghdad sees manifold chances for Austrian enterprises, an issue that he intends to discuss during his second meeting with Chancellor Kreisky on Thursday.

Asked whether Baghdad's oil supplies to Austria would be affected by the Iraqi-Iranian conflict, Tariq 'Aziz declared that "thanks to the aid of our brothers and friends in the region," the delivery commitments would continue to be fulfilled in the future.

Commenting on reports that Iraq was advocating a transfer of the UN headquarters from New York to Vienna, the deputy prime minister recalled that his country had made a proposal to this effect years ago because the security of members of the Arab missions in New York was threatened by "Zionist gangs." He added that although Baghdad was not actively pursuing this idea further at present, it would vote for this should such a transfer be proposed.

Asked why Iraq, since the overthrow of the shah the strongest military power in the Gulf region, still had not won the war against Iran, Tariq 'Aziz said: "We have won a great victory in the past 6 months. We never wanted to totally destroy Iran or eliminate its fighting strength. Our objective was to ward off Iranian aggression, and we have attained that objective."

'Aziz said that he had not come to Vienna to ask Chancellor Kreisky for his good offices as a mediator in the conflict with Iran. The Baghdad government knows that Kreisky, as a "prominent and experienced statesman," supports the work of the existing mediation commissions (Olof Palme for the United Nations and the Islamic Conference--DIE PRESSE)

Tariq 'Aziz harshly criticized the plans of the Reagan administration to build up a military presence in the Middle East and the Gulf: "The United States has no business here, no one has a right to interfere here." Moreover, the Iraqi deputy prime minister drew attention to Baghdad's criticism of the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan, but depicted arms aid for the freedom fighters as envisaged by Reagan as "interference."

Asked about the political situation in the Arab world, 'Aziz prophesied for the Syrian regime "the fate of the shah" and called Libya "a little Iran."

SCHMIDT HOPES FOR 'CLOSE, CONSTRUCTIVE' U.S. TIES

[Text] Bonn, 12 Mar (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt underlined the hope that close and constructive cooperation will develop with President Ronald Reagan's new American administration. At a dinner on Wednesday evening for former U.S. President Gerald Ford, with whom Schmidt said he had particularly close ties, Schmidt said that the Western alliance will never be able to dispense with the friendship between Americans and Europeans. The chancellor pointed to the difficulties in coping with the present world economic problems and emphasized the U.S. role as the leading economic power. He expressed the hopes that the special problem of the American policy of high interest rates will not prove to be a lasting burden for European governments.

According to the Federal Press Office, former President Ford said that of all the statesmen he got to know during his period of office, he rates no one higher than Schmidt. The preservation and further deepening of German-American relations will not only work to the advantage of the two states but will also be of exceptional importance for the international situation.

Ford, who is on a private visit to Bonn, which was agreed to by President Reagan, brought the chancellor a personal message from the new President. The press office did not give details of the message. Schmidt is going to Washington on 20 May for talks with Reagan.

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON WASHINGTON TALKS

[Text] [Question] At a press conference here in Washington, together with your colleague Haig, you created the impression--which was a bit surprising for the public--that the new administration and the Federal Government agreed on all points discussed. Prior to breakfast, it sounded somewhat different. What was the nature of the change or was there no change at all?

[Answer] I think one must bear in mind that coordinated, joint information was given to the press when the talks were concluded. That is perfectly natural. This joint information describes the talks and their contents. It shows that we have, indeed, achieved agreement in assessing important international problems. It turned out to be advantageous that the new American administration is forming its opinion in talks with its European partners. The secretary of state said yesterday at a press conference that the Federal Republic of Germany is considered not only a cornerstone of the alliance, but also of world peace. That attributes special significance to the advice and opinion we are giving here.

[Question] Let's look at part of this opinion-shaping process: We read this morning in various U.S. papers that the U.S. President would benevolently examine, if requested, supplying arms to the Afghan resistances fighters. Is this not more than surprising, if one compares it with your positions on policy toward the Third World?

[Answer] I believe that if this case materializes, the U.S. Government would consult its partners on this issue. Since no such requests have been made, there is no reason to discuss this. I consider it important that the joint statements express the fact that the U.S. Government, just like we do, attributes equal significance to NATO's 1979 dual decision--to the decision to counterarm, as well as to the offer to negotiate.

Both governments believe that the discussion group on disarmament should get together as early as possible and that negotiations on medium-range missiles must be continued. We were pleased to see prior to the visit that the Americans agreed to the French suggestion to hold a European conference on disarmament and confidence-building measures. This indicates that they are interested here in the continuation of East-West negotiations. These are the things we register with satisfaction, we as Germans and as Europeans.

[Question] I think this sounds very fine. May I go into detail as follows: When one hears that the new U.S. administration plans further increases in military aid for El Salvador, when one hears that the new administration creates hopes--to put it very carefully--for the South African Government that there will be no pressure exerted because of Namibia, does this not indicate that further detailed discussions of this policy might bring up some controversies?

[Answer] I would not use the term controversies, but it is naturally clear that we as well as the others of the European Community must develop joint assessments of every individual issue. Regarding El Salvador, one must certainly not underrate the fact that the U.S. Government, just as we do, supports a political solution in El Salvador. The special significance of implementing reforms, of holding elections and of bringing about social justice has been pointed out. It always has been German opinion that these problems are the main reasons for the conflict.

Regarding Namibia, a peaceful solution of the problem is favored. It was said very frankly in the joint statement that the U.S. Government is still forming an opinion on this matter.

I am certain that my statements here have made an impression with regard to the Namibian problem, even more so because the French foreign minister, the British Government chief, the British foreign minister and the Italian foreign minister have made statements in Washington to the same effect.

[Question] The so-called dual decision, NATO's decision to counterarm and the implementation of that decision play a special role for you with regard to German domestic policy. You have pointed out that the special consulting group, which is supposed to coordinate these negotiations in the alliance, will probably be convoked in the near future. Is that maybe something like postponing the actual decision? Nothing is known about dates when negotiations should take place with the Soviet Union.

[Answer] That the U.S. Government says, just as we do, that it wants to continue these negotiations indicates that European fears were unfounded that the Americans probably wanted to delay the negotiations. That no headway has been made with regard to these negotiations is not the fault of the American side. it was due to the fact that the Soviet Union did not react to our negotiating offer from the NATO decision in December up to the 1980 visit of the chancellor and myself. I am convinced that the talks opened last fall will be continued very soon.

Maybe I ought to mention another important point which played a role in another field of our talks, namely, the North-South dialogue, the problem of economic cooperation between industrial states and the states of the Third World. I have reported here on the preparatory session for the summit meeting to take place in Mexico at the end of this week. I will take part, together with the French foreign minister in preparations for West Europe. We have stated here in Washington our greatest interest that the U.S. Government ought to be represented at this summit meeting. I say frankly that I am hopeful and confident also with regard to this problem.

SCHMIDT, GENSCHER, THORN DISCUSS EUROPEAN ISSUES

[Text] Bonn, 12 Mar (DPA)--Gaston Thorn, the new president of the EEC Commission in Brussels, today paid an inaugural visit to Bonn. Thorn met Chancellor Schmidt and Foreign Minister Genscher for an exchange of views lasting several hours on current questions concerning the European Community.

At the same time, the talks dealt with the preparations for the next EEC summit at Maastrict.

Their main subject was the profound effect of the worsening world economic situation on the European Community and its member states. Schmidt stressed that it was necessary for the EEC states and the other major Western industrial states to coordinate their economic policies. The Commission has a central role in the joint decisionmaking processes and in solving the structural problems of the Community.

Federal Foreign Minister Genscher paid tribute to Gaston Thorn as a convinced and committed European in whose work as president of the Commission he places great hopes. The Commission has an active role in the European decisionmaking process. Thorn and Genscher also discussed German ideas on a European union.

Genscher also briefed Thorn on his talks in Washington. At a press conference, Thorn, who has now visited six European capitals, also dealt with the abortive EEC fishery talks for which a solution is being sought, especially by Bonn. Genscher made it clear to his guest that the Federal Republic expects the other partners in the Community to show understanding toward the solution of this "relatively minor problem." Thorn said that it is not the case that nothing has happened during the last round of talks in Brussels. The various possibilities have been more closely defined. He said he is convinced that the various positions are not so far apart as to make agreement impossible.

Thorn also said he is hopeful that the preparations for Spain's admission to the Community will be successful. He said he assumes that the negotiations will have reached a stage in 1982 to make it possible for Spain to join in 1984. Spain itself attaches great importance to its EEC membership. The EEC countries must be aware of the great responsibility they would assume by reacting negatively to the political offer.

DER SPIEGEL REPORTS ON FRG-U.S. DEFENSE PROBLEMS

DW120919 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 9 Mar 81 pp 19-25

[Text] The Federal Government is preparing itself for new trouble with Washington. It is feared that the Americans want to use German soldiers as deputy sheriffs in the Gulf. As a precaution, the Bonn people have already built a defense line of moral and military arguments. It is a question, however, of how long it will hold.

When first reports on Ronald Reagan's election victory arrived in Bonn, the German chancellor prescribed the greatest discipline for himself and for his government. Helmut Schmidt said in the cabinet session on 5 November last year that it no longer made any sense to complain. There must now be "confidence and optimism."

But despite such solidarity statements, the chancellor suspected already at that time that Ronald Reagan might confront the Germans more than his predecessor Jimmy Carter with very undesirable demands. Defense Minister Hans Apel reported to his colleagues on talks he had with U.S. Ambassador Walter Stoessel, pointing out the cabinet protocol of 5 November on "discussions of the Federal Security Committee."

Schmidt's presentiment: Reagan will increase pressure on Bonn to extend its military engagement beyond NATO limits and to dispatch German soldiers to protect the oil wells in the Persian Gulf. Right after the cabinet session, the chancellor's office asked the colleagues from the Foreign Ministry to examine "the legal admissibility of using the Bundeswehr abroad--with regard to the foreign policy significance of the issue."

Two days later, the chief of the Foreign Ministry legal department, Karl August Fleischhauer, told experts in the Justice, Defense and Interior Ministries that a paper had been worked up "in connection with Western considerations to keep the Strait of Hormuz open," which "is still in the hands of the directorate of the ministry." Fleischhauer suggested that "a draft which has been coordinated between our ministries" should be presented to the chancellor.

Shortly thereafter, on 11 November, Hans Apel's ministerial director Joachim Hinz reported to the Foreign Ministry that his department also was "examining the problem thoroughly" and preparing it for the chief. On 18 November, the experts met in the Foreign Ministry to discuss all eventualities in detail, such as: May the Bundeswehr go into action if raw material supplies are to be disrupted; May it reconnoiter in the Strait of Hormuz or sweep mines; May it dispatch transport and supply units, or may it support a UN peace force with transport and supply activities?

The military and the officials were not unprepared for this query. Jimmy Carter had also asked the allies, including Japan and the Federal Republic, for support against Iran in the hostage affair. At that time, the U.S. Government feared that in reacting to the liberation attempts, the Tehran revolutionary regime might mine or close the Strait of Hormuz.

Since such an action would paralyze the West's supply, Carter let the Bonn people know that it would only be reasonable for the Germans to take part in the defense of this region, which is of vital importance to them.

On Wednesday last week, the cabinet prepared itself for a new American request. Schmidt expects that his deputy, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, will be pestered again during his visit to Washington this week by new U.S. requests for a bigger military contribution, also outside NATO's sphere of influence.

Schmidt, Genscher, Apel and Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer met last Friday night in the chancellor's bungalow. The four discussed how the Bonn people could fend off American pressure for a military presence in the Gulf.

Standards have been set by the Washington visits of British Prime Minister Thatcher and French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet. The Frenchman announced that 15 French ships in the Indian Ocean are "evidence that we are prepared to protect free passage through the Strait of Hormuz." The Europeans should not consider the United States as a "protective shield behind which they can drop their burden of responsibility."

What Maggie Thatcher plainly promised was liked even more by the Americans: Her government was prepared to participate in an international naval unit in the Gulf and to dispatch troops to the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force.

So far, no concretely formulated Washington requests exist vis-a-vis Bonn. But the tones which could be heard from the guests from Great Britain and France fit into the philosophy of the new administration.

The image of the world so far demonstrated by the President and by his Secretary of State Alexander Haig has rough but clear contours: They see dangers, revolutions and terrorism everywhere; and the Soviets are always behind them. Moscow must be checked through bases and if need be probably also through interventions.

The Western alliance is of limited value for Haig. The former NATO commander in chief told the U.S. Senate's Foreign Relations Committee that not only Europe is being threatened by the Soviets. He said that he is also concerned about access to the raw materials in developing countries. Haig: "Thus, the focal point of our concern is expanded not only to involve the Gulf area, but also the entire African continent."

U.S. Senator Dan Quayle said at the Munich defense policy meeting in February with regard to NATO's role: "Formally, we do not want to have an extension, but yet, we want cooperative adaptation in foreign policy crisis areas."

The Americans fear that the Europeans might resist such an extension of their alliance tasks. Helmut Sonnenfeldt, Henry Kissinger's former chief adviser, described Washington's mood to DER SPIEGEL: Suspicion exists that the Europeans want to "take over only the more elegant diplomatic and economic tasks, while we Americans have to do the dirty military work."

This impression is not absolutely wrong. The Bonn people would like it best if the United States played the role of world policeman alone, but Schmidt and Genscher realized long ago that the Germans cannot maintain their current power policy restraint in the long run. The Federal Government, however, is mainly concerned about a political and not a military demonstration.

The chancellor frankly described the new situation to the SPD Bundestag faction and demanded: "We must contribute to a balance not only in central Europe, but also elsewhere in the world," because "if the Federal Republic becomes economically stronger, it will simultaneously be more and more challenged politically to implement its idea of a balance in the world."

The deputies gradually began to understand the political significance of arms exports to Saudi Arabia; arms deliveries to the Gulf were said to be part of a new German foreign policy.

So far, as a partner, the Federal Government has at best taken over assistance within the alliance, while others, such as Great Britain, have engaged themselves outside as well, and sometimes even militarily. So far Bonn has only taken part in theoretical terms in NATO planning games dealing with the Third World or the South Atlantic.

But the chancellor, who in the past had only stressed the economic weight of the Federal Republic, now declares that the Germans "have grown into another role." Therefore, "new thinking and new discussions" are necessary.

The direction of the discussion can be gathered from a report on "the security of the West," presented last week by political scientists from Bonn, Washington, London and Paris, one of the authors of the study is the German Society for Foreign Policy, to the presidium to which belong Defense Minister Hans Apel as well as the chancellor.

The results are in line with the political assessment of the situation and the desires of the Reagan administration.

According to them, a new period will begin in the eighties "in sharp contrast" to the seventies. Instead of detente and arms control, "increased tensions" and "intensified military threats" will take place. In view of the Soviet threat in the Gulf, the authors see only "drawbacks in the Western military position."

Because of "the basically new problems" the West is "urged" now to develop new forms of cooperation and eventually new alliance systems.

The strategists who drew up the paper are in favor of a hard line: The Europeans and the Americans should have "a military strike force available" in the Near and Middle East. They believe that the participation of the Europeans in safeguarding the oil resources wll be the "touchstone" for current relations with the United States.

If the Germans were to yield to such pressure, it would represent a turning point in their postwar history. So far, they have always left conflicts with the Soviet Union outside Europe to the American superpower, but now they would be involved in direct confrontation. Next to the United States, they would take over the role of deputy sheriffs as a "small big power or as an enormous medium-size power" (Government Spokesman Kurt Becker).

The consequences: Relations with our Eastern neighbors would be gravely jeopardized, West Berlin could possibly be acutely endangered.

The Bonn people have set up a defense line vis-a-vis American pressure to become involved militarily, and various arguments are being used. The constitutional legal experts as usual do not fully agree on details, but as a whole, they have reservations about the Bundeswehr's appearance outside NATO.

According to the basic law, Article 87A, "action" by German soldiers will be permitted only for defending the Federal Republic. A position paper of the Foreign Ministry of 17 December 1980 says: "The Bundeswehr can take part in an international armed force--except for transport and similar means of assistance--only in order to ward off a situation which simultaneously represents an attack on the Federal Republic of Germany. In international law, a disruption of oil supplies from the Persian Gulf would create economic tension, but it would not be an attack against the Federal Republic of Germany which would give it the individual right to self-defense. Participation of the Bundeswehr in an international armed force in the Persian Gulf would, therefore, at present not be in accordance with the constitutional law. This is the agreed opinion of the departments involved.

Despite this general line, the legal experts still see possibilities: "Theoretically," it is possible "that land, sea or air force units might be attacked somewhere in the world, and that the attack could indicate that it was directed at the Federal Republic." That would be a case of self-defense.

The protocol of the 18 November Foreign Ministry talks indicates that individual experts desire: "Not to rule out action completely if raw material supplies are cut off not by the supplying country...but by third countries, and if in this way such a shortage of raw materials arose that the armed forces could practically be disarmed due to a shortage of fuel so that the fulfillment of their defense mission would be directly endangered."

If the Soviet Union were to cut off oil supplies in such an emergency, nothing could be said against the action of Germans in the Middle East. The protocol writer points out simultaneously that "sufficient time" remains "to change the constitution to create the necessary legal prerequisites for the possibly necessary action of the armed forces."

"A change in the basic law," the document goes on to say at another place, "would be connected with far-reaching political implications as well as implications for our policy on the constitution which cannot be assessed at present or dealt with in this paper."

The military also has reservations against going into action far away from NATO. The members of the Federal Navy's admiralty staff have made dozens of studies in past months for and against international naval units. The reason was a new plan by the Atlantic NATO commander in chief (SACLANT) in Norfolk, Virginia, in which he demanded "protection of overseas raw material bases" as an additional task for alliance ships.

The explosive paper was presented to the NATO defense ministers in December in Brussels. A discussion, however, was postponed until the spring meeting.

Navy Inspector Ansgar Bethge and his admirals feel flattered by the demand of the Americans to dispatch warships to a unit cruising in the Gulf. They have already invented an impressive name for the fleet: NATO naval task force. They could operate like the standing Atlantic Fleet under U.S. orders and in line with the jointly worked out "NATO rules of engagement."

These more than 100 secret rules of conduct point out what must be done in crisis and conflict situations, if "a hostile warship" tries to force the unit off its course. The rules are so complicated that the commanders of the Atlantic unit, consisting of Americans, Britons, Canadians, Netherlanders and Germans say: "If shots are fired, we will shoot back. Judgment will be passed, if at all, later on in Nurnberg."

Despite the temptation to be able to fly one's flag again on all seas of the world, most studies by the naval leaders stress reservations about a cruise in the Gulf. Dispatching German destroyers and frigates to hot zones would create a technical problem. In contrast to the American ships, German ships have no air conditioning. The navy would also have to set up a costly supply system for spare parts and ammunition.

Another problem depresses the Defense Ministry strategists even more: The Americans, who have promised 250 warships to NATO, have withdrawn units from the Atlantic and the Mediterranean since the beginning of the Iranian crisis to keep an impressive armada in the Gulf. The navy does not have enough ships. The navy will be considered complete again when by the end of this decade the new units ordered by Reagan are on duty--some 600 instead of 456 surface ships and submarines.

A withdrawal of German destroyers and frigates from NATO's operations area would increase the gaps even more. Reasonable military men argue that in such a case, it would still be better to take over tasks from the Americans and the British in the North Sea and the eastern Atlantic. To do that, the navy needs new ships, at least the seventh and the eighth of the new F-122 frigates which have already been approved by the Bundestag budget and defense committees. But now they are to be built much later because of costs.

The admirals were put out last summer because the Federal Government, under American pressure, extended the action area of its warships beyond the 61st latitude without, however, allotting more money. At that time, the German NATO ambassador to Brussels put in the protocol as a precautionary that "lifting the current limitations of action" was not linked with the intention "to strengthen German naval units and the naval air force beyond the current...extent."

When SPD Deputy Karl-Heinz Hansen wanted to know more about the "possibly grave decision," Apel tried to play the matter down by saying that the decision of the Federal Security Council mainly wanted to make "naval forces available to other NATO partners if need be, to take care of Western interests in other regions." But then, a sentence appeared which was a surprise: "Neither an extension of NATO treaty area nor action by the Federal Navy outside this area are up for decision."

Worried by the possibility that the decision might soon appear on an agenda, high German military men have since made statements.

Inspector General Juergen brandt said in late February in a speech at the Hamburg Overseas Club on the issue "German Soldiers in the Gulf," that preserving the interests of the Western world and the military defense of NATO's treaty area are "two different pairs of shoes and should remain that for the Federal Republic of Germany."

Lt Gen Wolfgang Altenburg, who will probably succeed Brandt, became even more outspoken: Western interests should be preserved in the Gulf by those states who have been "flying their flag" there for a long time." Altenburg said: "I am against countries traditionally not represented there suddenly appearing with ships, thereby practically following a gunboat policy."

With their resistance against action by German soldiers outside the alliance area, Brandt and Altenburg continued a laudable tradition of the German postwar military. The U.S. demand to use Bundeswehr units as a crisis fire brigade is not so new.

As early as in February 1964, the Americans and the British demanded that the Germans take part with a protection force in a NATO expedition to pacify Cyprus. While Federal Chancellor Ludwig Erhard, Foreign Minister Gerhard Schroeder and Defense Minister Kai-Uwe von Hassel were prepared to maintain "NATO solidarity" (Erhard), Inspector General Heinz Trettner turned it down. The former paratrooper recalled the recent German past and the legal situation: The Bundeswehr can go into action only in case of an attack against the Federal Republic or against another alliance partner. The then state secretary at the Foreign Ministry, Karl Carstens, predicted in case of a German denial the "collapse of NATO's southern flank," but it did not help any. The Germans did not march into Nicosia.

Some 3 months later, in May 1964, U.S. Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara appeared in Bonn. Now again, the demand of "Germans to the front" came up, this time not in Cyprus but in Vietnam.

It was said in the communique at that time that McNamara expressed the U.S. hope "to find the support of other NATO partners in the implementation of its policy against the communist threat in other parts of the world--such as, for example, in South Vietnam." Hassel agreed: The defense of the free world is indivisible, its security must be preserved "wherever it is being endangered."

The top German military men objected again. After some long exchanges, the Americans gave in. Eventually, Bonn dispatched instead of Bundeswehr engineer troops and medics, the Red Cross ship Helgoland, suppling an automobile repair shop instead of guns.

When Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat threatened in 1967 to close the Gulf of Akaba, the U.S. Government demanded that its allies take part in an international naval unit intended to open the sea route, which was important for Israel, open it if need be by force. The government of the grand coalition under Chancellor Kurt Georg Kiesinger and Foreign Minister Willy Brandt promised a sympathetic examination of the American suggestion. But it was spared from taking the oath. As-Sadat did not implement his threat.

The first foreign action by the Bundeswehr took place in 1978. At the request of the UN secretary general, air force transport planes flew UN troops to the South Lebanon area occupied by Israel.

German constitutional court judges believe that such help in UN peace actions is still covered by the basic law, it is debatable, however, whether Bonn can dispatch German soldiers to a UN peace unit.

The Bonn people console themselves that they will be able to dodge action in the Gulf for the time being. But it is hard for the West Germans to resist the pressure of the new men in Washington to participate in the anticommunist crusade.

They speak also in military categories of a "shift of the global military balance" (Schmidt). At least Genscher has nothing against the political consequence, namely, worldwide containment. Genscher says that his policy is oriented by our own interests as well as by those of the Gulf states. Genscher wanted to assure his discussion partners in Washington so that the Americans would not mistake this for shirking.

Foreign Ministry officials wrote on their chief's memo pads that he has to make it clear to the U.S. Government that one must "not only militarily" argue and act in the Gulf region as well as everywhere else in the Third World.

Instead Genscher will point out our economic and political achievements such as participation in the European Community's Middle East initiative; the special aid of DM560 million for ailing NATO partner Turkey and the financial injection for Pakistan. The West Germans have always helped the neighbor of Afghanistan, while the amounts given by other Western countries were "ridiculous" (Genscher) in comparison.

The German foreign minister adds to his successes the development aid given to the Middle East, as well as chances for bigger deals.

This kind of division of labor is most suspicious to the Americans. Development aid is for them a part of capitalist sales strategy, or a part of their containment philosophy vis-a-vis communist expansion attempts. A U.S. diplomat said that the domestic politically explosive arms deals have nothing to do with "burden sharing" adding: "You Germans are making quite a lot of money that way."

From Genscher's point of view, however, business is serving noble political principles. Some 13 German ambassadors from the Middle East noted last month in a working paper in Islamabad that business is a contribution "to the stabilization and preservation of the independence of the countries of this region."

If Washington demanded from Bonn military engagement and more contributions, the Germans would counter it with rather soft countersuggestions, saying that they want to give political backing to the states that are internally unstable and promote their nonaligned status. They want to strengthen economic involvement, such as through cooperation agreements with institutions of the European Community, thus gradually becoming involved in the responsibility for the stability of the entire Middle East region.

Regardless of whether this responsibility can be limited or whether it will have to be extended later on to include military assistance, as demanded by the four foreign policy institutes ("In case of inner unrest" the West should reply to "calls for help"), in doing this, the Germans have already initiated a policy which grossly contradicts their current principles regarding the Third World.

Genscher has so far stated the thesis that "fair partnership" rules out appearing "as a protector of outdated structures." But he now seems to have embarked exactly on this path in the fight for oil and against the communists.

While Genscher was praising "self-determination and equal rights of the countries of the Third World," stressing in festive speeches the "renunciation" of the West with regard to "exporting our own political, social and economic system," realpolitik was taking another course.

Sonnenfeldt realized that the Germans are more concerned about "the more elegant tasks." Bonn's diplomats in posts in the West Asian crisis area look like political travelling salesmen in dinner jackets, looking for fine contracts.

But work clothes are more and more in demand: arms made in Germany to preserve independence and for the self-defense of oil countries.

The course has been set already for many a pragmatic Western diplomat. If the tank deal with the Saudis comes about, Genscher predicts a "chain reaction" in other countries. Genscher's officials have only hinted at the things Bonn would be up against:

The West Germans would have to establish ties with Iran again "which cannot be left alone." The supply of spare parts for arms could help establish contacts.

Iraq, the current war enemy of Iran, could be willing to buy new arms and equipment to decrease its dependence on the Soviets.

Pakistan is not to be turned down. Together with other Western partners, the Germans are supposed to help build strategically important roads and barracks in thinly populated Baluchistan.

If Pakistan is to be helped, Bonn believes that Indian requests for German arms must also be fulfilled. India, too, wants to obtain submarines from Bonn to decrease its dependence on Soviet arms supplies.

The shaykdoms also want to buy from the European arms industries. Qatar has already made known its desire for German warships--in exchange for natural gas from the small Gulf state.

If it were only up to Schmidt and Genscher, the arms would no longer be withheld from the Saudis. Both Bonn persons are content with the formula that the Soviets have demonstrated with their Afghanistan invasion how little they care about the independence of small states in the region.

Many Social Democrats, however, consider the talk about communist expansion as panic-mongering. For them, it has not been proven at all that the Soviets invaded Afghanistan to be closer to the oil wells.

"They have gained bases, cutting the flight time there by 2 hours," said Egon Bahr soberly, adding that "it is a question of whether they really want to go there."

The former chief planner of German Ostopolitik considers it necessary for the Germans to safeguard their oil supplies. Bonn interests can be preserved only through negotiations and the inclusion of the superpowers in a "nonintervention zone." Fleet parades, however, are "a demonstration of hardness" at the utmost. Their deterrence value is doubtful and in no case should "NATO's defense area be extended through a backdoor."

For those Social Democrats who found it hard to adapt themselves after World War II to rearmament, it would be intolerable if the Germans should aim for a world power role by making impressive political gestures. "If the foreign policy should be changed," warned SPD Bundestag Deputy Norbert Gansel, "a decision must be made by the party congress."

Not only leftist comrades, detente followers and peace apostles are concerned that the United States might maneuver the Bonn government with stronger and stronger pressure into a dangerous situation. Kurt Becker, the chancellor's close aide, sees a dark future if Reagan were to massively demand Atlantic solidarity from his Bonn partner.

If the Americans refused to begin serious disarmament negotiations, demanding instead the deployment of their medium-range missiles in Europe; if they pressed Bonn to make higher defense outlays, forced neutron weapons on the Germans and committed the Federal Navy to action in the Gulf, everything would be at stake.

"If the United States wants to have all that at once," predicts Becker, "the Federal Government will fall."

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON BREZHNEV PROPOSALS

[Commentary signed JR: "Brezhnev Is In a Hurry"]

[Text] The arms control suggestions outlined by party chief Brezhnev at the 26th CPSU Congress need to be explained. What was meant, for example, by freezing medium-range arms not only in a quantitative, but also in a qualitative sense? Is a discreet hint hidden there that the Soviet SS-20 missiles could be refined and that their accuracy in hitting the target and the number of the multipurpose warheads (three at present) could be increased? Or is it an announcement that the Soviet Union would soon be in the possession of cruise missiles? One would also like to know more on how to fulfill Brezhnev's desire for "corresponding" measures from the West, if the area of confidence-building measures should be extended to the Ural Mountains. Should the control zones be extended to include the Atlantic or even the United States?

It is not yet known whether the letters which Brezhnev has sent to the state and government chiefs of several NATO countries contain such answers. It is certain, however, that the author of the letters intends to make his ideas a political issue which the addressees can no longer avoid.

The Soviet leadership is trying to initiate a political-diplomatic campaign at the end of which the minimum result is to be NATO's renouncing the deployment of new Eurostrategic arms. The mood in West Europe is not unfavorable for the achievement of this immediate aim.

The way there is via Washington, but the Soviets do not keep their main target a secret, namely, to have direct talks with President Reagan as soon as possible to restore the special position of both superpowers. The choice offered to the Americans with a threatening undertone is "dialogue or confrontation." Moscow announces in a new formula its equal rights with Washington. Dialogue is something for voices carrying equal weight.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS U.S. ARMS SUPPORT TO AFGHANS

[Commentary signed Nt.: "Reagan's Signal"]

[Text] One must read closely Reagan's words about possible U.S. arms supplies to the Afghan freedom fighters. The President has not committed himself. He wants to take such requests into consideration if they are made to him. Communist propaganda turns such thoughts immediately into facts. Many will fall for that. For Reagan, however, the remark seems to have been part of the political test he wants to make with the Soviet Union at the beginning of his term in office. The President and his advisers are certainly aware of the difficulties involved in arms supplies for the Afghan peace fighters: The resistance groups have been split up, transit possibilities are limited. They also know that one does not talk about this kind of war materiel supplies. Those who have something like that in mind do it and keep quiet. Reagan's public thinking about considerations one could probably make, indicates much rather that the President wanted to send a signal. Could it have something to do with El Salvador? Curtailed communist activity here could possibly create American concessions with regard to the Afghanistan problem.

LATEST ELECTION OPINION POLLS PUBLISHED

Paris MATCH

[Text] According to an opinion poll published in the 5 March Paris MATCH and carried out by Public S.A. 25 through 27 February, among a national sample of 1,000 French people aged 18 and over in accordance with the quota method, it appears that Mr Giscard d'Estaing will be reelected in the second ballot of the presidential election with 52 percent of votes against 48 percent for Mr Mitterrand.

According to Public S.A.'s previous "barometer readings" (at the beginning of February), the results would be: Mr Giscard d'Estaing--51 percent; Mr Mitterrand--49 percent. However, in the event of Mr Mitterrand running against Mr Chirac in the second ballot, he would win with 56 percent against 44 percent. As for the first ballot, the results are forecast as follows: Mr Giscard d'Estaing--29 percent (minus 2); Mr Mitterrand--24 percent (minus 2); Mr Marchais--16 percent (plus 1); Mr Chirac--11 percent (minus 1) and Mr Debre--4 percent (plus 1). Mrs Garaud would score a percentage similar to that of Mr Debre (4 percent) and the ecologist candidate would score 8 percent (plus 2).

QUOTIDIEN-FIGARO

[Text] Paris, 12 Mar (AFP)--French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Socialist presidential rival Francois Mitterrand will be running neck and neck in the second round of polling of the coming presidential election, according to two opinion polls out today.

The polls, taken after Mr Giscard d'Estaing announced he would seek a second term in office, gave both candidates a 50 per cent voter preference. The two polls were published by the QUOTIDIEN de Paris and FIGARO newspapers.

In an opinion poll last month, Mr Mitterrand was leading the president by 52 to 48 per cent of intended votes.

For the first round of hustings, on April 26, the FIGARO poll gave Mr Giscard d'Estaing 29 per cent, Mr Mitterrand, 25 per cent, Gaullist party candidate Jacques Chirac, 15 per cent, and Communist Party candidate Georges Marchais, 16 per cent of the vote, the FIGARO said.

The QUOTIDIEN de Paris poll, for its part, gave Mr Giscard d'Estaing between 26 and 26.5 per cent, Mr Mitterrand between 22.5 and 25 per cent, Mr Chirac between 16.5 and 18 per cent and Mr Marchais between 16 and 17.5 per cent.

The second round of hustings, on May 10, will pit the top two candidates against each other.

CHIRAC CRITICIZES ELECTION CAMPAIGN RIVALS

[Report on 4 March French radio interview with RPR presidential candidate Jacques Chirac: "Country's Confidence Can Be Restored Even if at Price of President's Defeat"]

[Text] Mr Chirac stated among other things: "I am against no one. I have said that my only adversaries are unemployment, a deteriorating economic situation and France's weakening external situation.

I have no adversary except anything that is likely to weaken France. I am running against no one.... The election of the PS candidate...would involve a risk in both the economic and the political spheres. A risk, I would be inclined to say, not of chaos but of adventure. It would be inconsistent with the requirements of modern France.

"Furthermore, I believe that the present situation involves very serious risks. This is why I think that there is risk on both sides. I am convinced that we now must regain our confidence to restore hope to this country. There is now no enthusiasm in France. There is a kind of increasing malaise resulting from the fact that our countrymen as a whole have realized that we are in a situation in which there is no vision of the future."

Asked about Mr Giscard d'Estaing's announcement that he will be a candidate, Mr Chirac stated: "At the time of the campaign for the office of mayor of Paris, the president--this is interesting because, like now, he based his assessment of the situation on opinion polls--asserted with great authority a few days before the election that 'Jacques Chirac will never become mayor of Paris because my candidate is the best' (LE MONDE note: a reference to the then Industry Minister Michel d'Ornano). As you can see, error is always possible. It would probably be possible to find some other examples. To err is human.... Let us, therefore, be more cautious in our judgments and a little more modest."

The mayor of Paris also stated: "Parties are no longer as important as they used to be. It is always good form to say that you are against political parties. It is all very well but it does not mean much. However, what is now dangerous and what we must free ourselves from is the influence exerted by bureaucracy--an overgrown and meddlesome administration--not by political parties."

Mr Chirac continued: "I am not in favor of negotiations between ballots. All concerned should have a clearly determined policy when the time comes and it will then be up to the electorate to decide by universal suffrage. This is a democratic rule."

Mr Chirac added: "I have never heard Mr Mitterrand express any doubts about the left union strategy which he at one time espoused. It seems to me that the solution which he advocates represents a serious risk for France. Similarly, a solution involving the continuity of an action which, at the end of the president's 7-year term in office, seems to have been very harmful to France's interests, also involves some serious risk. That is why I have taken a simple initiative and proposed a third path to French men and women.

"The French are sensible people and they will not let themselves be committed to such a sad--not to say, desperate--choice as that, in simple terms, between adventure on the one hand and a kind of acceptance of fatality and resignation, which the pursuance of an action pursued during the past 7 years would imply, on the other. Consequently, they will vote in such a way that quite obviously I will be present in the second ballot."

Mr Chirac concluded: "If confidence and hope can be restored to this country, even if at the price of the president's defeat, what is important in my view is the good of France and not that of any single man and this also applies to myself. In fact, this is what I want."

PCF'S FITERMAN: VOTING COMMUNIST IS KEY TO CHANGE

LD121551 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 6 Mar 81 pp 5-7

[Report on PCF Politburo member Charles Fiterman's report to the Central Committee meeting in Paris on 5 March: "Only One Choice for Real Change: Broad Support for Georges Marchais"]

[Excerpt] There is deep discontent and a very widespread desire for change. This is reflected in many struggles.

However, we are well aware that on the one hand the depth of the crisis could lead those most seriously affected by it to think that this is not the right time for change and, on the other hand, we know that there is no automatic path which leads to the desire for change and to voting communist. We can even say that there is no lack of shortcuts and that discontent pushed to the extent of despair and total disenchantment might lead people to seize on an illusion of change.

Behavior of Other Political Forces

It is precisely these two tendencies which Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand have tried and are trying to encourage. Let's examine their behavior and that of Chirac, which is similar. It has two characteristics.

First, anticommunism: Any means are justifiable for caricaturing our policy and launching the most violent and vile attacks on our party and its candidate. The multiplicity and diversity of the pretexts used give a fairly good demonstration of the trumped-up and manipulated nature of all these anticommunist operations.

For instance, what happens when we make every effort to ensure that the workers and their families, especially the most underpriviledged, can actually exercise their right to vote too? The anticommunists' coalition protests and overwhelms us in the name of the workers' freedom...not to vote.

What happens when we do our best to solve the problem of the immigrant ghettos in our suburbs? The Giscardian government and politicians reply by a blow which further aggravates the situation for everyone--French people and immigrants. In this case too, it is not the employers' and government's slave traders that the anticommunist choir attacks but the victims who are defending themselves with understandable indignation.

What happens when we answer the appeal of a mother in despair over the inefficacy of her efforts and the tragedy she is experiencing? The anticommunist pack does not hound the drug traffickers but the drug traffickers' opponents.

What happens when one of our party's cells decides to no longer regard as a communist a member who described her own party as fascist? An anticommunist drumroll announces a wave of expulsions which only exists in the imagination of strategists responsible for inventing day after day the themes for the campaign against our party.

Without going any further, I will just add the new excursion through Germany made by LE POINT which was so outrageous and sparked off so much indignation that the Lagardere-Filipacchi gang had to back down quickly [reference to LE POINT allegations about PCF Secretary General Georges Marchias' wartime activities].

Behind all this lies the fear of allowing our party to take initiatives which anticipate the populations' needs and real problems, the desire to curb and hinder the communists' activity and their campaign on all the questions which interest and concern the people. But the controversy they are stirring up also has the unintentional result of giving publicity to what we want and what we are proposing. That is why its main aim is to prepare the ground for an anticommunist and class collaboration front combining the right and the PS. Moreover, both are taking part in this operation together. On Monday [French Democratic Confederation of Labor Leader] Edmond Maire launched an odious and insulting attack on our party and its members in LE MATIN. Yesterday, PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin went to far as to directly express his interest in those who criticize our party's leadership because, he said, these critics are "members from all the generations which built the Communist Party (particularly the resistance generation, of course)." He added: "Others agree with them but do not say so openly because they are working inside the apparatus. Others are leaving the PCF and joining us. We welcome them." End of quotation.

That is direct interference in our party's affairs, a crude attempt to corrupt and undermine the party from within. Lionel Jospin speaks and acts in exactly the same way as the employers' and Giscardian government's men or the policemen infiltrated into the workers' organizations by the interior minister. Like them, he dreams of weakening the PCF. Such an attitude has nothing to do with the desire to create the right conditions for victory over Giscard d'Estaing and for change. It turns away from that desire by making the weakening of our party the main objective of the Socialist leaders' activity. Lionel Jospin's attack must and will receive the firm response it deserves.

Second, dodging the issue: Alongside anticommunism, the second characteristic of the behavior of the other candidates and the forces supporting them is the desire to obscure and dodge the political debate on the fundamental problems.

What is their assessment of the present crisis? What policy are they proposing for the future? Both Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand have so far observed complete silence on these decisive questions. The former has only just announced his candidacy. At present, his television networks are bombarding us with pictures of his childhood and his exploits as a political prodigy who has been steering his way through the corridors of power for 25 years.

Mitterrand, with striking similarity--perhaps he has the same marketing adviser as Giscard--is revisiting the haunts of his youth, or at least some of them. You have to be bold but not reckless. Nonetheless, how will that show the French people how he intends to reduce unemployment? Obviously, it does not. This method of doing things is not accidental or incidental.

Indeed, we must look at the way in which Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand are handling the campaign. Like two partners, two people playing a duet, they choose each other as adversaries/partners. In American-election-style, they bandy about retorts trying to gloss over the essence of the debate and ignoring the other candidates and the first round.... Everything is apparently settled in advance. There are apparently only two valid candidates: Giscard d'Estaing who alone can save the right and Mitterrand who alone can defeat Giscard.

It is obvious that this political game makes it necessary to skillfully gloss over the real solutions to the crisis which explains the two protagonists' discretion and reluctance to join the campaign. They think that the less they say the better it will be for them. By so doing, they hope to conceal the truth about what is really at stake in the battle, to channel discontent into new blind alleys and to avoid change.

Faced with this situation, it is more vital than ever to place the debate on its true ground, namely, the conditions for change. The real question being raised and which we must place at the center of our battle is: How can things be changed? With whom?

We and the whole party are capable of promoting the idea that only a good result for the communist candidate can pave the way for this change which depends on the 26 April score.

Conditions for Change

Charles Fiterman stressed that merely reviewing the present situation is not enough: Light must be shed on the fundamental causes of the crisis and the false arguments of oil and the world crisis must be rejected, it must be demonstrated that we are not witnessing "bad administration" or "failure" but a deliberate and coherent class policy.

The keynote speaker then demonstrated that the employers intend to "state their policy of austerity and redeployment further and faster." He referred to the Lescanne report which Georges Marchais discussed previously at the forum organized by L'HUMANITE and ECONOMIE ET POLITIQUE and indicated that if capital's policy if continued, the country will have 3.2 to 3.7 million unemployed in 1986.

In this context, he recalled that France's ever-increasing insertion into the narrow Europe of the trusts and the Common Market's expansion are integral parts of capital's strategy on the same level as undermining purchasing power, scrapping industries or exporting capital and enterprises to sources of higher profits. These must, therefore, be strongly condemned.

In These Circumstances How Is Change Possible?

We think, Charles Fiterman continued, that to answer this question, it is appropriate to recall the explanation given by Georges Marchais on several occasions and which stresses three conditions for change.

New Policy Is Needed

Change is meaningless unless it leads to the solution of the workers' everyday problems and the satisfaction of their most pressing demands. Our candidate has made clear choices. He is proposing:

--full employment, in other words, the complete eradication of unemployment. This bears no relation to solutions which, in one form or another, consist of sharing out unemployment and making job insecurity a generalized state;

--social justice, in other words, chiefly the adoption of important measures aimed at improving the living standards of the workers, primarily the most severely exploited;

--freedom for all, in other words, giving the workers and women real fundamental freedoms and extending those freedoms to match their aspirations and the needs of our time;

--and finally, a society for young people with the practical steps that that implies in the sphere of jobs, training, social life and access to culture, sport and leisure.

Georges Marchais is the only one to formulate these objectives in this precise way and to propose giving priority to them in the country's policy.

But a new policy also involves the means of bringing about the expected improvements and changes. Here too, Georges Marchais speaks plainly and is the only one to propose real means for bringing about change.

First, it is a question of giving priority to French investment, production and creativity. The idea that France is devoid of resources and, hence, inherently dependent on foreign countries must be opposed because it is untrue. In all the regions where he has spoken, Georges Marchais has taken care to stress the regional and national resources which we have. These resources are considerable and it could in fact be said that there are few countries which are as well provided as France be it in the sphere of natural resources, agriculture, industry, big collective services or the capabilities and traditions of its people and its working class.

A strong and independent France is possible and "producing French" is a vanguard slogan both because it leads to the defense of what France does and sets our country on the path to new French growth, giving, as we have said, priority to our industrial sectors, guaranteeing our independence in the energy sphere, reviving our agriculture, ensuring a balanced development of our regions, stimulating French research and achieving new economic and social efficiency.

Second, France must follow an independent policy of nonalignment, serving peace, disarmament and cooperation in the world. Our conception of national independence rules out autarky but we must constantly reaffirm that it is necessary to exist and assert our identity if we are to play a role. In this connection, the lines adopted by Georges Marchais are perfectly clear choices.

--the choice of French international action which refuses alignment with any bloc, refuses to delegate to others the task of speaking on its behalf but which, without repudiating its alliances, leads it to play a fitting independent role in the world.

--the choice of solidarity as a requirement imposed on all peoples with the aim of solving as quickly as possible mankind's serious problems such as hunger, poverty, illiteracy and underdevelopment.

--the choice of sovereign and independent development for each people.

--the choice of democratizing international relations and, to be more precise, the international institutions now dominated by the United States.

Finally, the law and power of money must be smashed by introducing major democratic reforms. Smashing the law and power of money means imposing austerity on the profiteers. Smashing the law and power of money means establishing new anti-inflationist economic and financial balances and establishing accurate accounts, balance sheets and prices.

Smashing the law and power of money means, of course, nationalizing the whole of the banking and financial sector and a number of big monopoly groups, as the struggle plan proposes. It does not mean pretending to nationalize or introduce state control as the PS always recommends, but openly carrying out nationalization for the workers' benefit, guaranteeing them effective managerial control over the enterprises.

Finally, smashing the law and power of money means smashing Giscard's state and establishing a responsible democratic state.

These are the means of implementing an innovatory coherent policy based on France's resources and on the world situation and its development in which Giscard d'Estaing sees only "dangers" and "threats," whereas it really offers rich possibilities from which a country like ours could greatly benefit.

To realize that the world has changed and is changing, that it bears no resemblance to the world as it was in the thirties or even 20 years ago, you must have to look at what is happening in Poland, about which our adversaries are suddenly no longer talking, or even what is happening in Spain.

Charles Fiterman stressed the novelty, originality and political importance of the communist candidate's proposals. And he added: The keystone of any new policy, the basic means of implementing it, is questioning the law of profit, and capital's injustices, privileges, waste and powers. Without proposing and implementing this, any talk of change is another attempt to deceive the French people. Without this, there wll be no change. Things will deteriorate.

Communist Ministers Are Necessary

The second condition for change is a powerful people's movement and a leftwing union government to implement the new policy.

The workers would be showing unpardonable naivety if they expected the rightwing forces to support and ensure the implementation of a new policy attacking capital. They would be showing the same naivety if they expected that change from the PS alone, with freedom to do and pledge what it wished. There is no instance in the past when the PS has attacked the law of profit on its own initiative and such an attack in a condition of change. Furthermore, no majority is possible in our country without an alliance. If the PS rejects communist ministers, then with whom will it form an alliance if not with the right which will never agree to the policy changing and its privileges being undermined?

Workers' Struggle Is Necessary

Finally, the third condition for change is the workers' struggle. This is one of the main things we have learned from experience. The workers cannot expect a solution to their difficulties and problems to come from above. They can only obtain satisfaction of their aspirations by uniting and struggling themselves, by winning rights and powers at all levels of national life. That was what the liberation war taught us in 1936 and also, in their way, the 1968 events.

To sum up, the conditions are: a really new policy; a people's movement capable of leading that policy to success and a leftwing union government capable of implementing it; the workers' struggle to overcome the resistance and maneuvers of capital's forces.

Those are the conditions for change. If these conditions are created, the workers will obtain the improvements and changes which they want and which the country needs. If these conditions are glossed over not only will there be no change but capital's policy will lead to an abrupt worsening of the workers' fate and the country's situation, whoever is in the Elysee. That is the alternative.

Communist Vote in the First Round Will Be Decisive

How can these conditions be created? What means can we use to ensure that we no longer experience the bitterness of dashed hopes, broken promises and instead finally see the workers' and country's situation change?

There is only one answer to this question which has a decisive influence on the way people vote on 26 April: Vote communist and rally as many votes as possible behind Georges Marchais.

Indeed, which candidate proposes a really new policy? Georges Marchais and he alone.

Which candidate clearly advocates rallying the people's forces and installing a leftwing union government? Georges Marchais and he alone.

Which candidate--together with his party--constantly sides with the workers in their struggles, urges them not to believe in a savior who will solve all the problems for them but instead to unite and take action themselves to attain their aspirations? Only one candidate talks in that way: Georges Marchais.

Hence, all the working men and women who want to defend their interests, all those men and women who want change, union and struggle have only one choice: to vote for the communist candidate. This is the only way of clearly expressing their will. A vote for any other candidate will be an obscure and confused vote. This is the only effective way.

Agreeing to vote for a candidate who refuses to make clear pledges and who merely says: We need new faces and asks for a blank check means agreeing to cast a cheap and devalued vote. Voting communist, however, will mean choosing the policy you want on the basis of the evidence, choosing the government you want and choosing to be yourself--a responsible, adult citizen and not a second-class citizen.

It is from the addition of all those votes for the candidate who really wants change that change can come about. The bigger the communist vote, the clearer the desire for change will be demonstrated, the more influence it will have. It must be big enough to tip the scales in the correct direction. This is absolutely imperative.

All the calculations and conjectures on the second round will not change anything. In any case, they are pointless because it is not journalists, politicians or pollsters who determine the result but the voters.

That is why we categorically reject these maneuvers to deprive the workers of the right to freely choose their candidate in the first round and why we say that only one thing counts: achieving the broadest possible support for Georges Marchais.

This increased support for the communist candidate and this increased strength for the Communist Party in national life is vital to win, to overcome the difficulties and obstacles which stand in the way of union and change.

Indeed, the workers must face the facts about the line adopted by the PS and its candidate. The facts speak for themselves.

The fact is that Francois Mitterrand is not proposing the new policy which would bring the workers the changes they expect. Quite the reverse, his positions converge with the policy followed by Giscard d'Estaing and Chirac on many essential points--and Chirac points to this with satisfaction. As I have said, anticommunism is not the least of these points.

The fact is that Francois Mitterrand does not want a government of union with communist ministers.

Finally, the fact is that he and the other Socialist leaders are curbing and even deliberately hindering the struggles. It is really not unfair to say that such an attitude does not aim at change. It rejects the conditions for change. It paves the way for a rightwing-PS coalition intended to administer capital's affairs. Moreover, the possibility of the PS governing with the right was openly envisaged by Francois Mitterrand himself in an interview. There is a real and serious danger.

How can it be averted? How can we get back on course--as we want to--for union--a new strong and lasting union?

Experience has shown that the right way is not that of negotiations between leaderships, concentrating on top-level agreements on solemnly initialled documents. Moreover, what could we discuss at present?

What counts above all, the decisive factor, is the size and determination of the forces which really want change and are determined to achieve it.

How can these forces be rallied in the presidential election to ensure that this election paves the way for union and change? There is only one way--voting communist.

This brings us to a determining question in our country's political life and one which we must examine clearly in face of the workers. This is the question of the PCF's place in national responsibilities and the forces it has to deal with in its role in serving the workers and transforming society in a progressive way.

The communists have been kept out of government responsibilities for more than 30 years. Before each election, the French people have heard anticommunist promises and declarations. They have seen a succession of different types of government, rightwing governments, Socialist governments, governments uniting the right and the PS. But all those governments had one feature in common--they did not include communists. None of those governments fulfilled the workers' expectations. None of them followed a policy for the workers and with the workers. Each time the workers have experienced hope followed by disappointment.

It is true that they were also disappointed in 1978. But did that disappointment not have the same cause? In other words, the fact that the PCF did not have enough strength, influence, and ability to act to prevent the PS from abandoning joint pledges and the union.

It is important to remember that Francois Mitterrand's objective has always been to weaken the PCF and put the PS in a position to participate in government and administer capital's affairs. Moreover, he openly admits that in his latest book.

It was on those grounds that, back in 1968, believing that power was within reach, he obstinately rejected government with us on a new policy and formed a government without even informing our party. Following reports in the press, a stormy meeting between Waldeck Rochet and Francois Mitterrand--which the latter must remember--led Mitterrand to offer us a seat in this "government."

As everybody knows, he later agreed to sign the joint program with the intention of attaining his objective more effectively. He said that bluntly, after the joint program was signed, when speaking to the Socialist International to whom he is answerable and whose prisoner he is. As the decisive 1978 election approached, still refusing to give our party its share of responsibilities--as his book also confirms--and relying on his operation being successful by strengthening his own party, Francois Mitterrand took the responsibility for breaking the union and preventing change. The left's imbalance brought about defeat and another disappointment.

We have never accepted that situation and still do not. Far from withdrawing into a wait-and-see attitude--about which some people talk all the more because they would like to see us adopt such an attitude--we defined an offensive, attacking line at our 23d congress. We are implementing that line in the current battle.

As we have said, we want an end to Giscard d'Estaing's government and capital's policy which is disastrous for the workers and the country. We want to impose real change. We want to create the right conditions for change and to do that, as Georges Marchais has constantly repeated, we are prepared to assume all our responsibilities, to encourage any real step forward, to progress as far and as quickly as the workers themselves decide--they are the people on whom that depends.

But the workers absolutely must draw the vital conclusion from past experience: To end decades of disappointments, to secure real change and remove the obstacles to union, the PCF must be given increased strength and greater influence in national life. It must be given its share of responsibilities and it is vital to vote for Georges Marchais.

The violence and scale of the anticommunist attacks are a sufficiently clear indication that the PCF candidate's result will indeed be the essential factor in the 26 April ballot.

Weakening the PCF is the precondition for the success of all the operations aimed at reviving--in one form or another--the old policy of collaboration between the right and the PS. This is the precondition for the expansion of the bourgeois government's political base which is necessary to step up the bourgeoisie's class policy. This would pave the way for aggravating the workers' situation and weakening their means of self-defense. It would certainly mean defeat and change being set aside for another period. That is why, when Socialist theorist Alain Touraine calls on us to accept the role of "backup force in a left determined never to allow the communists to come to power," the workers' interests and our raison d'etre as communists oblige us to reply: no thanks, you must not count on us to do that now or ever.

Strenghening the PCF and ensuring its candidate's success on the other hand would be an affirmation by the workers that they are determined to defend their rights, to provide themselves with the means of winning and to ensure that they are assured of the necessary change being secured.

They can count on the communists for all those things. Experience confirms it. Where communists are elected to run local councils, they do not only show that they are capable of good administration, they above all show that they have two qualities: the concern to meet the needs of the workers and their families and the concern for union in implementing that policy. This can be seen clearly in cities with communist mayors where the situation contrasts markedly with Socialist-run cities.

Workers and employers have been able to sit in the National Assembly and make their voices heard there because there are communist deputies who are, in this case, the only ones to come from the working class and defend its interests energetically.

The only time when those same workers were able to join the cabinet was when there were communist ministers, and that benefitted the country. Unless the communists have their share of responsibilities, there can be no change for those who work and toil. This is true at all levels of national life.

Yes, if the worker is to defend his interests and achieve real change, we must vote for Georges Marchais on 26 April. That is the key to change.

Thus, we are openly telling and must continue to tell the workers the truth. We are clearly putting forward the alternatives. It is up to them to decide.

LECH WALESA EXPECTED IN FRANCE IN 10 DAYS

L'UNITA HITS PRAVDA CRITICISM OF EUROCOMMUNISM

[Unattributed commentary: "PRAVDA Columnist Forecasts Eurocommunism's Failure"]

[Text] Moscow--PRAVDA returns to the subject of relations among communist parties with a lengthy commentary by Yuriy Zhukov invoking "the imperative of strengthening cooperation in the name of our joint cause." Having cited Brezhnev's remarks at the 26th congress about the fact that divergences on specific issues must not constitute an obstacle to unitary relations, the writer cites statements by representatives of a number of communist parties from which one can deduce the existence of an "atmosphere of Marxist-Leninist harmony." He also cites greeting messages to the congress from two Italian Communist sections.

The only anomaly in this vista is Eurocommunism, in which connection Zhukov cites, among others, Alvaro Cunhal's critical opinion, the forecast by a U.S. newspaper that "the Eurocommunist movement is subsiding" and the statement by the Argentinian Fava [Athos Fava, secretary general of the Argentine Communist Party] regarding the lack of success achieved by Eurocommunist ideas in Latin America. There was also apparently a poll conducted among journalists accredited in Moscow which apparently reveals that one cannot expect any possibility of success for Eurocommunism, "which has been so extensively advertised by the capitalist press as a phenomenon likely to cause splits in the communist movement."

Basically, it is Zhukov's opinion that on the one hand, Eurocommunism is incompatible with Marxism-Leninism and on the other, that it has no future.

In this polemic there are a couple of things which we find literally incomprehensible. The first is that total absence of any specific reference to the stances and substances of Eurocommunism, which thus seems more like a wicked specter than a combination of political stances, theoretical formulations and practical hypotheses linked with the real situation in a particular European area and history. A specter, in fact, with no historical legitimacy or social roots--almost a mischievous trick of fate. So how can its merits be discussed? Even the subject of discussion is lacking.

The second incomprehensible point is the joy with which Zhukov states his conviction of an imminent failure of Eurocommunism. What makes him so happy? What does he believe could be built on the hoped-for ruins of this or that party, or this or that reality of the Western workers movement? He can be sure that the beneficiaries of such a defeat would not be "Marxism-Leninism." It is really strange that somebody in Soviet journalism has begun working for the king of Prussia.

PCI'S BERLINGUER: EUROCOMMUNISM NO 'PASSING FAD'

LD111509 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 9 Mar 81 pp 1, 6

[Ugo Baduel report on 8 March speech by PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer in Catanzaro: "Berlinguer: Clear Confirmation of Eurocommunist Option"]

[Excerpt] Catanzaro--Speaking at a large rally in Catanzaro, Comrade Berlinguer discussed three pressing topical issues: The battle for a new movement for the rebirth of the south, particularly Calabria, the women's liberation battle and the country's social progress (with reference also to the PCI's stance on the referendums), and the new phase in the struggle for peace and a socialist third way in Western Europe.

Referring to the most recent aspects of the international situation and to certain polemics connected with the Italian Communists' autonomous position, Berlinguer said:

The Italian Communists set themselves two major fundamental objectives:

--The safeguarding of world peace and the attainment of the unity of the whole of human society;

--The quest for a path that will make possible real progress toward a socialist transformation of Italy and Europe.

Therefore people are mistaken when they interpret our stances and initiatives in the international field as petty tactics, to which we supposedly resort in an attempt to secure the indulgence of this or that party and thus facilitate our accession to the government.

We feel no shame, Berlinguer said, in fighting to take the working classes, and therefore our party, to Italy's Government, but we are also well aware that the argument whereby this is impossible because we are supposedly insufficiently autonomous in the international context is simply an excuse.

Very different motives lie behind other people's resistance to a government including communists: in fact, they are opposed to it because they do not want to surrender even the least fragment of power, because they do not want to change policy and because they are afraid of regenerating the country.

As far as our autonomy in the international field is concerned, we feel no need to submit to examinations or to receive certificates. In any case, Berlinguer asked, certificates from whom? Perhaps from those who have never dared, and still do not dare, to dissociate themselves in the least from, or to express even the most timid criticism of, the United States? The DC leaders were happy about the attack on Vietnam just as they are happy now about Washington's support for the reactionary Salvadoran Government. And the present government parties are happy with the whole of Reagan's policy. We say all of it--including the absurd idea that all the independence and liberation movements stirring the Third World must be considered the work of so-called "international terrorism." This idea leads the U.S. administration directly to support and encourage the most wicked dictatorships--from South Korea to El Salvador and Chile. And the parties of the majority are also happy about the aim to assert U.S. military supremacy, as announced by Reagan, thus contradicting the principle of the balance of forces, which is one of the cornerstones of the detente policy.

In this connection, Berlinguer added, yesterday we read a statement made by PRI Secretary Spadolini in the United States, following a meeting with Vice President Bush. He claimed that the United States is planning to ask Italy and the other European countries for new rearmament commitments, apart from the deployment of the Euromissiles, and that it is planning to ask us to adhere to what Spadolini calls simply a "political framework."

What does it mean? A commitment to show solidarity with the United States when it sends weapons and "advisers" to the Salvadoran junta? Or a commitment to support it in possible future military actions in areas outside the borders envisaged by the Atlantic pact? Spadolini does not say; but he expresses no reservations and makes no hint of even the slightest criticism.

Berlinguer added emphatically: The Italian people are entitled to know what is being asked of our country and to demand that our government elucidate. In any case, it must know that the Italian people do not want to be dragged into any adventures.

So the leaders of the other parties are not qualified to lecture us Italian Communists on independence, because we, unlike them, clearly present our autonomous stances whether we are addressing the United States, whether we are in Moscow (as we did recently on the occasion of the CPSU Congress) or whether we are speaking in Beijing. And we do so calmly and steadfastly, on the basis of reflections formulated entirely freely and independently, always taking into account what we consider the positive elements in other parties' proposals, as we did with Brezhnev's proposals concerning a moratorium on medium-range missiles.

When we criticized the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, the PCI secretary general continued, it was certainly not to please our adversaries but because we are thoroughly convinced that the independence and sovereignty of every people are an inalienable principle for socialism and that every violation of this principle, under present world conditions conflicts with the cause of detente.

This was also the case with the stances that we adopted on Poland, where events have shown the need to surmount the grave phenomena of bureaucratism in the trade union and the party and to start a thorough regeneration, without repression and without interferences by outside interventions, so as to safeguard and develop the social gains and restore democratic relations between the party and the working class, between state and citizens.

Comrade Berlinguer said that all these stances of the Italian Communists are part of a general line aimed at a socialist transformation in the West. This transformation involves transcending both the experiments in socialism hitherto realized and the social democratic experiments. This is the task facing the West European workers' movement--a task that can only be performed if it builds its unity on new foundations.

This is not a stance that can be labelled--as some oversimplifiers persist in doing--as revisionist or opportunistic. Ours is an enormous effort of innovation, which is absolutely indispensable, if our aims extend beyond mere propaganda or rhetoric about socialism and if we want to carry out a real task of changing revolutionary ideas and practice; if, in view of the decline of mythical views of both socialism and capitalism, we want to offer a valid reference point for so many energies that are aspiring to change and above all, Berlinguer said, for so many young people who are rejecting obsolete myths and molds overtaken by historical criticism. Those young people can, however, find a reason for confidence and a desire to struggle if we manage to involve their energies and minds--in other words, make them participate as protagonists--in the invention and building of a truly new kind of socialism. This demand neither stems from nor implies any attempt to split the workers movement, and is not directed against any party. But the demand for a new kind of socialism does exist, and it corresponds to a deep need of the working class, of the most vigorous forces of the people, women, young people and open-minded intellectuals; and we are sure that this path--which we call Eurocommunism--is no passing fad, but the beginning of a road to the future.

DER SPIEGEL INTERVIEWS PAJETTA ON CPSU RELATIONS

DW111114 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in Germany 9 Mar 81 pp 122-123

[Bernhard Mueller-Huelsebusch interview with Gian Carlo Pajetta, PCI Central Committee Politburo member, in the office of the PCI Presidium in Rome; date not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Pajetta, you headed the delegation of Italian Communists, the strongest communist party in the West, to the 26th CPSU Congress. But you were not allowed to speak before the party congress but only in a backroom. PRAVDA published your address with delay. Why did Moscow want to humiliate the Italians?

Pajetta: Humiliate? That is impossible with us. I do not feel humiliated. Sure, I would have preferred to speak in the Congress Hall. But the so-called Hall of Columns where I spoke is not a backroom. You shouldn't overvalue this affair. What is important is that I was in a position to report our party's opinion, without having to change my speech.

SPIEGEL: Supposing you had deleted your criticism of the Soviet intervention of Afghanistan, would you then have been allowed to speak before the plenum of the party congress?

Pajetta: The Soviets probably knew that I wouldn't chip in in this respect. Therefore, they didn't even try to make this deal. The text of my speech was printed by all big Soviet newspapers....

SPIEGEL: ...But with delay and only after you protested with the CPSU.

Pajetta: Well, PRAVDA printed the text one day later. In the Bible it says on the wedding of Cana that the best wine is offered at the end of a meal and not at the beginning.

SPIEGEL: But you don't want to deny, do you, that the Soviets tried to play down the Italian dissent on topics like Afghanistan and pluralism at the party congress?

Pajetta: No. But we voiced our opinion clearly. I corroborated our autonomy vis-a-vis the CPSU, because it is a fact that there are differences between our parties, also on important matters. But quarrels occur in the best families.

SPIEGEL: Haven't relations between the PCI and the Soviets deteriorated as a result of the incidents at the Moscow party congress?

Pajetta: I would say: they have not improved.

SPIEGEL: Hereby without schism?

Pajetta: True, I could say like Goethe's Faust, regrettably I also studied theology. But regarding communism, theological sohpistry doesn't lead us anywhere. Heretics existed only in the church. And communism is not the church. Being a schismatic means to separate from an organization. The PCI is not a member of any international organization. We are also strictly against the reemergence of a leading center of the communist movement.

SPIEGEL: The PCI condemns the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. It is worried about Moscow's pressure on Poland. It pleads for real democracy in socialism. Are there more things that separate your party and the CPSU, or do you still have more things in common?

Pajetta: Just like in theology which says that the ways of the Lord are inscrutable, there are also many ways in socialism. This was even admitted by Brezhnev. We of the PCI have often said, and I can only reiterate here, that the socialism that we strive for is different from that in the Soviet Union. Naturally we want to have good relations with Moscow. Good relations in socialism does not mean identical interests. You Germans, for instance, have a republic and yet you have good relations with the British monarchy.

SPIEGEL: You said recently that when and if the PCI criticizes the Soviet Union it always thinks of the "necessity and possibility of renewal." Do you believe that the Soviet Union will also "renew" its foreign policy and renounce military intervention like in the CSSR and Afghanistan?

Pajetta: I hope so. At any rate, most of the novelties in Brezhnev's speech at the party congress refer to foreign policy. He talked about the balance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact and suggested a moratorium on missiles. Another important aspect of his speech are the so-called "confidence-building measures" including China and Japan.

SPIEGEL: Will the Soviets intervene in Poland militarily?

Pajetta: The Polish comrades are confident that they will defend their autonomy. Therefore a military intervention is not necessary. It would be disastrous.

SPIEGEL: In the warning letter the Soviet wrote to the PCI in December your party has been accused of showing "solidarity with the enemies of socialism in Poland." This is a harsh reproach against a communist party. Did the CPSU reiterate these charges against the Italians at its Moscow party congress?

Pajetta: No. On the other hand, we corroborated our stance in Moscow. The Poles can and must find a political solution of their problems.

SPIEGEL: Spanish Communist Party chief Carrillo talked about a downright "plan" to eliminate Eurocommunism, not only in Spain but also elsewhere. In your view, do the Soviets have such a plan to liquidate the PCI's Eurocommunist course?

Pajetta: I don't think so. Our course did not come about in Moscow, and it cannot be liquidated by Moscow. Here in Italy, the matter only concerns the Italian Communists. As far as I know, nobody of them intends to change the present course.

SPIEGEL: It seems that the leadership of the PCI does not want to break with Moscow above all because it has to show regard for the expressly pro-Soviet wing within the party, the so-called Afghans.

Pajetta: Oh well, you know, we have various ethnic minorities in Italy, the Slovenes in Trieste, the French in the Aosta Valley and the Germans in southern Tyrol; by the way, I wished they voted more PCI in the future. I do not know of any Afghans here; I know even less about them having settled down in our party.

SPIEGEL: Then let us just call the "Afghans" "comrades at the grassroots who are loyal to Moscow." A thorough analysis by two Bologna professors has shown that slightly over 1/3 of the PCI members still fully approve of the Soviet invasion of the CSSR. Thirty percent hold the view that the invasion of Afghanistan is justified.

Pajetta: I do not believe in these figures. The percentage of those in the PCI who think so in my view is much smaller. Following the 26th party congress in Moscow it has decreased further.

SPIEGEL: But why? You yourself expressly praised Brezhnev's speech. You didn't find the affront of the Italian delegation that bad.

Pajetta: The fact that Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta was not allowed to speak in the Congress Hall has filled nobody in the Italian delegation with enthusiasm. This case quite certainly has not earned Moscow any sympathies.

PAJETTA COMMENTS ON SOVIET SNUB, CPSU CONGRESS

[Enzo Roggi interview with PCI International Affairs Department chief Gian Carlo Pajetta, date and place not given]

[Text] Rome--The substance of what has been called the "snub" to the PCI delegation to the 26th CPSU Congress is universally known and there is nothing to add to it as far as the actual sequence of events is concerned.

The verdict on the events issued by our comrades (a verdict reached by the party directorate, no less) is equally well known. Nevertheless, questions are still being asked--and rightly so--by observers but above all by our party members about the significance of the episode, about what lies behind it and about what it might mean for the future. Furthermore, the impression prompted by the event has somewhat overshadowed the substance of the congress in press reports and commentaries. This is why we requested a conversation with Comrade Pajetta, for our readers' benefit, taking into account also the fact that all party organizations have been urged to discuss the problems of the international situation and of our initiative in this field.

Pajetta was keen first to confirm that though we have no intention of making a drama out of what happened in Moscow, we are not unaware of and do not underestimate its political significance. He added as follows:

"I stated quite clearly in the Hall of Columns that there are differences and even divergences on major issues between the parties. In any case last summer, before NOVOYE VREMYA was published in an Italian edition, when we judged an article published by that paper to be discourteous and erroneous, we issued a reply but decided that the issue extended beyond journalistic polemics, a tit for tat. So we went to Moscow--Bufalini, Gianotti and I--and had more than one conversation with Comrades Kirilenko, Ponomarev, Zimyanin and Zagladin about disarmament problems, the proposal that we had made on moratoriums and negotiations on control and on ensuring a balance and subsequently reducing missiles on both sides. Differences emerged also in connection with the visit to China and the resumption of PCI-CCP relations--something which we claim not only (as was natural and which we were told there was no desire to challenge) was a decision that we alone were entitled to make in full political autonomy, but also was a useful step toward a resumption of the detente process, within the framework of the new internationalism, which for us constitutes a formulation that dates back at least as far as the Yalta memorandum and is certainly no improvisation or propagandist expedient."

[Question] So the framework of the differences and divergences was perfectly well known to the Soviets--including our stances on the burning issues of Afghanistan and Poland. What else might have prompted their attitude toward our delegation?

[Answer] We went to the CPSU Congress with a delegation concerning whose authoritativeness it is not for me to speak. I would merely like to point out that we spoke as leaders of a party with 1.76 million members and--because of our view of the party, which Togliatti liked to describe as "a non-single-headed party"--we believed that this was worth much more than considerations of rank, and above all that it was much more important than setting against it--as in the case of the PCF representative--a somewhat strange and unusual (though formally approved of in Moscow) role of "personal spokesman." We complained about what happened, and we did so with our customary frankness, which could not have surprised our interlocutors, who have known us for a long time. We complained about the snub, which had some petty aspects which I would really rather not discuss and from which our party is not the one to emerge in an unfavorable light; but we are even sorrier that ripostes or formal excuses which failed to convince us took the place of a real interest in pursuing and extending a political debate at what is such a grave moment.

[Answer] I would like to say in this connection that though the official CPSU spokesman, speaking at a press conference, was able to and did acknowledge that on the moratorium issue and on the possibility of negotiations on the nuclear balance in Europe Comrade Brezhnev's report expressed ideas somewhat similar to the stances adopted by us in Parliament and subsequently discussed in Moscow, perhaps it was not irrelevant that we were not able to say this in the Congress Hall.

I believe that our interest in acknowledging the fact that Brezhnev's report--as I stated verbatim in the Hall of Columns--"has prompted a broad response and new hope of peace in the world" might have carried particular weight. I say particular weight not only because of what we represent in our own country but precisely because, being accompanied by the explicit reference to the existence of divergences and by clear statements on Afghanistan and Poland (on which others said nothing or expressed opposite stances), our convergence did not stem from a ritual alignment regarded as obligatory or even emphasized by rhetorical devices. This is why I have no personal reason to regret having had to speak in another hall, bearing in mind that I was unwilling to pay for any kind of political entrance ticket to gain access to the congress rostrum. But I cannot conceal my concern at the fact that other matters which I, and we, consider absurd and incomprehensible are still being given priority over matters of substance.

[Answer] We listened with great interest to Brezhnev's report, which we still assess positively, even after what has happened, since we are not accustomed to evaluating political matters with the yardstick of spite. I must tell you that I personally was struck by the part concerning the variety of paths to socialism and within socialism, as it can be implemented, within the growing complexity of a movement that is becoming increasingly extensive and which is faced with national variations, historical traditions and social structures which are sometimes extremely disparate. Furthermore, there was mention, both in the report and in the debate, of the need for practical testing. It seemed to me, therefore, that those who talk about "heresies" and "splits" might appear ridiculous as a result, since there was no proclamation of the existence of any universal church or unchanging doctrine that ignores the evolution of historical processes. I believe that the important things said in this regard must not be forgotten. Perhaps (though I do not want to appear immodest) if what we believe had been said at the congress, all those points made by Brezhnev would have seemed more credible.

[Question] So is your overall verdict on Brezhnev's report a pòsitive one?

[Answer] Yes, though the congress does not consist only of the report or even of the conclusions, among which I would like to point to the following realistic and definitely important statement: "We have discussed the things that have filled us with joy but also the things which continue to grieve us."

[Question] Do you mean that you did not consider the speeches equally satisfactory?

[Answer] I followed all the proceedings and gained the impression that the most advanced ideas, the overtures and criticisms were contained essentially in the report, whereas almost all the speeches failed to take the opportunity of using these overtures, lent insufficient substance to the tone of self-criticism, and failed to respond adequately to the worries expressed by the party secretary.

[Question] Would you care to give me an indicative example in this regard?

[Answer] Yes, let us take a topic concerning international issues. Brezhnev was tough but restrained with regard to China; he recalled the new Chinese leaders' assessment of the Cultural Revolution as a period when "feudalism and fascism combined," and he said that he had nothing to add to this assessment. This assertion contained an element of sarcasm--accompanied, however, by an acknowledgement of the changes in Chinese domestic policy. As for Beijing's foreign policy, Brezhnev had harsh words to say, but he added that "unfortunately" no positive change is yet apparent.

I regard that "unfortunately" as not insignificant. More important still, and quite explicit, was the proposal (though no reference was made to China's territorial claims) to extend to Asia, therefore to China and Japan, what in diplomatic jargon are called "confidence-building measures", that is, agreements on conveying information about the deployment and movement of troops and the deployment of new weapons along borders. Not many speeches centered on the Chinese question, and the few that did (whether by Soviet delegates or by foreign guests) seemed to have been written before the report, without taking it in to account, with anachronistic--if nothing else--references to "Maoism."

[Question] What about the debate on matters of political and social life within the USSR?

[Answer] I believe it is difficult to describe as specific the statements heard about things going better and better or exhortations to or promises of greater efforts, which failed to deal critically with even the problems of structures that are merely technical. We would have liked to hear references not only to productivity competitions and various other kinds of incentives, but also to what we call participation in economic, social and political life. I did not expect proposals for institutional changes, but a concern with the specific aspects of institutional issues and with how to make the existing organizations' democratic life work, and even--why not?--some proposals for something new. I would have found this extremely interesting.

[Answer] This report too seemed to us both interesting and realistic. I do not want to belittle the image of a great industrial country and of its opportunities for development. It is more important to point to the most representative decisions of the next phase--for agriculture, which is still a principal problem and in which there are still many intractable difficulties; for energy, with regard to which a very great deal is being done; for housing, with regard to which I believe that the situation is not comparable to what it was even 10 years ago; and for transport, which is regarded not simply as an isolated issue but as a structural element of development as a whole. Here too the difficulties were indicated.

[Question] I do not believe that these relations should be assessed in terms of monolithism, or even of organization, and I have already said that Brezhnev's report did not portray them like that at all. But I do believe that it was highly significant that there were representatives of such a great number not only of communist parties (some of which, unfortunately, are not very representative), but also of liberation movements and statesmen from so many parts of the Third World.

I wish to emphasize this great variety of representatives particularly to those who want us to resolve--in a grotesquely simplistic manner--the problem of relations within this complex world reality, or who are demanding that we make "breaks" with a party which is important not only because it was the party of Lenin and of the October Revolution but because of what it is now and which so many political forces in so many countries regard as an essential factor in a possible new world order. Brezhnev discussed the nonaligned countries, many of which were represented there: this was a topic which we were keen to point to and to emphasize--albeit briefly--and which perhaps too many people unfortunately did not find the time to include in their speeches, even when discussing world politics.

[Answer] Indeed. As soon as we arrived we met for a few minutes with Italian journalists in Moscow. The only thing about which they seemed certain--and about which I believe one of them had already written--was that Brezhnev would respond to the rigidity and certain threats on Reagan's part in similar tones and even threateningly. Not only was there none of this, but precisely the opposite happened. I saw that this was noted not only with interest but also with a kind of sigh of relief throughout the world. We shall see how the United States replies. Of course, the USSR, while pointing to its own might, has not slammed the door in anyone's face and has not forgotten the policy of coexistence. Even over Afghanistan it has declared its willingness to negotiate with the sides involved and, though others believe that these negotiations should embrace the problems of the Persian Gulf, it has not considered this an insurmountable obstacle. The steadfastness on the Middle East issue has been accompanied by cautious realism.

[Question] What about relations with Western Europe?

[Answer] With regard to Europe, starting with Italy, which was listed among the countries with which good state relations exist, it seemed clear to me, not only at the congress but also in conversations, that there is a real desire for good relations--and not only economic ones. I would say that I found nothing that conflicted with the need for and opportuneness of a specific role for Europe at the present time, though I do not want to attribute explicit statements to anyone in this regard. Some observers spoke hastily of the temptation of a return to Moscow-Washington bipolarism. I hope that they will be disproved, as happened with those who thought they should write about a clash of swords (or rather missiles) at the congress.

[Question] Did you meet with representatives of other parties during your visit?

[Answer] Yes, of course. I will not give you a complete list of them--not for reasons of secrecy but because we had many meetings, in one form and another. Of course, not everyone with whom we met thinks as we do in everything: this lends strength to our argument that only through acknowledgement of and respect for diversity is it possible to establish relations on an equal footing and to safeguard one's own autonomy. But I did gain the impression that everyone respects us because of our strength and consistency and also because we are seeking something new and making great efforts. Only fools could believe that we were excluded from the congress. I believe that everyone realized that we were there. Perhaps some instances of clumsiness by others merely served to underline our presence and our specificity.

IRAQI FOREIGN MINISTER ON BILATERAL COOPERATION

[Excerpts] Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi, who arrived in Lisbon yesterday afternoon for a 2-day official visit to Portugal, is currently discussing bilateral relations between Portugal and Iraq and a number of unspecified political issues.

Cultural, scientific and technological cooperation, as well as oil deliveries to Portugal, are some of the topics being discussed between Sa'dun Hammadi and the Portuguese authorities, namely the president of the republic, the prime minister, the minister of foreign affairs and the minister of industry and technology.

Today the Iraqi foreign minister met Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao and Foreign Minister Andre Goncalves Pereira, and paid a visit to the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation, the Setenave shipyards and the site where the Lisbon mosque is being built.

Tonight, Industry Minister Baiao Horta will be hosting a dinner in honor of the Iraqi diplomat, who will be received by the president of the republic tomorrow and will then be the guest of honor at a luncheon hosted by Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Leonardo Mathias. The Iraqi foreign minister will then give a news conference, after which he will return to Iraq.

Meanwhile, in statements to the Portuguese news agency, ANOP, Sa'dun Hammadi said that peace with Iran cannot be achieved in the very short term because if this happened it will not last long. In our view, he added, peace in the Middle East cannot be achieved before Israeli withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories and Jerusalem and before Israeli recognition of the Palestinian people's right to return to their homeland and establish an independent state of their own.

The Iraqi foreign minister further said that Portugal's relations with the Arab countries and Israel were touched upon in his talks with the Portuguese authorities, adding however, that Iraq does not wish to bring any pressures to bear on our country in this connection.

As regards trade relations he said that although he did not come to sign any agreement on sales of Iraqi oil to Portugal, his country is prepared to increase, within its powers, oil exports to Portugal.

BRIEFS

NEW ARMED FORCES LEADER--President Ramalho Eanes formally handed over the duties of chief of staff of the armed forces to four-star General Nuno Melo Egidio, a 58-year-old infantry officer who has for the last 2 years been governor of Macao. As the holder of the highest office in the country's military hierarchy, the new chief of staff also becomes General Ramalho Eanes' ex-officio successor as chairman of the Council of the Revolution. LIBYAN GOVERNMENT CLARIFIES STATEMENTS ON ETA

Following the communique issued on 10 March concerning the alleged statement by Colonel al-Qadhdhafi to an Italian radio station expressing understanding for ETA [Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group], the Spanish ambassador in Tripoli has been in contact with the Libyan authorities, from whom he has received a satisfactory clarification.

The official news agency JANA has also reported on the Libyan leader's statement, stressing that he condemns all forms of terrorism, he does not share ETA's stance, and he maintains that the Basque question is an internal matter of Spain whose territorial unity he supports. It has also been ascertained that the text of the original statement to the Italian radio station does not contain any expression of sympathy for ETA as was reportedly initially by a news agency.

SOVIET ATTACHE DECLARED PERSONA NON GRATA

[Text] The Soviet diplomat who was yesterday declared persona non grata by the Spanish Government has already returned home.

It was confirmed this afternoon by the Supreme Police Corps that the attache of the Soviet Embassy in Spain, (Vladimir Ilich Yefremenkov), who was declared persona non grata yesterday by the Council of Ministers and told to leave Spain within 24 hours for activities contrary to the security of state, left Madrid this morning on an Aeroflot flight.

According to the same source, Mr (Yefremenkov) has returned to Moscow with his wife, a child and 300 kg of luggage. Added to this report, the Aeroflot aircraft carrying the Soviet official and his family did not make a stopover in Luxembourg, as is customary, but flew directly from Madrid to Moscow.

According to informed sources, (Vladimir Ilich(Yefremenkov) worked for his country's espionage service, the KGB, and collected information on the structure and activities of the Spanish military intelligence services.

The Soviet attache in Madrid, whose expulsion, it has been said, was decided upon before the attempted coup d'etat, is the third Russian official to be expelled from Spain in recent times.

With regard to the expulsion order on the Soviet attache in Madrid, completely reliable sources have told EUROPA PRESS that the proof obtained by the Spanish authorities which prompted his expulsion was obtained by the Supreme Defense Intelligence Center. The sources have been following (Yefremenkov's) movements for some time. His activities gave rise to suspicion because they did not correspond to the post which he held at the Soviet Embassy in Madrid. This surveillance has been going on for several months. When it was thought that the evidence obtained was conclusive it was decided to expel him from the country.

(Vladimir Ilich Yefremenkov) was implicated in an operation in which, according to a report from EUROPA PRESS, a journalist from the Soviet APN agency, (Yuriy Goroviyanehenkov) was also involved. (Yuriy Goroviyanchenkov) left Spain on his own initiative some weeks ago and, according to these sources, he or his superiors believed that he had been exposed and decided that he should disappear from Spain.

With regard to (Yefremenkov), the circles which have provided this information to EUROPA PRESS have said that he had illegally obtained information on Spanish political parties and on figures in Spanish public life.

Other Soviet citizens residing in Spain are thought to be involved in this operation and their activity is being investigated.

PCE'S CARRILLO CITES DANGERS FACING DEMOCRACY

LD121631 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 6 Mar 81 p 12

[Joaquina Prades interview with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo]

[Text] [Question] As Communist secretary general are you afraid for Spanish democracy at present?

Answer: I fear for and have always feared for our democracy, ever since the outset. On 8 November 1978--you will agree that a great deal of time has passed since then--I delivered a speech to the Cortes in which I said as follows: "I would say that the most serious factor of destabilization in this country is the democratic political forces' inability to unite in government action while the democracy is consolidated." The parliamentary report notes "laughter": Yes, they laughed because they said that I was still harping on the same point; but I added in my speech: "The deputies who are laughing give me the impression that in this house they are acting as if they were in a vacuum, unaware of what is happening in Spain." What I mean is that those remarks of mine somewhat foreshadowed what was to happen, what might have happened at any time, because it was very clear to me that the danger existed. I do not need to see a green light to realize that there was a red light, because the red light can be anticipated as soon as the amber light appears, and of course the amber light had been visible for some time, right in front of us. I therefore believe that the failure to notice it was one of the major errors made by the Spanish political forces. Of course there now appears to be some desire to remedy this error: There is talk of a coalition government.

Question: Do you believe that the coalition government which you, the Spanish Socialist Workers Party and certain sectors of the UCD [Union of the Democratic Center] and the democratic coalition are calling for will be in time, assuming that it is formed?

Answer: I believe that if it is formed it will have arrived at the eleventh hour. If such a government with a broad basis of parliamentary support had been formed when we said, things would probably have developed very differently in this country; but, albeit at the eleventh hour, I still believe that it is the only solution to this situation, because if the UCD government was weak under Suarez, who had a strong personality, how could it fail to be even weaker under Calvo-Sotelo, who, barring surprises, does not seem to have the determination and boldness that Suarez sometimes showed?

Question: You have already said many times that the PCE was not asking to be physically represented in this hypothetical coalition government and to take part in drafting an action plan agreed among all the forces. In the PCE's opinion, on what bases should such a program be drawn up?

Answer: There are four basic points including the democratization of the state and the organization of the state based on autonomies. In this connection I believe there must be an agreement among all the political forces and, above all, that it is necessary to surmount certain forms which the autonomy movement has adopted in some cases, making it seem more like a challenge to Spain itself than to the centralized state.

It is very necessary to make it quite clear once and for all that the autonomies are within Spain and with Spain and that they do not imply disintegration of disunity, but the strengthening of the state--and the same applies to the flag, the Spanish flag is everyone's flag and must be flown at all the forums of the regions or nationalities together with the local flag, because the autonomies must advance with the awareness that Spain belongs to everyone and [the autonomies] are simply a means for strengthening the idea of the shared homeland of all Spanish people. The topic of the autonomies must be handled very carefully. The other points on the program, which I mentioned before, are, on the one hand, unemployment and the economic crisis: I believe that a government which wants to generate hope must not hesitate to give priority to the unemployment problem even if this implies incurring certain debts--Spain is not at present one of the most indebted countries--and even if--and I say this entirely responsibly--this implies a degree of controlled inflation. Nor would a fall in inflation serve any purpose if at the same time Spain were to become what the president of Banesto, Mr Aguirre, has called "an economic corpse." There is one more, very important, topic. It is terrorism: It must be thoroughly combated, with all our strength.

"If the Army Enters the Basque Country It Will Never Be Able To Leave"

Question: How, Mr Carrillo?

Answer: How? By placing at the head of the police force, democrats who will examine the experience of the antiterrorist struggle in other countries--one of which could be Italy--providing it with more efficient technical means, and at the same time by developing Basque autonomy within the limits established by the constitution, but without fear. I believe that this is the only way to put an end to terrorism.

Question: So I assume that you reject any military intervention in the Basque country and the declaration of a state of emergency.

Answer: Of course; definitely. Look, if the army enters the Basque country it will no longer be able to leave, because if it left, the situation would be much more difficult than it is now. I believe that those who talk about taking the army into the Basque country have no idea of the situation or of the root of the problem. Now it would be a different matter if at some time a proposal were made that the terrorist groups should not have a legal counterpart. I believe that we would be well-disposed toward such a proposal.

Question: Are you saying that you would be in favor of outlawing Nerri Batasuna, Euskadiko Ezkerra and Fuerza Neuva?

Answer: Yes, though I would not include Euskadiko Ezkerra because, though it has had contacts with Basque Homeland and Liberty's Politico Military wing, it has now abandoned the armed struggle.

Question: Would you also be in favor of closing down their publications?

Answer: Yes, yes, of course.

Question: Do you believe that the Basque Nationalist Party [PNV] is really aware of the gravity of the present political situation?

Answer: I believe that there is clearly a Basque situation which is developing quite independently of the Spanish situation. But bearing in mind that any process of autonomy or freedoms in the Basque country is impossible without Spain, the PNV should show more responsibility in matters of state. For instance, some things are difficult to understand, such as Marcos Cizcaya's speech at the investitute debate, which was very rightist, whereas his policy in the Baaque country is entirely different. Well, PNV must make up its mind one day. You cannot be a governing party in Madrid and a party that does not know what it is doing in the Basque country. Until a party as important as the PNV adopts a responsible and consistent attitude, the advocates of the state of emergency and of intervention by the armed forces will increase every day.

Question: Returning to the topic of the coalition government: How do you believe that the army would view such an executive which would include Socialists too?

Answer: I believe that if the army sees political results, the army will be reassured by this government. The problem is this--that actions should be taken to show that Spain is being governed.

Question: Nevertheless, it seems that the UCD is determined to continue governing alone.

Answer: It does seem so, and this could well be described as a serious historical irresponsibility. It is already a serious matter that a government with a broad basis of parliamentary support has not yet been formed. But if after everything that has happened they continue to prevent it, it must be said that the UCD, which once played a positive role during the transition, has become the principal obstacle to the development of democracy in Spain.

A Soldier Cannot Be Tried For His Ideas

Question: So do you believe that if the UCD insists on a single-party government and terrorism continues to hit democracy, there could be another military coup, which some people believe might be the final one?

Answer: Well, nothing in this world is final and if there were another military coup in a few years' time, somebody would organize a countercoup. Now I have never deluded myself that the real power is in parliament. If the government continues to be a minority UCD government, it will continue to oscillate among the country's various powers and to make concessions to whoever holds the decisive means. Consequently we might find the failed coup being followed by the kind of policy basically envisaged by the putschists.

Question: To what extent would you be in favor of a purge in the armed forces?

Answer: I believe that those responsible for and those who were involved in the coup d'etat must be punished with all the severity of the law, since they have a direct responsibility for which they must pay. But I am convinced that the vast majority of the army had nothing to do with it and obviously it is not a matter of trying a soldier for holding certain ideas.

Question: Would you have returned to exile if the coup d'etat had succeeded?

Answer: Oh, no, not that. I have thought a great deal about this and I would remain in Spain, in clandestinity, as long as I could remain in hiding; and after that God knows, but I will not go into exile again. No, definitely not.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE EDITORIAL ON EL SALVADOR

LD121007 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 8 Mar 81 part 1 p 12

[Editorial: "El Salvador"]

[Text] With the clarity of vision typical of attitudes to political events taking place at a great and comfortable distance from one's own more pressing problems, President Reagan's Latin American policy and his support for the government in El Salvador have been interpreted by circles in West Europe and elsewhere as a dangerous example of U.S. militarism.

This preoccupation with events in El Salvador has a tragic background. Fighting between government forces and guerrilla units from the extreme left--supported by the Soviet Union and Cuba--and from the extreme right last year cost almost 15,000 people their lives. The regime in El Salvador is not a democratic government, but the country's president does, however, represent forces attempting to prevent power in the country from being taken over by one of the warring extremist wings. He and his government are obviously only able to remain in power with the help of the armed forces--by no means an unusual situation in Latin America--and these contain strongly rightwing forces, opposed to reforms, which may still be planning to usurp power in a coup.

In this complicated and dangerous situation President Reagan has decided to send another score of military advisers to the country, together with arms aid worth $25 million, in the hope of strengthening the president and his government. This move undoubtedly shows a willingness to confront more resolutely the Castro-supported guerrilas in a number of Latin American states, especially in Central America--the United States backyard, as Ronald Reagan puts it.

The El Salvador Government has promised to hold elections next year, and the Catholic Church has recently clearly dissociated itself from the conduct of the leftwing, and this could help to shore up the government.

Massive U.S. military involvement, to say nothing of open U.S. military intervention--something which Reagan himself has ruled out, however--would undoubtedly swiftly worsen an already critical situation. A purely military solution, ignoring well-founded hopes for social reforms, would in the longer term increase the danger of the appearance of yet another communist dictatorship in Latin America.

However, Washington does not need the Europeans' advice about this. Annoyance over the U.S. involvement in El Salvador would benefit from being turned into a subtler understanding of the complicated conditions in a state torn by civil war and of the external forces which are trying to take advantage of this.

MINISTERS: NO COMMENT ON LIBYAN TRAINING CAMPS

[Summary] "Today the paper EXPRESSEN revealed a new document in the Telub affair which has caused a scandal. The document is a letter from Swedish Ambassador to Libya Bengt Holmquist, dated as early as 11 January 1978 and addressed to the departmental counsellor at the Foreign Ministry, Carl-Johan Groth. In the letter, Holmquist says among other things that the state-owned Telub had started talks on a 4-year course on missile technology in Sweden for Libyan soldiers. Holmquist also gave a warning in his letter of this training."

The letter went to 12 high-ranking officials within the Foreign Ministry, the Defense Ministry and the Trade Ministry, including the closest aide of the then defense minister Karin Soder, Under Secretary of State Leif Leifland, as well as the Secretaries of State of Trade Minister Staffan Burenstam-Linder and Defense Minister Eric Kronmark. The letter says that as early as December 1977 Telub started talks on a course in Sweden for young Libyan officers in radar and missile technology. The course might last several years. The ambassador warns of this course and writes:

The idea of Libyan military training camps in Sweden causes one a certain political discomfort. And he goes on to say: It cannot be ignored that awkward questions may be asked both inside and outside Sweden. The ambassador refers to the fact that the United States had already shown interest and had asked questions about Swedish deliveries to the Libyan Armed Forces.

"But the responsible ministers, Karin Soder and Staffan Burenstam-Linder, both say through their press secretaries today that they do not wish to comment any further on the affair until the investigation into the whole Telub affair, carried out by the special investigator appointed by the government, former chairman of the supreme administrative court, Carl Aabjornsson, is concluded."

The Riksdag constitutional committee is also investigating the action of the ministers in the Telub affair.

"In the EXPRESSEN interview, Trade Minister Staffan Burenstam-Linder maintains, however, that it was a complete surprise to him that the training contained military elements, when this was disclosed as late as January this year."

Karin Soder and Burenstam-Linder do not wish to comment on whether their aides informed them of the ambassador's letter, but letters of this nature are usually brought to the notice of the ministers responsible. It may be that none of the high-ranking officials who learned of the letter felt directly responsible.

DAILY TELEGRAPH CAUTIONS ON U.S. BASES IN MIDEAST

[Editorial: "Defending the Gulf"]

[Text] President Reagan's senior officials are continuing to lay much stress on the need to build up resistance in the Middle East and Persian Gulf regions against the threat of Soviet penetration and exploitation. This was the background for the announcement over the weekend that Saudi Arabia is to get additional sophisticated equipment--Sidewinder missiles and bigger fuel tanks for the 60 F-15 fighters already on order. When President Carter authorised the original sale of the F-15s in May, 1978 he withheld the extra equipment, which the Saudis had asked for, on the grounds that it could be a threat to Israel. In announcing the decision to go ahead and supply it now, the State Department said this was because "circumstances in the region have changed dramatically." It instanced the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, the Iranian revolution and the Soviet presence in South Yemen and Ethiopia.

Washington has also announced its intention to promote a large-scale programme for military cooperation, in terms of supplying military hardware, with a number of countries in the region in addition to Saudi Arabia and Israel. It will run to about $6 or $7 billion and would take in Turkey, Egypt, Jordan and some of the Gulf states. Then on Sunday, in a television interview, the defence secretary, Mr Weinberger, made it clear that America would also be seeking bases, possibly in Saudi Arabia and Egypt, in which to station American troops. This would be in addition to storage and other facilities already negotiated by the Carter administration in Somalia, Oman and Kenya.

One of the aims of all this extra emphasis being laid on strengthening countries in the region is to give those countries more faith in American determination to oppose Soviet expansion. As part of the effort, the Reagan administration has been playing down the relative importance of the Arab-Israeli conflict. This is a line which Mr Begin's government in Israel has also been actively promoting. Look at the chaos and instability of the Arab countries on matters which have nothing to do with Israel or the Palestinians, they say. That, and the threat from Russia, is what matters. There is some truth in this but not the whole truth. One has only to imagine how utterly the scene would be changed if Israel could conclude peace agreements with Jordan and Saudi Arabia on the lines of the one with Egypt to see this.

As for America establishing bases in the region, the most charitable thing that can be said at this stage is that it is an idea that should be approached with extreme caution, if at all. Britain's history has plenty of lessons on that. A Western military "presence" in some form is certainly needed and Mrs Thatcher is right to support the idea. But a presence need not mean bases. One Iran is surely enough for the time being.

KIPRIANOU MEETS WITH CUBAN FOREIGN MINISTER

[Text] Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca, who has begun a 3-day official visit to Cyprus at Foreign Minister Rolandhis' invitation, was received by President Kiprianou this morning. The Cuban foreign minister was accompanied by Rolandhis and Cuban Ambassador to Cyprus Rodriguez.

Following the meeting, President Kiprianou described his discussion with Malmierca as very interesting, and said that he conveyed to Cuban President Fidel Castro the warm greetings and gratitude of himself and the Cypriot people for Cuba's consistent support in Cyrpus' struggle for freedom and justice. Kiprianou then said that with Malmierca they concluded that the Nonaligned Movement can play a still greater role in pursuit of international detente and the securing of conditions of permanent peace through the peaceful solution of international problems.

On the Cypriot issue, President Kiprianou said that the present situation and developments were discussed--or rather, as he stressed, the absence of developments--and this is owing specifically to Turkish intransigence. He also said that the future role of the Nonaligned Movement in attempting to resolve the Cypriot issue was discussed, and stressed that both sides will be in contact.

In conclusion, President Kiprianou said that on both sides there is a willingness to develop to the greatest degree the existing friendly relations and cooperation between Cyprus and Cuba, and that he is very satisfied with the talks he had with the Cuban foreign minister.

For his part, the Cuban foreign minister stated that he briefed President Kiprianou on the Cuban assessment of the international situation and, more specifically, on the situation in Central America and the Caribbean. He said: We also enchanged views on the Nonaligned Movement's efforts in finding a peaceful and honorable solution to the Iran-Iraq dispute. Once again we have confirmed the broad agreement in the views of our governments on the international situation, something that makes us happy.

Malmierca added: We have conveyed to President Kiprianou the brotherly and friendly greetings of President Fidel Castro and we were briefed on your assessment of the Cypriot people's efforts to guarantee their unity, territorial integrity, freedom and justice. As always, we expressed the solidarity of the people and Government of Cuba to the Cypriot people.

Before his meeting with the president of the republic, Malmierca met with Rolandhis, with whom he later had discussions on issues pertaining to the Nonaligned Movement and international and bilateral issues.

The Cuban official also met this morning with Ioannidhis, the representative of the Greek Cypriot side in the intercommunal talks.

Rolandhis, Malmierca Meeting

[From the radio newsreel]

[Excerpts] Before his meeting with the president of the republic, Isidoro Malmierca met with Rolandhis, with whom he later had a second meeting. After the second meeting, Rolandhis made the following statement:

[Begin recording] We made a very detailed and interesting review of various international issues with Mr Malmierca, especially issues that concern the nonaligned.

As is well known, during the current 3-year period Cuba is chairing the Nonaligned Movement and Foreign Minister Malmierca has undertaken a number of missions and initiatives. Perhaps the most significant initiative is connected with the Iran-Iraq war. It is precisely this initiative that has brought him to our area. Before coming to Cyprus, Malmierca was in Geneva where he chaired a conference of the foreign ministers of India, Zambia and the PLO [as heard] on the Iran-Iraq issue.

Naturally, the focal point of our talks was the Cyprus problem. Cuba's interest in our problem and its past solidarity with Cyprus are well known. During our talks, which lasted about 2 hours, we discussed various bilateral issues. I had the opportunity to expound in detail to Malmierca about the Cyprus problem. Malmierca, once again, reaffirmed Cuba's solidarity and support for the Cyprus people's just struggle. [end recording]

[Announcer] In addition Mr Malmierca stated:

[Begin recording in Spanish with superimposed Greek translation] We had a very useful talk during which we exchanged views connected with the development of relations between Cyprus and Cuba as members of the Nonaligned Movement. During our talks, we once again ascertained the identity of views and positions that exists between Cuba and Cyprus on principal international problems. We also reviewed the next initiatives the Nonaligned Movement should undertake to implement the resolutions that were adopted during the Nonaligned summit conference. Specifically, we referred to the need to support the people of Namibia who are struggling to shed the colonialist yoke of South Africa. We support the countries adjacent to Namibia which are confronting armed aggression by Pretoria's racist regime.

We also ascertained an identity of views with regard to the results of the nonaligned foreign ministers' conference in New Delhi. I also briefed my colleague Rolandhis on the results of the conference in Geneva which dealt with the review of the implementation of the foreign ministers' conference resolutions in New Delhi. Together with my colleagues from India, Zambia and the PLO in Geneva, we discussed the next steps the nonaligned countries should take in order to be able to contribute to a peaceful, equitable and honest political solution to the dispute between Iran and Iraq, two member countries of the movement.

Cyprus' foreign minister briefed us on the situation on the island. We reaffirmed the Cuban people's solidarity with the Cyprus people regarding their efforts to maintain the island's unity and territorial integrity. We also exchanged views on expanding relations between Cuba and Cyprus and we agreed on the measures which will follow tomorrow's signing of a cultural agreement. We will also expand on the protocols which will allow us to proceed with the implementation of the goals that have been stated in this agreement. We are very satisfied with the results of the talks we had today, especially with President Kiprianou, our colleague Nikolaos Rolandhis and his advisers. [end recording]

HUNGARIAN ECONOMIC DELEGATION MEETS WITH OFFICIALS

[Text] Today Finance Minister Avxendiou met with the members of the visiting Hungarian commercial delegation. At the meeting they discussed bilateral cooperation in the economic, technical, industrial and commercial sectors, as well as international economic issues. Today, the delegation also met Avraamidhis, chairman of the Cyprus Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

Cooperation Protocol

[Text] The work of the first meeting of the permanent Cypriot-Hungarian committee ended today with the signing of a protocol for cooperation in the economic, technical and industrial sectors. The signing of the protocol took place during a ceremony at the Ministry of Commerce. The protocol was signed on behalf of Cyprus by Aristidhou, the director general of the Office of Programming, and on behalf of Hungary by Antalpeter, the director general of the Ministry for Foreign Trade.

Among other things, the protocol aims at further deepening the existing bonds of friendship between the two countries and at further strengthening and developing cooperation in the sectors of commerce, industry, investments, tourism, transport and agriculture.

Speaking after the signing of the protocol, Aristidhou referred to the problems the Cyprus economy is encountering. Also he expressed thanks for the Hungarian Government's understanding and said that the protocol will contribute to the further deepening of economic and other bonds between the two countries.

Replying, Antalpeter referred to the bonds of friendship between the two countries and reiterated the Hungarian Government's wish for the maintenance and strengthening of the friendly relations between Cyprus and Hungary.

NEW TURKISH CONDITION COMPLICATES AIRPORT ISSUE

[Text] The new condition unexpectedly submitted by the Turks, for unofficial discussion between the two sides on the Nicosia airport issue at the initial stage, complicates the issue dangerously. The Turkish condition is for discussions to be held without advance commitments and that the Nicosia airport issue not be included in the talks agenda, as envisaged in the agreement made at the United Nations in New York.

The new condition was expressed by the Turks during the discussions in order to evade linking the airport issue with the Famagusta [Varosha] issue as initially accepted by them.

The Turks' new political move, which revokes their previous stand, has created discontent in UN circles, but in spite of their efforts, the Turkish side insists on this condition.

At the recommendation of the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, and UN special envoy Sherry, Waldheim does not intend to recommend the discussion of the Nicosia airport issue.

According to authoritative reports, the UN secretary general does not intend to make any fresh initiative to ameliorate the differences between the two sides, as this is in advance considered fruitless.

SOVIET ENVOY GIVES BREZHNEV MESSAGE TO RALLIS

NC121355 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1200 GMT 12 Mar 81

[Text] According to press reports, a message from Mr Brezhnev was handed by Soviet Ambassador Kaboshkin to Prime Minister Rallis, on whom he called shortly before 1200 today at his political office. As is well known, Mr Brezhnev's message, which has been handed to U.S. President Reagan and to various European leaders, includes the resolutions of the 26th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

USSR DEPUTY MINISTER ARRIVES TO VISIT POWER SITES

NC121545 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 12 Mar 81 p 12

[Text] Comrade P. Falaleyev, first deputy minister of power and electrification of the Soviet Union, arrived in Greece on the day before yesterday. Yesterday he visited areas where Soviet organizations are building power projects. During his stay in Athens he will have contacts with Greek Government officials with the goal of developing relations between the two countries in the energy field.

MITSOTAKIS SAYS U.S. TO INCREASE MILITARY AID

[Text] Paris, 12 Mar (AFP)--The United States plans to boost military aid for Greece just as it does for neighbor and rival Turkey, Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis said today.

Mr Mitsotakis also told the diplomatic correspondents association here that he was hopeful that negotiations for U.S. bases in his country could be concluded before the Easter holiday next month.

The minister said that the administration of U.S. President Ronald Reagan planned to give Greece and Turkey military aid to maintain "a certain equilibrium" of their forces.

He expressed optimism for improvement in Greek-Turkish relations saying that there have been "encouraging signs which, if they are confirmed, will allow a just and reasonable solution."

Mr Mitsotakis, who met yesterday with Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet, said Europe should not adopt a neutralist stance, but maintain a permanent dialogue with the United States and try to exert influence.

On the Middle East, Mr Mitsotakis conceded that Greece's lack of diplomatic relations with Israel was an "anomaly" and said his country hoped to normalize ties although "it is better to wait for a propitious moment."

GENERAL EVREN RECEIVES BREZHNEV MESSAGES FROM ENVOY

TA121622 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 12 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 12 Mar (AA)--Head of State General Kenan Evren received today Soviet Ambassador to Ankara Aleksey Rodinov who presented him two messages from President Leonid Brezhnev of the USSR, one of them on the resolution of the 26th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party and the other on the 60th anniversary of the 1921 Turkish-Soviet Agreement.

GOVERNMENT HOLDS STATE FUNERAL FOR SLAIN DIPLOMATS

[Text] Ankara, 12 Mar (AA)--A state funeral was held here today for two Turkish officials slain in Paris March 4 with a ceremony in front of the prime minister's office and later religious services in an Ankara mosque. Those attending the funeral included Head of State General Kenan Evren, other National Council members, the doyen of the diplomatic corps, the papal nuncio and the French ambassador to Ankara.

Turkish Labour Attache Resat Morali and religious counselor Tecelli Ari, slain by Armenian terrorists, will be buried in Istanbul and Izmir respectively.

In a speech during the ceremony, Labour Minister Turfan Esener remarked that "it was in France, the pioneer of human rights and liberties, that this inhuman attack took place." Attacks on Turkish missions abroad were being strongly condemned, he added. A colleague of Morali told the gathering such attacks could not deter them from serving the Turkish nation.

Meanwhile, a Turkish workmen's organization sponsored a silent march to protest French failure to provide sufficient protection to Turkish diplomats and to condemn Armenian terrorism.

The march ended at the French Embassy where demonstrators presented Ambassador Cazimajou with a black wreath and two letters calling for protection of Turkish diplomats and punishment of the assassins.

Secretary Kurt Waldheim on the recent attacks on Turkish diplomats abroad in line with a General Assembly resolution dated December 15, 1980 on the protection of diplomats, the Foreign Ministry announced today.

NATIONAL COUNCIL STATEMENT ON LEGAL WORK, SECURITY

[Text] A statement by the National Security Council's Secretariat General says that legal work was effectively conducted and anarchic incidents were significantly curbed during the 6 months which elapsed since 12 September 1980 when the Turkish Armed Forces seized power in the country.

The statement adds that during this time the council discussed and ratified 123 bills on various matters. Of these, 47 bills were connected with economic issues, 10 with social issues, 1 with a socio-economic matter, 17 with fighting terrorism and 48 with various other subjects. The economic committee of the council is still discussing 66 new bills.

The statement further says that most of the applications and complaints made to the council during the last 6 months were dealt with. There have been 43,812 petitions submitted to the council during this time.

Of these, 33,777 have been examined and 11,039 were sent to the proper authorities for action. However, 6,577 petitions were not taken into consideration as they were judged of no significance. The rest of the applications are still being examined by the council.

VOTCP: TCP GREETINGS TO MEXICAN COMMUNIST CONGRESS

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen's message to the 19th Congress of the Mexican Communist Party]

[Text] Dear comrades: On behalf of all Turkish Communists and our working class, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee extends its revolutionary struggle greetings to the 19th Congress of the Mexican Communist Party.

Our congress is being held at a time when U.S. imperialists and NATO's sovereign circles have combined their worldwide attacks against the revolutionary process in the world, the Soviet Union and other socialist countries and national liberation wars with their adventures directed against peace, international detente and disarmament. The aggressive moves by U.S. imperialists on the American Continent and in the Caribbean are assuming dimensions that are threatening the security of the people in the region.

Your congress will discuss the economic, political and social problems of the Mexican people, who play an important role in the region. The TCP is very pleased that the Mexican Communist Party participated in elections for the first time in 33 years and became the third largest party in the country by struggling against anticommunism. Your party's moves and achievements in attaining the unity of leftist forces are forming a strong wall against the antiworker measures of the local obligarchy and the exploitation and pressures by foreign monopolies. They are strengthening the struggle for a just international economic order.

Dear comrades, the military dictatorship that seized power on 12 September 1980 eliminated all the democratic rights and freedoms in Turkey. Tens of thousands of democrats and patriots were arrested and the junta's sharp attacks were directed against the working class and its organizations. U.S. imperialists want to use Turkey actively in their aggressive and adventurist plans for the Near and Middle East. Therefore, they are increasing their pressures on our country with the support of the reactionary forces inside and outside the junta. The TCP is struggling against all this in a bid to establish the unity of the widest democratic forces for peace, national independence, democracy and the individual interests of the workers.

The TCP has fraternal ties with the Mexican Communist Party on the basis of common struggle ideals and internationalist solidarity principles. The Turkish communists believe that the 19th Congress of the Mexican Communist Party will constitute a basis for new successes in the cause for peace and socialism. Long live the 19th Congress of the Mexican Communist Party.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY TO VISIT LIBYA'S AL-QADHDHAFI

AU131403 Vienna KURIER in German 13 Mar 81 p 3

[Text] Economic interests draw them together: at the end of his new 1-week trip to Arab countries (the Gulf States, Algeria, Tunisia) Chancellor Kreisky will also visit Libya's Chief of State al-Qadhdhafi. Several West European governments have recently attempted to counter the Libyan regime's growing political dependence on Moscow by intensified contacts. Kreisky's trip will begin on 21 March. The chancellor will be back in Austria on 29 or 30 March.

SOVIET PREMIER TIKHONOV PLANS VISIT 6-10 APRIL

[Excerpt] Vienna, 14 Mar (DPA)--Soviet Premier Nikolay Tikhonov will visit Austria 6-10 April, it was learned in Vienna today. Austria will be the first Western country to be visited by Tikhonov since he became head of government in October 1980.

IRAQI-AUSTRIAN TECHNICAL COMMITTEE FORMED

JN121455 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1405 GMT 12 Mar 81

[Text] Vienna, 12 Mar (INA)--Tariq 'Aziz, Revolution Command Council [RCC] member and deputy prime minister, has announced that a technical committee comprising Iraqi and Austrian experts has been formed to discuss means of promoting bilateral relations in the various fields.

Tariq 'Aziz and Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky have agreed during their final round of talks to send a number of Iraqi experts to Austria soon and an Austrian technical committee to Iraq to view the areas of joint cooperation and the means to develop these areas.

In a statement to the INA, the RCC member said that Chancellor Kreisky had expressed a profound desire to develop relations with Iraq in various fields. He also expressed understanding on Iraq's position on a number of international issues of mutual concern.

'Aziz has been in Vienna since the day before yesterday.

'MIXED FEELINGS' ON REAGAN NORTH-SOUTH SUMMIT OFFER

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "Gud"]

[Text] Vienna--Among the participants in the Vienna preparatory meeting for the North-South summit conference in Mexico, there are mixed feelings about U.S. President Reagan's offer to participate in this summit conference. "Basically, it is a good thing if financially strong industrialized countries participate in the talks," an insider told DIE PRESSE in Vienna on Thursday. Others, however, express doubts as to Washington's readiness to finance ambitious aid projects for the Third World. The U.S. wish to postpone the North-South summit meeting to the fall is especially regarded as problematic, for at that time the leading politicians meet anyway at the UN General Assembly. The 11 foreign ministers will begin their discussions today at the Vienna Hofburg Conference Center.

PSC LEADER MOVES TO ASSERT PARTY DISCIPLINE

[J. Ly. report]

[Excerpts] "Any statements or stances other than those emanating from the directing committee do not and cannot commit the party." With this reminder, as strict as it was curt, of his party's internal rules, Social Christian Party [PSC] President Mr Paul Vanden Boeynants expressed a reaction to certain trends which were taking shape, if not developing, at the very heart of the Social Christian formation. Mr Vanden Boeynants also repeated once again that for his party, "the government must govern" and that he does not intend "to put government stability in doubt again."

Two other parties were in the news Tuesday: The Walloon Rally announced the holding of a congress at Mons on 29 March to deal with economic policy and ways of getting out of the crisis. As for the Party of Freedom and Progress, it presented the first results of the work of the "shadow cabinets" set up by the Flemish Liberals a few weeks ago.

On his return from abroad, (a trip which he assures us was a chance one and had nothing to do with the winds of rivalry which have blown through the PSC), Mr Vanden Boeynants clearly and precisely dotted the "I's". The many stances adopted by officials at different levels within the PSC apparatus sowed confusion and the directing committee was keen to remind everyone that the "expression of PSC policy on problems of national and international importance is a matter for the directing committee alone." This, moreover, constitutes the essence of Tuesday's communique.

On the situation over public finance and remedies for a way out of the crisis, the chief of the French-speaking Social Christians asserted: "We oppose any political crisis but we believe that a government must govern." The government team must be clear and the truth of the budget must be established: "because it is impossible to continue living with the uncertainty that we are experiencing," repeated Mr Vanden Boeynants who insists that the government statement be respected concerning its provisions for public finance, among other matters.

The PSC says that it is convinced that a policy without hope is one which is foredoomed. Mr Vanden Boeynants believes, however, that it is clear that "among the population as a whole and consequently among the Social Christian grassroots there is a certain sense of worry and frustration and an impression that the government is not handling the situation well." The PSC president asserted that his party believes that the government is capable of getting on top of the present situation but he immediately added: "We are waiting for it to demonstrate this, however!"

Mr Vanden Boeynants concluded by stating that the only way out of the crisis in which we find ourselves is to "try to find new means which have perhaps been insufficiently used."

REPORTAGE ON GISCARD, SCHMIDT MEETING IN ALSACE

LD151930 Hamburg DPA in German 1849 GMT 15 Mar 81

[Text] Blaesheim, 15 Mar (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, with Foreign Ministers Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Jean Francois-Poncet, met in Alsace tonight primarily to discuss East-West relations. After his arrival, President Giscard said that in the almost 300-year-old inn Zum Ochsen in Blaesheim, near Strasbourg, they would be discussing relations with Washington and Moscow, problems of the North-South dialogue and current economic difficulties.

The French side attaches great importance to military cooperation with Bonn as joint projects such as a new battle tank for the nineties are running into trouble, but Giscard did not deal with this topic.

Giscard: 'Extremely Satisfied'

LD152308 Hamburg DPA in German 2246 GMT 15 Mar 81

[Text] Blaesheim, near Strasbourg, 15 Mar (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing agree in a very positive assessment of U.S. policy. After a 3-hour meeting in Blaesheim in Alsace, they were, in Giscard's words, "extremely satisfied,"

According to Schmidt, their talks at a dinner with their foreign ministers, Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Jean Francois-Poncet, centered on a "global and economic review." The foreign ministers reported on their recent visits to Washington. The four men also discussed the letter sent by Leonid Brezhnev to the heads of government.

The meeting also discussed how Bonn and Paris can jointly master the current economic difficulties. To this end, French Premier Raymond Barre soon is to visit Bonn. Tonight's meeting reportedly was due to a French initiative.

AFP Report

[Text] Strasbourg, eastern France, 15 Mar (AFP)--West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing had what the latter called "extremely satisfactory talks" at a three-hour dinner meeting in an inn near here tonight.

He said their analysis and viewpoints on all questions of current international interest were "convergent". They judged the results of recent talks in Washington of their respective foreign ministers as "positive," the president and chancellor both told newsmen.

They discussed the replies they will send to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's letter (which urged a new effort for detente) the French leader said.

"We also spoke of the action to steer between West Germany and France to improve the economic situation in our two countries," Mr Giscard d'Estaing said.

Foreign Ministers Jean Francois-Poncet and Hans-Dietrich Genscher both took part in tonight's discussion.

Afterwards, President Giscard flew back to Paris, and Chancellor Schmidt drove back to Germany.

The consultation preceded the Euromart summit conference on March 23 and Mr Schmidt's trip to Washington next May 20.

Giscard Statement

[Text] During their dinner together last evening in a small Alsacian inn near Strasbourg, Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Helmut Schmidt talked about the international situation and especially about Reagan's policies. Here is an account given by the president after the dinner:

[Begin recording] We have reviewed the various international issues, and, on these subjects, there was a convergence of analysis and views between the FRG and France. We talked in particular about the visits of our foreign ministers to the United States and we made a positive assessment of the results of these visits. We also exchanged views about our respective replies to the letter we received from Br Brezhnev.

We also spoke about the concerted action that could be taken by the FRG and France to improve the economic situation of our two countries with regard to economic activity and employment. In this respect, it was agreed that, on the invitation of Chancellor Schmidt, French Premier Mr Raymond Barre will go to the FRG in the near future in order to continue these talks. [end recording]

LE MONDE REPORTS GISCARD'S 10 MARCH TV INTERVIEW

[Report on French television channel 1 interview with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on 10 March: "Those Who Want a Weak Government in France Should Not Vote for Me"]

[Excerpts] The following are the main extracts from Valery Giscard d'Estaing's statements on the "great debate" program on French television channel 1 at 2030 on Tuesday. The head of state was interviewed by Jean-Marie Cavada, Patrice Duhamel, Jean-Claude Bourret, Jean Lefevre and Yves Nourousi.

After remarking that he thought it was "unprecedented" for an incumbent president to take part in such a program, Giscard d'Estaing said: "Throughout the coming campaign, I hope to avoid conventional political jargon as much as possible. It is a code for use by initiaties which interests some people and which the public, who listens to us, has difficulty in understanding and following. I hope, therefore, to make things very simple and very clear and, if you will permit me, I will use a blackboard to write up a few figures later when we discuss economic and social questions. Furthermore, I hope this campaign will be an opportunity for France to make progress, in other words, I hope that this campaign, instead of being a confrontation in the power struggle, will be an opportunity for the public, who will decide the issue, to gain a better understanding of France's real problems."

He also pointed out that he did not say "it's either me or decadence" when he announced his candidacy on 2 March. He explained: "What I said was that there is at present no organized credible alternative being offered by the opposition. In other words, there is no organized political alliance which can say: This is the way in which France will be governed. Until 1978, there was the joint program--a joint program duly signed with the intention of forming a joint government to implement it. Then, as you know, that program was repudiated by its authors and at present there is no longer any organized political alternative. On the other hand, there is a political scenario which the French people are being offered. What is this scenario? It consists of saying: We will not tell you what we will do after the election. We will not tell you what we will do; we will simply dissolve the National Assembly. There will, therefore, be another set of elections. But you know very well that the electoral system in France is a majority system. It could not suddenly be changed for expedient reasons between the presidential election and the parliamentary elections. That would be a form of political cheating. Therefore, it is the existing majority rule which will prevail.

"As you know, in this majority election, if the Communists stand in the second round, they will prevent most of the Socialist deputies from being elected. It will, therefore, be necessary to negotiate with the PCF which will pose its conditions and those conditions will be a share in responsibilities. So, as I have said, there is at present no credible government alternative in the opposition. As far as the majority is concerned, I simply indicated that at present all the signs are that I am the only one who can defeat the opposition."

The president of the republic then answered a question regarding the second round. He stressed: "Totally untrue statements are being made on this question. There is talk of standing down.... In local elections, candidates can continue to stand in the second round.

"Standing down is the term used when a candidate decides not to continue and so tells the people who would have voted for him: You could have voted for me if I continued but I am withdrawing so I ask you to vote for X. In the presidential election, however, there is no standing down. Candidates are eliminated. In other words, only two candidates remain in the second round. If it is the expected opposition candidate who stands, he will set the world record for the length of time anybody has been a candidate for the presidency of the republic. It will be 16 years--since 1965. The French people know that candidate very well. And if I am the other candidate or if it is somebody else, somebody who has been premier, the French people know him and will judge for themselves. Therefore, nobody will stand down. It will be a choice by the French men and women, to whom power is returned during the presidential election."

Second Round

Asked: Let's suppose there are two possible blocs. Who would you vote for if there were a duel between Mitterrand and Marchais...? If there were a duel between Chirac or Debre and Mitterrand, for whom would you vote?" The head of state replied: "These questions require a clear answer. Otherwise, we will have what I have already referred to as obscure political jargon.... The main political leaders must at least show the same straightforwardness expected of the voters. Therefore, this question must be answered.

"Under the first hypothesis, if Mitterrand and Marchais remained as candidates in the second round, I would vote for Mitterrand. If the candidate facing Mitterrand were Chirac or Debre, I would vote for Chirac or Debre. Why? Chirac was my premier for the first part of my 7-year term. He sat opposite me in the Elysee cabinet meetings every week and Mitterrand, on the other hand, has been the Fifth Republic's declared adversary since 1958. When I was a young deputy, I saw him stiffen in his seat during the historic session when we welcomed General de Gualle to the National Assembly for the first time. Again in 1968 during the Charlety events, pictures of which can still be seen, I saw him oppose, I might even say rebel against, General de Gaulle's regime. My choice is made. As for Debre, when I entered political life, it was in his government that I first held office. So between Debre and Mitterrand, I would vote for Debre."

The president of the republic discussed his 7-year term. He recalled that he has asked the French people to reelect him for "a new 7-year term," that he is "handing power back to the French people" and that, if he is reelected, he will propose an "examination of republican reform." He explained what he meant by that: "I will propose an examination of republican reform--that a number of subjects be placed on the agenda and for possible solutions to be considered. I will tell you what subjects: for instance, grouping together election dates. We are living in constant political instability, the canton elections form the third round of the senatorial elections which are a time to avenge the parliamentary elections. It is impossible to work in those conditions. Therefore, I am suggesting grouping the main elections into two groups, by consensus and agreement with the institutions concerned, of course. The accumulation of mandates is another example. I advocate active work by parliament and the nation's representatives."

After recalling the reforms he has already introduced into parliamentary work (current issues, appeal to the constitutional council), he continued: I advocate developing and asserting parliament's role in the choice of ministers. As you saw, that was the procedure we used when we appointed Mr le Theule as defense minister. He was the defense budget keynote speaker in the assembly, Mr Monory and Mr Papon, the two ministers responsible for the economy, were budget keynote speakers in the National Assembly and the Senate. When we appointed a secretary of state for posts, telephones and telecommunications following Mr Segard's sad death, we appointed the posts, telephones and telecommunications budget parliamentary keynote speaker. Therefore, I advocate developing the assembly's role, authority and specialization, hence, the problem of the accumulation of mandates and I am in favor of limiting the number of terms an elected representative can serve to two."

Yves Mourousi then raised "the question of the diamonds." The president of the republic stated: "I would have answered questions at any time. There is nothing mysterious about the affair. The outrageous, absolutely outrageous, aspect of this affair is the campaigns which have been organized--and they were campaigns and not an attempt to establish the truth. What happened in this particular case? First, I would like to remind you that the Central African head of state was in power before I was elected, he had even been in power for 8 years and it was during my term of office that he went; it was not I who installed him, but it was I who brought about his departure. I brought about his departure with the agreement of the leading African heads of state and of African public opinion to avoid imposing that head of state's departure from outside and adopting a colonial attitude. He gave gifts. Did he give me gifts which were different from those made to others before or during my 7-year term? Not at all. What were those gifts? I do not know whether you know Bangui, but there are two stores in Bangui. One produces ivory goods and the other is a lapidary's workshop. The Central African head of state gave his guests products from those two stores.

"In fact, they were not diamonds, as was stated, in other words, big and very valuable stones which you could have kept for yourself and which could have been used for anything. They were goods from the Bangui lapidary's workshop, which are more suited for use in jewelry decoration. He used to give people these gifts and what did I do with them? As I said on television, I left them in the Elysee, as it was my duty to do, and I never bothered about them. When there was a new Central African head of state, I indicated to him that they would be sold and the proceeds used for Central African projects.

"That has been done. Most of the proceeds have been paid to the Central African Red Cross and the remainder has been sent to three projects which I had had the opportunity to visit: a maternity unit, a day nursery and a mission.

"That corresponds to a sum which...a sum which is average for the gifts heads of state are given. In any case, it is included in the Elysee's accounts. All the documents have been added to the accounts. And for the first time in the republic's history, all those records, especially the accounts, will be deposited in the National Archives. Everybody will be able to see them."

Giscard d'Estaing then said: "I cannot say that there is no ivory object in an Elysee attic, which might have been given among the African gifts. Although I do not talk about it, you will have noticed that the destination of all gifts has always been made known. The horses I was given are in the national studs, the Moroccan king's much finer gifts are in the dining room in Rambouillet and so forth. I will not mention any more. Like my predecessors, my gifts went to their natural destination.

Diamonds: Nobody Ever Asked the Question

"I was never asked about this matter. The whole affair stems from the fact that the Central African head of state was trying to avenge himself because he had been removed from his throne.

"In his attempt to wreak revenge, he recruited people who, it must be admitted, are pathetic, to distribute or publish and invent documents which contained nothing but grotesque lies."

"If people had asked me specific questions, as you did, and as was the case when I was interviewed on television, to be fair to your colleagues, every time I was asked this question on television, I answered. But the people who attacked me--I am not talking about other journalists because the French press can say something in its defense--but the newspapers which specialized in attacks never asked me any questions. Right from the start, I have been challenging the directors, chief editors and the journalists from these newspapers who accompanied me on those visits, who attended my press conference, to say that they have asked me a single question on this matter.

"And yet, they were doing a very serious thing--attacking the French president's dignity--a president who, as they knew, had the right to have them tried at any time; and I did not prosecute them because it was a matter of personal discipline not to do so."

The president of the republic turned to the record of his 7-year term. He recalled: "I have said that I will make this record the central focus of my campaign and so, as the campaign develops, you will see that I will go into this debate in ever-greater detail. I have noticed that the debates which have taken place so far have achieved nothing. Attempts have been made to make people believe that there are miraculous cures--there are obviously no such cures because if there were, some country in the world would have used them. Such miracle cures do not exist. As you know, in the OECD countries, in other words, the industrialized countries, there are now 23 million unemployed people and these 23 million unemployed are in countries as diverse as socialist countries, liberal countries, countries following reactionary policies and countries following progressive policies. Thus, there is a very serious world phenomenon and that is the crisis which we have experienced. With regard to this crisis and before I turn to the employment problem, I would like to recall some figures on which I will base my campaign. I do not want to get lost in countless statistics, but there are a few figures which must be borne in mind if you will allow me to write them down for you?"

Giscard d'Estaing stood up and went over to a board with detachable sheets of paper. He wrote his figures with a pen and said: "The crisis began before my election in 1973.... before my 7-year term. What effect does a crisis usually have? It lowers living standards and increases the number of unemployed. What happened in France? Look at the French people's living standards (the last quarter of 1973 and the last quarter of 1980--the most recent figures we have): Take it as 100 in 1973. And it is 122 in 1980, a rise of 22 percent." Mr Giscard d'Estaing stressed that the French people's living standard rose from 100 to 122, "although the French people believe," he explained, "and they have, of course, been told that their standard of living fell during that period." He continued: "French production which is parallel to living standards rose from 100 to 121.7 or 121.8--the same amount. Thus, the standard of living has increased during the crisis. The second set of figures relates to the number of French men and women at work. On 31 December 1973, there were 17.25 million employed people in France. On 31 December 1980, there were 17.8 million employed people in France--an increase of more than 550,000.

"The number of employed people in France is 500,000 more than it was at the beginning of the crisis. The number has increased. The third point is the reduction of inequalities which was continued during the crisis, while in a crisis inequalities normally increase. To give the figures: the minimum old-age pension in May 1974 was Fr28.2, expressed in francs at their current value. An old person received Fr28.2, he now received Fr46.6 [period covered by payment not specified].

"I repeat that these two figures are expressed in current values--with the value of the franc in 1974 they received Fr14. So we can now say that the increase from Fr28.2 to Fr46.6 is 65 percent. I think the fact that it has been possible to improve the lot of a large category of people by so much in a period of economic crisis is a world record in progress and also a considerable effort. That raises the problem of the burdens on the French economy. You have been told that 'there are too many burdens.'

"It must be remembered that the burdens have risen during this period because of two areas of social expenditure and not because of the state. Total state deductions from the French economy have virtually remained unchanged from 1974 to 1980. They rose a little in 1975-76 and then stabilized at 18 percent. Social contributions, however, have increased and these are contributions which are redistributed to three categories: the ill in sickness benefit payments, old-age pensioners and the unemployed. The ill and aged received an additional Fr100 billion this year. Was it possible to halt all social progress during the crisis or was it necessary to continue it, as I think it is....It is there--three causes--the ill, aged and the unemployed--which explain the increased spending."

Oil--France Will Be Out of Difficulty in 1990

"It is important to realize that at present when a factory is built in France and uses electricity, its electricity will cost it half as much as if it ran on fuel oil. We are able to supply this electricity because we built our power stations. Thus, French industry is going to be able to be developed and equipped. At present, France's oil bill represents 4.7 percent of total French production. Our present programs--the ones which were decided and which top officials unfortunately wanted to oppose by announcing a halt in construction work and a moratorium or some such thing--will enable us to reduce that 4.7 percent to less than 2 percent. In 1990, France will only have to use 2 percent of its resources on oil imports. It will, therefore, be out of difficulty."

What Weakness?

Mr Giscard d'Estaing then returned to the criticisms which have been leveled at his method of governing. He stated:

"At first I was criticized for excessive simplicity and then for excessive protocol. Some say that I am authoritarian, others, that I am lax. The fact is that I seek the plain truth among our wise and reasonable people. This plain truth in fact contains elements which are cometimes conflicting.

"What about the accusation of weakness. I would remind you of the disturbances in Brittany. They have completely vanished. I would remind you that when I came to power, there were soldiers' committees in the army and pamphlets were distributed to soldiers on leave at the Gare de Nord and the Gare de l'Est. All that has stopped completely. We have made the biggest defense effort in the West between 1974 and 1980.

"So what is this weakness? On the other hand, I have worked for peace and, if I am elected, I will continue to work for peace. I do not want French opinion to be misled on this issue. Weakness consists of being weak in the means at your disposal. I repeat that I found a defense situation in France which had serious weaknesses. When we had a hostage in Chad in November 1974, I asked our general staff to consider using military means to bring her back and I was told: 'We are not capable of doing that.' That was in 1974. Some 3 years later, we went to Kolwezi because we had reorganized our forces. At present, we are the third largest military power in the world and as our new equipment comes into service, we will be in a position of strength, not of weakness."

Most Serious Failure?

Returning to economic problems, the president of the republic stressed: "We took the most important decision in the economic sphere and it changed the course of the French economy--namely, the decision to free prices following the 1978 elections and I hope that everything will be completed in this respect before the presidential election."

He refuted accusations of "laxness" and stated that his policy is aimed at avoiding "extreme solutions." "If there are extreme solutions in France, France will be torn apart. France will not withstand either an extreme rightwing or an extreme leftwing policy. It will not withstand either. It is an illusion to think it can. Well, when you follow such a policy the extremists are bound to attack you...."

"I am trying to find out whether I have acted in a fair way toward France, and I am doing so by looking at what I have done and not what others will do. But it is important to realize that strength means sangfroid; I have known many braggarts in my life... They are not strong and courageous people. The courageous men I have known in war and peace are cool people and a country like France with its nuclear means and its responsibilities in all kinds of crucial spheres must be governed with sangfroid and that is why this is and will remain my attitude."

In conclusion, Giscard d'Estaing said that "the most serious failure" in his 7-year term "is that I have not solved the employment problem in a way which would have given me peace of mind and of heart," he said.

On the other hand, the president thinks that his "greatest success" is "improving the position of the aged, and the nuclear energy program which has given France independence."

He added: "If I govern France for another 7-year term, it will be the problem of young people which will be the central problem because my second 7-year term will be devoted to preparing France's future. I believe that we have emerged from one kind of world and are entering a new world and we must prepare France to be the elite of this new world--the country most able, best organized and the one which has the best solutions to its economic, social and cultural problems, and it is clearly up to young people to do this. Therefore, my main campaign themes will be young people, education--major issues for France--employment and also culture."

MARCHAIS SCORES FOREIGN INTERFERENCE IN ELECTION

[Text] Yesterday's leading article in PRAVDA did not leave cold the French political class, which is in full swing for the election. In a few words, I remind you that the organ of the Soviet Communist Party yesterday gave a good report to the president at the end of his term of office. On the other hand, the other candidates--with the exception of Georges Marchais, of course--were criticized strongly. This is not the first time that Moscow has given its views on the eve of presidential elections in France; it has even become a habit. However, Georges Marchais did not appreciate this at all and he made it known yesterday at a rally in Limoges:

[Begin Marchais recording] We French Communists are categorically opposed to any foreign intervention, from any country whatsoever, not only in the presidential elections but in French elections in general. We believe that the policy of France must not be devised in Washington, Bonn, London or Moscow, but in Paris and nowhere else. Should an intervention occur from any quarter liable to influence the choice of French men and women, I would protest energetically. [end recording]

[Text] The daily LE MERIDIONAL published in Marseilles on 10 March carried an opinion poll carried out by Indice-Opinion between 24 February and 2 March, that is, before Giscard d'Estaing announced his candidacy, among a cross section of 1,107 representatives of the French population of voting age. In the second round, Mitterrand would obtain 53 percent of intended votes as against 47 percent for Giscard d'Estaing.

In the first round, 24 percent of the people questioned say they are in favor of the outgoing president. Chirac would obtain 18 percent (that is 2 points better in comparison with an Indice-Opinion opinion poll published a month ago); Mitterand 18 percent, Marchais 16 percent and Debre 3 percent.

LE QUOTIDIEN of 10 March publishes an opinion poll on Parisians' voting intentions, carried out by Indice-Opinion between 25 February and 2 March among a representative sample of 1,007 people over the age of 18.

There are three hypotheses for the first round. If Debre is not a candidate, Chirac is credited with 23 percent of the votes, Giscard d'Estaing with 21 percent and Mitterrand with 17 percent. If Coluche does not come forward, Giscard d'Estaing--with 23 percent--comes in front of the mayor of Paris, who obtains 22 percent, and the Socialist candidate (19 percent). If both Debre and Coluche are in the fight, Chirac and the present head of state are on a par with 21 percent in front of Mitterrand (17 percent). In all three cases, Marchais obtains 11 percent and Madame Bouchardeau, 3 percent. However, voting intentions vary according to the case between 9 and 1 percent for Coluche, 5 and 6 percent for Debre, 4 and 5 percent for Lalonde and 3 and 4 percent for Madame Garaud.

If in the second round he opposes Mitterrand, the president of the republic would obtain 51 percent as against 49 percent for his opponent. If the present head of state and the mayor of Paris are in the second round, they would both obtain 50 percent.

CHIRAC DISCUSSES ELECTION, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

[Andre Passeron report]

[Excerpts] Dijon--"I envisage my own victory and I do so to an increasing extent." With this assertion, in Dijon on 6 March, Jacques Chirac answered Burgundy journalists' requests for an explanation of the remark he made on France-Inter: "...at the price of the president's defeat...."

The Gaullist candidate explained that in keeping with the logic of his approach, his desire to stand in the second round and his hope for final victory naturally imply the defeat of his rivals and, hence, ultimately that of the outgoing president. During this tour of Morvan and Burgundy in persistent rain, Mr Chirac several times placed Mr Mitterrand's victory and Giscard d'Estaing's reelection on the same plane and classed them together in rejecting the risks which, according to him, both results would involve.

Speaking to 4,000 peple assembled in a Dijon conference hall, he referred to the "certainty of chaos which would undoubtedly result from a continuation of the present policy." For the first time since the president of the republic officially announced his candidacy, Mr Chirac referred to him by name in LE CREUSOT, stating: "The Socialist candidate's program is likely to lead us into adventure and chaos.

"The fact which is stressed less is that a simple reelection of candidate Giscard d'Estaing implies exactly the same kind of danger." The only solution, according to Mr Chirac, "to prevent chaos" is therefore "that of recovery," which he embodies. He added: "Today we must do the reverse of what we have been doing for 5 years to ensure revival and to restore confidence and hope."

During the press conference which he gave in Dijon Chirac distanced himself from what is being called "Reaganism."

"My program," he said, "bears no relation to that of Mr Reagan. My social policy is entirely different, my planning policy would probably make Mr Reagan's hair stand on end and my policy of participation has nothing to do with what is being done on the other side of the Atlantic."

Mr Chirac admitted that he has only one point in common with the U.S. President's program: "The obvious need to reduce the burden of bureaucracy and taxation to increase supply and demand and enable new growth to start."

9 March TV Interview

[Report on French television channel 2 interview with RPR presidential candidate Mr Jacques Chirac on 9 March: "I Will Be in the Second Round...I Am Sure of That"]

[Excerpt] On foreign policy, Mr Chirac indicated: "Near East policy is one of the points on which I make only criticisms of form not of content."

Calling to mind the Polish situation, he made this clear: "If the Soviets took an aggressive initiative toward Poland, that is, in plain terms, if they intervened militarily, everything would be in doubt. That means on the one hand that it would immediately be necessary to denounce the Helsinki Accords. It would immediately be necessary to denounce the financial agreements, particularly the loans at privileged rates granted to the Soviet Union. It would immediately be necessary to call of all industrial and technological exports, particularly high technology, to the Eastern countries."

"...We have been very weak over Afghanistan. France itself let that country be invaded by the Soviet Union and took 3 weeks before reacting which is unworthy in relation to what France is and what it represents, as a country of human rights (note--Mr Bernard Pons, RPR secretary general, denounced the "timorous and vague reasoning: of the French foreign minister on 7 January 1980, the invasion of Afghanistan having taken place on 24 December 1979. Mr Chirac condemned this intervention in his 12 February 1980 press conference.) In any event, it must not happen again, with Poland.

"We went to Warsaw standing surety to some extent for the aggression committed in Afghanistan when nobody asked us to, without the least hope, of course, of getting anything out of this on the international plane."

He continued: "France has been singularly weakened because it continually puts forward initiatives which never get anywhere. People propose enlarging Europe, Spain's entry into the Common Market and then, suddenly, they say, well: No, that's it, it is not wanted any more, one must wait until much later. A North-South dialogue is proposed... This is the way that one arouses first one's partners' hopes and then their disappointment. This is how one comes to quarrel with everybody."

He also cited relations wtih Africa, Mr Giscard d'Estaing's proposal for a conference on Afghanistan, the disarmament conference and the Brussels negotiations.

He added: "I have not been brought up by people who tossed words in the air and then waited for them to fall like fine rain only for nothing to happen. This little game discredits France. And it is unacceptable. If France is now weakened in the world, if its voice no longer has the authority that General de Gaulle and Georges Pompidou gave it, it is because of this policy, because of this inability to sustain a firm idea. It is because of the constant concessions and compromises that we accept to the detriment of our interests which we no longer defend."

"One has to realize that France does not count for nothing in the world. France has a voice which ought to be heard, and it is not being heard because we no longer have the strength to make it heard. We must regain strength."

On detente, he pointed out: "Detente presupposes firmness, it does not presuppose compromise. One of the gestures which puts detente in doubt is the fact, after Afghanistan, of going to Warsaw, the fact of standing surety, the fact of compromising, the fact of making concessions."

He added: "If one really wants to recreate a Europe which is solid, which is founded on states, which recognizes their authority, which coordinates their actions better and which forms a true economic and political entity as required by the equilibrium of tomorrow and of this world, the time has come to review the treaty of Rome. There must be a renegotiation, there must be a review of the entirety of this machinery which now, quite obviously does not work any more."

Mr Chirac then stated: "In this surprising pendulum diplomacy of ours which consists in going now one way, now the other, I note that we always agree withour interlocutors and it is this which worries me a lot."

NICARAGUAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES IN PARIS

PERTINI 'WARNS' REAGAN ON EL SALVADOR IN INTERVIEW

[Excerpts] Milan, 13 Mar (ANSA)--Italian President Sandro Pertini has warned United States President Ronald Reagan against "sparking off" a new Vietnam in the Central American state of El Salvador, according to the prepublication version of an interview with the head of state to appear in the next edition of the Milan weekly, EPOCA.

"I have had Reagan told that he should be careful not to spark off a second Vietnam with El Salvador", Pertini told EPOCA in an interview that also accused the American chief executive of using "provovative" language towards the Soviet Union.

"How can I keep a calm mind when Reagan used rather provocative language towards the Soviet Union?" Pertini asked the interviewer and the public.

"And what if (Soviet leader Leonid) Brezhnev had replied with the same harshness? Fortunately, wisdom prevailed on that side, even if the Soviet leaders behaved badly towards the Italian Communists".

"In his time", Pertini pointed out in reference to fears over how the American intervention in El Salvador will develop, "Kennedy too did not think that his intervention would have given rise to the tremendous war that bloodied Vietnam".

On Italy's domestic problems, Pertini rather brusquely made it clear that he was not willing to dissolve Parliament again as he did in 1979. After being forced to call early elections on that occasion because of a long-lasting government crisis, Pertini said, "enough is enough, I don't want to dissolve Parliament again".

"I've warned them", he added in reference to the political parties, "this legislature must die a natural death".

"They need not expect me to dissolve Parliament again. Let the Parliament assume its responsibilities. But I'm not going to dissolve anything, no way."

In other points, Pertini said his analysis of the present situation is "pessimistic", because "my intelligence is pessimistic." "And it could not be otherwise with all the problems assailing us", he pointed out: citing terrorism, unemployment, and [word indistinct]. "But my will is optimistic," he added.

GOVERNMENT DISCUSSES SOVIET GAS PIPELINE CONTRACTS

AU141324 Roma ANSA in English 0800 GMT 14 Mar 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 14 Mar (ANSA)--Italian negotiators will be at work soon trying to get a share of the proposed new Soviet natural gas pipeline construction job for some state held engineering companies. The pipeline will carry Siberian gas from deposits in Yamal to Eastern and Western Europe.

Italian Foreign Trade Minister Enrico Manca announced here yesterday that the Rome government deemed the project "interesting" and thought it necessary to start talks on all aspects of a possible contract as soon as possible. He disclosed that a delegation has been set up for forthcoming negotiations with the Soviet Union after a meeting he and his undersecretary Edoardo Speranza had in Rome with Soviet Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Nikolay Komarov.

Komarov told reporters that the Italian companies vying for construction contracts had already completed their studies of the project and were ready to make their offers. The Soviet side, he added, had already designated its delegation for the talks.

The Italian companies seeking the contract are all subsidiaries of the state-run "IRI" holding and "ENI" natural fuels corporation.

But Komarov made it clear that the Soviet Union was mostly interested in receiving Italian proposals for export credits, a delicate issue which reaches well beyond the pipeline project.

For one, it is apparently linked to the "Fiat" automotive giant's bid to help build a new plant in the Soviet Union for the manufacture of 90,000 tractors a year.

Blueprints for the Soviet-West European pipeline call for two 5,000 kilometer-long gas lines capable of carrying an estimated 40 billion square meters of gas a year. Construction of the pipeline will involve some 10 to 12 billion dollars of investments.

Komarov and Speranza are co-chairmen of the trade talks underway in Rome within the Italo-Soviet commission set up in 1969. The commission is seeking to get the wheels of Italo-Soviet trade moving again and even expanding it to new areas of cooperation after the freeze imposed as a result of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Italy's trade deficit with the Soviet Union has skyrocketed in recent months, with latest available figures indicated that, in the first eleven months of 1980, the deficit more than doubled to about one billion 400 million dollars.

FORLANI CALLS FOR 'NATIONAL COHESION' IN SPEECHES

[Excerpts] Rome, 16 Mar (ANSA)--The watchword of "national cohesion" marked one two [as received] speeches Italian Prime Minister Arnaldo Forlani delivered at the weekend to mark the third anniversary of the kidnapping of late Christian Democrat Party (DC) Chairman Aldo Moro.

The phrase cropped up twice in Forlani's speeches in the short space of two days, once on Saturday in Bologna in memory of Moro and again yesterday in a radio interview.

The effective expression of "national solidarity" was the election, a few hours after Moro's abduction, of a one-party Christian Democrat government led by Giulio Andreotti and enjoying the support of the communists.

Forlani, who has led a coalition of his own DC with the Socialists (PSI), Social Democrats (PSDI), and Republicans (PRI) since last October, said that "everyone must commit themselves to establishing conditions of greater unity and greater national cohesion".

Forlani made this remark in the midst of a reference to the "difficult tests" facing the country, citing public order, guarantees for the democratic order, and an "economic crisis that is serious and has very strong external conditions which we cannot always control."

"There is need for a common denominator, for a co-responsibility that commits all the political and social forces in the country, independently of the government formulas that can be realized on each occasion," Forlani added.

Forlani's political kite will clearly be the focus of political debate in coming days, observers said, but the first reaction available was unfavorable.

The Social Democrat Deputy Speaker of the House Luigi Preti, claimed that "Andreotti-style national solidarity cannot be put into effect because the Communist Party today asks [as received] the leadership, or at least the co-leadership, of the government.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT EXPRESSES SUPPORT FOR KING

[Text] The European Parliament today approved a resolution asking the Council of Ministers and the Commission of the Ten to speed up negotiations on Spain's entry into the EEC. With the exception of the French Gaullists and Communists, all political groups voted in favor of the resolution which points out the Community's responsibility for maintaining and strengthening democracy in Spain. The European Parliament also condemned the attempted coup which, they say, could have been a disaster not only for Spain, but also for the process of unifying democratic Europe. The assembly of the Ten expressed its unconditional solidarity with King Juan Carlos and its support for the Spanish authorities, political forces, trades unions and the people for their efforts to consolidate democracy in Spain. Lorenzo Natali, deputy president of the European Commission and official responsible for the enlargement of the Community, added his name to the European Parliament's petition to speed up negotiations, and expressed his support for dealing rapidly and in depth with all the problems relating to Spain's entry into the EEC.

CABINET APPROVES APPOINTMENTS, OIL PRICE INCREASE

[SUmmary] Yesterday's meeting of the Spanish cabinet decided upon a rise in the price of oil products and also agreed to refer to parliament an organic law for the defense of the constitution. The rise in the price of oil products drew criticism from various consumer groups, particularly the transport industry.

"Other agreements taken at yesterday's meeting of the Council of Ministers:

"It was agreed to create an interministerial commission for industrial restructuring and the cabinet also gave approval for the purchase of the Banco de Valladolid by the British company Barclays.

"The decrees regulating the beet and cotton industries were also approved, as were a wide-ranging series of appointments which included the following:

"Captain general of the 9th military region with headquarters in Granada, Lt Gen Don Pedro Fontenla-Fernandez; director general of the police, Don Jose Luis Fernandez Dopico; director general of press relations of the Secretariat of State for Information, (Don Carlos Sarria Martinez); secretary of state for universities and reserarch, Prof Manuel Cobo del Rosal; and director general of the National Institute of Statistics, Don Jose Montes Hernandez."

SKP DIVISION AFFECTS PARTY CONGRESS PREPARATIONS

LD152034 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0920 GMT 15 Mar 81

[From the press review]

[Text] The Finnish Communist Party [SKP] is preparing for a party congress which is to be held at the end of May, and the elections started at the turn of the week for the choice of candidates set up by the basic party organizations.

According to KANSAN UUTISET, it is deplorable that the party is carrying out this election in an awkward manner, still split in two groups. It is to be hoped that this election will be the last with the current division, KANSAN UUTISET writes. The members in any case are thoroughly fed up with the split.

In fact, the demand for doing away with the split and opening the way to a normal party life has been the central theme in the party dialogue of the last few months in both party organizations and press. The party leadership has in its preparations for the party congress taken this into primary consideration. This is also indicated by the so-called theses of [SKP chairman] Saarinen approved by the Central Committee.

For this reason, it is not possible to prepare for the party congress in the same way as for the previous congresses, at which the most important matters were decided between the sides by means of agreements reached beforehand within the leadership, while the congress delegates were not allowed to change them. Now the real power belongs to the delegates elected for the congress. For this reason, the congress delegates carry an exceptionally heavy responsibility and exert an exceptional amount of influence, and their election is one of the greatest rights of the members. It is to be hoped that the members are aware of this and participate in great numbers in the elections.

One of the most important organizational problems is the cooperation within the People's Democratic movement. The continuation of trustful cooperation is impossible under the conditions offered by the minority of the movement to the Finnish People's Democratic League. The congress will have to adopt a course to solve these political problems, although the main task of the congress will have to concentrate on matters concerning organizational policy, KANSAN UUTISET points out.

MINISTER SEES NO OFFICIAL ACTION ON LIBYAN TRAINING

[Text] Minister of Industry Nils G. Asling said at the Riksdag today that in his opinion the government will not at the moment take any steps concerning the training of Libyan soldiers at Telub in Vaxjo. Asling referred to the negotiations on the continuation of training, which are now in process between Telub and Libya. Telub has continued to inform the government about the progress of the negotiations, Asling said.

DEFENSE EXPERT ON FACTORS AFFECTING NORDIC BALANCE

[Swedish National Defense Research Institute Section Chief Gunnar Jervas "Debate" article]

[Text] During recent months one of the most cherished concepts in Swedish security policy, the Nordic balance, has practically disappeared from official use. There is therefore good reason to ask what the reason for this change is, and what consequences it could have.

"The Nordic balance" is used primarily to mean the allocation of roles under which Finland pursues its neutralist policy within the framework of its Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Treaty with the Soviet Union, Norway and Denmark are members of NATO at a minimal level, while Sweden is completely without alliance and maintains a relatively strong defense force. And secondly, the idea is that if one of the superpowers tried to expand its role in the Nordic countries the other side would adopt compensatory measures.

Thus neither of the blocs would have anything to gain from an escalation. It should be added that the balance model described is best taken as a metaphor, and not too "mechanically." Account should also be taken of the fact that the Nordic countries are caught up in a larger system of power balance which dictates the situation in the Nordic community.

A system of balance such as the Nordic one is of course subject to distrubances of various kinds from time to time. One disturbing factor which has operated for a considerable time is the expansion of the Murmansk Base. It is true that the Russians claim that the base is only to be seen from the superpower perspective, and that it therefore does not affect conditions in the Nordic countries. However, the fact that the Soviet Union has developed units and material which could be used against the Nordic countries from the base in question has meant that the Nordic countries--especially Norway--have felt themselves called upon to react. The contingency stockpiling of heavy equipment for a U.S. brigade and so on in Trondelag that has just been approved, is an example of this.

Another factor which has an effect on the situation in the north is the ocean rights questions which have lead to conflicts between Norway and the Soviet Union. In order to be able to assert itself against a superpower, the small state of Norway has naturally felt a need for support from outside, especially from the United States. This should not be forgotten when discussing the Norwegian view of what is necessary to preserve the balance in the Nordic countries.

A third important factor is the debate on decoupling. The discussion that there has been about the "powerless" U.S. foreign policy caused among other things, by shift in the balance of power in the Soviet Union's favor, has probably made the Norwegians, in particular, wary. Can one really expect that the United States would, if necessary, enter a military conflict with "the giant," the Soviet Union, for Norway's sake, if the credibility of the U.S. undertakings to West Europe has been called into question?

A further factor in this context is the growing doubt whether Sweden will in the future fulfill the role it has played up to now in the Nordic balance system, which has so successfully turned our part of the world into a peaceful area of low tension.

The combined effect of the Murmansk Base's reinforcement, the ocean rights conflict with the Soviet Union (the Norwegian need of "borrowed" negotiating strength), the decoupling debate and a shrinking Swedish defense seems to have made the Norwegians inclined to adopt measures which could possibly disturb the Nordic balance.

Finland and Sweden have already acted to calm Norwegian worries. For this reason the northern areas have been reinforced, or plans have been made to reinforce them. It is hoped that this will help to make the Norwegians feel less afraid of a Soviet push in the northern areas. Of course, neutral Sweden and Finland can at the same time claim that with their reordering of priorities they are helping to protect the Soviet Union from attacks from the West via the Swedish and Finnish areas of the North Cape.

The most burning question at the moment is, of course, the plans for the contingency stockpiling of heavy equipment for a U.S. brigade of around 10,000 men in Trondelag, at the same time as bases are being prepared for a large number of aircraft. The latter especially, in combination with a shrinking Swedish Air Force, points to a couple of worrying circumstances.

The first is that the West has obviously begun to wonder whether Sweden will continue to be able to prevent the East's aircraft from using Swedish airspace in the future too. The West therefore needs to make preparations, so that it will be able to "plug" this hole itself. The second is that the Soviet Air Force probably feels honestly worried about Sweden's falling capacity to live up to its duties as a neutral state. Can one really be sure that Sweden will be able in the future to prevent the United States from using Norwegian bases for operations against the Soviet Union via Swedish airspace?

The Soviet Union probably has two main alternatives, one of which is the further reinforcement of the Murmansk area. However, one drawback with this is that it would be "putting even more eggs in one basket" with the concomitant risks this would have. It would be possible to avoid this if Finnish bases could be used. This would also shorten flight approach distances. There can be no doubt that the Finns, with their Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Treaty with the Soviet Union, are fully aware of, and take a very serious view of this possibility.

It would also be possible to justify such a development using the "scales principle" of the Nordic balance. As a result the Finns prefer to talk about "Nordic stability," which is described as intact, if not downright "unmovable." This is a very natural reaction from the Finnish viewpoint, especially since for reasons of their treaty, the Finns--unlike the Swedes--are not able to take any compensatory military measures. There is little alternative to trying to influence Finland's surroundings using semantics as a means of persuasion.

There is much to indicate that the change in the Swedish usage should be seen in the light of the above circumstances. Like Finland, Sweden wants to persuade the Soviet Union through a semantic maneuver that there is really no connection between a decreasing Swedish capacity to live up to the demands which neutrality makes, NATO reinforcements in Norway (as in Denmark), and the Soviet Union's strategic position. Thus compensatory measures by the Soviet Union are unnecessary.

The question is whether a Swedish "copy" of the Finnish usage is really as desirable as its supporters seem to think. To start with, one can ask oneself if the Russians are naive enough to allow themselves to be manipulated by our replacement of the word "balance" by the word "stability?" It is no secret that there has been a negative trend in Swedish defense in comparison with the rest of the world.

The same is true of the shrinking in our air force as can easily be seen in open publications. Would it not be extremely odd if the Soviet defense plans avoided noting such a trend? This is certainly not the behavior of their counterpart in the West, where every change in the world is followed in detail and countermeasures are proposed.

Another thing which must not be forgotten is that the Nordic balance mechanism works in both directions. If the Soviet Union threatens to take steps in Finland, the countries affected can in their turn let it be known that they will react. A well-known example of this was the so-called note crisis of 1961. The Soviet Union demanded consultations with Finland under the terms of the Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance Treaty. However, the Russians dropped their demand after the other side had made it clear that this could lead to "concern and war neurosis."

Potential compensatory mechanisms in accordance with the principle of the Nordic balance obviously deterred the Soviet Union from continuing along the path it had chosen. One lesson to be learned from this is that a balance argument which links together the Nordic nations can be important, not to say crucial, in arguments against Soviet measures in Finland.

An important fact is that Sweden can function as a reducer of tension and arms buildup within the framework of the Nordic balance. By giving credible undertakings that we will not allow outside powers to use our territory and airspace, their threat potential and their need for arms is reduced. However, if our ability to preserve our policy of neutrality is called into question, we can expect both the East and the West to acquire military resources for this front too, and this in turn could increase the antagonists' areas of contact and consequently the level of tension in the world.

It must be pointed out in this context that a reduction in Sweden's capacity to fulfil its function within the Nordic balance would expose Finland in particular to increased risk. The greatest service we could do this country would probably be to see to it that Sweden fulfilled its role in the Nordic balance system.

Finally we should not forget that Sweden with its traditionally and--until now at least--relatively comprehensive and technically advanced defense force is the natural "balance-keeper" in the Nordic community. Our modern arms with their great mobility have made it possible to project military strength in different directions and thus compensate disturbances in balance in critical situations.

Consider also what a negotiating trump card a weapons system like modern air combat forces is. They give us the ability to transform our airspace into a "wall", but also to open it when we wish to. (Naturally, we hope to be able to avoid the latter, but in extreme situations it could turn out to be necessary.) And if we are attacked, something which would change our neutral status, we would have the capability to place our comprehensive system of air bases at the disposal of friendly states.

Earlier investigations have shown that Sweden has considerable strategic value both for the East and the West, which makes the negotiating trump card "two-sided." Further enumeration could follow, but would be superfluous. However, it should be added that a transition to a less qualified territorial defense system, which has been put forward as an alternative in the defense debate, would considerably reduce our ability to function as a "balance-keeper."

The above discussion leads to two main alternatives for action for Sweden. They are briefly as follows:

1. Preservation of the Nordic balance. This would mean that we had the necessary equipment to make it possible for us to play our role in a credible way in preserving the delicate balance of the system.

2. Abandonment of the dynamic balance concept to replace it with the more static "Nordic stability." This would mean that we would give up a number of possibilities of influencing developments in various situations and would instead place our reliance in a sort of "semantic deterrence."

For me personally the first alternative seems most attractive in most respects.

CUBAN DELEGATION COMPLETES OFFICIAL VISIT

Agreement Signed

[Text] Today an agreement on cooperation in the fields of culture, science and education was signed between Cyprus and Cuba at the Foreign Ministry. The agreement was signed during a special ceremony by the foreign ministers of the two countries, Rolandhis and Malmierca. In a speech at the ceremony, Rolandhis expressed the certainty that the agreement will further strengthen relations between Cyprus and Cuba and wished happiness and prosperity to the people of Cuba.

Replying, Cuban Foreign Minister Malmierca said, among other things, that the signing of the agreement constitutes a clear expression of the very good relations and ties between the two countries. Malmierca reaffirmed Cuba's support for the Cyprus people's struggle to safeguard the Cyprus Republic's sovereignty, territorial intergrity, unity and nonalignment.

Malmierca Departure

[Text] This evening, Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca, who had paid a 3-day official visit at the invitation of Foreign Minister Rolandhis, departed Cyprus. Malmierca was seen off at Larnaca Airport by Rolandhis, Cuban Ambassador Rodriguez, dean of the diplomatic corps Soviet Ambassador Astavin and other diplomatic representatives.

In the morning, accompanied by Rolandhis, Malmierca visited Ethnarch Makarios' tomb at Throni and laid a wreath on behalf of Cuban President Doctor Fidel Castro.

Rolandhis, Malmierca Statements

[Text] Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca, who had paid a 3-day official visit at the invitation of the republic's Foreign Minister Rolandhis, departed Cyprus this evening. Seeking his Cuban counterpart off at Larnaca Airport, Rolandhis expressed the Cyprus people's warm thanks for the consistency with which Cuba supports their struggle.

[Begin recording] [Rolandhis] The visit by Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca to Cyprus has been, from all aspects, constructive and successful. First, we had the opportunity to discuss with Malmierca various international issues and sign a cultural agreement. But the most important thing for us, for a country that is under occupation, was the extent of the support and solidarity from a man who currently heads the nonaligned foreign ministers, a movement that has for its members two-thirds of the world's countries.

Bidding goodbye to Malmierca I would like to express by profound respect and the Cyprus people's warm thanks for the consistency with which Cuba supports their struggle. [end recording]

Replying, Malmierca said:

[Begin recording in Spanish with superimposed Greek translation] During the few days that the Cuban delegation was in Cyprus it was able to ascertain how close relations are between the peoples of Cyprus and Cuba. We witnessed many manifestations of solidarity and love for the people of Cuba, for its leaders and especially for President Fidel Castro.

At this moment of our departure, we want to reiterate our gratitude at these brotherly manifestations. The results of the Cuban delegation's visit to Cyprus have been very useful. The manifestations that took place in honor of the Cuban delegation encourage us to continue our efforts to deepen and strengthen the bonds which unite the two countries' peoples.

From our meetings with President Kiprianou and Foreign Minister Rolandhis we have ascertained and identity of views in the positions of the two countries' governments on principal international problems. In addition, an analysis has been made of the common goals that will be pursued in the future, especially in Cyprus' and Cuba's capacities as members of the Nonaligned Movement.

We reiterated the solidarity of the people and Government of Cuba with the just cause of the Cyprus people and we expressed our support for the efforts to create a united and independent Cyprus that will maintain its nonaligned character and will continue its course toward its people's progress and prosperity. We are sure that thanks to the determination, efforts and persistence of the Cyprus people it will be possible to implement these goals. [end recording]

Malmierca was seen off at Larnaca Airport by Cuban Ambassador in Cyprus Rodriguez, the dean of the diplomatic corps, Soviet Ambassador Astavin, other diplomatic representatives and responsible officials.

North Disavows Agreement

[Text] The spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has reiterated that the agreements made by the Greek Cypriot administration with any country and any such future agreements are not binding on the whole of Cyprus.

In a statement issued today concerning the agreement signed between the Greek Cypriot administration and Cuba on cooperation in the fields of culture, education and science, the spokesman stressed that the Greek Cypriot administration, which presents itself as the government of Cyprus to the world, does not represent the two communities on the island and is not legitimate. Pointing out that talks are being held since 1968 for the establishment of a partnership government based on two communities, the spokesman said: In the light of these facts, the agreements made by the Greek Cypriot administration with Cuba or any other country or any such future agreements are not binding on the whole of Cyprus and on the Turkish Cypriot community, which shares the sovereignty of Cyprus. The Foreign Ministry spokesman said that the relevant persons will be informed about this situation in the necessary manner.

TURKISH SIDE FILIBUSTERS INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

[From the Comment column: "Filibustering Tactics"]

[Text] The endless filibustering tactic pursued by the Turkish side at the negotiating table and in general efforts being exerted to solve the Cypriot problem were once again in evidence the day before yesterday, the fifth day in the fifth round of the inter-Cyrpiot talks. This specifically concerns the Turkish side's nonsubmission of proposals on the territorial aspect of the problem, as well as the effort that it carefully appears to be exerting lately, to bring back to the forefront the criteria for settling the territorial issue. And this despite the fact that it knows very well that these criteria were discussed and agreed upon during the Makarios-Denktas meeting in the very presence of UN Secretary General Waldheim. Therefore, reviving this issue in the talks can only be seen as a Turkish filibustering tactic, no matter how much Turkish interlocutor Onan denies this. In his statement made 2 days ago before the intercommunal session to support his allegations, Onan also said that the criteria are just as important as the map on the territorial issue which the Turkish side is to submit.

Meanwhile, the Turkish side's filibustering tactics as well as its intransigence, received proof in Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas' talk that same day about the "population exchange agreement" and, as he said, the Turkish Cypriots refuse to accept a discussion on this issue.

As political circles very correctly said to our newspaper, this Turkish tactic leads to pessimism and the Greek Cypriot side has no responsibility whatsoever for this because, as the Greek Cypriot side has repeatedly declared, its only goal is the success of the inter-Cypriot dialogue and through it the achieving of a peaceful, just and viable solution of the Cypriot problem.

Gobbi Reviews Talks

[Text] The UN special representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, has said that it is difficult at this stage to establish a link between the resettlement of Greek Cypriots in Maras [Varosha] and the reopening of the Lefkosa [Nicosia] International Airport. Replying to questions by a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent, Gobbi said that progress--though limited--was achieved in certain subjects discussed at the latest intercommunal talks. Recalling that the existing cordial climate in the talks was a constructive factor, Gobbi said that the present dialogue was the best yet between the two communities. He added that a more constructive stand in the talks was necessary.

Asked to comment on the Greek Cypriot refusal to concede to the existence of an agreement for the exchange of people between the two communities in accordance with the UN statement of 2 August 1975 and under the UN auspices, Gobbi said that the UN press statement issued at the conclusion of the third Vienna talks held from 31 July to 2 August 1975 was very clear on this subject.

Recalling that the two parties have now submitted proposals on almost every subject under discussion, Gobbi said that these proposals were not as yet of a nature that could satisfy both sides. He added that at this stage the two were not being flexible enough. Gobbi pointed out that it would be difficult to shape the future with such a situation, saying that this was the result in past experiences. He added that he thought a recess in talks due to elections in Cyprus would not harm this process and that definite dates would be set for the resumption of the intercommunal talks immediately after the recess.

KHARAVYI Comments

[From the "Views and Comments" column: The Talks Are Being Undermined"]

[Text] The day before yesterday the Turkish Cypriot side again declined to submit concrete proposals and a map on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem. Mr Onan made it clear that for his side "there is no map," but solely some vague criteria. There are many indications that prove that the Turkish Cypriot leadership is not willing to submit at the negotiations table concrete proposals for discussion or for reaching an understanding on both the territorial and other aspects of the problem. This attitude is preventing the development of a substantive, constructive dialogue and is leading the talks to stagnation and stalemate.

The Turkish Cypriot leaders have openly demonstrated their intention not to proceed with any step toward progress in the talks during the election campaign. This means that until June when elections are held in the north, they will not constructively contribute to the continuation and the success of the dialogue. Obviously this is a new pretext by Denktas, who is trying to undermine the intercommunal talks--a policy that the Turkish Cypriot leader has been following for years.

But we fear that this time something worse is happening--that the talks are being pushed into deadlock and failure within the framework of a wider plan providing for their neutralization and the promotion of another Cyprus "solution." It is obvious that the Reagan administration and NATO view Cyprus as a future military bridgehead through which they can strengthen their positions in the vital Middle East region. A fair and peaceful Cyprus solution through the intercommunal talks would be tantamount to defeating imperialism and destroying its plans. By fanning Turkish intransigence at the talks--the United States and NATO have been directly and indirectly doing this recently--they are seeking to render useless the talks procedure, which would lead to a settlement contrary to their gangster interests. At the same time, they would be creating the prerequisites to remove the Cyprus problem from the United Nations and to confine it to NATO's "allied" framework, with final goal the NATOization of Cyprus.

In view of this danger, the efforts of the Greek Cypriot side must be continued, and if they are to be effective, the talks must be intensified. Every available possibility must be utilized and pressure must be applied in all directions, so that the Turkish Cypriot leadership will submit concrete proposals and so that the dialogue will be constructively and effectively continued. And if we again fail in our effort, then we must appeal to the United Nations and seek the taking of more decisive measures for the implementation of the UN resolutions on Cyprus. We are certain that if we exhaust all possibilities provided by the talks procedure, then we will have a wider international response to our demand for a peaceful, fair solution through the United Nations.

I SIMERINI CRITICIZES GREEK, KIPRIANOU STATEMENTS

NC141047 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 14 Mar 81 p 3

[From the "Freely" column: "Who Is Lying"]

[Text] Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis has stated in Paris, where he went for talks with his French counterpart, that "certain indications allow for a certain degree of optimism concerning a just settlement of the Cyprus issue." Mitsotakis is excellently briefed on national matters, and he should not say other than what he knows, unless current developments justify his optimism.

Here, however, only the day before yesterday, President Kiprianou was telling us that there is no hope whatsoever for the intercommunal talks. What shall we assume? That Mitsotakis knows of things that our president is unaware of, or, perhaps, that there is a difference of opinions between Athens and Nicosia. Whatever is happening, where is the identity of views and the often-repeated common course? Who is lying and whom shall we believe? Someone has the duty to explain to the unfortunate Cypriots what exactly is happening with their issue.

I DHIMOKRATIKI Comments

[Text] What does Mitsotakis know that makes him so optimistic and hopeful about a solution to the Cypriot issue in the near future? And what are the "indications" that he referred to on which he has based his "hopes"?

Authoritative political circles in Nicosia put these questions by noting an absolute contradiction between Athens' official assessments and Nicosia's positions, as President Kiprianou has strongly condemned Ankara for escalating intransigence.

The same authoritative political circles have told us that: Without fail, there must be something on which Athens based its optimism of which Nicosia is unaware. And added: Without fail, this contradiction must be cleared up to avoid confusion which would be detrimental to the handling of the Cypriot issue.

Meanwhile, according to information received by us from absolutely authoritative sources, Nicosia has already asked for information on and an explanation of Mitsotakis' statement which has surprised the Cypriot Government. It is understood that pertinent diplomatic consultations will be held to bring about an understanding between the two governments.

[Text] The aircraft carrying the 54 political detainees released by the Pakistani Government, following the demand of the hijackers holding 100 hostages in Damascus, had to head for Athens tonight after the Libyan Government refused to grant political asylum to the political detainees. The captain, due to the fact he did not have (?enough) fuel, requested permission to land at Ellinikon Airport; his request was accepted. The airliner landed at Ellinikon Airport at 2000 and will depart as soon as its refuelling is completed.

Emergency measures have been taken at the airport and all security forces at the airport are on a state of alert.

MITSOTAKIS ON TALKS WITH TURKEY, HAIG MEETING

[Excerpts] At almost the same time yesterday, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis in Athens and Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu in Ankara expressed optimism concerning the course of Greek-Turkish talks. The Greek foreign minister expressed his optimism during a talk with newspaper political editors after the departure of the ministry's secretary general, Roussos, for Ankara where the new round of Greek-Turkish talks will start. Mitsotakis added that "naturally the affair will require time."

The new round of Greek-Turkish talks will begin on Tuesday with the meeting of the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries, Roussos and Gurun. Roussos, who departed Athens yesterday, is being accompanied to Ankara by officials from his ministry and two experts from the air force and civil aviation.

At Tuesday's meeting, Roussos and Gurun will discuss all outstanding Greek-Turkish differences and prepare the next meeting of the two countries' foreign ministers, Mitsotakis and Turkmen, which will take place at the next NATO meeting. Roussos will also meet in Ankara with Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen and probably with Prime Minister Ulusu. His talks in Ankara will end on Thursday and he will return to Athens.

In addition, as authoritative Foreign Ministry sources stated yesterday, the Greek-U.S. talks on the bases will continue this week and--as they stressed--the talks must be completed before Easter. If the current situation continues and no agreement is reached, they added, the bases issue will be resolved after the elections, because it is doubtful whether the current chamber can discuss the Greek-U.S. agreement after the Easter holidays.

In any case, official opposition sources mentioned in this connection that the Greek Government wishes to appear as though it were imposing terms on the Americans. But, they added, this is clearly a "smoke screen" covering the government's intention to accelerate procedures for the signing of the Greek-U.S. agreement, even though the conditions set by the Greek side have not been satisfied.

Replying to a relevant question, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis stated that he will meet U.S. Secretary of State General Haig at the NATO meeting and that no earlier meeting has been planned nor have pertinent soundings been made either by the Greek or U.S. sides.

Finally, Mitsotakis said that the Greek Government considers Brezhnev's proposals that were conveyed to Athens by the Soviet ambassador interesting and significant, and that after Greece has discussed them with its EEC partners it will reply to them.

Comments on Paris Visit

[From the "Chronicles of the Day" program: report by Greek Radio Correspondent Aris Xipolitidhis]

[Text] The French Government agrees there must be an increase in the price of agriculture products, higher than that proposed by the Committee of the European Communities, stressed Foreign Minister Mitsotakis on his return from Paris this afternoon after a 3-day official visit as the guest of French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet. Mitsotakis arrived at Ellinikon Airport at 1700 and answered press questions on the matters discussed with Francois-Poncet:

[Begin recording] [Mitsotakis] In Paris I conferred with my French colleague, French Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet, on many matters. First of all, we reviewed current international affairs; in other words, we exchanged views on the great problems of the world; primarily East-West relations, our positions toward the new U.S. administration, the North-South dialogue, the Middle East, primarily, and many other problems of a more general interest. We then discussed Community matters, matters of interest to the whole of the Community and matters primarily of interest to the two countries. More specifically, we discussed the prices of agricultural products. This is a matter upon which we absolutely agreed. We also agreed there should be a higher increase than that proposed by the Community Committee. This must be an increase which will respond to the need, which will satisfy the need, to increase the income of farmers, the cultivators.

We specifically discussed--I raised the question--the problem of certain agricultural products of primary interest such as tobacco--particularly of the eastern variety--but mainly raisins, figs and certain fruit such as table grapes, and cotton, primarily, which are only produced in Greece. These are products which the Community has to deal with now and for which special regulations will be issued. I requested the special understanding and support of France on these matters and it was promised to me.

In conclusion, we also discussed bipartite issues and we remained fully satisfied with the development of our relations. Naturally, we also stated that we should attempt to further expand these relations. These I would say, in very broad lines, were the talks we have had.

[Question] Mr Minister, since France is a member of NATO did you discuss the Cyprus issue or Greek-Turkish relations?

[Mitsotakis[I mentioned this; I explained it; I explained the position where the question of Greek-Turkish relations now stands. I briefed him on the negotiations being conducted today. We also exchanged long views on the Cyprus issue. This was one of the issues discussed, as he himself mentioned in his toast during the dinner.

[Indistinct question on role of Greece with the Arab world]

[Mitsotakis] I believe that France, like the other countries of the Community, agree that Greece could play a useful role within the framework of the Community in the direction of the Arab world due to the particular relations it has with these countries. You must also permit me to add that I have also had the opportunity to communicate with the information media, giving interviews to newspapers and the radio, describing the positions of Greece. I believe I met with much understanding.

In conclusion, I grasped the opportunity to express my thanks to the French Government and to France more generally, for the help it gave during the dictatorship to all of us who lived for many bitter years in exile there. [words indistinct] a reception organized at the Greek Embassy in Paris during which those who remain of the old exiles had an opportunity to meet once again. [End recording]

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE

Democracy Defended

[Text] In a news conference in Ankara today, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said that no one should doubt that the struggle against those who wish to bring a totalitarian system to Turkey will be successful and that the Turkish nation will attain the sound democratic system that it deserves within a reasonable time.

Ulusu held his second news conference at the state water works directorate general conference hall today with over 100 local and foreign press personnel in attendance. State and Deputy Prime Ministers Zeyyat Baykara and Turgut Ozal, State Minister Ilhan Oztrak and Finance Minister Kaya Erdem were also present at the news conference.

In the first part of his news conference, the prime minister commented on anarchic incidents and the fight against terrorism. Recalling that an average of 22 persons were being killed daily in anarchic incidents prior to 12 September, Ulusu said that this figure is below 1 today. Ulusu also noted that during the 6-month period since the 12 September operation, some 152,000 pistols and submachineguns, 39,000 rifles, 6 tons of explosives and over 1 million rounds of ammunition were either seized or relinquished to the authorities.

Ulusu continued: Our goal is to fully establish an atmosphere of security in which everyone will live and work in peace and walk in the streets without hesitation. Despite all the efforts by martial law officials and the security forces, we have not yet been able to completely eradicate anarchic incidents and terrorism in our country. However, peace and tranquillity in our beautiful Turkey will be fully secured as soon as possible and it will never again be allowed to be disturbed.

Expressing his views on economic policies, the premier said that a noticeable decrease is beginning to be registered in the rate of inflation following the economic stability measures and the atmosphere of peace and security in the country. Pointing out that the monthly rate of inflation has been reduced from 8 percent at the beginning of 1980 to 3 percent at the beginning of 1981, Ulusu expressed the hope that the annual rate of inflation will remain below the 40 percent mark.

Ulusu also recalled that a large section of those who wish to destroy the state and overthrow the free democratic system are now accounting for their deeds to the independent Turkish judiciary. Ulusu said: The 12 September operation has remained fully loyal to the rules of independent judiciary and has adopted the principle of trying the suspects at authorized courts in accordance with the laws that were in effect prior to 22 September. In other words, extraordinary courts were not established in order to try the enemies of the political system and the state. This is a very clear example of our loyalty to the general principles of law. No country in which administrations necessitated by extraordinary periods were established has abided by this basic rule of law. This aspect should never be ignored.

Ulusu said that the 12 September administration is acting in a fully impartial and just manner and, therefore, it enjoys the support of a decisive majority of the people. He explained that the administration does not approve of torture under any circumstances and does not tolerate it.

Further noting that the government attaches a special importance to its membership in the Council of Europe and to cooperation with the Council, Ulusu added: All government functions are being carried out within the framework of our constitution and laws and with respect to the rule of law. No one should doubt that the struggle against those who wish to bring a totalitarian system to Turkey will be successful and that the Turkish nation will attain the sound democratic system that it deserves within a reasonable time.

Turkey wishes to develop and enhance its existing relations with democratic and free Europe and its institutions. Our government is determined to fulfill its part with great responsibility for this purpose. However, the perpetuation of this situation cannot be achieved through the good will and efforts of Turkey alone. It is our right to expect our friends to assist us on this matter.

The prime minister noted that certain countries are not acting with the necessary sensitivity in the face of the attacks against Turkish diplomats abroad and that this is causing--at an increasing rate--new victims every day by encouraging the criminals.

Replying to journalists' questions during the last part of his news conference, Ulusu announced that the committee to determine the minimum wage will meet in the near future and that the preparations on this subject are underway.

Relations With Greece

[Report on news conference held 14 March in Ankara by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu]

[Excerpt] Replying to a question on Turkey's relations with Greece, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu recalled that Turkey always adopted good will and a constructive stand in the solution of the problems between the two countries. Ulusu continued: However, those who expect Turkey's position to be transformed into one of resignation will be badly mistaken. The degree of good will to be expressed by Turkey is linked to the degree of good will the other party expresses and will be maintained at that level. The Aegean issue represents the crucial point in relations between Turkey and Greece. The Aegean Sea is a common sea between the two countries and it desirable that this sea should be one which links the two countries and not which separates them. This is our goal.

Both countries have rights and interests in this sea. The problem is to find a solution that can balance these rights and interests. Reaching such a solution depends first and foremost on the creation of a climate of good will between the two parties. Turkey is exerting great efforts to this effect. It should be recalled that Turkey has canceled NOTAM 714, thus providing free air traffic over Aegean airspace. Regarding the return of Greece to the military wing of NATO, Turkey has acted with an understanding and cooperation compatible with solidarity among treaty signatory countries. Turkey did not make the above-mentioned acts contingent upon striking a bargain [with Greece]. It considers them a gesture of good will. However, for the solution of the problems both sides must adopt good will and a constructive stand. We believe that the Greek Government also has the same position and it also desires an early solution to the problems existing between us.

CUMHURIYET URGES 'RADICAL' RESPONSE TO ARMENIANS

NC160818 Istanbul CUMHIRIYET in Turkish 10 Mar 81 p 3

["Window" column by Ilhan Selcuk: "Up to the Throat..."]

[Excerpts] We are living tense days. Those who are trying to strain our nerves as if in a hopeless tug of war seem to be getting somewhere. Only in the dark periods of our history were we so badly kicked around or treated with such contempt. If this is the case, the first step to be taken should be to examine the events with a cool temper, no matter how intense the current tension may be, and to create conditions for a balanced judgment.

According to a dispatch from Germany by our colleague Yagmur Atsiz, the Armenian conspirators [komitaci] who keep killing our diplomats one after another say: "In 1915 Turkeu slaughtered 1.5 million Armenians in a manner that surpasses Hitler's fascism. In fact, this slaughtering continued whenever the opportunity arose. Therefore, acts of militancy directed against Turkish diplomats are fair and justified. Thanks to these acts, we have attracted the attention of the world. The 250,000 Armenians living in Turkey under heavy oppressive conditions and the 2 million Armenians living abroad will unite and establish a "Western Armenian Republic" in Eastern Turkey. If Turks are wise enough they will accept this. As a matter of fact, they are in debt up to their throat because they are an unskilled and ignorant nation. If they give us eastern Turkey, we are prepared to rid them of their economic burdens too."

This is preposterous. How can we counter this?

It is high time radical measures were taken against this trend. For one thing, all national forces which unite on the principle that 'the Turkish republic is independent and indivisible,' should hold tightly together. National unity must be reinforced within this framework and all divergent views and futile arguments must be brushed aside.

Why did an event said to have taken place in 1915 have to wait all these years to be revived? Why was it not brought up in all these 60 years? Those who have brought us to the point where the Turkish economy is dependent on foreign countries by continually contracting debts, have to ponder deeply.

This is what Lord Curzon told Ismet Pasa in Lausanne: "You won't be able to pull through. You will have to come to us again begging for help. We shall then get back one by one what you have won today." Now everyone thinks that it can grab something from a Turkey which is in debt up to its throat. The Armenian conspirators as well as the Greek politicians and the Greek Cypriots have surrounded us in an astonishing effectiveness, pestering us with demands all the time.

There is only one remedy for all this; Turkey must pull itself together in unity and solidarity. If a communal reawakening is materialized, it would be possible to see that things can change in no time. But as long as we continue to bow before the West, we shall eventually realize how "the friends we trust so much" are trifling with us.

GREEK FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIAL ARRIVES FOR TALKS

Hopeful Prospects

[Text] The Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministry secretaries general met today in Ankara. In a statement before the meeting, Foreign Ministry Secretary General Ambassador Kamuran Gurun expressed his satisfaction over the fact that the dialogue that has been started between the two countries is continuing. He added that he is hopeful that positive steps will be taken toward the solution of the problems between the two countries and that all problems will be solved.

Greek Foreign Ministry Secretary General Stavros Roussos expressed the wish that positive results be obtained from these talks. Noting that they had come together in a bid to reach positive results, Roussos added that the desire expressed and the efforts exerted by the two governments on the issue will greatly contribute to the realization of this goal. He also expressed the belief that these talks will be fruitful from the viewpoint of settling the problems between the two countries and of opening new horizons in Turkish-Greek relations.

SOVIET ECONOMIC DELEGATION ENDS VISIT, DEPARTS

[Text] Istanbul, 13 Mar (AA)--A Soviet economic mission headed by Semen Skachkov, chairman of the USSR State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, which had been visiting in Turkey this week, at the invitation of Industry Minister Sahap Kocatpcu, left Istanbul 13 March.

After negotiating the terms of cooperation in Ankara on the expansion of the Seydisehir aluminum complex, the Soviet team came to Istanbul and was taken through the glass mill at Pasabahce.

TURKMEN ADDRESSES COUNCIL OF EUROPE PARLIAMENT

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has expressed the hope that the Council of Europe Parliament will exert the same effort to denounce all forms of international terrorism and struggle against it as it exerts to secure human rights, basic freedoms and democratic principles.

In his reply to the message sent by Council of Europe Parliament Chairman de Coster on the occasion of the assassination of two Turkish officials in Paris, Turkmen extended the Turkish Government's thanks. In his message, Turkmen expressed his satisfaction over the fact that De Coster confirmed the Council's stand on terrorism and acts of violence. Turkmen added that Council of Europe members should exert more effective measures to prevent attacks, to capture the perpetrators of attacks and to ensure the security of diplomatic representatives with the knowledge that the spreading of any form of terrorism poses a danger to them as well.

NORTH-SOUTH SUMMIT PREPARATORY MEETING CONCLUDED

[Text] The second meeting of the 11 foreign ministers held yesterday in Vienna to prepare a North-South summit conference has been successful. This "special type" North-South meeting will be held on 22 and 23 October this year in Mexico City. Its participants are to be the 21 countries that have been under consideration from the very beginning (8 industrialized countries, 12 developing ones and Yugoslavia). Should it be possible to also induce the USSR and the PRC to participate in the meeting, the number of participants would go up to 23. According to his own statement, Chancellor Kreisky will contact the USSR "in a suitable manner" to establish whether it is ready to accept an invitation.

After the conclusion of the Vienna preparatory meeting, Mexican Foreign Minister Castaneda commented extensively on the planned summit conference. He named as topics for the summit, nutrition and agriculture, trade and raw materials, rationalization in the energy sector and the world currency systems. Castaneda described the Vienna preliminary talks as a substantial success. Irrespective of whether the global North-South talks within the framework of the United Nations will have started at the time of the Mexico summit, the meeting of state or government chiefs will be highly useful and will help bring the positions of the various countries closer together.

Chancellor Kreisky said in this context that what mattered were not concrete results in writing, the working out of joint principles and norms that are acceptable for all sides but rather a free and open institution. A genuine dialogue of the chiefs of state about improving the international economic situation would be a result that would justify the summit, he said.

AGREEMENT ANNOUNCED FOR GRAIN SHIPMENTS TO POLAND

AU131230 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1158 GMT 13 Mar 81

[Text] Austrian Minister of Agriculture Haiden today announced the conclusion of a contract with Poland providing for the delivery to Poland of Austrian grain and flour. According to the minister, Austria will supply to Poland, in addition to the 305,000 tons of wheat already delivered, another 20,000 tons of wheat as well as substantial quantities of rye and flour by June 1981.

OeVP RENOUNCES DEMANDS FOR PLANE PURCHASES

[Special DIE PRESSE report by Hans Werner Scheidl]

[Summary] After Finance Minister Salcher declared on Sunday that he could not raise the 6.6 billion schillings to buy modern interceptors, and Defense Minister Roesch stated in a DIE PRESSE interview [published on 10 March] that this was no reason for him to resign, the Austrian People's Party [OeVP] National Executive Committee on Thursday quite unexpectedly decided to renounce its demand that Austria buy such planes. Only 2 weeks ago, OeVP Defense Spokesman Ermacora had called for Defense Minister Roesch's resignation unless the interceptors were purchased. The OeVP leaders' decision was prompted by the country's difficult economic situation. OeVP Secretary General Lanner declared that the party had to abandon the interceptor project since thousands of jobs were now endangered.

Austrian Freedom Party Defense Spokesman Josseck has demanded that Chancellor Kreisky immediately convene a National Defense Council session. Owing to the--reportedly unanimous--decision of the OeVP Executive Committee, the chances of establishing effective control of neutral Austria's airspace seem to have become very remote.

REPORTS ON FRG-GDR TALKS, OTHER EVENTS IN LEIPZIG

Politicians' Talks

[Text] Leipzig, 15 Mar (DPA)--The compulsory money exchange requirement for visitors to the GDR and the future arrangement of the "swing," the interest-free overdraft facility in intra-German trade, were the topics of talks between politicians from the Federal Republic and the GDR at the Leipzig fair on Sunday (15 March).

After a talk with Herbert Haeber, head of the SED Central Committee department which deals with relations with the Federal Republic, CDU politician Walther Leisler Kiep said that the extent of free movement is the yardstick for measuring the quality of relations between the two German states. Birgit Breuel (CDU), the Lower Saxony minister of economic affairs, said she has the impression that GDR politicians "intensely desire" to take a step forward in relations with the Federal Republic. She senses a desire to tie "the swing and the compulsory exchange requirement into a package," Frau Breuel said. But the GDR is relatively inflexible on the issue of the minimum exchange requirement. Nothing can be expected before the SED congress in April when the framework conditions will be laid down. Everything that tends to ease the people's lot will make the Federal Republic ready to compromise, she added.

The present arrangement provides for an interest-free overdraft facility in intra-German trade up to a ceiling of 850 million marks. It will expire at the end of this year, unless a new agreement is reached by then. Without a new agreement, the overdraft facility ceiling will be 200 million marks per annum.

Haeber also met Hamburg's mayor, Hans-Ulrich Klose, on Sunday (15 March).

Boelling-Soviet Envoy Meeting

LD161436 Hamburg DPA in German 1114 GMT 16 Mar 81

[Text] Berlin, 16 Mar (DPA)--Bonn's permanent mission in East Berlin confirmed to DPA on Monday that Boelling [head of FRG permanent mission in GDR] met in Leipzig on Saturday with Petr Abrasimov, Soviet ambassador to the GDR. Abrasimov invited Boelling to visit the USSR stand at the Leipzig fair before the opening. A spokesman for the Bonn mission described this as a "polite gesture" by Abrasimov. He gave no details about the talk.

Boelling-Honecker Talk

[Excerpt] Bonn, 16 Mar (DPA)--The Federal Government basically has assessed as positive the talk between GDR Council of State Chairman Erich Honecker and Bonn's permanent representative in the GDR, Klaus Boelling, at the Leipzig fair. Government circles in Bonn today also pointed out that so far there have not been any essential new aspects for the further development of the intra-German relationship. They again made it clear that the Federal Government is making further decisive progress dependent on a revision of the GDR decision last autumn on doubling the minimum mandatory currency exchange requirement for visitors from the West.

These circles hailed the talk in Leipzig as an act of courtesy by Honecker toward the representative of a government with (?which) the GDR wants to cultivate cooperation. Boelling's political talk with the GDR Government will be continued without interruption.

GDR Guards' Entry Refusal

[Text] Munich, 17 Mar (DPA)--The GDR border authorities have refused entry to another five federal citizens who intended to travel to the Leipzig fair. According to reports from the Bavarian border police in Munich today, two married couples and one person traveling along were turned back at the Hirschberg crossing point on the Munich-Berlin autobahn on Monday. GDR authrotieis gave no reason for this.

Last weekend, 12 federal citizens traveling to the Leipzig fair from Bavaria were refused entry by the GDR border authorities. In these cases, too, no reasons were given for the refusal.

SPOKESMAN ON POSSIBLE SCHMIDT, HONECKER MEETING

LD170154 Hamburg DPA in German 2018 GMT 16 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 16 Mar (DPA)--Government Spokesman Kurt Becker stated this evening with regard to speculation concerning conditions for a meeting between Schmidt and Honecker that the Federal Government on 24 November again had expressed its readiness for talks with the GDR. In so doing, it had made it clear, however, that in view of the situation that had come about, it had to give consideration to the overall context of relations. "It remains the goal of the Federal Government that the GDR Government should return as soon as possible to the previous way of doing business with regard to the minimum exchange requirement," stressed Becker.

GDR BEHAVIOR IN BERLIN WALL INCIDENT CRITICIZED

[Text] Berlin, 16 Mar (DPA)--GDR frontier guards aimed and fired shots in Berlin today at a man aged about 40 who, for reasons as yet unexplained, was trying to climb over the wall from the Reinickendorf borough in the western part of the city to East Berlin.

According to the police, the GDR frontier guards opened fire after shouting a warning and firing a warning shot. The man collapsed and was immediately taken off to East Berlin. The police had no information at all as to whether he was seriously injured or killed. This serious incident is unprecedented in the history of the Berlin Wall. Until now, GDR frontier guards have not been known to shoot people going over the wall to the East.

The Federal Government in Bonn this evening expressed its shock at the incident and most heatedly condemned the "inhuman action." A government spokesman drew attention once more to the untenability of the GDR frontier obstacles and supported the demand of the three Western powers ruling West Berlin that these inhuman practices be stopped.

In a press announcement, the French city commandant protested against "this latest use of violence involving disregard for human life." The statement, to which the U.S. and British city commandants also put their names, once again calls on the "authorities responsible to put an end to this inhuman activity."

COMMENTATOR VIEWS SCHMIDT-GISCARD MEETING

[Commentary signed Dr.: "Small Blaesheim Summit"]

[Text] The issues the federal chancellor discussed with his friend Giscard d'Estaing in Alsacian Blaesheim were probably not fully identical with what has been said about them.

At least, the federal chancellor is presently depressed by the economic situation. Since Schmidt likes to see himself in the role of mastering international crises, he is making preparations to again live up to his reputation. The chancellor has had the idea for quite some time that a joint effort of the Europeans together with the Americans is necessary to overcome worldwide recession.

Chances are slim, however, of bringing about anything like a multinational action. When the European Council meets next week in Maastricht, it will first have to work on such acute problems as increasing agricultural prices, the fishery quarrel, new regulations concerning the European Steel Market and the expenditure structure of the European Community budget prior to looking into the future. No progress can be expected from the world economic summit in the fall, but the federal chancellor urgently needs a success because this is the only way to handle demands in his own country for programs to improve the economic situation. Giscard d'Estaing's support at least after the presidential elections in May would be most welcome.

Obviously, the discussion partners exchanged opinions on the new U.S. regime. The optimism demonstrated by Genscher after his Washington visit is hardly in accordance with the facts. It seems that President Reagan is not letting himself be pressed by the Europeans for a summit meeting with Brezhnev in the near future. If disarmament talks were to take place before that on a lower level concerning the medium-range area, it would be already be a success from Bonn's point of view.

INDUSTRIALIST ADVOCATES ARMS SALES TO SAUDI ARABIA

[Text] Munich, 15 Mar (DPA)--German industry believes that the arms supplies requested by Saudi Arabia will become the "touchstone" of German-Arab relations.

The decision on arms supplies "cannot be delayed indefinitely without damaging present cordiality" Rolf Rodenstock, president of the National Federation of German Industry (BDI), said in Munich today on his return from a week-long visit to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. Rodenstock headed a 24-man BDI delegation. The decision to participate in future gigantic investment projects in Saudi Arabia "will be determined by our willingness to make a contribution toward that country's security."

Sitting on the fence is impossible in this case. Other countries are already prepared to come in with arms supplies should the Federal Republic refuse to comply. In this connection, 1,800 tanks, including 300 Leopard II's, have been mentioned in the past. The Saudis also have shown interest in the Tornado aircraft. Although arms supplies "in the narrow sense" were not discussed with the Saudis, they formed a backdrop to the entire talks. Crucial Arab circles regard this matter as the "acid test."

Rodenstock's impression is that the Saudis expect the federal chancellor to make a positive statement during his visit on 27 April. The BDI president underlined that German industry continues to recognize the primacy of politics. However, industry will explain to the Federal Government as honestly as possible "what is at stake."

ARMS DISCUSSION, PROCUREMENT SITUATION ANALYZED

DW121336 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 6-7 Mar 81 p 12

[Peter Schloesser article: "Schmidt and Apel in a Dilemma"]

[Text] Will the Federal Republic become a leading arms exporter? This question seems to divide our country into two camps, advocates and opponents of arms exports.

Saudi Arabia would like to purchase tanks and airplanes. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt himself wants to take a trip to this oil country to expound the position of the Federal Government, because so much is at stake. Apart from the 23 percent plus of the German oil requirements which Saudi Arabia covers, this country is an important trade partner. Besides, Chile wants to buy German submarines and Malaysia is a potential arms customer. It is not just arms exports but also financing difficulties for the Multi-Role Combat Aircraft Tornado for the Bundeswehr, which give Defense Minister Apel a headache. The minister and his experts withdrew to a tightly closed conference for the purpose of staking out the future financial requirements for the Bundeswehr. Will the arms expenditures be streched out? Many a comrade of Apel would prefer increasing development aid instead of arms spending.

Intended arms exports daily hit the headlines in the Federal Republic. The reason is that Saudi Arabia has indicated interest in German combat tanks and Tornado multipurpose planes. The negotiations with the German tank-building company Krauss-Maffei have been practically wound up. The airplane, for which German companies supply components, have been ordered by the Saudis in London. Chancellor Helmut Schmidt himself intends to take a trip to Saudi Arabia in the near future to expound the German position to the important oil supplier. The oil country is obviously irritated by the Germans' long hesitation. A contract with the Veba Corporation was not concluded--apart from some others. Besides, the Saudis have fired another warning shot for the benefit of the Federal Republic and the West at large: If Bonn does not give the green light, orders could be placed in Moscow.

Chancellor Schmidt and coalition partner and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher are for the deal. Minister of State Hans-Juergen Wischnewski ("Ben Wisch") advocated an exact weighing of the German interests. The justification for that is simple: The government simply cannot offend with a harsh "no" as important a trade partner as Saudi Arabia, which supplies the Federal Republic with about 23 percent of its annual oil requirements. The extent of the arms deal, at times estimated to be DM50 billion, is more likely between DM5 billion and DM8.5 billion.

Meanwhile, leftwingers in the SPD are afraid that all barriers against arms exports will cave in. They rebel against Chancellor Schmidt. The Bundestag faction seems split. Still, the arms export policy of the Federal Republic is to be reconsidered and the term denoting "areas of tension" redefined. This seems to be necessary also because what is declared as an area of tension on paper ceased to be valid long ago. Bonn's arms export practice confirms that German arms have been reaching areas of tension for quite some time. Thus, Chile, among others, is to receive German submarines. Argentina bought the TAM tank, prototype and blueprints, so as to set up production of its own. The list of arms exports to areas of tension approved by Bonn is much longer.

In most cases, the exports are justified with the argument that by the arms exports, tensions are mitigated and/or military balance is restored. Another important reason: Jobs in the German arms technology sector can be safeguarded.

But if Bonn delivers arms to the Saudis, the government will hardly have any choice but to serve Israel as well. Shimon Peres, opposition leader in Jerusalem's Knesset, said recently in Bonn that he is against arms exports to Saudi Arabia on principle. If Bonn delivers the arms nevertheless, Israel must be considered as well. The Egyptians cannot be denied what has been granted to the Saudis and the Israelis. A merry-go-round without end?

The aggravation of the war arms control bill (Article 4A) by which arms exports from the Federal Republic were to be held back did not produce the desired success. On the one hand, parliament tightened the regulations, while the government, on the other, softens the impact of these decisions through its alliance policy and its approval procedure.

The Federal Defense Ministry and the Federal Government endeavor to solicit partners in NATO countries or in friendly countries for expensive new developments of arms, which it cannot finance on its own. Without German-British-Italian cooperation, for instance, the Tornado multipurpose plane could not be financed. The development costs are so high that one country alone cannot raise the funds for tehm. Even now the Tornado is tearing big holes in the defense budget.

But it is also a consequence of this joint arms development that highly sophisticated arms technology is offered for sale on the world's arms markets by the partners. Oto Melara, Italian license holder for the production of the Leopard I tank already has sold quite a few German tanks made in Italy at favorable terms. Aside from that, it is NATO's goal to have allies with a less developed arms industry gradually gain know-how for the production of complicated arms systems. This also might accelerate arms exports.

The German arms technology industry has a different structure than that of most NATO countries. While France, Great Britain, or the United States maintain partially state-owned factories which operate in a correspondingly tenacious way and often have cultivated top-heavy administrations, a privately-owned arms technology industry has emerged in the Federal Republic.

The advantage of this is that the government is spared having to struggle for each arms order abroad so that domestic production will be about utilized to capacity. Bonn prefers to leave this responsibility to private industry which, however, laments over a great vacillation in the placement of state orders. This is why Bonn declares time and again that the "civilian legs" of the arms technology companies must be strengthened so as to better balance gaps in orders. Yet the companies pursue this policy out of their own interest to prevent themselves from being dependent on only one customer. An example from the most recent past: The Rheinmetall Corporation purchased a majority share in the Wuerttembergische Metallwarenfabrik Company. As a result, the arms technology share in the combine's foreign trade turnover decreased from about two-thirds to far below 50 percent. In many cases, however, the companies just about make ends meet if a certain basic utilization rate is ensured.

The roughly 20,000 predominantly small and medium-class companies carrying out orders for the Bundeswehr employ 300,000 people and account for 1 to 2 percent of the Federal Republic's gross national product. Some companies depend predominantly on orders from the Defense Ministry which on its part must heed the defense budget.

Tornado Causes Some Whirl

The 1980 defense budget is DM39.5 billion. Expenditures for new arms came to DM8.6 billion and for the pay of soldiers and personnel to DM17 billion. The draft for the 1981 budget provides for defense expenditures totalling DM41.2 billion, including DM13.7 billion for arms purchases and DM17.4 billion for personnel.

Defense Minister Hans Apel lately is having trouble paying for the arms ordered by his predecessor, Georg Leber. The Tornado is causing some whirl because of a financing deficit of formerly DM1.3 billion, which reportedly has gone down to between DM400 and DM300 million as a result of Apel's mathematical stunts. The minister is considering the cancellation of some orders to overcome the finance gap. What he is considering, among other things, is purchasing fewer Leopard II tanks. Besides, a new tank family on wheeled carriages would be more efficient. "Apel is sounding off without thinking," officers criticize. Harald Wust, Apel's former inspector general, shot at the minister from his early retirement: Apel should have spotted the gap in the Tornado finances earlier.

It remains to be seen whether the criticism against the minister will cease or whether Apel will have to resign. It is a fact that arms systems in the future will be much more expensive because the proportion of electronics will constantly increase. This is why electronics suppliers--first of all Siemens and Aeg-Telefunken--are constantly moving into the arms business in a better way.

The steering mechanism which Bonn acquired for the placement of its arms orders is an army of 20,000 public servants who populate the Federal Office for Arms Technology and Procurement in Koblenz. This office, sometimes criticized by the arms technology sector as an expensive top-heavy administration, places most of the arms orders with industry.

Since arms and equipment cannot be purchased readymade like civilian commodities, the office calculates on the basis of cost prices. And since something ought to be left over for the producer, the Koblenz people add a profit rate of between 0.5 and 5 percent, depending on the order.

Since industry does not allow too close a look at its hand of cards, and cost prices can be calculated only approximately from a distance, it often makes good profits. This does not always appear to be evident in the books because profits are often set off against losses in civilian sectors.

A handful of big corporations own the most important arms technology factories. In the tank construction sector, Krupp, Flick, Thyssen-Henschel and Rheinmetall are the most important arms suppliers. In 1964, Krupp purchased the Kiel Maschinebau Limited (MAK). About three fourths of the MAK turnover (in 1980 about DM560 million) is accounted for by the civilian sector. The item most important for the turnover rate is ship engines, accounting for 65 percent. Rail vehicles and power stations play a less important part. In the arms technology sector, MAK assembles tanks. When it comes to the Leopard II--the general contractor being the Flick subsidiary Krauss-Maffei--810 tanks are built in Kiel. Besides, there are tank orders for exports. MAK supplies 167 tanks in the Leopard II order for The Netherlands (totalling 445 units). Besides, the Krupp shipyard corporation Weser, as the subcontractor of the Bremen Vulkan shipyard, built a frigate which was launched recently.

Krupp endeavored to contract arms technology orders quite early on. But the competition, the Munich Krauss-Maffei Corporation, received the first large-scale order for the production of the Leopard I tank and has been considered to be the number one tank specialist to this day. The Defense Ministry made allowances for that and thus far has regularly appointed the Munich people general contractor. But it is not just tanks that Flick builds. The Flick-shared Dynamit Nobel Corporation produces ammunition and rockets, among other things.

It must be kept in mind, however, that Krauss-Maffei did not develop the Leopard I on its own. This job was done by the Porsche Corporation of Stuttgart. As a developing company, Porsche enjoys a good reputation in Bonn, even if Krauss-Maffei meanwhile has been pushing its own developments. These include, for instance, improvements on the Leopard I tank and its further development into the Leopard II as well as the combat tank III (Napoleon) which is to replace the Leopard at some time. The arms technology sector proceeds from the premise that the tank III will be produced jointly with France. The argument is that Chancellor Schmidt has made firm promises to his friend Giscard d'Estaing.

The Federal Defense Ministry, however, views the successor tank under different aspects: It is above all the empty coffers which might allow the project to go up in smoke. It will have to be clear by the end of the current definition phase whether a successor of the Leopard II will bring so many improvements that a new production would be preferable to a modernization of the Leopard II.

But it was not for the Bundeswehr alone that Krauss-Maffei and the MAK produced tanks of the "predatory animal family." The Leopard I turned out to be an export hit. The Netherlands, Canada, and Italy are important buyers. Most recently, the Netherlands bought the Leopard II. Krauss-Maffei succeeded in selling the Bavarian wild cat against the greatest rival, the XM-1 of the Chrysler Corporation which is struggling for survival. Switzerland also is flirting with German tank technology. Here again, the Leopard II and the XM-1 are facing each other, but this time in the mountains and not in the desert as was the case once when the issue was the introduction of a standard tank by the U.S. Army and European NATO partners. The XM-1 was proclaimed the winner. Nobody really believed that the U.S. Army would be riding around in tanks made by the "Krauts" in Germany. What remained to be done? The Americans received all the German know-how, the Duesseldorf Rheinmetall Corporation (majority shares held by the Roechling family) sold a license for the production of the generally appreciated 120-mm smoothbore gun which the U.S. Army will mount on a limited number of XM-1 tanks.

In the case of MAK on the Baltic Sea and of Krauss-Maffei on the Isar River, it is necessary to speak of a readying process of tanks, for both companies manufacture only about 10 to 15 percent of the tanks themselves. The rest is supplied by a number of subcontractors.

The Kassel Thyssen-Henschel Corporation, a subsidiary of the Thyssen Industry Corporation, has set itself up as another tank builder. Henschel had been in the business from the very beginning as builder and developer of tanks, but had to confine itself to antitank armor and armored personnel carriers. Just like the Leopard II, the Marder armored personnel carrier rates first class, as do the transport tank Fuchs and the armored scout car Luchs. Apart from that, the Thyssen shipyard in Emden, the Thyssen Nordsee Works, manufactures one out of six new F-122 frigates for the Federal Navy (general contractor: the Bremen Vulkan) and built submarines for Germany and Norway. In the 1979-1980 business year, the share of arms technology in the foreign turnover of the Thyssen industrial combine amounted to 8 percent of the DM4.7 billion total.

Of significance in the German aircraft and space travel industry are three companies--apart from booster producers. Following the integration of the Bremen Vereinigte Flugtechnische Werke (VFW)--formerly VFW Fokker--into the Ottobrunn Messerschmitt-Boelkow-Blohm (MBB) Corporation, which will probably be completed by 1984, two companies will be left: MBB and the Griedrichshafen Dornier Corporation, a family company.

Ludwig Boelkow, who has retired from his chief's post, turned the company into Germany's biggest aviation company. His capital was his mind. He was often referred to as a "technosoph," a mixture of technician and philosopher. After the collapse of the Third Reich, Boelkow started out with the Kobra bazooka. A first Boelkow was reluctant to produce the weapon himself, but he could not find any partners, which is why the Apparatebau Company emerged which then took charge of production. Time and again, Bonn placed orders with the company. Small wonder, because the "technosoph" and his team always were one step ahead of the military people.

For the purpose of being able to build means of delivery as well, in 1965, Boelkow drew Boeing and SNIAS [Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale] into the deal. The venture into aircraft construction paid off because today MBB manufactures the Tornado (jointly with the British and the Italians), the Milan and HOT antitank missiles (both jointly with France's Euromissile) as well as the Kormoran air-to-ship defense system. Aside from those, MBB nowadays produces the Multipurpose Weapon-I for the Tornado (for antitank and antiaircraft [as published] purposes). There are civilian as well as military models of the BO-105 helicopter. What must be listed, furthermore, is the PAH-1 and the multipurpose helicopter BK-117 (MBB and Kawasaki). In addition, there are maintenance orders for the Bundeswehr and for NATO partners (Starfighter and Phantom planes).

As a whole, MBB will achieve a turnover in 1981 of about DM4 billion (1980: 3.2 billion; without VFW, which will achieve DM1 billion in 1981). The military share of the turnover amounts to about 60 percent. Since MBB, like the tank constuctors, uses many parts produced elsewhere--particularly because of the electronics and the engines--its own military technology production amounts to about one-fourth of the turnover. The firm envisages problems in 1985-86 when Tornado production will come to an end. It is possible Bonn may not order a new type of plane--the tactical fighter plane TKF-90--because of the tense financial situation.

Dornier, the other aircraft builder in the south, builds, together with Dassault, the Alpha Jet light fighter plane. The firm produces mainly for the Bundeswehr. The Alpha jet, originally planned as a cheap plane at the price of DM3 million apiece, has drastically increased in price several times over, like the Tornado. As always in plane construction, the planes increase in price in the sometimes long period between their conception and the beginning of production. In addition, high development costs must be added to the price.

Next to engine builders, such as Kloeckner, Humbolot Deutz (KHD) as well as the Motor and Turbine Union (MTU), Mauser also profited considerably from the Tornada production. Mauser produces the 27-mm aircraft gun, an order amounting to several hundred million deutsche mark.

German shipyeards must feel like stepchildren in Bonn's distribution of orders. Aside from the new frigate construction program and some orders given in the past, the shipyards received little, compared with the new tank and plane construction orders. In addition, the ships of the Federal Navy are so full of electronics that the shipyards are almost limited to building the hulls.

The following orders were placed by the Defense Ministry with the military technology industries:

Army: 1,800 Leopard II combat tanks at DM3 million apiece, 432 antiaircraft tanks of the Gepard type at DM6 million apiece. 140 antiaircraft missiles tanks of the Roland-2 type at of DM10 million apiece; 212 antitank helicopters of the PAH-1 type at DM3.1 million apiece; 216 field howitzers of the 155/1 type at DM1.4 million apiece.

Air Force: 210 Tornada multirole combat aircraft at the fly-away-price of DM35.5 million apiece and the system price of DM67.1 million apiece; 175 Alpha Jet planes for DM13.5 million apiece.

Navy: 6 frigates at a total price of DM2 billion; 112 Tornado mutirole combat aircraft at the same price as for the air force; 10 motor torpedo boats of the S-143-A modernization program type for DM75 million each.

The 1980 supplementary budget approved some DM400 million for fuel price increases and ammunition procurement. It has not yet been decided whether the air force and the navy will obtain the Roland antiaircraft missile tank. The Phantom will be phased out by the end of the eighties. A successor--such as the TKF-90--is not in sight at the moment. Military experts maintain that a new antitank helicopter, the PAH-2, ought to be ordered in the near future. The PAH-1 is not fit for night combat. However, the PAH-1 can still be rearmed. The top echelon of the Defense Ministry is in closed session to clarify the finances needed for the ordered arms.

URUGUAYAN OPPOSITION HEAD 'PLEASED' AT SUPPORT

PY131833 Paris AFP in Spanish 1412 GMT 11 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 11 Mar (AFP)--The Opposition Democratic Unity of Uruguay [CDU] indicates that it is gravely worried about the change of government in the United States due to the negative consequences for Latin America that could result from it.

This was stated here today by the president of that Uruguayan opposition group, Juan Raul Ferreira, who is visiting the FRG as the head of a political delegation.

He added, nevertheless, that the situation in his country is special and this could neutralize these negative effects. The president of the CDU stressed that for him and his friends this is the first trip to Europe and that the FRG is the second stop, following Italy.

Ferreira was pleased at the great support that the Uruguayan opposition has received from representatives of all the FRG democratic parties (the Social Democratic Party--SPD--and the Free Democratic Party--FDP), and they had plans for interviews with the FRG opposition Christian Democratic Union (CDU) today, Wednesday.

The objective of the trip is to seek stronger solidarity of European parties toward the CDU, which is determined to restore popular rule in Uruguay.

According to Ferreira, the Uruguayan opposition wants massive support from its European counterparts for its 5-point program. The following are the five points: -- The dismissal of the civilian president, Aparicio Mendez, who they consider to be a puppet to the military dictatorship. -- Freeing of all political prisoners, estimated at 2,800. -- Reestablishment of civil liberties. -- Freedom of activity for political parties--and democratic elections.

The defeat of the referendum of 30 November 1980, which was organized by the governing junta, gives the opposition the right to struggle for greater support for the democratic forces, Juan Raul Ferreira asserted in conclusion.

TRADE UNIONIST DISCUSSES COMMUNIST INFILTRATION

[Text] WELT: DGB Chairman Vetter in his report [to the DGB congress in Duesseldorf] set off the trade unions from the communists. How large is communist influence within the trade unions today?

Loderer: Undoubtedly, it is a fact that communists work in DGB organizations, that they are active, that they belong to groups who can be said to take trade union decisions very seriously and also try to implement them consistently in the factories. Naturally, this has, above all, political reasons. As a trade unionist, you can very well pose as a representative of workers' interests in a factory.

WELT: So there is communist infiltration after all?

Loderer: This means that the communists see in the trade unions a platform. From this platform, they are trying to gain votes for their political positions through clever trade unionist work.

WELT: How will you counteract this?

Loderer: We have to make very sure that we do not see a development again like the one we had in the mid-fifties when communists of the former KPD, which then was prohibited, as you know, committed communist trade unionists to implement party decisions first and then observe trade union resolutions. At the time, the Metal Workers Union was the first organization to distance itself from such machinations. All KPD members in functions of the then Metal Workers Union were asked to declare themselves unequivocally for the priority to trade union decisions. All those who did not do so had to give up their duties. Should we see similar developments today, the Metal Workers Union will take measures against these machinations as it did then.

WELT: Your generation still remembers these bad experiences. Young people have not had them. At trade unionist youth meetings today, communists appear openly and are very vocal. Is the youth particularly susceptible to communism?

Loderer: Criticism of our social conditions really is justified. This is most cleverly exploited by the communists. They operate cleverly with all that is negative. In this respect, I see nothing positive in the political attitude of the DKP which is an extended arm of Moscow and East Berlin. If we fail to properly show the young people the historical lines and make them familiar with experiences from our more recent history and also the Weimar Republic. They are absolutely more susceptible than any other group in our country.

WELT: Is the basic program which is now being discussed enough to set the course, are speeches like that given by Vetter enough?

Loderer: Statements do not solve the problem. What is necessary is a clear and clean policy within the individual trade unions and the DGB toward trade unionist youth work and also educational work.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON LAW OF SEA CONFERENCE

[Commentary signed HVB: "The Power of the Combines"]

[Text] The blocking of the new Law of the Sea Conference by Washington casts a light on the power situation in President Reagan's administration. The 10th round of the International Law of the Sea Conference was expected to conclude its work of 8 years of negotiations on a maritime international law for two thirds of the surface of the earth. A complicated structure of compromises was supposed to replace the classic Law of the Sea which was set up four centuries ago.

The core of the work containing 320 clauses, negotiated by 163 states, is an exchange deal between the United States and the Third World. America and the other Western industrial nations concede to the developing countries participation in highly developed mining technology and simultaneously in a planned structure of possession of the naval treasures to be mined, the nodules containing unbelievable quantities of manganese, iron, nickel, cobalt and copper. In exchange, the big power will obtain worldwide thoroughfare and flight rights which are significant for the strategy of nuclear deterrance. This was objected to be the lobby of the American mining companies who wanted to reserve for themselves the mining of the billion dollar metal resources at the bottom of the sea, instead of sharing these treasures with the less privileged as "the heritage of all mankind" (United Nations).

With the directive of Secretary of State Haig to the U.S. delegation to delay the draft of the new Law of the Sea convention until it has been "examined" by the new government, the private capitalist forces, such big combines as Lockheed Aircraft, U.S. Steel and Kennecott Copper, have produced first evidence of their newly acquired power even vis-a-vis the Pentagon. In doing this, they endanger the extremely complex negotiation package where the Soviet Union also is involved because of its strategic interests.

MITTERRAND COMMENTS ON GISCARD TV INTERVIEW

LD161327 Paris LE MATIN in French 12 Mar 81 p 2

[Text] Replying, during a press conference held in Paris yesterday, to Valery Giscard d'Estaing's statements on French Television's channel one on the previous day, Francois Mitterrand paid special attention to the problem of employment. "I was surprised," he stated, "by the feebleness of Valery Giscard d'Estaing's statements on employment. He stated that he will announce some proposals at a later date. Why did he not think about it earlier?"

Analyzing the three proposals put forward by Valery Giscard d'Estaing (amending regulations governing retirement, reducing the number of immigrants and developing vocational training), Francois Mitterrand explained that the first two proposals would make it possible to reduce the number of unemployed by 300,000 each and the third by 200,000. As a result, he emphasized we would have 1.7 million unemployed in 1984, since all experts agree that there would be 2.5 million unemployed if the present policy were pursued. "The 'outgoing candidate' has often talked in the past 7 years about an employment contract but it was a diabolical contract for unemployment that he has signed." Mitterrand also questioned the figures mentioned by Valery Giscard d'Estaing with respect to the demographic sphere.

Opening his press conference, the former PS first secretary stated that the results achieved by Valery Giscard d'Estaing were such that he should not be allowed to "complete the work started in 1974...." Answering attacks against his role as world champion among presidential candidates, Mitterrand retorted: "If there is any world champion, he is indeed such a champion--the champion of unkept promises." And he explained: "It is impossible to call for national recovery unless a great effort is made to achieve national solidarity.... Everything will become possible if in the first months following my election I manage to make it clear that an end has been put to privilege and that any effort calls for assent and, consequently, justice for all."

Mitterrand made an ironic remark about Chirac, saying: "The other candidate of the right seems to be piling up discoveries. He asks that the opposite of what he himself did, be done. His advice is: 'Do not do what I have done.'"

Stating that, "without being presumptuous," he was certain that he will participate in the second ballot, he commented on the "outgoing candidate's" statements. "I felt that it would be difficult to be a better candidate and a worse president [than he is]. Whenever he appears in public, he specializes in being kindhearted, very kindhearted...for 2 months every 7 years. I found that he used the same technique as in 1974, with a blackboard and promises."

Refusing to express any views on the Bokassa diamonds affair because of lack of any precise information, he merely criticized French policy in the Central African Republic. As for the composition of his majority, he explained: "I will answer in the same way as Valery Giscard d'Estaing: I will govern with the majority which elects me on 10 May. If I am elected, it will be a powerful popular tide, which will shatter many established frameworks, that will give me the majority which I will need."

Denouncing the government's control over radio and television, he referred to the president's statement "I am an incurable liberal," saying: "When he said this I thought about Delpey's arbitrary arrest and about Chapot, his campaign treasurer who represents the government in the boardrooms of the audiovisual media which he monitors.... Obviously, Giscard d'Estaing's state of health is not as bad as he says and I have no doubt that he will soon recover from his liberalism." In passing, he condemned police action against channel 75.

Later, Francois Mitterrand discussed the present drift toward a monarchal system, asserting that the government does not govern, the National Assembly has no longer any power, the freedom of the information media has been endangered and that "it is necessary to amend the constitution by which the president appoints members of the higher judicial council who in turn influence the appointment of magistrates."

The problem of alternation prompted him to muse: "Has France been doomed to endure a rightist president and a rightist assembly for 2,000 years? This must be changed and the sooner the better." Finally, he expressed the view that Valery Giscard d'Estaing has "seriously compromised" himself by explaining that a president's first term of office is judged and sanctioned by the electorate whereas this was not so in the case of a second term. "Does he want an untrammeled mandate?" Mitterrand asked in conclusion.

PAPERS PUBLISH ELECTION PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

SOFRES Poll

[Editorial Report] Paris LE FIGARO MAGAZINE in French 7-13 March 1981 carries on pages 80-83 an 800-word Charles Rebois report on two SOFRES opinion polls carried out for LE FIGARO MAGAZINE on 20-26 February and 3-4 March. Poll results are reproduced in addition to the Rebois report. Rebois comments on the differences in the polls, the first taken prior to President Giscard d'Estaing's announcement of his candidacy in the forthcoming presidential election, the second taken after that announcement. Rebois notes that in the February poll, "only 41 percent" of French citizens expressed confidence in the president's ability against 55 percent who expressed doubt, a drop of 15 percent in the president's popularity in 1 year. In the second poll, 55 percent approved the president's candidacy, 22 percent disapproved; 42 percent found him "convincing," 41 percent did not; 43 percent found him "sincere," 43 percent did not.

IFRES Poll

[Text] On 8 March, the JOURNAL DU DIMANCHE published an IFRES opinion poll carried out from 4 through 6 March covering 1,119 people. It appears that 13.2 percent of the people questioned termed Mr Giscard d'Estaing's candidacy declaration "unconvincing," 5 percent termed it "not reassuring," 6.2 percent found it "convincing" and 6.5 percent "reassuring." The same poll shows that 65 percent of the people questioned consider that Mr Giscard d'Estaing is the only majority candidate capable of beating Mr Mitterrand. Some 57.4 percent believe that the candidates should announce the name of the premier they will nominate if elected. When asked on this last question, Mr Pierre Mauroy indicated, at the microphone of radio station Europe-1 on 8 March, that "within the spirit of the institutions" it does not seem "indicated" to him that the premier's name should be revealed during the campaign.

MARCHAIS WEIGHS ELECTION, INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

[Michel Naudy report on press conference given by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais in Paris on 11 March: "The Communist Candidate Addresses the Presidential Press"]

[Excerpts] Georges Marchais was the Presidential, Ministerial and Parliamentary Press Associations' guest at the Meridien Hotel yesterday afternoon. After reading a preliminary statement, the Communist candidate replied at length to the questions asked by the many journalists attending. The press lunch which took place the day after Giscard d'Estaing's television appearance gave Georges Marchais an opportunity to criticize the essence of the outgoing president's policy, to reply to his assertions and to put forward the main points of his own program.

Questioned first on the possibility, raised by [PS spokesman] P. Mauroy, of a government contract with the Socialists after the presidential elections, the Communist candidate pointed out that the problems facing the French people at the moment are first to judge Giscard d'Estaing's record and "above all to say what kind of policy they want for France during the next 7-year term." Georges Marchais added that P. Mauroy was attempting to avoid the specific question facing the PS and Francois Mitterrand: "Are they or are they not prepared to govern with Communist ministers in the future?" Questioned on the attitude he will adopt in the second round, he explained: "In my view, the first round is crucial, in fact, it is in the first round that French men and women will be able to choose the policy they want for France. I am standing as a candidate because I want to win and my first objective is to be in the second round. I would like to add that I would find it very unpleasant to side with Giscard d'Estaing now in calling on people to vote for Francois Mitterrand."

If I Am Elected

The Communist candidate was then asked what political procedure he would follow if he was elected. He replied: "If I am elected, I will appoint a premier whose task it will be to form a government in keeping with the constitution. As president I will appoint the ministers. It is obvious that this government will be a leftwing union government comprising Communist and Socialist ministers. In this country, no party whatever can aspire to govern alone and therefore union is necessary. The premier will form this government on the basis of short-term objectives and will prepare for parliamentary elections since I will obviously dissolve the National Assembly. Negotiations will have to be opened between the PCF and the PS to prepare for these elections on the basis of a government program."

Georges Marchais then said he thinks Giscard d'Estaing's stance in support of Francois Mitterrand should the latter face the Communist candidate after the first round is "in the nature of things." He then turned to constitutional issues.

"We think," he indicated "that the present constitution leads to personal power, that electing the president by universal suffrage accentuates that tendency and that Giscard d'Estaing has used and abused this.

"If I am elected, my first decision will be to respect the constitution to the letter. In other words, the president of the republic should stick to the role the constitution defines. The government must have the job of running the nation's affairs, and the National Assembly's rightful powers should be restored.

"The government will then be given the job of drawing up plans to rid the constitution of anything which encourages the tendency toward personal power."

Georges Marchais then turned to foreign policy questions, calling Giscard d'Estaing's options clearly into question, and outlining a policy for France.

First, on the Middle East, he explained that it is necessary to draw the right conclusions from the failure of the Camp David agreements and that the French Government should take initiatives to open discussions with all those concerned including the PLO on implementing the UN resolutions.

With regard to Poland, Georges Marchais reaffirmed that it is "up to the Polish people and their government to solve the real problems facing that country." Explaining that he does not wish to interfere in Polish affairs he added that, in his view, the solution of these problems "requires economic, social and democratic reforms."

"I have never shown any anxiety about a foreign intervention," he added, "it is unthinkable. I am pleased to see that the Polish leaders have started a process which, I think, does indeed relate to a new economic and social policy and also to democratic reforms."

Georges Marchais then strongly criticized Giscard d'Estaing's foreign policy, showing that France is not playing the great role it should have. "France," he said, "should follow a nonaligned policy and not make its initiatives dependent on the position adopted by its Atlantic alliance partners. Giscard d'Estaing's policy has a marked tendency to align with the FRG and the United States and not to follow the independent policy our country can follow."

In this connection, Georges Marchais analyzed the revolution of the balance of forces in the world, indicating that, despite Mr Reagan's present postelection stances, "the days when imperialism could decide on war and peace at will are over." With regard to Afghanistan, he urged the government to support the proposal for negotiations between that country, Pakistan and Iran "to find a political solution and make it possible for the Soviet troops to withdraw."

Questioned on Eurocommunism, he indicated that to say that "it is dead is ridiculous," but that it is like "a suit which is too tight" and that the concept of Eurocommunism must be widened. He stressed that "the characteristic aspect of the communist movement and the socialist countries is diversity..." which "constitutes a source of enrichment for the socialist cause."

L'HUMANITE ON PS SECRETARY JOSPIN'S ATTACK ON PCF

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "Persisting and Signing"]

[Text] Is L. Jospin a blunderer? Has he made the mistake of speaking aloud the thoughts of the socialist leaders, which they dare not express out loud for obvious reasons?

Clearly, it seems the PS first secretary's blunt call for our party to be destabilized both from the inside and from the outside and the immediate retort of our Central Committee have rather embarrassed F. Mitterrand and his friends.

Thus in Arles, P. Mauroy denied wishing to interfere in the internal affairs of the Communist Party, asserting that remarks to this effect smacked of "fiction" and that his party's only objective was to "seek to destabilize the right" (which apparently bears him no grudge, if we are to believe Chirac, Lecanuet and a few others).

The unfortunate thing for Mauroy is that Jospin's writing in COMBAT SOCIALISTE remain and show that it was not a case of a linguistic flight of fancy. The proof is that he is persisting and signing his name. And not just anywhere, since he has chosen the bosses' organ JOURS DE FRANCE to renew his attack on the Communist Party.

In both Dassault's weekly and his party's daily, L. Jospin--and we must give him credit for this--says the same thing for once. He violently attacks our party and several times harks back to the fact that "it is only the policy pursued by a handful of men at the head of the Communist Party which is in question," that we must "above all not confuse the present orientation of the PCF leadership and direction in which Communists are moving" and that a number of Communists are nearer to the PS than to the policy of their party leadership, "of which"--this is Jospin speaking--"I know they are not proud."

If this is not interference in our internal affairs, a deliberate and moreover blatant attempt to set the militants against the party leadership, then what is it?

The truth is that Mauroy is denying the obvious and, if he contradicts his first secretary, it is only because he undoubtedly thinks that certain truths should not be spoken.

What is certain is that Jospin's remarks, despite being like the capers of a baby elephant in a china shop, reveal an orientation which is indeed that of the PS leadership.

They confirm that the latter's main concern is not to frustrate the policy of Giscard d'Estaing but to attack the Communist Party using any means whatsoever. It is a new illustration of the PS' drift to the right.

At the point things have now reached, we can legitimately ask ourselves the following question: Does F.Mitterrand--as he maintains--really wish to fight Giscard d'Estaing or does he rather cherish the more modest ambition of providing assistance to him in the attempt to weaken our party?

How in fact is it possible to refer to an "anti-Giscard" struggle and a desire for change when you are sniping at the political formation which is at the center of the struggle for change and without which it is totally illusory to hope that Giscard will be beaten.

Is it not because the PS has chosen to rally to the right rather than work for its defeat? It is difficult to find another rational explanation for this perfectly suicidal behavior.

As far as we are concerned, it would take more to make us acknowledge defeat especially as the direction in which the PS is moving shows with increasing clarity that those who want a real change in policy have no alternative but to vote for G. Marchais.

L'HUMANITE COMMENTS ON CPSU CONGRESS PROPOSALS

[Max Leon commentary]

[Text] It is already almost 3 weeks since the Soviet Union made a series of proposals for negotiations to the Western powers. These proposals were made at the opening session of the 26th CPSU Congress in a report by Leonid Brezhnev--who is both CPSU secretary general and head of state.

The capitals concerned reacted quickly--and feebly. While Washington and Paris revel in statements on the "challenges posed by the Kremlin" to justify boosting military budgets or abandoning East-West negotiations this genuinely peaceful challenge is being virtually glossed over. The chancelleries' spokesmen are merely authorized to say that a particular project is "interesting" and will be "carefully studied."

In the past few days, Leonid Brezhnev has sent personal letters to the U.S., British, FRG and French heads of state or of government confirming his entire "peace plan." However, the official commentaries remain laconic: "Mr Brezhnev's message will be carefully studied and will form the subject of consultations" (Washington). "Mr Brezhnev is proposing to give more details on some of the points in his recent proposals on East-West dialogue. The letter is written in a moderate tone devoid of any aggressive note....it shows a clear readiness to negotiate" (Bonn). The Elysee, like Downing Street, says even less. And in Madrid the Western delegations at the government meeting of the "35" [reference to CSCE signatories] at present refuse to take the new pledges suggested by the USSR into account.

Evasion

This attitude betrays growing embarrassment. The picture painted in newspaper columns and on radio of an "aggressive Kremlin" prepared to bear down with its armored divisions on a poor little unarmed Western Europe, and even the picture of a pure white America, scarcely bears comparison with the reality of a people and a government offering immediate discussions on all outstanding problems and negotiations on limiting and reducing arsenals without preconditions.

In the absence of any specific reply, the West is taking refuge in doubt or simply silence, especially since the U.S. administration is still seeking a diplomacy which would distinguish it from the failures suffered under Carter's presidency.

But avoiding the issue is no substitute for a policy.

Does Mr Reagan agree or does he not agree to a meeting with Leonid Brezhnev to examine the problems whose solution depends on the United States and the USSR? Moscow has not posed any preconditions for such a summit and agrees to its being carefully prepared by active consultations between the two capitals. Has history not shown that, far from suffering from detente in relations between the two superpowers, all peoples--especially Europeans--have benefited from it?

If anybody has doubts on that subject why avoid the question of a broader summit?

Does Giscard d'Estaing agree or does he not agree to the convening of a Security Council meeting at the highest level, it being understood that any UN member could take part in that conference?

Do the Western leaders agree--who pretend to be alarmed at the modernization of Soviet medium-range weapons systems (known as SS-20)--or do they not agree to the negotiations proposed by the USSR? Some will say that the discussion is likely to be lengthy and complex; all that is needed for it to be conducted in security and mutual confidence, is for a moratorium to be decreed on these weapons systems, in other words to freeze the arsenals at their present level and to freeze the deployment of weapons involved in current programs. This is written in black and white in the messages sent by Leonid Brezhnev.

For Dialogue

Are the French Government and its Western allies prepared or are they not prepared to collectively seek solutions to Europe's gradual disarmament? The Madrid meeting of the 35 signatories of the Helsinki Final Act is fully capable of convening a conference on this subject and, at an initial stage, of planning military confidence-building measures--which the USSR agrees to implement and to have monitored over its entire European territory, provided the West gives an equivalent guarantee.

Whether it be on the situation in Asia or the Near East, the persistent tensions in the Persian Gulf and Afghanistan regions, the 26th CPSU Congress program suggests objectives, methods and means which it is not asking anybody to take or leave but which offer dialogue, and pave the way for seeking solutions collectively.

Is France so subservient to Atlantic bloc requirements and to White House strategies that it can make no proposal to revive negotiation in these spheres? Is Giscard d'Estaing embarrassed by his own speeches on disarmament--now that the confidence-building measures defined by the Kremlin make is possible to reach an East-West agreement in Madrid?

Any further stalling is dangerous to everybody now that nuclear rivalry is attaining increasingly sophisticated spheres and is likely to pass the point of no-return; the point at which any regional conflict is likely to degenerate into a world confrontation.

LE MONDE ON U.S. 'REVIVAL' OF MONROE DOCTRINE

[Editorial: "A New Monroe Doctrine"]

[Text] "America for the Americans" is how the doctrine formulated in 1823 by President Monroe is usually summed up. At the beginning of the 19th century, when the Confederation was still in its infancy, it was a question of warning the Europeans against any attempt to reconquer a new world which had been entirely under the thumb less than half a century earlier and whose last shreds the Spanish were about to lose in the south.

Two recent demarches by Washington which the Europeans are questioning are its humanitarian aid to El Salvador and its planned cofinancing of an airpot on the island of Grenada. These initiatives, like the 5 January meeting between the man who was then only the U.S. president elect and Mexico's Jose Lopez Portillo, the intense activity shown in recent weeks by Washington's envoys south of the Rio Grande and Mr Reagan's stirring plea to the Ottawa Parliament for the American "hemisphere's integrity," all certainly suggest a revival of the notorious doctrine.

It would seem to be a question of making all Americans, from Baffin Island to Patagonia (beginning, according to a plan dear to the former government of California, with the three big northern countries) realize again that, beyond the differences of culture, religion, language and the gulf between levels of development, there exists among them a real community. Against this obvious fact, Mr Reagan seems to believe, neither old Europe's concerns in the Caribbean, which smack of colonialism, nor the harmful influences more or less everywhere of a Marxism which also comes from across the Atlantic can prevail.

By calling Ottawa to heel and by giving its European allies two free warnings, Washington is attempting to set up a "cordon sanitarie" in the Central American and Caribbean zone. It is a matter of isolating the revolutionary movements and regimes from any "Third World-ist" encouragement from Europe or from influential countries on the American Continent.

Having thus prevented the spread of the "virus " the United States would be in a position to try to "turn back the tide" in Nicaragua and perhaps in Cuba. Or, why not, of embarking on great world negotiations with Moscow from a position of strength--negotiations including Afghanistan and other subjects which Mr Brezhnev undoubtedly intends to put on the agenda of his summit meeting with Mr Reagan. These are concepts of relations between peoples which one might have hoped were obsolete but which are unquestionably fueled by the cynicism with which the Kremlin itself views international relations.

What can the Europeans and, in general, those countries which do not intend to accept this bipolarization of international relations do? They can help themselves as much as they can, particularly in defense matters; the Europeans can build Europe in real earnest, get back without fail to the crucial question of the North-South dialogue; and, in the final analysis, reject absolutely the cruel Manichaeanism which is the angle from which the two superpowers view the future of everyone's planet, from Afghanistan to El Salvador.

L'HUMANITE CITES 'BOYCOTT OF CUBA' REPORT

[Text] It is asserted in LA LETTRE DE L'EXPANSION of 9 March that a "boycott of Cuba by France" was prepared during French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet's recent visit to Washington. So far, this information has been ignored.

LA LETTRE DE L'EXPANSION states among other things:

"French industrialists will bear the cost of the agreement on El Salvador concluded by Francois-Poncet and Reagan. In this respect, France has fallen in line with Washington's anti-Cuban policy. Already, a meeting between Bettencourt Boa, director of Cuba's foreign trade with countries with market economies, and French industrialists, which was planned a long time ago, was able to take place only through the intermediary of the Franco-Latin American Chamber of Commerce. The French authorities completely ignored it.

What is even more serious and could lead to protest by French economic circles is that the biggest contract which France was yet to sign with Cuba has just been called into question by the Quai d'Orsay. It concerned a Fr0.5 billion power station which was to be ordered from Alsthom-Atlantique forthwith, following more than 5 years of negotiations...Cuba now ranks fourth among France's customers in Latin America. Its purchase of French products amounted to Fr1.3 billion in 1980."

L'EXPANSION's revelations are extremely grave. They must not remain unexplained.

The French Government's alignment with U.S. policy is an established fact. But, according to the article published in L'EXPANSION, a secret agreement on Cuba was signed by Mr Jean Francois-Poncet on the one hand and Mr Reagan and Mr Haig on the other a few days ago.

Full light must be shed on this affair. The Quai d'Orsay and the Elysee must state what in fact the position is. Is it true that the biggest contract which France was preparing to sign with Cuba--for the construction of a power stations--has been or is about to be called into question by the French Government?

LE MONDE ON FRENCH-GERMAN WEAPONS COOPERATION

[Jacques Isnard article]

[Text] Shocked by the tenfold increase in the manufacturing cost of their new Tornado combat aircraft and by the need to continue to subsidize from public funds the production of the medium-range European airbus, the Germans or, for the moment at least, their Defense Ministry are beginning to learn their lesson by trying to reduce, indeed to abandon long term military cooperation projects conceived with European partners, particularly with France and Britain.

Today, after a 3-day working session with his military chiefs, Mr Hans Apel announced that the West German Army will not be ordering the planned consignment of Roland surface to air missiles coproduced with France, and he let it be known that the French-German tank project for the nineties will not be carried out, since his ministry's allocations will devote its priorities to the development of a modernized version of the West German-built Leopard tank. As to the future, an antitank helicopter project with France and a new combat aircraft designated TKF-90 planned with Britain and France already seem in danger due to the prospects of budget savings in Bonn.

It is a whole development of French-West German cooperation in the manufacture of conventional weapons which threatens to disappear, despite the political will displayed in Paris in February 1980 at the meeting between Helmut Schmidt and Valery Giscard d'Estaing, which was supposed to end in the signing of a protocol on the plan for a joint battle tank. A certain amount of publicity was given to the conclusion of this latter accord 1 year ago because it symbolized then the will of Bonn and Paris to renew a cooperation, some 20 years old, which had given tangible results--like the Transall aircraft, the Alpha Jet or tactical missiles in this highly sensitive sphere of coproduction of all categories of war materiels.

After Mr Apel's meeting with his high command, it was, on the contrary, disenchantment and doubt which prevailed in military and industrial circles in France, and also the feeling of a certain disillusion settling on political circles at the time when Mr Giscard d'Estaing, a presidential election candidate, could plead the solidity of military cooperation agreements with the FRG as evidence, in the name of Europe, of the vigor of the rapproachement between the two countries.

This West German withdrawal concerning the French-West German tank was, in reality, if not expected, at least foreseeable. The project having encountered such keen resistance within the Bonn parliament and among industrialists across the Rhine who considered themselves capable of progressing alone thanks to their traditions and their technology acquired in the matter. In France, too, the program clashed with hostility from the PCF and the CGT and, for other reasons, from industrialists who did not want to be considered second-class partners by their West German counterparts. Besides, the two countries' general staffs still have divergences of technical or tactical viewpoints on this subject, although these were not inseparable.

Despite this variety of obstacles, which are real and which can by themselves explain the slowing down of the program launched in 1980, the position expressed by Apel now reveals that the FRG, through its defense minister, is prepared without any further ceremony to break all large-scale military cooperation with London and Paris for financial reasons. In this sphere, there have been precedents in the last two decades and, on several occasions, French Governments under the presidencies of Charles de Gaulle and Georges Pompidou had to make efforts to paper over the cracks. But never has the whole enterprise seemed so threatened by the public remarks of a West German defense minister.

Unless Chancellor Schmidt--but is he now in a sufficiently strong position in his own country to do so?--decides to grant the important study and research expenditure which his minister is demanding for setting up the cooperation with Bonn's European partners, by proposing to France to make do with participation in modernizing the new version of the West German Leopard tank, Mr Apel is not taking the road toward this resumption of projects with Paris.

SOVIET DELEGATION ENDS VISIT WITHOUT NEW CREDITS

[Text] Rome, 16 Mar (ANSA)--A Soviet trade delegation will be going back to Moscow without having secured new credit lines from Italy, one of its major Western trade partners, after five days of official talks in Rome.

The joint communique issued at the end of the twelfth mixed commission sesssion in the Italian capital Monday night made no mention of credits, an issue dear to the Soviet Union.

The Italian delegation sent its Soviet partner off empty-handed after pointing out that the country's considerable financial effort in recent years did not meet with a desired increase of Soviet purchases of Italian products.

Italy extended somewhere near three billion dollars of credits to the Soviet Union between 1965 and 1980. As a result, Italy's trade deficit with the Soviet Union more than doubled during the first eleven months of 1980, hitting a one billion, 400 million dollar figure.

The Italian delegation chief, Foreign Trade Ministry Under-Secretary Edoardo Speranza, disclosed during the talks that Rome will practice a highly selective financial assistance system with the Soviet Union. Financial aid, he warned, will be extended only on tolerable conditions and with strict regard for progressive hikes in the cost of money.

The communique did say, however, that Italy would be willing to extend credits for some operations on an individual basis, as long as the specific deal in question was deemed mutually worthy. The issue of the Soviet Union's plans to build a gas pipeline between Siberia and Western Europe was only briefly mentioned in the document. The reference indicated that government delegations will be meeting in the near future to discuss the technical and economic aspects of the project. A number of Italian state-run engineering firms are vying for a share of the construction job.

But Italy's major concern during the talks was to secure assurances of Soviet energy supplies, which account for eighty percent of the country's imports from the Soviet Union. Italy imported 5.2 million tons of oil from the Soviet Union in 1980.

In remarks to the press here last night, Foreign Trade Under Secretary Roberto Palleschi complained about the high cost of extending easy payment pterms to the Soviet Union. He also insisted on receiving "guarantees" from the Soviet Union that there will be no "tacticial or political utilization of the faucets" when the future pipeline is built and operating.

PSDI URGES CLOSING RANKS AGAINST COMMUNISTS

[Text] Rome, 17 Mar (ANSA)--The Social Democrat Party (PSDI) once again called on its governing partners today to close ranks to keep the Communists out of power. Relations between the four coalition partners and ways of making Italy more "governable" are the two major issues of political debate in the country.

The debate would have focused this week on the internal vicissitudes of the ruling Christian Democrat Party (DC) had it not put off a National Council session scheduled for the next few days to the end of month, March 28 and 29. Premier Arnaldo Forlani runs a government which groups his own DC with the Socialists (PSI), Social Democrats and Republicans (PRI).

The PSDI aired its call for coalition unity today in its daily newspaper, UMANITA, which charged that some factions in the DC were trying to resuscitate a "national solidarity" arrangement which granted the Communist Party (PCI) a privileged status. According to the PSDI, this attempt was undermining the power of Forlani's government which, UMANITA, asserted, had the close alliance between the PSDI and PSI to thank for its survival. The UMANITA editorial took its lead from recent developments in Christian Democrat ranks, specifically a call from the DC's liberal faction Monday for the party to drop the anticommunist line which emerged from its last congress.

But the "Forze Nuove (New Forces)" faction, a staunch supporter of that line, struck back with an immediate rejection of any "embrace with the communists" whatsoever.

Meanwhile, the PSI's Minister for State Holdings Gianni De Michelis made a pitch in Venice yesterday for a Socialist-led government. The DC, according to De Michelis, "is no longer capable of leading the country" and what is needed instead is an "element of stability" [word indistinct] the PSI.

The PRI addressed itself Monday to recent proposals for sweeping constitutional revisions from PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi. The Republicans reminded their governing partners of "the limits" of plausible constitutional reforms and urged them to concentrate their energies instead on implementing the guidelines of the present constitution, especially those regulating the right to strike. The nation is currently being swept by a wave of strikes as both organized labor and the National Business Association (Confindustria) gird themselves for a predictably tough contract renewal battle ahead.

The joint CGIL-CISL-UIL Trade Union Central announced Monday that its leadership will be discussing ways of implementing a code of "self-regulations" on strikes at the end of the month. But the organization did not fail to deal a blow to management yesterday as well, announcing that union leaders will not be on hand tomorrow for a Confindustria convention on the issue of wages.

BERLINGUER OUTLINES ALTERNATE GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

[Ugo Raduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 8 March address at PCI rally in Crotone: "Berlinguer's Dialogue With Workers"]

[Excerpts] Crotone--A fine meeting, 2 and 1/2 hours nonstop, took place Sunday evening between Comrade Berlinguer and the workers of Crotone, the peasants and miners of the Crotone area. Their questions were substantial and intelligent political questions which enabled the PCI secretary general, as he put it, to "feel the pulse" of this working class, these workers and communists of Calabria, following the meeting with those of Genoa a few days ago.

Answering a question about the Salerno "swing," Berlinguer recalled the elements of continuity with the PCI's national and democratic strategy and the highly innovative elements contained in the PCI Directorate's 27 November document. With that decision the PCI declared that it is entitled to stand as the principal motive force behind and guarantor of a democratic alternative government.

One consequence of that proposal was that, whereas before the issue was the acceptability of the PCI's admittance to a government (the notorious legitimacy issue), we have now changed from the one being judged to the judges of the DC's own qualifications to legitimacy--and above all it is the Italian people who have become the judge.

It must be clear that we will no longer grant outside support to a government headed by the DC. As far as [PRI Chairman] Visentini's proposal is concerned, Berlinguer said that it does not yet seem clear in every detail, but in any case the PCI has already said that Senator Visentini--representing certain classes and a sector of democratic opinion very distant from us--was not mistaken when he, like the communists, condemned this government's impotence and stated the need for a change.

Last, among many other topics, Berlinguer broached the subject of the PCI's autonomy in the international context. When we confirm it, he said, we do not do so to concede anything to anyone else but because we consider it an indispensable precondition for achieving two objectives for which we feel a pressing need: 1) only a truly autonomous force capable of original formulations can open the way to a transformation of society in a socialist direction (whereas it is impossible if one merely repeats stereotyped formulas coined elsewhere); 2) in the world today a major thrust must be imparted to a new kind of internationalism, which can only be based on autonomy, at a time when a great variety has come about within the world revolutionary process, with the emergence of new forces, often very different from the communists. The attainment of these objectives presupposes that the era of leading parties and states is really over--and, as far as we Italian Communists are concerned, it is over.

RUBBI TO REPRESENT PCI AT MEXICAN PARTY CONGRESS

The Mexican Communists' Congress, the first to be held with the party enjoying full legal status, will open today and continue its work until next Saturday.

BUFALINI COMMENTS ON CPSU, PCI 'DIVERGENCES'

LD161311 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 12 Mar 81 p 17

[Unattributed report: "Bufalini: Soviet Initiative Important"]

[Text] Rome--"We believe that the divergences that have recently emerged between the PCI and CPSU must neither be made into a drama nor dismissed. This belief stems not so much from an elementary sense of political prudence as from a careful consideration of certain aspects of the situation. First, the fact that, as far as we are concerned, there is no desire to exacerbate relations." This is stated by PCI Directorate member Comrade Paolo Bufalini in an article to appear in the next issue of RINASCITA.

Bufalini describes many of the foreign policy pointers contained in Brezhnev's report as "very positive". "Our esteem," the article continues, "for the guidelines on international prospects extensively and also specifically expressed in it is increased by the general political context in which they have emerged," which is characterized by the "worrying indications coming from the United States." The fact that despite these indications "Brezhnev has presented a combination of fundamentally realistic peace proposals is a very important factor.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS CUBAN CHARGE AGAINST ENVOY

[Text] The Portuguese charge d'affaires in Cuba, Francisco de Sales Mascarena, was officially accused yesterday by the Cuban authorities of having participated in the planning of the recent takeover of the Ecuadorean Embassy in Havana which resulted in a serious diplomatic incident.

According to ANOP, the Cuban Government has accused the CIA of having organized the takeover of the Ecuadorean Embassy last month with the help of the Portuguese charge d'affairs. A communique from the Cuban Foreign Ministry says that the charges are based on statements by the attackers themselves and also on investigations carried out by the authorities. The Portuguese diplomat is also accused of having spoken of the possibility of making an attempt against Fidel Castro's life.

This morning we spoke on the telephone with Foreign Minister Andre Goncalves Pereira, who said:

[Begin recording] As you already know, at a session yesterday afternoon to which the diplomatic corps was summoned, the Cuban deputy minister of foreign affairs leveled charges of the utmost gravity at the Portuguese charge d'affaires, accusing him of having been involved in the takeover of an embassy and of complicity with the security services of a foreign country. The charge d'affaires voiced his protest and left. He later managed to get through to Lisbon and I spoke to him at about 2330, Lisbon time.

The government immediately took three steps. First, I summoned the Cuban ambassador in the middle of the night and reminded him of the international conventions and procedures according to which the Cuban Government is fully entitled to declare a foreign diplomat persona non grata, a course of action which Portugal itself has taken in the past and is prepared to take in the future whenever necessary. However, I pointed out that the Cuban Government has no right, either morally or with any justification based on precedent or international law, to publicly humiliate the diplomatic representative of a foreign country.

Therefore, in addition to voicing the most vigorous protest and repudiating the charges leveled at the Portuguese charge d'affaires, I declared that the Cuban Embassy would be held directly responsible for the safety of the Portuguese charge d'affaires.

But I also told the Cuban ambassador that, in respecting international law, Portugal will ensure the complete tranquility and security of the staff of the Cuban Embassy and will strengthen the protection of both the ambassador's residence and the embassy's offices to guard against any possible reaction once this news becomes known.

Second, I telephoned the Portuguese charge d'affaires--after getting through to Havana with some difficulty--and ordered him to leave Havana as soon as possible, not as an admission of guilt but because, at this distance, we are in no position to ensure the security of Portugal's diplomatic representative.

Third, a formal protest is to be lodged with the Cuban authorities, rejecting in the most vehement terms such unacceptable behavior and declaring that the Portuguese Government reserves the right to adopt the measures deemed necessary.

Up to this moment--it is just before 0800--I have not heard again from Charge d'Affairs Mascarena. I am also waiting for the confirmation I requested from the Cuban ambassador with regard to the assurances that the Cuban Government must give the Portuguese charge d'affaires concerning his safety, the same assurances that Portugal accords all foreign diplomats on its territory. [end recording]

PRIME MINISTER, DUTCH COUNTERPART DISCUSS EEC

Portugal's impending entry into the EEC and bilateral relations with The Netherlands were the main topics of Pinto Balsemao's speech. He said that The Netherlands had given Portugal constant support during the process of democratization of our society.

In connection with Portugal's joining the EEC, the Portuguese prime minister said that will is not enough since we will "need all the help our friends can provide."

He said that The Netherlands has "always supported our efforts" and that he is sure that during that country's presidency of the EC there will be new opportunities to express thanks for its spirit of European solidarity.

So, Pinto Balsemao added, "while our options might not ring true without EEC membership we are convinced that membership at any price would be undesirable for us and for Europe."

Pinto Balsemao also referred to the situation in East Timor and the "permanent process of decolonization" which "will allow the population to express its will," and he expressed gratitude for the help The Netherlands has given Portugal in this specific case.

Pinto Balsemao said that Portugal is ready to initiate the actions necessary to resolve the Timor question and he called upon the friendly countries most directly interested in this problem (like the United Nations and the Nonaligned Movement) to help us "create a favorable climate for this purpose."

In his speech at the dinner, which was also attended by Dutch Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw and [Portuguese Foreign Minister] Goncalves Pereira, the Portuguese prime minister stressed the sound friendship and cultural heritage of Portugal and The Netherlands, countries which "face the same threats in many spheres and share the same dream of peace and well-being for all mankind."

"The two countries," Pinto Balsamao added, "have not finished and never will finish implementing the ambitious project which is to contribute to a better world."

However, as is described in detail on page three, the accent of the Dutch prime minister's visit to our country is on Portugal's membership of the EEC.

On his arrival in Lisbon yesterday, Andreas van Agt said that The Netherlands appreciates Portugal's political determination to become a member of the EEC and that his country will do all it can to ensure our admission as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT GULF STATES 12-18 APRIL

LD132204 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 13 Mar 81

[Text] Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao will visit the United Arab Emirates and the Sultanate of Oman from 12-18 April, Portuguese news agency ANOP reports quoting semiofficial sources. This is the fourth time in less than a year that a head of the Portuguese Government has made plans to visit these countries.

COMMANDER WANTS KOLA INCLUDED IN NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

[Olav Trygge Storvik report]

[Text] "A ban on or a thinning out of the Soviet nuclear arms on the Kola Peninsula or in the Leningrad military district, which can only be used against the Nordic countries, would be a significant contribution and example toward reducing the number of nuclear arms in Europe," the Norway commander in chief, Lt Gen Tonne Huitfeldt said in a lecture to Tromso Defense Society recently.

A central section of the lecture dealt with a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries and Huitfeldt's views can be seen as an indirect response to Ambassador Jens Evensen, for example, who has repeatedly claimed that it is unrealistic to draw the Kola Peninsula into a nuclear-free area. This pronouncement has been justified by pointing out that the Russians have weapons stationed on the Kola Peninsula which form part of the strategic balance with the United States.

In his lecture, Huitfeldt stressed that the Norwegian proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is intended to include the strategic and other arms which form part of the nuclear balance with the United States. He reminded his audience that in addition to the strategic arms there are also a large number of aircraft, surface ships and submarines on the Kola Peninsula which can deliver nuclear arms against land targets. To achieve a real reduction in the nuclear threat to Norway or the Nordic area a nuclear-free zone ought also to embrace these means of delivery and their nuclear warheads, Huitfeldt said.

However, the problem is that these arms can carry both nuclear and conventional warheads, that is, they have dual capability and can be used for several purposes and against various areas. It is therefore unlikely that the Soviet Union would be willing to remove these arms from the Kola Peninsula, Huitfeldt said. But it is nevertheless clear that a ban on the nuclear arms which can only be used against Norway or the Nordic area would be a significant improvement in the reduction of the number of nuclear arms in Europe, Huitfeldt said, proceeding to enumerate a number of nuclear arms on the Kola Peninsula which can only be used against the Nordic area because of their range. This applies to heavy artillery with a range of 12-17 km, Frog 7 tactical nuclear missiles with a range of around 70 km, and the Scud B, a nuclear missile with a range of around 300 km.

Instead of a nuclear-free zone which also included Soviet territory, it has been suggested that we make do with guarantees from the superpowers, Huitfeldt said. The Soviet Union has given its support to such a proposal in connection with the Kekkonen plan, but the question is how much is a guarantee of the nonuse of nuclear arms against the Nordic countries worth? It can be easy to give guarantees in peacetime, but it is another matter to keep to them in the emergency situations which arise during a war, he said, pointing out that entering an agreement which accepted guarantees would also be a fundamental change in the Soviet Union's attitude to Norway. Control arrangements would also give the Soviet Union an insight into internal Norwegian conditions, and as a guarantor power the Soviet Union would have a real opportunity to influence Norwegian policies and decisions.

In general Huitfeldt's assessment, a nuclear-free zone with superpower guarantees would probably only be possible as a unilateral solution involving neutrality for Norway and the other Nordic countries. It is by no means certain that this would mean greater security against nuclear arms and the threat of conventional arms, he said, reminding his audience that even if a nuclear-free area embracing the Nordic countries were set up it would not reduce the possibility of nuclear arms being used against targets on the Kola Peninsula. Nor would it be possible to protect Norway or the Nordic area from the effects of these arms, an isolated, nuclear war, and offers no security if the war comes, he said.

In his lecture, General Huitfeldt also sketched the background to and the thinking behind NATO's nuclear strategy and reminded his audience that Norwegian authorities also took part in the decisionmaking process behind it. Even though Norway has voiced a number of well-known reservations regarding preparations for the use and deployment of nuclear arms in peacetime, this does not mean that Norway can unilaterally renounce the possibility of nuclear arms being used in defending the country. Such a step would immediately diminish the deterrent effect of alliance membership, Huitfeldt said. He also thought that it would raise doubts within NATO on whether Norway would receive support from conventional forces in a crisis if it were not willing to accept nuclear support.

For this reason, a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries should be raised in a broader European context, while preserving the attachment to defense and guarantee arrangements in NATO, Huitfeldt said. One possibility is therefore that the proposal is raised as part of the negotiations for SALT III or the talks on nuclear arms in Europe.

AFTENPOSTEN HITS U.S. ACTION AT LOS CONFERENCE

[Editorial: "U.S. Law of the Sea Demarche"]

[Text] The justifiable optimism which prevailed before the opening of the 10th session of the UN Law of the Sea Conference a few days ago was quickly replaced by equally unjustified pessimism. This swift mood change was caused by President Ronald Reagan's unexpected decision that the United States is not ready to take part in the final negotiations now, after 7 years of hard work to reach an international Law of the Sea convention. The new U.S. leadership intends to reassess everything on which previous U.S. Law of the Sea negotiators helped to reach agreement.

To underline clearly that he does not feel bound by anything that has been done, the new President has dismissed the majority of members of the U.S. negotiating delegation. Others have gone as far as to ask whether the United States really needs a Law of the Sea convention at all. Much can be said in support of the reasonable desire of a newly elected U.S President not to be bound by his predecessors' decisions, but behavior in the present affair means that it is also reasonable to question U.S. credibility as a negotiating partner at international conferences. There is also reason to wonder about the diplomatic skill demonstrated, since there had been no earlier indications of such a drastic change in the U.S. attitude to Law of the Sea work. If there had been, the session could have been postponed and informal talks begun. But in the present case the more than 150 other nations taking part in the session were totally unprepared for what happened.

The UN Law of the Sea Conference has so far carried out one of the most comprehensive legislative tasks in history. Only a few minor outstanding questions remained to be solved, after it had been possible to bridge the great political, economic and strategic differences during the conference's ninth session last year. The draft treaty prepared for this session, embracing 200-mile economic zones, the extent of the Continental Shelf, the organization and financing of mining activities on the ocean floor, environmental questions, free passage through straits, and scientific investigations, was a piece of pioneering work in international law and was on the verge of completion when Reagan suddenly intervened.

The results achieved by the Law of the Sea Conference have been of the greatest importance for the developing countries in particular. A Law of the Sea treaty would guarantee the poor nations the chance to exploit resources both in the sea and on the sea bed. The major feature of the Law of the Sea work has been the unanimity in the United Nations that minerals on the sea bed outside national jurisdiction are to be seen as "humanity's common property."

A fragile but necessary compromise has been formed. All participating nations have had to make some concessions, and there is no reason to try to hide the fact that some have made more than others. Several of the major Western industrial nations especially protested against agreeing to provide the developing nations with technology and against accepting limitations in their opportunities to exploit the minerals. It seems as if President Reagan, without any regard for the other aspect of the Law of the Sea work, which is also of crucial importance to the United States, has only listened to representatives of the specialized interests of large U.S. companies.

Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund complained strongly in the Storting about this most recent development at the Law of the Sea Conference. We join in the complaint, and take it for granted that the foreign minister has broad support in Norwegian public opinion for an initiative with the U.S. authorities to help to bring the conference out of the dangerous doldrums it has now entered.

SAP OFFICERS MEET WITH YUGOSLAV DELEGATION

[Text] Stockholm, 11 Mar (TANJUG)--A delegation of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia [LCY] and the Socialist Alliance of Working People of Yugoslavia [SAWPY] Federal Conference led by Dr Aleksandar Grlickov, member of the LCY Central Committee Presidium, and Dragomir Milojevic, member of the Serbian Socialist Alliance of Working People Republican Conference Presidium, has ended its visit to the Swedish Social Democratic Labor Party [SAP].

The delegation of the LCY and the SAWPY held a meeting yesterday with Social Democrats--members of the Committee for Foreign Affairs of the Swedish parliament--who informed the guests about the activities of this committee and the SAP on the international plane. On this occasion, the need to renew the process of international detente, which would include all parts of the world, was discussed.

Grlickov informed the hosts about the activities of the nonaligned countries and Yugoslavia's involvement in the Nonaligned Movement. As part of this, Grlickov spoke about the results achieved by the nonaligned foreign ministers' conference held in New Delhi at the beginning of February.

Members of the Yugoslav delegation also had talks last night with members of the Central Committee of the Workers Trade Union (LO) who informed the guests about the current economic situation in Sweden and about the efforts that the trade union is making to stabilize economic trends.

In the course of a 2-day visit, the delegation of the LCY and the SAWPY Federal Conference--which also consisted of Ljubomir Drndic, Yugoslav Ambassador to Sweden, and Petar Boskovic, chief of the group in the Sector for International Cooperation of the LCY Central Committee Presidium--had a meeting with SAP leader Olof Palme, Secretary Sven Andersson and with other party leaders. The readiness of both sides to further promote and expand mutual cooperation was stressed in these talks.

This visit is the first official contact between the LCY and the SAP and, as assessed, represents the initial but important step in developing relations between the two parties. New contacts between the LCY and the SAP have already been indicated. SAP Secretary Sven Andersson, has accepted an invitation to visit our country as a guest of the LCY.

DIPLOMATIC STAFF IN IRAN TO BE INCREASED BY 3

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] Britain is to send three more diplomats to Iran, the Foreign Office in London confirmed today.

One diplomat and two support staff will be sent to join the four already in the Swedish Embassy in Tehran, which has been handling Britain's interests since the British Embassy was closed in September. Two of the additional staff will be leaving London tomorrow and the third will follow shortly.

The move comes after the release by the Iranians last month of the three British Anglican missionaries held since last summer on suspicion of spying. British businessman Mr Andrew Pyke is still being held however, after being detained for seven months on suspicion of spying and embezzlement. Ministers have made it clear to the Iranian Government that although they want to improve relations between the two countries Mr Pyke's continued detention is creating difficulties, and it is unlikely that the British Embassy will be fully re-opened until this problem is resolved.

SPAIN'S FELIPE GONZALEZ ENDS OFFICIAL VISIT

[Luis Foix dispatch: "Felipe Gonzalez Meets With Mrs Thatcher"]

[Text] London, 11 Mar--"I must say quite clearly that the most forceful reaction to the Spanish regressive attempt in the entire Western world was that of Mrs Thatcher. Her forcefulness in defense of freedoms and democracy in Spain seems to me to be admirable."

With these words, Spanish socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez opened a press conference at the conclusion of his 3-day official visit to the United Kingdom. The Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] leader made the qualification, of course, that Mrs Thatcher's political stances are very different from those of his party, but the fact that the British prime minister described the 23 February attack against the congress as a "terrorist action" is something for which Felipe Gonzalez is really grateful.

The PSOE leader met for 30 minutes with the prime minister today on a day when criticisms of her economic policy announced in the House of Commons yesterday have been coming from all quarters, including her own Conservative Party ranks and also the confederation of British industry.

Coup and Democracy

Mrs Thatcher expressed interest in the political situation in Spain and wanted to know what the specific U.S. reaction to the abortive coup was. It seems that she did not like the first message sent by Secretary of State Haig very much. "I find it rather difficult to read people's faces, but I believe that it worried her," Felipe Gonzalez said. Mrs Thatcher and the politicians with which the PSOE delegation held contacts "expressed deep solidarity with the Spanish democratic process, realizing, however, that democracy is the only solution that we have."

With respect to the issue of Gibraltar, which was discussed, of course, both with Mrs Thatcher and with Lord Carringtom, Felipe Gonzalez adopted a statesmanlike stance, saying that he supports the Spanish Government's policy on an issue about which "there will be no difference of opinion."

Gate

Despite the fact that the British press frequently demands that the gate be opened, Felipe Gonzalez emphasized that the gate can only be opened if the British are prepared to adopt the measures which will give the Spanish people equal rights in Gibraltar, as is envisaged in the Lisbon agreements of 18 April 1980.

One of the issues which Felipe Gonzalez stressed most in his talks with Conservatives and Laborites is the urgent need for urgent and irreversible support for Spain's entry into the EEC. "We cannot accept being treated as a separate case again--previously because we did not have democracy and now because we have it but it is still young. The fact is that Spain's application has not been taken very seriously."

Felipe Gonzalez hopes that the abortive coup will give rise to new dynamics in our relations with Europe. He repeated to his British interlocutors an already known thesis that it is a matter of accelerating political and juridical entry into Europe, leaving full economic integration until later. "This is the best way to ensure that we are taken into account in the reorganization of the Community. If we are institutionally inside it, we will be involved in the entire process of transforming the Community."

"We Are Not Anti-NATO"

With respect to the issue of NATO, Felipe Gonzalez explained to Mrs Thatcher the PSOE's approach. "I do not know whether she was much in agreement because I believe that she would be in favor of enlarging the Atlantic alliance. But she listened to me very attentively." As to whether membership in NATO would guarantee democracy in Spain, Felipe Gonzalez said that NATO "only guarantees democracy where democracy does not need to be guaranteed, but consider the cases of Salazarist Portugal and the Greece of the colonels."

Our stance, he said, is not anti-NATO. "We know that in the event of a world conflagration, we would immediately enter the Western defense system through our bilateral treaty with the United States."

Felipe Gonzalez' stance on the renegotiation of the treaty with the United States "is the same that we had before the Reagan administration reacted so ambiguously on the night of the coup, despite the fact that it afterward made a statement in support of democracy."

Treaty With United States

"We do not want the present status quo with the United States to disappear. We wish to maintain relations of friendship and cooperation with the United States, and we are willing for the treaty to be renegotiated. However, we would like the new treaty to be relieved of the cultural and commercial contents and concentrate on the purely military contents."

Referring to Mrs Thatcher's economic policy, Felipe Gonzalez said that "it is not leading to control over inflation and also has a very high social cost." But he sought to emphasize that whereas in Spain "we have a 12 percent unemployment rate and spend 1.5 percent of public expenditure on unemployment, in Britian they earmark 5.5 percent to cover a 10 percent unemployment rate."

TO VIMA SEEKS GOVERNMENT REPLY ON MIRAGES

NC150854 Nicosia TO VIMA in Greek 15 Mar 81 p 1

[Text] Clashing reports have created questions and concern over the recent landing of military aircraft at Larnaca airport. We refer to the Qatar Mirages and to the reports that the landing was made without obtaining the relevant permission in accordance to normal procedure.

For this reason we pose the following questions: Was the landing made in accordance to the laws in force? Did any irregularities take place? Has any intervention been made and explanations been requested?

It would be good if an official announcement were made which would put matters in their place.

SPOKESMAN DENIES PRESS REPORT ON RESHUFFLE

NC161227 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 16 Mar 81

[Text] The government spokesman has stated that President Kiprianou has no intention whatsoever of reshuffling the government. The spokesman also described as a figment of the imagination today's press report according to which the president of the republic has promised AKEL to reshuffle the government, providing for the participation of AKEL representatives, after the parliamentary elections. The spokesman also stressed that there is no such promise or agreement. Finally, he added, that there is no danger, as the report maintains, of a change in the political identity of Cyprus.

BRIEFS

TURKISH CYPRIOT EXPORTS--The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus has exported citrus fruit, the main foreign currency earning crop of Cyprus, totalling 6 billion dollars in five months, authorities announced. The Federated State exports citrus fruit to Great Britain, Federal Germany, France, Netherlands, Belgium, Malta, Switzerland, Scandinavian and Arab countries. [Text] [Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1425 GMT 13 Mar 81 TA] The Turkish Cypriot Soil Products Council exported 400 tons of potatoes to Arab countries last week. This brought in foreign exchange worth about 10 million Turkish liras. Earlier, 750 tons of potatoes had been exported for foreign exchange worth about 18 million liras. SOVIET OFFICIALS DISCUSS NUCLEAR POWERPLANTS

[Text] Greek-Soviet talks of an exploratory and briefing nature were held yesterday as a result of the interest shown by the Soviet Union in the installation in Greece of the first nuclear station for the production of electric power. The talks were held between Industry and Energy Minister St Manos and Soviet First Deputy Minister of Power and Electrification Falaleyev, now visiting Greece, during a luncheon given by DEI [Public Power Corporation] Director R. Moisis.

The discussion dealt with the cooperation between the two countries in the field of energy and, particularly, the Soviet Union's participation in the constitution of lignite stations, the supply of electrical power and nuclear matters.

The Soviet deputy minister demonstrated, indirectly but clearly, his country's interest in the installation of a nuclear reactor in Greece; he also supplied his interlocutors with data about the technology followed in the Soviet Union and the advantages of nuclear stations over conventional forms of energy.

According to verified reports, among other things, Mr Falaleyev specifically stressed the following:

--The production cost of electric power by using nuclear energy is exceptionally low.
--A nuclear station with high antiearthquake structure costs 10 percent more than an ordinary nuclear station.
--The Soviets design nuclear stations which can stand an earthquake up to 9 on the Richter scale; they increase the safety of nuclear plants against seismic tremors according to the needs of the country where they are installed.
--The nuclear stations in all Eastern countries are of Soviet manufacture. The Soviets have even built a nuclear station in Finland and now are delivering to Libya a station of 450 megawatts.
--The Soviet Union maintains close relations with France in the field of exchanging information on developments in nuclear technology.

According to reports, Industry and Energy Minister Manos told Mr Falaleyev that it was too early yet for Greece to negotiate the purchase of a nuclear reactor, since its operation has been scheduled for 1990, and we are still at the stage of selecting the installation site. Nevertheless, Mr Manos went on, the officials handling the issue are turning their interest in all directions. They like to be informed about developments in nuclear matters as well as what happens in those parts of the world with developed technology in the field of nuclear energy.

PAPANDREOU CRITICIZES GOVERNMENT EARTHQUAKE PLANS

[Text] The subject of the earthquakes was debated in the Chamber of Deputies today. The meeting started at 1120 under Chamber Chairman Papaspirou.

Chairman of PASOK and majority opposition leader A. Papandreou was the first speaker. He asked the Chamber to express its support to the earthquake victims and to assure them it will do whatever possible to repair the damage.

Papandreou said the calamity that has hit the country is very great and that for this reason the issue does not offer itself to party or opposition exploitation. "We have a duty, however," he added, "to underline the mistakes and omissions of the state apparatus. It is unthinkable that the government should deal with every earthquake with surprise and a lack of responsibility at a time when it is already certain that earthquakes in Greece are a regular occurrence, to the degree that we can expect one every year."

Papandreou accused the government of not organizing the state apparatus to cope, on a short term basis, with the situation caused by earthquakes and, on a long term basis, of not providing antiearthquake defense. Referring to the omissions which he blames on the state apparatus, Papandreou said there is no program for keeping the Greek people informed. Instead, the people were deceived, with the result that panic was created. He charged that the state apparatus fell apart and that it was in no position to stop the panic. He added the state was virtually absent from the stricken areas, particularly those in Athens.

At this point he said that the direct, immediate and effective contribution of the armed forces must be underlined in respect to stricken areas outside Athens. Concluding, Papandreou stated that the government's responsibility is so heavy that the only thing which remains for it to do is to submit its resignation to the president of the republic.

Next to speak was Minister to the Prime Minister Stefanopoulos, who stressed the government sympathy to the stricken people and its deepest pain over those wounded and killed. The minister said Papandreou's criticism is baseless, because the government fully did its duty. Stefanopoulos also referred to the responsibilities of the press in respect to the panic created by the earthquakes.

In regard to the lack of planning for dealing with natural calamities, Stefanopoulos said that an emergency plan does exist and that it is on the basis of this plan that the government dealt with the Peloponnisos earthquakes of 1965 and the 1954 earthquakes in the Ionian Islands. He added that a legislative decree issued in 1971 provided general directives to appropriate ministries, the monarchies and to the armed forces for dealing with every natural calamity.

Continuing, Stefanopoulos dealt in detail with the dispatch of tents, food, medicine and other aid to the stricken areas. He specifically dealt with the speed with which such supplies were forwarded and with the quantities forwarded. He also referred to the restoration of communications, demolition of dangerous structures and to the registration of damage so that repairs can be made. The minister to the prime minister also dealt in detail with the activities of the various ministries in respect to aid furnished to each stricken area.

In reply, Papandreou stated that Athens, because of the way it has been built, provides no secure areas for its inhabitants. For this reason it was wrong to recommend that Athenians evacuate their homes.

Prime Minister Rallis then addressed the Chamber and stressed that the existing emergency plan was implemented. He said that the army was entrusted with the nome of Corinth while state public services functioned in other areas in the speediest and most effective way possible. All public servants with relevant responsibilities worked and continued to work for 15 days in an exceptional way.

The prime minister said that panic did not occur within the state apparatus but was among the citizenry. This panic was encouraged and augmented by banner headlines for days on end. Continuing, Rallis said that a large national misfortune has occurred, but that no additional taxation will be enforced to cope with it.

In conclusion, the prime minister stated: "What we must all declare is that the calamity belongs to the past. Restoration of damage and not exploitation of the situation belongs to the present."

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES TURKEY, MIDEAST ISSUES

LD161439 Paris LE MONDE in French 13 Mar 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] [Question] As a full member of the European Community, is Greece counting on its partners' support in its dispute with Turkey?

[Answer] We will never try to involve the Community in our dispute with Turkey. We simply hope that it will promote a just settlement. Moreover, we are fully in favour of Turkey ultimately joining the Community. At present, this is a remote possibility but we certainly do not oppose a move in that direction. My colleague Mr Turkmen knows that.

[Question] Has the military takeover in Ankara affected Greek-Turkish relations?

[Answer] Of course we favor a democratic regime. We have said that, but we added that we are prepared to continue negotiations with the new regime and I have no reason to be dissatisfied. Quite the reverse, I have observed that the desire to continue negotiations exists on the other side. As regards Cyprus, I hope that the present Turkish regime will help steer the dialogue to a constructive result. Cyprus is not a Greek-Turkish problem although it lies at the root of our dispute. The decision rests with the Cypriots. Our role can only be to help them find a solution. But I think the situation is favorable and that the time is right to reach a solution.

[Question] Why?

[Answer] First, it took some time for the two sides to adapt to the new situation; a realistic basis was established during the Cypriots' summit meeting. The Greek Cypriots --government and parties--are prepared to negotiate a just solution. Ankara must now do something to help. Turkey is not directly involved in the negotiations either, but it can exert much greater influence that we can owing to the Turkish Army's presence on the island. The generals' regime has much more opportunity to act in that direction than a democratic regime. First, because it is less sensitive to criticism and second, because it was the military who seized part of the island and it is they who can return it.

[Question] What about Greek-Turkish relations proper?

[Answer] The atmosphere has improved greatly. Is it not surprising that Greece is preparing to take part in the Ataturk centenary celebrations in Salonika in May? A Greek minister will attend the ceremonies. In all international organizations we are avoiding any gestures which might be embarrassing to Turkey, at the risk of sparking off criticism from the Greek opposition!

[Question] Do you think a reconciliation is possible similar to the reconciliation between France and the FRG?

[Answer] I regard it as an entirely realistic possibility. Fundamentally speaking, there is no problem dividing us if the borders are accepted. All we have to do is build up confidence.

[Question] The conflict over the delimitation of the continental shelf in the Aegean Sea persists, however.

[Answer] We are still proposing to submit this conflict for arbitration at the International Court of Justice in The Hague.

[Question] Greece has rejoined the Atlantic military organization, but the renewal of the agreement on U.S. bases is still being discussed.

[Answer] I hope to achieve a result in the next few weeks. But we want bases which are under Greek sovereignty and command and only placed at U.S. disposal for NATO tasks.

[Question] The recent crises are promoting the Americans to seek a system which makes more flexible use of their forces, in the Gulf, for instance. What do you think of that?

[Answer] Our position is the one on which the recent U.S.-Turkish agreement was based. It is not negotiable. In case of emergency, of absolute necessity in the Gulf, it would be possible to discuss the matter but we cannot accept anything else a priori. It is out of the question. You must understand our feelings on this--we have important interests in the Arab countries.

[Question] What role do you intend to play in the Community in the current major crisis?

[Answer] We warmly welcomed the European Near East initiative. On this issue we are very close to the French Government. We have special, I could even say preferential, relations with the Arab world. In this respect, Greek policy is an asset to the Community.

[Question] But the Community is seeking chiefly to balance Israeli and Palestinian rights. However, you do not have diplomatic relations with Israel.

[Answer] We have representatives in Tel Aviv and Israel is represented in Athens, but we do not have normal diplomatic relations or embassies. We intend to normalize this situation as soon as the opportunity arises. Our entry into the Community could have provided such an opportunity but the circumstances were not favorable owing to the Israeli policy in Jerusalem and the colonies on the West Bank. Let's hope things will change after the Israeli elections. [answer ends]

According to Mr Mitsotakis, North-South dialogue is a priority in Greek policy but the minister dodged any specific question on African problems, like the Chad problem. As regards East-West relations, he expressed approval of his French counterpart's statement "dialogue and a firm line," remarking that it should be "interpreted" according to each occasion and that his government stresses "dialogue." "It must never be broken off," he said. "Thus, in the Balkans, Greece has excellent relations with virtually all countries. I say 'virtually' because our relations with Albania are rather different."

The minister added: "We are urging Balkan cooperation on specific issues. For instance, a regional conference on transport will be convened in Sofia in June. Our very good relations with Bulgaria are particularly surprising since we were bitter enemies for centuries. We maintain those relations while remaining firmly tied to our NATO allies and our Community partners----when Karamanlis spoke with Zhivkov, Zhivkov said: "I know that you are in NATO and I am in the Warsaw Pact, but that does not stop us cooperating and maintaining our good relations, even in time of crisis."

As for Greece's action in the Community, Mr Karamanlis [as published] thinks it will contribute to "rebalancing" the Community in the south's favor. He thinks that Greece will work with France to secure realistic agricultural prices and a better system for Mediterranean products. The tension which surrounded the negotiations on Greek membership in December was merely a "hitch." "We were not accustomed to the Community atmosphere," the Greek minister said, but "we do not intend to act like spoiled children."

IRANIAN OFFICER HIJACKS PLANE, SEEKS ASYLUM

LD162031 Riyadh SPA in Arabic 1945 GMT 16 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 16 Mar (SPA)--An officer of the Iranian Air Force today hijacked a C-130 [as received; C-47] transport aircraft with 12 people on board and forced it to fly to Turkey. The Turkish authorities said the hijacker is a flight lieutenant in the Iranian Air Force and that he has asked for political asylum for himself and some members of his family. The military aircraft was on a domestic flight when it was hijacked and diverted to Turkey.

[Text] An Iranian Air Force pilot has defected to Turkey with his wife and son and asked for political asylum there. The flyer, bearing the rank of colonel, arrived in the city of Van in eastern Turkey in a transport plane of the Iranian Air Force. The Turkish authorities have imposed a blackout on the affair.

Asylum Request Studied

[Text] It has been announced that the request for asylum of the Iranian colonel who landed an Iranian Air Force transport plane at Van airport yesterday is being studied and that the plane and the rest of the crew have been returned to Iran. Following questions by reporters, the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate issued a statement saying that the Iranian colonel's request for temporary asylum is being studied in all its aspects within the framework of national issues, international agreements and rules.

Further Details

[Text] Van, 17 Mar (AA)--An Iranian colonel who flew to eastern Turkey aboard a military plane seeking political asylum Monday was being held in the eastern city of Van for interrogation while the aircraft and its 10-man crew were allowed to return to Iran. The colonel, who has been identified as Javit Hussein, was accompanied by his wife and child when he arrived at the (?eastern) city of Van at 1400 yesterday. Sources said the colonel, who commanded the plane, reportedly asked for political asylum from either Turkey or the United States.

Following talks between Turkish and Iranian Government officials through the night, the C-47 transport plane and it's 10-man crew were allowed to Iran. In Ankara, the Iranian colonel's request for asylum was being examined, sources said.

CUMHURIYET URGES CAUTIOUS REACTION TO ARMENIANS

NC170904 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 13 Mar 81 p 3

["The World Today" column by Ali Sirmen: "For God's Sake, Let Us be Careful"]

[Excerpts] Repercussions to the dastardly assassination of two Turkish diplomats in broad daylight in the center of Paris continue. The entire Turkish nation is showing a justified reaction toward the militant actions of the violent and fanatical Armenian organizations.

The reaction shown to the crimes is as justified as is the reaction shown to the governments which fail to catch the culprits and which keep referring to the 'just cause' of the Armenians.

We believe that it is high time we stopped acting as mere onlookers toward the organizations of these furious and fanatical Armenians. Merciless and deterring measures have to be taken. However, in embarking on such efforts, we have to make a proper evaluation of the situation.

The Armenian crimes will yield no result other than mere bloodshed. Dismembering Turkey and attempting to form new states within the borders of our nation are dark illusions which are impossible to realize. Those who cherish such illusions will painfully realize in the end that they are pursuing empty dreams.

In giving the right answer to those engaged in these militant acts we must correctly determine the targets. Who are they who kill our diplomats one by one and who attack the Turkish Republic? Are they the Armenians? No.

People of common sense who are in a position to see the truth know that a vast majority of the Armenians living in Turkey and aboard cannot be held responsible for these crimes.

We must not lose our temper over the latest crimes. Turks and Armenians have lived like brothers for centuries on the same land. There were no incidents whatsoever between these two communities until the imperialists attempted to divide Anatolia for their own interests by setting these two communities against each other. Armenians have greatly contributed to the culture of Anatolia. Turks who have been abroad have witnessed the friendly and brotherly approach of the Armenians. It is useful that these facts should be known and never forgotten. As a person who has always strongly reacted to the crimes of the violent Armenian organizations and who advocated more effective measures against them, I wish to state that in the light of these facts, I do not, by any means, approve of the language used by the Voice of Turkey radio which broadcasts to the Turks in Western Europe. According to a report carried by UBA [as received], this sentence was used in the abovementioned broadcast: "No other race in history has allowed itself to be used as tools by others as extensively as the Armenians have."

Such thoughts and such words not only constitute a gross injustice to the Armenians, with whom we have coexisted over the years and who have made valuable contribution to the Anatolian culture, but also serve as an example of racism smearing the name of our country.

Those who are tools and those who deserve to be denounced are the violent criminal organizations and their supporters, not the Armenians who live in Turkey and abroad. Similarly, it is possible to oppose and denounce the behavior of the party in power in France, but attacking the French diplomats and legations in Turkey would be tantamount to stooping as low as the criminal organizations. It is our right to react to the attacks on our diplomats not only in words and to take the necessary precautions, but it is also our duty to shun from words and behavior which amount to racism. For God's sake let us be careful!

MILLIYET Implicates Cyprus

NC170913 Istanbul MILLIYET Supplement in Turkish 15 Mar 81 p 7

[Akay Cemal Report from Nicosia]

[Excerpts] Denktas has said: "The Greek Cypriot administration is supporting Armenian organizations. The Armenian organizations enjoy Kiprianou's financial backing." Evaluating this statement, impartial observers in Cyprus say: "Denktas must be in possession of some data. He can't possibly talk like this for the mere purpose of incriminating Kiprianou."

Failure on the part of the Greek Cypriot press to denounce the Armenian acts of militancy against Turkish diplomats and the sympathetic language used toward the Armenians has not escaped the notice of foreign observers. As pointed out by Communal Liberation Party leader Alpay Durduran the other day, the applauding attitude adopted by some Greek Cypriot papers toward the militancy of the Armenian organizations and the frequent anti-Turkish Armenian communiques extensively carried by the Greek Cypriot press is looked upon as proof of the Greek Cypriot-Armenian collaboration.

Those who establish a link between Denktas' words that "the Armenians enjoy Kiprianou's financial backing" and the fact that the Armenian attacks on Turkish diplomats were generally started after 20 July 1974 Cyprus peace operation, advocate the view that south Cyprus plays a vital role in the attacks on Turkish diplomats. Though this argument has not been definitely verified, foreign diplomats too agree that the Greek Cypriot administration has a finger in the Armenian militant acts.

GENERAL EVREN REPLIES TO BREZHNEV MESSAGE

[Text] Ankara, 16 Mar (AA)--Head of State Gen Kenan Evren said the 1921 treaty between Turkey and the Soviet Union, based on the principles of equality, respect for independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, and noninterference in the internal affairs of each other, had contributed to the development of friendly and good neighborly relations between the two countries.

He made the statement in a message to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in response to an earlier message from the Soviet president on the 60th anniversary of the treaty.

Evren went on to express the importance Turkey attaches to strengthening relations with neighboring USSR in a variety of fields on the basis of respect for mutual rights and interests. Strengthening these relations would serve the interests, not only of the two countries, but also of regional and world peace, Evren added.

He assured Brezhnev the Turkish Government would maintain its sincere efforts in this direction.

TURKMEN RETURNS FROM TRIP; PAKISTAN VISIT CANCELED

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen returned to Turkey today after completing his official visits to Bangladesh and Malaysia. In a statement at Ankara Esenboga Airport, Turkmen said that his scheduled visit to Pakistan was canceled because Pakistani Foreign Minister Agha Shahi was in Jidda to attend the meetings of the Islamic Conference good will committee which had been established to put an end to the Iran-Iraq War.

Turkmen pointed out that his visits to Bangladesh and Malaysia were important in that Turkey's policies toward the friendly countries in Asia were stressed. He added that during his contacts, he discussed opportunities for cooperation between Turkey and these two countries.

A reporter recalled that in its defense cooperation talks with the United States, Greece wants guarantees in connection with its borders with Turkey. Turkmen said: Since we are two associates within the NATO alliance there are no security problems between us, nor should there be a question about a proportion between the aid the United States extends to us.

Turkmen expressed the hope that the talks between the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministry secretaries general being held in Ankara would be constructive and that progress would be made for the protection of the trust between the two countries.

On his forthcoming visit to the United States, the foreign minister said that he would hold talks with officials from the State Department and certain congressmen in Washington. He noted that the main topics he would discuss were the strengthening of NATO's southeastern flank, the Middle East and Afghanistan issues, the Iran-Iraq war, as well as military and economic aid. Turkmen said that during his visit he would also meet UN Secretary General Waldheim with whom he would discuss the issue of the attacks being perpetrated against Turkish diplomats.

TEAM MEETS WITH IRAQIS ON BORDER DELIMITATION

[Text] Ankara, Mar 15 (AA)--Turkish and Iraqi teams will meet in Ankara Monday to discuss delimitation, by up-to-date techniques, of the border between the two countries, the Foreign Ministry announced Sunday.

The Turkish team will be headed by senior consultant to the Foreign Ministry Asaf Inhan, while the Iraqi team will be headed by Director General of Legal Affairs Riyad Mahmud al-Qaysi of Iraq's Foreign Ministry. A protocol on border delimitation is expected to issue from the talks, the Foreign Ministry said.

Talks Begin

[Text] Talks have begun in Ankara between Turkey and Iraq on the redelineation of the Turkish-Iraqi border in accordance with modern technical methods. The Turkish and Iraqi delegations are headed by Foreign Ministry senior adviser Ambassador Asaf Inhan and by director general of legal affairs Riyad Mahmud al-Qaysi from the Iraqi Foreign Ministry, respectively. A protocol is expected to be signed at the end of the talks in which the redelienation of the Turkish-Iraqi border will be discussed as a whole. The technical work on the redelineation of the border will be carried out later within the framework of the principles to be stipulated by the protocol. The redelineation of the Turkish-Iraqi border was decided upon at the Turkish-Iraqi permanent committee meeting held in Baghdad on 3 May 1978.

POLITICIAN TO RETURN HOME FROM FRG EXILE

[Text] Bonn, 16 Mar (AFP)--Turkish political leader Mustapha Kemal Camkiran, who took refuge in West Germany following last September's coup at Ankara, announced here today that he would return to his homeland next week. A leading member of the Turkish Workers and Farmers Party (TIKP), Mr Camkiran said that he was returning in response to a warning by the military junta that 275 Turks who fled the country must return or lose their citizenship.

Mr Camkiran would be among the first of the exiles to respond to the warning. He said here that he was returning in order to bolster efforts inside Turkey to restore democratic rule.

Mr Camkiran also said that TIKP leaders had been jailed by the Turkish military because they had demanded agrarian reforms and defended socialist policies. He added that the party had about 10,000 members but was not represented in the Turkish parliament.

NEW LIBYAN OIL AGREEMENT GOES INTO EFFECT

[Text] The agreement stipulating that the payments for the oil received or to be received by Turkey from Libya be made in the form of exporting goods went into effect today. According to the previous agreement, Turkey was paying for 20 percent of the oil in the form of exported goods and the rest in foreign currency.

RESOURCES MINISTER DISCUSSES ENERGY ISSUES

[Text] Samsun, 14 Mar (AA)--The oil well 'Dincer'1", where technicians of the Turkish Petroleum Corporation [TPAO] recently struck oil, will go into regular production in a couple of weeks, Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol announced during a field trip at the (Cinarca) port of Samsun.

Bingol said sustained production at the oil well near the border town of Nusaybin, in the southeastern province of Mardin, would be conditional on the drilling of additional wells in the area. Seventy percent of this year's prospecting for petroleum would be undertaken in southeastern Turkey, he announced, with exploration also carried on in Adana and Thrace.

TPAO and a Swedish firm were exploring together for oil in the gulf of Iskenderun, he said. "The fact that foreign firms are interested in exploring for oil in Turkey is a good indication of the presence of oil deposits," the minister commented.

Bingol believed the state had to own and operate coal and lignite mines needed for electricity production and for heating, but could transfer other coal mines not vitally important to the private sector. For iron ore and other minerals, again the state should keep under its own control an adequate amount to meet its minimum needs, Bingol believed, and return the remainder to the private sector. Legislation for this purpose would be presented to the Council of Ministers soon, he said.

TCP LEADER BILEN DISCUSSES 26TH CPSU CONGRESS

[Interview with Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen by unidentified correspondent of Voice of Turkish Communist Party on the 26th Congress of the CPSU; time and place not given--read by announcer]

[Text] Question: What has the 26th Congress of the CPSU meant for the Soviet people as well as peoples of other countries?

Answer: The 26th Congress of the CPSU has emerged as one of the most significant international and historic events of our time. It was a splendid congress held by the CPSU, which has 17 million members. It acted as the representative of that huge Leninist group. The way the big forum of the 26th Congress of the CPSU was organized, Comrade Brezhnev's report, which creatively interpreted Leninism, and addresses made by delegates to the congress were a sign of the way the Soviet citizens viewed the future with great confidence and Leninist conviction. The congress proved once more the Communist Party's leading Leninist role in the Soviet community, in the establishment of communism as well as in all fields of economy, culture and existence. The Leninist unity of the party and the strong links between the party and the people were evident.

This fact, this development is the greatest source of strength for the Soviet community. The great respect felt by party members as well as others, and in fact by all the Soviet people both in the congress and outside it, in factories and everywhere for the CPSU and its Leninist leaders--who have been through enormous difficulties--was expressed with great enthusiasm.

The rallying of the Soviet peoples and all its republics around the Leninist party is a prominent factor in achievements and great gains by communism for the prosperity of the Soviet Union as well as the energetic development of the Soviet democracy.

The 26th Congress of the CPSU was attended by 123 delegations from 109 countries. As a result, the congress has once more become the concrete example of the ideal of proletarian internationalism. The participation of the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] delegation in such a forum has been very significant for our party, for our working class and our people at a time when a struggle is being waged. The participation of our party in such a forum has been a priceless and great honor.

The 26th Congress of the CPSU has proved that the international communist movement and the national liberation movements have further developed and strengthened. The congress has brought a new scope to the horizons of these movements.

The policies pursued by the CPSU in its international relations were particularly discussed and were given a prominent place during the congress. The issue of further developing solidarity--based on Leninist principles--among the socialist countries in the world were particularly discussed. Statements were made in favor of supplying continuous support for the independence of countries saved from the yoke of imperialism, colonialism and reaction.

At the very beginning of his report to the congress, Comrade Brezhnev especially stressed that for our party, our people and for mankind there was no matter more important in the international level then preserving peace. This congress will have deep effects on international developments. The deep interest evoked in world public by the new proposals brought up at the congress on the subject of preserving peace and of continuing the detente process proves this.

The TCP is supporting these proposals with all its force. Two separate courses and inclinations--which are in confrontation with each other--can be observed in the political field today. One view leans toward curbing the arms race, limiting arms production, eliminating mass annihilation arms, enhancing world peace, continuing the process of detente and defending the sovereignty and freedom rights of the peoples. This struggle, this policy is being led by the Soviet Union. The community of the social countries are all pursuing this course.

The other view leans toward undermining the process of detente, escalating the arms race, intensifying tension, inciting confrontations and creating new areas of trouble and conflict. This course is being followed by the expansionist and imperialist United States and its military, inhuman and most reactionary circles. These circles are grossly interfering in the internal affairs of other countries and are trying to savagely crush the struggle of the national liberation movements. They are deploying new middle-range nuclear missiles to West European countries of NATO. They are trying to impose the neutron bomb on them. The U.S. Government is envisaging an increase of 20 percent in military expenditures in the coming year, which will thus reach $220 billion. The American commander in chief of NATO forces is asking for more military expenditures from NATO member countries.

The expansionist and imperialist U.S. circles and the Reagan government are massing forces in the Persian Gulf. They are establishing new aggressive bases or fortifying the old ones in the region covering the Indian Ocean, the Red Sea and the eastern Mediterranean--including Turkey. Because Turkey is a member of NATO and because it has been forced to become the outpost of this organization, our country is being faced with the danger of being destroyed in a nuclear war. This dependence on NATO might produce even graver results for Turkey as our people--which is being crushed by a military dictatorship--cannot struggle against this danger and preserve peace with restricted liberties.

Question: What is the significance of the 26th Congress of the CPSU in terms of Turkey and our people?

Answer: Let us reply to this question by discussing new and concrete developments. Last month NATO units held a military exercise in our eastern provinces along the Soviet border. This imperialist show of force coincided with the last days of the 26th congress. This cannot be considered a coincidence. Earlier the Soviet Union had invited Turkish military observers to the military exercises it held in Caucasia, and indeed Turkish observers were present at these exercises. However, no Soviet military observers were invited to these exercises in which U.S., British, FRG and Italian troops participated in Sarikamis, the Pasin plains, and Palandoken. This stand is in contradiction with the good will and peaceful stand of our neighbor the Soviet Union.

During the 26th congress, Comrade Brezhnev reiterated his proposals for mutual steps with NATO countries for peace. He elaborated on these proposals. He implied that all of Europe could be included in this. These constructive proposals are particularly significant for Turkey's national security and the future of our people. Moreover, the Soviet Union has several times announced that it will not use nuclear weapons against countries that do not possess nuclear arms. It has expressed its readiness to sign a nonagression pact with any country that so desires. The Soviet Union has made such proposals to Turkey as well.

These peaceful and friendly proposals by our great neighbor are the most concrete and clear facts which foil the lies of Soviet threats fabricated and spread by imperialists. At a time when General Evren was the chief of staff of the Turkish Armed Forces, the prime minister said that there was no threat from the Soviet Union directed against our country. It was again during this period that a political document was signed between Turkey and our neighbor the Soviet Union.

During the 26th Congress of the CPSU it was stated once more that the Soviet Union wants to further promote its goodneighborly relations with Turkey. Though this is the situation, the Pentagon is intensifying its efforts in a bid to use our soil for the sake of imperialist interests. The U.S. imperialists were using the Incirlik airbase for their U-2 spy airplanes. Now they are contemplating stationing in Konya AWAC planes which are nothing but an advanced model of these planes. The ruling NATO centers are forcing Turkey into an arms race and to further increase its military expenditures. To pursue such a course would mean ignoring national interests and bowing to imperialist efforts to drag our country to destruction.

On the other hand, to take the Soviet peace program into consideration would be to the benefit of our people and to the advantage of our national independence and security.

The generals who are in power claim that they are followers of Ataturk. Bowing to imperialist demands is not compatible with the principles of Ataturk or national honor. Ataturk fought against the imperialist hordes that had invaded our country in order to save our national independence and sovereignty and in order to restore our national pride which was trampled upon by the imperialists. He led the whole of our people in this struggle. That is why he was considered a patriotic commander in chief.

In the fateful days of the national independence war, Ataturk appealed to Lenin and the renascent Soviet state. It is under such circumstances and difficult conditions that friendly relations between Turkey and the Soviet Union were established. On 16 March 1921, an agreement of friendship and brotherhood was signed between Turkey and the Soviet Union in spite of provocations from imperialists and domestic reactionaries. This agreement was ratified with great enthusiasm by the first National Assembly. This document, this historic event has been one of the most important sources of strength that led our national independence war to victory. In those days Ataturk addressed the assembly as follows: We are the friends of the Soviet Union because the Soviet Union is the country which has first recognized our national aspirations and has respected them. No one can succeed in making our people ignore this fact.

The 60th anniversary of this agreement has arrived. This anniversary is a holy occasion for communists, for the working class, for our people and for all patriots. The Soviet Union has never withdrawn the hand of friendship it has extended to the Turkish people. For 60 years the Republic of Turkey has lived with the Soviet Union along its border. The Soviet Union has helped our national liberation war with money, arms and other means. It continuously supported the development of our industry--particularly heavy industry. This was assistance based on equality of rights, and on our national and mutual interests. The Soviets have never asked for any political conditions that would hurt our national pride.

In the wake of the 26th Congress of the CPSU, a Soviet delegation arrived in Ankara within the framework of existing agreements. The delegation has brought proposals to expand the Seydisehir aluminum plant and the Izmir Aliaga refinery as it was done earlier with the Iskenderun iron and steel mills. Plans will also be discussed for the establishment and development of other heavy industry branches. All assistance for industrial development is made through long-term and low-cast loans. A new agreement was signed in Ankara to this effect.

On the other hand, the local and foreign monopolies which have been exploiting the country and imperialist circles such as the IMF and the World Bank are responsible for the deep economic crisis in which Turkey currently finds itself. Dependence on imperialism and monopolization keep on piling inflation, unemployment poverty on to the shoulders of our people. The elimination of the main democratic rights and freedoms under the military dictatorhsip are making the load of the economic crisis even more intolerable for the working class, for the toilers.

Two separate worlds, two opposite world views...the facts can never be concealed from our people. The reactionary and monopolist press completely distorts the truth. It incites anti-Sovietism, anticommunism. It tries to conceal Washington's pressure on Turkey, on certain sensible statesmen. The reactionary circles that pursue antipeople policies and the reactionary press thus support the efforts of U.S. imperialist and NATO leaders to undermine detente and peace.

General Guneral who wears a NATO uniform and who makes anti-Soviet remarks, the pro-American Kirca [Turkish UN representative] and their like depend on the most reactionary elements inside and outside the junta. These circles are becoming more active in parallel with imperialist pressures; and this leads to the intensification of the oppression of progressive and patriotic forces which defend peace. The antidemocratic prosecutions and trials of the leaders of progressive parties, of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK], of other class unions, of progressive youth and women movements, of peace movements and of the progressive publishers as well as the increasing number of arrests, the torture incidents which are reflected in world public opinion--all these things are clear examples of oppression of the progressive and patriotic forces.

Our working class and our people are waging a harsh struggle against Turkey's dependence on imperialism and NATO, against reaction, against the military dictatorship's harsh oppression of the democratic forces.

Imperialism is again pursuing a policy of setting the world on fire, and right from the middle of Europe. The Soviet Union and the world socialist system is opposing this trend with a policy of protecting detente and strengthening peace. In fact, the 26th Congress of the CPSU submitted a new peace program to the peoples and to the world. This congress is the greatest event of the present day.

TCP POLITBURO ISSUES STATEMENT ON CPSU CONGRESS

[Text] In its recent meeting, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Politburo listened to the report submitted by TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen on the 26th Congress of CPSU. The Politburo also unanimously approved the work of the TCP delegation at the congress. The Politburo assessed the 26th CPSU Congress as yet another historic success by the party of Lenin and by the Soviet people in building communism and in the struggle of the world peoples for peace. The Politburo considers our party's participation in such a forum a great honor.

The TCP Politburo greatly values the significance in principle of the decisions and documents adopted at the congress from the viewpoint of the national and social liberation struggle of the Turkish working class and the Turkish people as a whole. These documents and decisions are based on the profound analysis of world developments in accordance with Marxist-Leninist principles. The Politburo calls on all communists and progressive forces to carefully study the 26th congress decisions and documents in order to establish ties between them and their struggle.

The 26th congress once more revealed the gains of the Soviet people in the building of communism, the administrative role of the Communist Party in all walks of Soviet social life and the unbreakable ties between the party and the people. The TCP wishes new superior success to the Soviet Communists and the Soviet people in realizing the role of leadership in the universal historic development and in implementing the congress decisions. The Politburo noted that the CPSU Congress is a great contribution to the world socialist system, the further development of the unity of struggle between the communist and workers parties in capitalist countries and the national liberation movements and the further strengthening proletarian internationalism. This [word indistinct] platform has once again proved that the CPSU has successfully fulfilled its historic duty as the most experienced and effective force of the world communist and workers movement.

The Turkish Communists fully support the new great steps in securing peace in Europe and the world put forward by Comrade Leonid Brezhnev at the 26th congress following the peace programs submitted at the 24th and 25th congresses. These constructive proposals by the CPSU are very important for humanity at a time when U.S. imperialism and NATO sovereign circles have intensified their efforts toward increasing tension and accelerated the arms race in a bid to undermine world peace. This congress has once more stressed the leadership of the Soviet Union in securing peace which is the most pressing issue for humanity today.

The peace proposals announced by Comrade Leonid Brezhnev are also very important for our country. The TCP Politburo believes that a constructive and position approach by Turkey to these proposals will greatly contribute to our country's security and to peace and cooperation in the region at a time when U.S. imperialism and NATO sovereign circles have increased pressure on Turkey. The TCP calls on all patriots and all those opposed to Turkey being pushed into imperialist adventures to support the peace proposals of our great neighbor.

The CPSU Congress reiterated that the Soviet Union favors the further development of relations with Turkey. Developing Turkish-Soviet relations based on equal [words indistinct] and mutual interests might become a basis for overcoming the deep economic crisis our country has been pushed into by imperialist circles and domestic and foreign monopolies. The TCP calls on all forces that defend our national independence to support the development of Turkish-Soviet relations that will open new positive prospects for our country and for our people in all fields. The constructive Soviet peace proposals once more reveal that the anti-Soviet campaign encouraged by imperialist collaborationist reactionary circles aims at obstructing the development of the Turkish-Soviet relations whose 60th anniversary we are celebrating today.

The CPSU Congress has once more proved that there is a complete unity to view between the CPSU and the TCP on all problems. The congress further strengthened the friendship and brotherhood between the two parties. The TCP considers the further strengthening of brotherly ties with Lenin's party and country an internationalist duty.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Politburo, 16 March 1981

CHINA, EL SALVADOR TO RECEIVE HUMANITARIAN AID

LD171734 Brussels in French to Africa 1600 GMT 17 Mar 81

[Text] A great first in the history of the EEC: China has accepted humanitarian aid from the EEC for the first time. The European Ten are to supply food valued at approximately (?BF245) million for the populations of two Chinese provinces recently affected by natural catastrophes.

Another decision taken by the foreign ministers of the Ten, who have been meeting in Brussels since yesterday, is that essential foodstuffs will be sent to El Salvador as well as a sum of (?BF16) million for the local purchase of additional foodstuffs. The Red Cross has promised to see that this aid will not go to the belligerents in El Salvador but will go directly to the population.

Commissioner Comments on Aid

[Jean-Pierre Clerc Strasbourg interview with EEC Commissioner Claude Chesson; date not specified]

[Text] "What are the guiding principles of the Community's action over humanitarian aid? This is a very classic problem for us," Mr Cheysson explained. "The EEC intervenes whenever populations are suffering somewhere from natural disasters or from the effects of war, civil or otherwise. We have thus given our aid to Bangladesh, Nicaragua, Kampuchea, the boat people and Afghan refugees in Pakistan. Our constant concern is that this aid actually reaches the victims. To do this we go through specialist organizations: the Red Cross, the UN High Commission for Refugees, Doctors Without Frontiers, Caritas, People's Aid and so forth.

"For El Salvador we decided to release Fr4.5 million for the refugees in Honduras. This sum has already been spent. Then we granted Fr12 million, in cash and in kind, for Salvadorans in El Salvador. We have refused to convey this via the government junta: By being a party to the civil conflict it could not be a partner for us. So we decided to go through their churches. Then the Americans began expressing their doubts on the neutrality of the channels that we were preparing to use. We agreed to check. We asked the Red Cross mission, which went to the scene at its own expense, to see if it could find the means for our aid to reach those in need. We now have assurances. The EEC aid will thus be freed next week.

"This fortnight's delay is certainly regrettable. But it is basic for us that humanitarian aid must be politically above suspicion. We have not approved Pinochet, the San Salvador junta, Pol Pot nor Heng Samrin; we have nonetheless brought help to the populations of Chile, El Salvador and Kampuchea. I say this solemnly: Aid cannot, must not be a weapon. To accept that would be a return to the Middle Ages. One does make hostages out of the hungry."

Beyond these responses to specific situations, there certainly exists, until further notice, a broader concern at EEC level to give people, within the scope of available resources, "the chance to determine their future as they want, respecting their cultural identity and the political models of their choice. According to Mr Cheysson, this is, in particular, the sense of the aid granted to Nicaragua after the Sandinists' victory over Anastasio Somoza, on 19 July 1979, and aid partly in food and partly in technical assistance, especially in the 1980 literacy campaign.

"In Central America, as in the Caribbean," the EEC commissioner explained, "many people admire Fidel Castro out of hostility to an America whose conduct has often been provocative in the region, while wishing to be admitted to the Socialist International which is still held by the communists as an enfeoffed enemy, however, we--that is, the Europeans, Scandinavians, Canadians--we, consequently, can help these countries to bypass emotional conduct which clouds their judgment and to choose free development without obligatory alignment with the United States or the Soviet Union."

Whether or not this pleases our U.S. allies, Mr Cheysson observed again, "Europe has responsiblities to assume in the Caribbean region": Not just France, The Netherlands and Britain, with their West Indian Departments or territories, but indeed the EEC in its entirety. The Community is in effect bound by the Lome Convention to 19 political entities in the region: Independent or autonomous states, the majority tiny but some bigger, like Jamaica or Trinidad, most of them islands but three of them continental (Belize, Guinea and Suriname). All met recently in Guadeloupe, in the presence of EEC representatives. "The level and number of the participants (450 people, of whom about 15 were ministers) showed their interest in our approach, especially in the present circumstances," our interlocutor noted, adding: "Europe's obligations toward the Caribbean--obligations consecrated, I stress, by an international treaty and independent of the political regimes in power--are an element of stability for the region."

"This policy," Mr Cheysson believes, "must be incorporated in our actions toward the immediately neighboring countries: Those of Latin America. For this we must increase exchanges of views, as is already the case, with Mexico, Venezuela and Canada. Mexico, in particular, is a key state for the future of this entire region. A neighbor of the United States, it also realizes the importance of good relations with Europe. We must work together on specific development projects of benefit to small countries. (Note--requests of this sort have been made not only by Grenada, for the construction, challenged by Washington, of its international airport, but also by Dominica, which is conservatively inclined, and wishes to rebuild its road network damaged by Hurricane David in 1979). Thus everyone will realize that the latter belong to no one if not to themselves," the European commissioner concluded.

NEGOTIATIONS INTENSIFY BETWEEN SPAIN, COMMUNITY

[Text] Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca has been continuing his contacts in Brussels with Community leaders, with a view to clarifying the new prospects for Spanish entry into the Common Market. Yesterday afternoon, the EEC ministers approved a document indicating their willingness to intensify negotiations between Spain and the Community, given the new political circumstances in Spain following the abortive coup attempt.

Community sources point to French opposition to the entry of Spain, though it is being said that that attitude might change after the French presidential elections. Emphasis is also being given to the importance of the decision reached by the ministers yesterday giving the green light to financial cooperation with Spain. It should be recalled that the European Commission, the supreme executive body of the Community, has proposed an annual credit of $130 million for Spain, until Spanish entry takes place.

KURIER INTERVIEW WITH ISRAELI, PLO REPRESENTATIVES

AU131518 Vienna KURIER in German 13 Mar 81 p 3

[Heinz Nussbaumer report on interviews with Israeli Ambassador Ben-Ya'Acov and PLO Representative Ghazi Husayn in Vienna, on the first anniversary of Austria's recognition of the PLO; no date given]

[Text] Israel: "No PLO Moderation"

Early this week, Israel's diplomats in Vienna marched to the chancellory with a request, a suggestion: Austria should "reconsider" its PLO policy.

For: The legitimation of the PLO a year ago--as Ambassador Ben-Ya'Acov puts it--"has altered neither the policy nor the tactics of the PLO."

Israel's arguments: Terrorism by the Palestinians continues undiminished; the hope for a more moderate policy from 'Arafat has not come true; the contacts between the PLO leadership and the Soviets are closer today than a year ago.

The latest meeting of Chancellor Kreisky and Foreign Minister Pahr with PLO "foreign minister" Qaddumi left the Austrian side with rather a "feeling of disappointment," as Israeli diplomats believe. Compared with the high expectations of some Austrian media--that the PLO would cancel its constitutional article about Israel's annihilation--"the mountain has labored and given birth to a mouse."

Israel's ambassador: "The PLO recognition has not led to a lowering of the number of terror victims either--even among moderate Palestinians. The turn has failed to materialize."

However: Should the PLO publicly renounce its aim to destroy Israel and stop its terrorism, then "a completely new situation would result for Israel, too."

PLO: Israel Has Destroyed Everything

"Austria's recognition of the PLO has opened completely new aspects of understanding. It serves the peoples in Europe and in the Middle East." To the PLO representative in Vienna, Ghazi Husayn, Bruno Kreisky's initiative of last year continues to be an "important, courageous and constructive step," which has opened great chances for a just solution of the Middle East conflict. Yasir 'Arafat has repeatedly declared that we do not want to destroy anyone, but that we are only struggling for the implementation of our national rights.

However: "The Israeli policy has destroyed all chances for peace."

The motives for this demonstrative PLO pessimism: "Jerusalem's annexation by the Israeli parliament; the intensification of terrorism on the West Bank and in southern Lebanon; the attempts to assassinate Arab mayors; the deportation of prominent Palestinians; the settlement policy."

The PLO will reply to this "policy of land robbery and expulsion" next September by proposing Israel's exclusion from the United Nations. Should America veto this, as is to be expected, then the PLO wants to become the driving force of the United Nations' moving away from New York. Ghazi Husayn: "That is no longer a suitable place for the world organization." And: "Vienna has really stood its test as a UN center."

ROMANIAN SPY RING INCLUDES POLICE, CIVIL SERVANTS

AU171330 [Editorial Report] Vienna KURIER in German on 17 March, on page 15, carries an Erich Grolig report headlined "Spy Ring Uncovered", reporting that Austrian security policy have succeeded in tracking down "about a dozen" persons who worked "as spies for Romania." According to KURIER, they included members of the Vienna security police and civil servants, as well as "a bank employee in a prominent position." Police had been investigating the affair since the defection on 23 November 1980 of Romania Embassy cipher expert Florian Rotaru, who had taken with him confidential documents including a list of code names of what was believed to be a ring of Austrian agents working for the Romanian intelligence service. According to KURIER, it took weeks before the notes were decoded and then Austrian security police learned that some of the agents came from their own ranks, or were officials of Vienna ministries. "The state security police agents obtained for Romania data on Eastern refugees on whose cases they had worked. Against one of these police officials, who until 1980 held a leading position before he retired for health reasons, an arrest warrant has been issued," the newspaper says.

Vienna Domestic Service in German at 1100 GMT on 17 March says in a news report that the police official concerned is Edgar Berger, former chief of the Vienna police department for aliens and that a second police official CID Chief Inspector (Czernanski), has been arrested. According to the radio, another two persons who are not named and who have not been arrested so far are also suspected of having violated Austrian law in connection with the espionage affair.

In a subsequent program at 1113 GMT Vienna Domestic Service carries a Johannes Fischer and Erich Eichinger report reviewing the case of the "14" espionage ring suspects, noting statements made by Interior Minister Lanc at a Vienna press conference following this morning's cabinet meeting that one of the two arrested police official apparently had been working for the Romanians since the 1960's, but that the payment received by the suspects seems to indicate their espionage activity was not on a very significant level. According to the radio, Lanc said that he regarded as the "only really serious aspect" of the affair the fact that Austrian citizens had passed on information, confidential personal data, about persons who had come to Austria seeking political asylum.

In a later news report, Vienna Domestic Service at 1158 GMT states that Edgar Berger this morning made a partial confession. The radio notes that in his capacity as chief of the Vienna Police Aliens Department, Berger "had access to all files and details concerning refugees from East Europe", and that the same was true for Chief Inspector (Czernanski). According to the radio, the other two incriminated persons are a retired CID official and an employee of the postal administration. "According to still unconfirmed reports, two FRG citizens are also said to be involved" in the espionage affair.

JAPANESE ENVOY MEETS ECONOMY MINISTER CLAES

OW150701 Tokyo KYODO in English 0652 GMT 15 Mar 81

[Text] Brussels, 14 Mar (KYODO)--The Japanese ambassador called on Belgian Economic Affairs Minister Willy Claes late Friday, trying to appease criticism here against rising Japanese auto exports. Embassy officials declined to comment on the meeting, however, saying talks are reaching a crucial stage.

The meeting appeared aimed at paving the way for negotiations between the Japanese and Belgian Governments on Japanese-proposed steps to restrict auto exports. An official from the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry, who accompanied Ambassador Shigeru Tokihisa, is believed to have presented to Claes a Japanese plan for a voluntary cut.

Dissatisfied with Japan's earlier proposal, Belgium temporarily halted import licenses for Japanese autos. The Belgian Government has also threatened to invoke a safeguard clause of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) for emergency import restrictions to ease damage on domestic industries. Belgium's unemployment rate has climbed past the 10 percent level amid recession, which has forced Citroen and BL [British Leyland] assembly plants out of operation. Against this backdrop, the Belgian auto industry is calling on the government to erect trade barriers against Japanese imports.

NRC HANDELSBLAD COMMENTS ON U.S. LOS DECISION

LD171641 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 12 Mar 81 p 7

[Editorial: "Blunt Ax"]

[Text] The Reagan administration's working methods are threatening to have a disastrous effect on relations between the industrialized and the developing countries. In a couple of months the clock of the North-South dialogue has been turned far back. Just as in the Cold War years, Washington seems to see the Third World countries more as pawns or dominoes in the field of East-West tension. Other notions--such as the concept of global interdependence--seem to have been consigned to the lumber room.

A first indication of this was given by all the planned economies in the 1982 budget, which had already been introduced by President Carter. In the area of foreign aid, and especially in the case of the financial support to institutions like the World Bank, such serious cuts were made with a blunt ax that Secretary of State Alexander Haig found it too much. Since then the cuts have been somewhat more controlled. But the result remains disappointing.

This was followed last week by the unexpected announcement that the U.S. Government needed more time to study the results achieved so far by the Law of the Sea Conference and that the 10th round of negotiations, which began this week, must wait for the outcome of this. Shortly afterward it became known that the United States was dissatisfied with the articles in the draft treaty regulating the exploitation of the seabed, which give an important role in areas outside the 200-mile economic zones to an international authority. Finally it became known that Washington wants to completely dismantle the entire 320-article document which is now being given final consideration and about which, following years of negotiation, far-reaching agreement has been reached.

This behavior, testifying to a lack of sensitivity, has bewildered friend and foe alike. The Western allies are properly saying little about the fact that they have not been consulted, and the developing countries are now understandably trying to work out what the United States' word in the North-South dialogue is still worth.

SOVIET PROPOSAL ON NUCLEAR MISSILES REJECTED

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA)--The Soviet proposal for an end to the stationing of new medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe has been turned down again by the Federal Government, even after the latest statements by Kremlin adviser Georgiy Arbatov to the press in Bonn.

Diplomatic circles spoke in the federal capital today of a "wrong track" and of a possible further complication in the negotiations being sought, of which the West had a clear view. A moratorium, according to these reports, would bring a further delay on talks, from which Bonn hoped for results as soon as possible.

Precisely at this difficult time, clarity, consistency and firmness are necessary in politics, it is said. No great background noises, "new ideas and tactical moves," should be brought into the discussion over disarmament negotiations, it is said, with reference to the Soviet attempts. Regarding Arbatov's statements, it was said that the meaning of his words were not clear when he said that Brezhnev's moratorium proposal was not an ultimatum, but that failure to take account of it would make talks more difficult.

Clearly, there is within the Federal Government a certain annoyance that Moscow wishes, with the help of diplomatic offensives by Kremlin advisers in the West, to mobilize public opinion against the NATO double decision of December 1979, possibly to completely avoid negotiations after the stationing of Soviet nuclear missiles.

The diplomatic circles emphasize the readiness of the United States to immediately enter talks on medium-range weapons. The Federal Government hopes that the Soviet Union is still determined to proceed with these talks, as had been discussed last summer during the visit to Moscow of the federal chancellor and the federal foreign minister. Even the Soviet condition made at that time that the so-called forward-based Western nuclear weapons should be included in the new talks on medium-range weapons with the United States, which had then been accepted by Moscow, led to a complication which has not yet been overcome.

The disarmament expert of the SPD Parliamentary Group, Egon Bahr, has also described the Soviet proposal in the form presented as unacceptable. In a contribution prereleased in Bonn today for the SPD weekly VORWAERTS, Bahr did, however, add that he could not remember the Soviet Union ever making a proposal acceptable to the West without some alteration.

The SPD politician spoke in favor of a Western counterproposal, which was clearly also expected by the Soviet Union. At the start of negotiation with Moscow, the demand must be stressed that the Soviet Union should cease the stationing of its SS-20 missiles, at least until the autumn of 1983, the earliest that the West would be in the position to station its medium-range weapons. A stop to the technical preparations in the West would, on the other hand, mean a worsening of its position. Moscow's willingness to take part in talks and negotiations must be seriously tested.

Genscher Statement

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA)--Even after the recent Soviet elucidation, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today rejected Leonid Brezhnev's disarmament proposals as unacceptable for the West.

In a report to the SPD Parliamentary Group on his U.S. trip, Genscher, according to participants, said one should not spend too much time on Brezhnev's offer for a moratorium, a freezing of the present level of armaments in nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe. This proposal, said Genscher, according to these sources, could not be reconciled with the Western position.

The FDP politician, who was addressing SPD deputies for the first time at the invitation of their parliamentary leaders, called on Social Democrats to support Federal Chancellor Helmut Schimdt, whom he described as the "strongest voice" in the alliance. Genscher emphatically supported NATO's twin decision--controversial among some SPD elements--on new medium-range weapons and a simultaneous offer to Moscow to negotiate. Both parts of the decision--neither of which must be put in question--are of "essential importance." The aim of negotiations is to achieve an arms balance at the lowest possible level.

In the debate following Genscher's report, the SPD Parliamentary Group leftwing expressed skepticism about the policy of the new American Government under President Ronald Reagan, particularly concerning disarmament and the Third World. The fear was expressed that American policy could turn the Third World into an arena of conflict between East and West. Genscher did not comment. Basically, he advocates that Bonn should use the chance of influencing Washington's policy before it is finally formulated. The joint policy with the United States, he said, would be the more successful, the more reliably the allies cooperated with Washington.

According to participants, Genscher dismissed Moscow's offer to withdraw Soviet SS-20 missiles behind the Urals as being advantageous for the West. Kremlin adviser Georgiy Arbatov, who addressed the press in Bonn on Monday, had made it clear that this proposal, not expressly mentioned in Brezhnev's party congress speech, still applied. Before Genscher's report to the SPD group, diplomatic circles in Bonn had already rejected the proposal for a missile freeze as a "wrong turning" likely to complicate the proposed negotiations.

A certain suspicion is evidently felt in the Federal Government that, by means of diplomatic offensives, Moscow wishes to mobilize Western public opinion against the NATO decision in order possibly to avoid negotiations after the placement of the Soviet nuclear missiles.

USSR PROTESTS PORTRAYAL OF FRG IN TEXTBOOKS, MAPS

[Excerpt] Moscow, 17 Mar (DPA)--The Soviet Foreign Ministry today protested the principles concerning representation of Germany in school textbooks and maps, adopted by the Standing Conference of the Ministers of Education and Culture of the Federal Republic. In an aide-memoire handed to the Federal Republic's ambassador, Andreas Meyer-Landrut, the Federal Republic is accused of failing to observe its international obligations.

The Bonn ambassador rejected this charge. He told the Soviet Foreign Ministry that the Federal Republic's view on Germany as a whole was known to the Soviet Union. It did not signify any departure from the obligations assumed.

FRG NOTES EGYPT'S CONCERN OVER LIBYAN ROCKET TESTS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA)--The German Federal Government is aware of Egypt's concern over rocket tests carried out by the German firm OTRAG in Libya, but has no influence on the firm's operations. A Bonn Foreign Office spokesman said today that as long as no German laws are violated, these activities are the affairs of OTRAG, a private enterprise, and of the host country.

The external trade law, which makes the export of weapons, implements of war and certain technologies subject to license by Bonn, could provide a means of state intervention. But OTRAG has for years made no applications for export licenses for rocket parts, evidently because the production facilities are located abroad. The production of such material outside the German borders is not subject to government control nor are the private activities of German technicians abroad. The Foreign Office spokesman said that Bonn is closely watching OTRAG's activities and in no way supports them.

GENSCHER, ITALIAN MINISTER DISCUSS EC COOPERATION

[Text] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA)--The foreign ministers of the Federal Republic and Italy, Hans-Dietrich Genscher and Emilio Colombo, today called for a closer political union of the countries forming the European Community [EC]. The Bonn Foreign Office said that after their meeting in Bonn, held shortly before next week's EC summit conference in Maastricht, both men affirmed their positive attitude toward the formation of a European union. They also discussed problems of the European Steel Market and agricultural policy and, in their exchanges on their recent visits to Washington, had agreed on a 'positive' assessment of the new administration's foreign policy.

RUEHL ON SCHMIDT-GISCARD TALKS, GENSCHER U.S. TRIP

DW171253 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 1215 GMT 16 Mar 81

[Text] [Question] It has been said that the meeting between President Giscard d'Estaing and the federal chancellor in Blaesheim, Alsace, was most satisfactory. That seems to me a very enthusiastic description of a meeting between two politicians. What was so particularly successful about the meeting?

[Answer] Well, first of all, four politicians were involved: Giscard d'Estaing, the federal chancellor and both foreign ministers. The federal chancellor himself gave this description. This was how he felt about it. He considers this discussion a new confirmation of a very deep agreement--I would like to call it--on the European and the international situations, the prospects and the economic difficulties of European countries. He considers this harmony a guarantee for good and orderly development, not only of German-French relations, but also of European cooperation and the further development of the European Community with its Common Market, its problematic agricultural policy, fishery policy and so on and so forth.

[Question] These are some fields in which one can agree, but there are many where one does not. One of the fields which was assessed equally enthusiastically was the appraisal of American policy. Both foreign ministers were present at the meeting--as you said--and they were also in Washington. American policy was strongly praised after the Blaesheim meeting. Actually, American presidents have always sought particularly good relations with Europe right after their inaugurations. But is this a long-term perspective? Did the two foreign ministers bring back the feeling from their Washington talks of something new in European-American contacts?

[Answer] You know that last week the cabinet discussed the report by Foreign Minister Genscher who had just returned from Washington. The federal chancellor and other cabinet members have expressly and--I would like to say--emphatically congratulated him personally on his successful mission. This was done because it was not certain from the very beginning that such full agreement would be achieved between the Reagan administration and the Federal Government, such as with a view to the treatment of Soviet negotiation offers on confidence-building measures for the whole of Europe, including the European part of the Soviet Union, or the readiness to discuss Eurostrategic nuclear arms.

There is certain doubt contained in your question which is not unfounded, judging by historical experience. The federal foreign minister gained the impression in Washington that the U.S. Secretary of State Haig as well as the aides of the President and President Reagan himself take the far-reaching consultation offer seriously.

The new American administration is still in the first phase of forming its political opinion and will. Therefore, the influence exerted by the European partners on this first phase of further American policy formation is most significant. The federal foreign minister brought back the impression that everything he outlined there on behalf of the Federal Government and the European partners in general--relations with East Europe, relations with the Third World, particularly the treatment of the difficult situation in Poland, treatment of the continuing problem of Soviet occupation of Afghanistan, the attempt to bring about harmony between Islamic and Arab states--that all this has been quite well understood and recognized with regard to its significance for the American policy.

[Question] Did President Giscard and Federal Chancellor Schmidt have the impression that they would be able to maintain the standpoints of European policy in the long run? Different standpoints exist between Washington and Europe with regard to the problem of having a dialogue with the Soviet Union.

[Answer] Yes, that can be assumed after the brief report the chancellor gave here after his return; that can be assumed from some of his remarks. One must know, however, that the European partners are not trying to maneuver the American President into a situation he would prefer to avoid or postpone.

European interest is natural with regard to a resumption of the Geneva negotiations between Americans and Russians on nuclear medium-range arms. That has been outlined by all who have been to Washington. The U.S. secretary of state has envisaged resumption within the foreseeable future, that is, in the near future. European governments will exert influence in the NATO consultations.

The Federal Government, the federal chancellor personally as well as the federal foreign minister are convinced that prior to a meeting between General Secretary Brezhnev and President Reagan, the American President should take the necessary time to make sure there are thorough preparations not only for the issues of the talks, but also for the possibility of bringing the talks to a good conclusion. Hasty talks would make little sense with regard to the common aim of strengthening security and promoting Western interests.

[Question] One last question with the request for a brief answer: The meeting between Giscard d'Estaing and Schmidt took place in Alsace and at a time when President Giscard d'Estaing had an election meeting. Was this meeting, the joint discussion part of the French election campaign?

[Answer] As a spokesman for the Federal Government I cannot answer that, but the connection with regard to its timing cannot be contested. On the other hand, however, the meeting took place so discreetly that it could not be considered interference by the friendly federal chancellor in the French election campaign.

GENSCHER TALKS WITH SPAIN'S FELIPE GONZALEZ

[Text] Bonn, 18 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today received Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, for an exchange of views. Recent events in Spain in connection with the failed military putsch were discussed. Felipe Gonzalez, who is in Bonn at the invitation of the SPD, will also brief SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Jurgen Wischnewski today on developments in Spain in the wake of the attempted putsch.

In his talk with Felipe Gonzalez, Genscher again expressed the Federal Government's respect in that "the democratic institutions in Spain had stood the test at a grave hour." According to the Foreign Ministry, the two politicians were in agreement that a brisk pace in conducting the negotiations on Spain's entry into the European Community was important for the strengthening and safeguarding of Spanish democracy.

GENSCHER'S DISCUSSION TOPICS IN POLAND REPORTED

[Text] Bonn-Warsaw (DPA)--Poland's economic problems and the Polish wish for credit from the West, as well as the development of East-West relations against the background of Poland's tense political situation, are at the forefront of the themes to be discussed on Thursday and Friday by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and the Polish leadership in Warsaw. During his visit, which is closely linked with the foreign minister's Moscow trip at the beginning of April, Genscher will meet party chief Stanislaw Kania, Prime Minister Wojciech Jaruzelski, his Polish counterpart Josef Czyrek and President Henryk Jablonski. After British Foreign Minister Lord Carrington, who visited Poland in October, Genscher is the second leading Western politician to have talks with the leadership in Warsaw since the start of the Polish crisis last year.

Diplomatic circles in Bonn confirmed on Tuesday that Poland--until the planned rescheduling of its debts to the West amounting to around $23 billion (30 percent of which are owed to the Federal Republic) by 1 July--has made its case for additional credits. The extent of which, however, has not been disclosed. The catastrophic economic situation in Poland has also increased the need for assistance in the area of food imports. Bonn has already made its contribution, to the extent of DM95 million, within the framework of the EEC food aid program for Poland. Bonn has also guaranteed a further DM220 million untied credits toward the rescheduling of Poland's debt servicing toward the West, as well as guaranteeing a credit volume of DM240 million to make possible the Polish import of semifinished goods.

According to diplomatic circles, the Federal Government is following with great attention the efforts of Jaruzelski's government to stabilize the political and economic situation. At the same time, Bonn's attitude of strict noninterference in Poland's affairs was affirmed. It was stressed that this attitude is also expected from "all others."

Within the framework of East-West relations, Genscher will discuss the progress of the Madrid CSCE followup conference with the Polish leaders, with particular reference to preparations for a European disarmament conference, for which Poland, in addition to France, has made a concrete proposal. Genscher's talks will also deal with the question of nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe and the recent relevant proposals by Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev, which Bonn has rejected, however. The Polish leaders are urgently interested in a continuation of East-West detente as a condition for greater scope in domestic policy. They will probably urge Genscher to have Bonn use its influence with the United States and the other NATO states for a response to Brezhnev's proposals.

According to diplomatic circles, in German-Polish relations, Genscher will acknowledge that Poland has fulfilled the agreement to allow 125,000 people to leave for the Federal Republic up to last August. It was stressed that Bonn also considers it important that future applications to leave the country are accepted in accordance with the agreements and processed promptly. Genscher will also bring up hardship cases among those wishing to leave Poland.

It was learned in Warsaw that the Polish side will complain to Genscher that in its internal legislation and administration of justice the Federal Republic is not keeping to the agreements of December 1970 and the CSCE Final Act. Warsaw has strongly criticized the February decision of the ministers of culture that the German borders of 1937 should be shown in schoolbooks. Bonn has rejected a protest on this score by the Polish Foreign Ministry.

FRG, GDR OFFICIALS DISCUSS TRADE IN LEIPZIG

[Excerpts] Leipzig, 16 Mar (DPA)--Trade between the Federal Republic and the GDR is expected by both sides to increase this year. State Secretary Dieter von Wuerzen of the Federal Economics Ministry stated today after a discussion with GDR Foreign Trade Minister Horst Soelle in Leipzig that agreement exists in assessing the extraordinarily good results of the previous year when there was an increase of 18.7 percent to DM11.7 billion. Soelle stated that the GDR will do everything it can to ensure that this favorable trend continues. Even taking into consideration price increases included in the 1980 increase rate, there was a real increase of approximately 6 percent.

Von Wuerzen also confirmed the impending conclusion of an agreement on augmenting coal exports from the Federal Republic to the GDR. Under this, the 1981 deliveries may total DM450 million. As Franz Roesch, head of the trust agency for inter-zonal trade, added, in 1980, the GDR imported 960,000 tons of hard coal and coking coal from the Federal Republic to the tune of DM266 million. The increase in volume resulted from a wish on the part of the GDR, which apparently wants to compensate in this way for reduced coal deliveries from Poland.

Von Wuerzen also spoke to Soelle about the increase in the minimum exchange requirement for Western visitors to the GDR and said that this problem must be regarded in the overall political context. Soelle, in return, explained the GDR's stand.

As in earlier meetings between Von Wuerzen and Soelle on the sidelines of the fair, the problem of offset deals was also discussed. Von Wuerzen pointed out, he said, that the GDR's economic need for such barter deals is no longer so urgent since it achieved a surplus of DM470 million last year in pure trade with the Federal Republic. He drew attention to the difficulties which arise particularly for small and medium-sized firms in barter deals.

According to Von Wuerzen, Soelle made it clear that the GDR will continue in the future to strive for surpluses in goods trade with the Federal Republic, since it must expect deficits in the service sector. In 1980, the GDR had a deficit of DM494 million vis-a-vis the Federal Republic in this sector.

CDU POLITICIAN INTERVIEWED ON DRAFT DEFENSE BUDGET

DW172056 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0510 GMT 17 Mar 81

[Excerpts from reporter Hauschild interview with CDU Bundestag Deputy Kurt-Peter Wuerzbach; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Measured by the usual parliamentary practice, the the CDU/CSU Bundestag faction's defense experts yesterday did something extraordinary.

They returned to the sender, Defense Minister Hans Apel, the secret explanations on the Defense Ministry's 1981 draft budget, that is to say, detailed data on the financing of armament. This is the way the union seeks to refuse consultations on the matter in the defense committee. Its argumentation is that the figures offered are not only obsolete but wrong with regard to the approach. Why this refusal to enter budget consultations?

[Answer] "Refusal" is what it sounds like in the first instance. The situation, however, is that we as the opposition have the legal obligation and the task to exercise the right of control vis-a-vis the government, and this can be done only if reliable figures are on the table. This is what we do not have. Everybody in Germany and also in NATO has noticed that not only something but quite a lot is in a jumble regarding the Defense Ministry's finances. And in this situation, we are supposed to enter discussions two weeks from now. The figures that are at hand until now got mixed up through the 3-day secluded session recently held by the minister. And we do not have any basis at all. What we also know is that he has not continued medium-term planning at all, and this is to say for a period of 5 years, ever since he is the minister up there [at Hardthoehe], so that no solid, reliable and current basis exists for this ministry at the moment.

[Question] Proceeding from the premise that the arms figures are not current, what do you consider the reason for these figures indeed not depicting the genuine conditions?

[Answer] To begin with, it appears conclusive to us that unlike all his predecessors the minister has not rendered an account to himself time and again in a stiff checking, not from year to year with regard to the next fiscal year, but also for a period of 5 years. He did not ask himself: What do I need militarily, what are the financial means at my disposal and what actually can I produce from them in this period of time. He has omitted and protracted such planning, opened one pot and filled the other with it, and thus erected a bow wave which was bound to sweep him over some day. This is the stage in which we find ourselves now.

[Question] Hence, if there are no substantial changes in the overall situation, that is to say if you do not get any new figures, then this actually means that in the last analysis the union must vote against the defense budget if it does not want to be inconsistent?

[Answer] Since the voting on a budget actually is not only one in which figures are summed up and in which one takes a look below the line to see whether the result is correct, but also means approval or refusal of the policy of the minister and the ministry as part of the Federal Government, we may proceed from the premise that considering everything that this minister during the past few years presented as "successes" in the field of defense, in the ranks of the Bundeswehr with regard to defense motivation in the Federal Republic, the condition of NATO, the condition of finances, as well as the issues of armament, personnel, training and infrastructure that he cannot reckon with our approval anyway.

[Question] Is your refusal to cooperate not at variance with the latest demand of your own party leader Kohl who called for cooperation with the government if substantial national issues are at stake?

[Answer] Well, everybody knows and even more so this government that it can rely on the opposition concerning national issues and issues of our own and the West's security and that it can rely on it apparently even more than on its own two parties which now form this government. And likewise, our move now on the defense budget plan and the medium-term five-year plan is absolutely not at odds with it. To create clear-cut conditions in this respect, the minister must only put on the table the valid, reliable and actualized program and the corresponding data. Then, we will be at his side in the search for alternatives, in financing and similar issues, even unpopular issues.

[Question] And if he does not submit new figures, then you will call for his resignation some day?

[Answer] Let us not speak of resignation. This is not what matters. What actually is at stake, however, is to restore for ourselves and for the alliance partners in this important and sensitive sphere of the Defense Ministry a calculable basis for planning, on which the preparedness of the armed forces is based, as it were.

DIE WELT COMMENTS ON MOSCOW'S SUMMIT EFFORTS

[Commentary signed W.H.-E.: "A Thorn For Bonn"]

[Text] The farther President Reagan postpones a summit meeting with the Soviet State and government chief, the more flexible the Soviets become with regard to interpreting the "peace offensive" Brezhnev claims to have started with his speech at the Moscow party congress. The most recent example was given by Arbatov--in Bonn of all places.

Arbatov is not merely a Central Committee member, but also an important adviser to the Soviet leader. He tries to deprive Brezhnev's suggestion on a missile moratorium in Europe of its ultimative character and to describe Brezhnev's 1979 statement on possible negotiations on a withdrawal of Soviet SS-20 missiles behind the Ural mountains as being still topical.

This indicates how much Brezhnev is concerned about a meeting with Reagan. In this quick position game vis-a-vis the United States, the Kremlin wants to involve Bonn in playing the role of an icebreaker. That takes place in line with the carrot and stick method.

On the one hand, Abrasimov and Honecker create a good atmosphere in Leipzig on the eve of Genscher's visit to Moscow--as if Honecker had never made the below the belt blow with the increase of the minimum exchange quota. On the other hand, however, PRAVDA continues its campaign against the federal chancellor and the federal foreign minister because both stick with NATO's decision to close the arms gap.

The purpose is fanning the impatience Bonn has shown with regard to a summit meeting, so as to urge the Federal Government to make President Reagan find his legs. Caution is called for. The tone of the Western music is not made in Bonn or Paris, but in Washington again.

PAPER ON DISPATCH OF U.S. ADVISERS TO YUGOSLAVIA

OW171517 Bonn DIE WELT in German 17 Mar 81 p 6

[Commentary signed CGS: "Belgrade's Advisers"]

[Text] At a first glance, the report that the United States intends to dispatch military advisers to a number of countries--including Yugoslavia--seems puzzling. Yugoslavia is a nonaligned country with a communist regime. Part of Yugoslavia's independence is a certain balance regarding the arms with which the Yugoslav Army is equipped. So far, however, Belgrade has been equipped with Soviet arms, in part because these arms were cheaper. But in Tito's last years, the Yugoslav Army tried to obtain arms from the United States--particularly antitank missiles. The question now is: Will the United States dispatch technical instructors to Yugoslavia to acquaint the military there with U.S. arms--or is even more involved? President Carter opened his term in office with unfortunate statements, namely, that America will not help Yugoslavia in case of a Soviet attack. Reagan seems to be of a different opinion. One can only hope that the new President will handle the very delicate issue of Yugoslavia with the necessary determination as well as delicacy of feeling.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU ON U.S. 'ARMS' OBSESSION

[Commentary signed -ZER: "Nothing But Arms"]

[Text] It is customary in the United States to grant a new President or a new government a certain period of respite--the famous 100 days. Critics of official policy, also maintain restraint during this period. After all, the new brooms must learn how to sweep.

In principle, that is certainly reasonable. The new men in Washington, however, make it difficult for the observer to stick to this custom. The speed with which one public statement or announcement follows the other has something hectic about it. There could not have been much time for thinking things through.

President Reagan and his combatants won the election campaign under the motto that they would make a weak America strong again. Since they rule now, they seem almost obsessed with the word strength and with arms and always more arms. Although the period of respite has not yet run out, it must be said that this way of presenting themselves is not merely irritating, but it also gives an unnecessarily distorted picture of American political possibilities.

It seems that the time has come for somebody to remind the new American Government that the world has more than just military problems. Although it is being repeated in Washington to the point of satiation, arms are not a cure-all. Since the United States is now beginning to think about a new "policy" in Angola, it ought to first inform itself about its own old mistakes and not talk first of all about rifles.

NEWSPAPERS VIEW LAW OF SEA CONFERENCE ISSUES

DIE WELT

DW131052 Bonn DIE WELT in German 10 Mar 81 p 11

[Report by Bonn correspondent Heinz Heck]

[Text] The Bonn union faction, like the Federal Government, has considerable reservations against the Law of the Sea convention in its present form at the beginning fo the 10th conference round yesterday. CDU Bundestag Deputy Peter Kittelmann mainly criticized the intended restrictive regulation for deep sea mining.

The individual points are: production restrictions to the advantage of terrestrial mining, unacceptable conditions with regard to compulsory technology transfer (to the advantage of developing countries), exaggerated financial burdens for private sea mining firms, as well as the establishment of a super authority whose work would be expensive and inefficient. All this makes it impossible for German industry to take part in deep sea mining at the present time.

Kittelmann recalled that these planned regulations contradict everything the German Bundestag has formulated, and "with a very large majority," as criteria for a Law of the Sea conference. The Federal Government is asked not to make any concessions violating the core of free access to the deep sea treasures.

Bonn should, therefore, fully support the attempt by the new American negotiating leaders "to reconsider and call into question the significant current results in the field of deep sea mining." Simultaneously, a joint attitude of all industrial states should be aimed for in the final phase of the conference.

With a view to the signal-like effect the results of the conference will have for a new world economic system, Kittelmann advises the German foreign minister to visit the conference either on the occasion of his present visit to the United States or in April.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

[Dr Rudolf Dolzer article: "On the Coasts and on the Seabed"]

[Excerpt] The current [Law of the Sea] conference would have had plenty of problems anyway due to the questions that have not yet been settled. Rather unexpectedly the conference is now facing even much more difficult problems. It has been known since the middle of last week that the new U.S. Government does not feel committeed to the results attained in the preceding nine sessions. In terms of negotiating technique, the draft now available had been reached by way of "consensus." The points had been debated until no conference participant expressly raised any more objections. The U.S. delegation, within the framework of this procedure, did not come out against the results achieved thus far. Last week, however, the State Department in Washington announced that in line with the new administrations views, it is impossible to wind up the objective negotiations by the end of the 10th session which is now beginning. At the moment, the administration is still in the process of reviewing the "serious problems" raised by the course and the results of the conference to date.

The Americans will raise no objection to the intention of enhancing considerably the rights of the coastal states in the regions close to the coasts, in accordance with the convention, to that extent, the United States, because of its geographical location, is one of the states which would gain advantages by the new law. Matters are different where the future utilization of the seabed is involved. For the first time, it is planned for this sector that an international organization extract, process and market raw materials. To the extent that private enterprises will be allowed to operate in this field, they are obligated under the present draft to cede their technologies (including those of their suppliers) to the international authority at "fair and reasonable" prices. What this envisages, therefore, is a forcible transfer of private property--a novelty in international life with respect to policies in private property.

While an obligatory transfer through the international authority as the administrator of the treasures of the sea (the "common heritage of mankind") might still be somewhat justifiable by the categories of the hitherto valid, liberal international economic system, this is no longer possible for the additional obligation that is envisaged, namely, that such property be turned over to competitive enterprises from third countries as well.

By all appearances the Reagan administration reserves for itself the right to reject this system of dirigisme and protectionism (or some parts of it) as unacceptable. What the Americans might have in mind is the effects of the system in the Law of the Sea itself and, beyond that, the consequences which concessions in system policy [ordnungspolitisch] of this nature will probably have for the general future organization of international economic relations.

After the extensive and lengthy negotiations which led to the results attained thus far, a change in the U.S. stance will largely meet with lack of understanding at the conference. Nevertheless, the Americans may succeed in bringing about some changes even now, for two reasons: On the one hand, the increase in authorizations in the coastal area as envisaged in the convention is as good as sure for the Americans even now. The results attained at the conference in that respect have been largely accepted internationally and have already prevailed considerably in practice. For these reasons, the U.S. negotiating position is favorable in this respect. On the other hand, it is doubtful because of the circumstances of power policy and geography, whether a new Law of the Sea convention could attain practical significance unless it were approved by the United States.

During the negotiations to date, the United States concentrated, above all, on the military consequences of a new convention, the regulations on straits. Since a regulation favorable to the Americans has been established on this point, the Carter administration was obviously prepared to accept solutions for the seabed which cannot particularly be regarded as a framework for an attitude determined by the market. It was almost inevitable that the new government's absolute primacy given to the policy of the market economy determining the system would call this position into question. It is obvious what significance such an amendment of the draft of the convention along the lines of this reorientation would entail, particularly for the Federal Republic of Germany, which is oriented toward technology and is poor in raw materials.

PREMIER BARRE INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN POLICY

LD180125 Paris Domestic Television Service in French 1930 GMT 17 Mar 81

["Great Debate" program: Journalists interview Premier Raymond Barre--live or recorded]

[Excerpts] [program intercepted in progress] In fact, I believe that in the present circumstances and bearing in mind my office it is necessary for me to retain a certain reserve in respect to what is being called the presidential campaign. This does not mean that I would like to conceal my thoughts or my wishes. I have explained my position clearly, and I would like to express it clearly this evening. I believe that it is not in the interest of France to change presidents. I think it is in its interests to retain the president it has had for the last 7 years. I say this deliberately.

[Question] Everyone uses General de Gaulle's name, including you who knew him and were, I believe, appointed commissioner in Brussels by him. Have you changed the principles of the foreign policy of the Fifth Republic, set out by General de Gaulle, and in what way have you changed them?

[Answer] I believe that there are three principles to be observed in foreign policy. First, the interests of France must be borne in mind. Second, a foreign policy must never be conducted subject to domestic policy considerations. And, third, (?irresponsible) verbalism must not be confused with effective diplomatic action. I wanted to remind you of this because these principles, which are respected in other countries, are unfortunately not always taken into consideration in France. Well, you asked me a very specific question: Has there been a change in French foreign policy?

[Question] A diversion.

[Answer] Yes, a diversion. Well, sometimes the government is accused of Atlanticism. At other times it is accused of pro-Sovietism. I would merely say that foreign policy is a complex matter and it is possible to get lost in the subtleties of relations between diplomats, but there are certain axes which are fundamental. And there is a foreign policy of the Fifth Republic. I do not see when the fundamental axes of this policy were changed.

[Question] Let us have some examples.

[Answer] I will give you some, if you like. I will now tell you the principles which I think are fundamental, and I must say that if they were violated in any fashion, I would not have remained in office.

The first principle is national independence, and national independence means defense. Who can say that we have not devoted a substantial effort to our defense? It is an economy which is not adrift. Who can say that we have not done what is necessary to rebuild our economy? It is a currency which is not in a free fall, and here I can call to remembrance General de Gaulle.

The second principle of French policy is participation in the alliance of free peoples. We are in the Atlantic alliance. We always said we would remain there, no one challenges that, but although we are in the alliance, we accept no protectorate.

The third principle is an obstinate refusal to witness the division of Europe into two blocs, and all French policy must be understood on this basis. The superpower policy means that Europe, and in particular France, cannot express itself, while all the action by the Fifth Republic has been to ensure that Europe should rediscover its freedom of action and should be able to express itself.

The fourth principle is to build an organized West Europe where responsibility is with states, since only states can commit their peoples.

And lastly, the final principle is cooperation with developing countries, and, in particular, with the African countries which can count on us for their progress and their security whenever they ask us.

These are the principles, so let anyone tell me, on each of these fundamental questions what is the diversion, what is contrary to the fundamental directions of the Fifth Republic?

[Question] Premier, you know that there are other cases for which you are criticized. In addition to Afghanistan, there is, in particular, the Warsaw case. Why did the president go to Warsaw to meet Mr Brezhnev? What is your position?

[Answer] I can tell you this: The president of the republic asked for my opinion. And after thinking about it, since I was well aware that it was a delicate matter, I told him that in my opinion he should go to Warsaw, and for two reasons.

The first is that in the state that international relations were at that time--this is forgotten a little too often--it was necessary for him to be able, bearing in mind the relations between France and the Soviet Union, bearing in mind the processes of consultation that exist, that he should be able, with all the credibility and authority he has, to tell Mr Brezhnev and the Soviet authorities a certain number of things, in particular that the detente to which we were attached and to which the Soviet Union is itself strongly attached, had received a very serious blow and that the limit had been reached. It needed saying, and who could say it better than the president of the French Republic and say it in a credible way?

The second reason I gave the president of the republic was: A lot of noise is being made about this Kabul affair, and Afghanistan. I had been on a private visit to the United States a few weeks previously. I realized that dialogue had never ceased between the two great powers, that it would resume sooner or later, and it was better for France not to allow in any way matters to be dealt with, in particular regarding Europe, since it was not only a matter of the Afghanistan issue, there was also the arms issue. [sentence as heard] Dialogue should not be established with us excluded. France's position should be clearly set out. There it is.

[Question] We recently noted that there have been two issues which have (?shaken) Europe--agriculture and fishing. We will not go into details, but each time France has found itself opposing Great Britain. This raises a basic problem--won't it be necessary one day to reconsider Great Britain's presence in the EEC?

[Answer] I am quite familiar with this European affair. I will say first that here again we have remained true. France took a decisive part in building the Community, and this Community after a brilliant start is now experiencing great difficulties for two reasons.

First, for international reasons. It is easy to conduct a great venture in a period of expansion and prosperity; and it is much more difficult to do so, especially when the interests of the states do not always coincide, when the international situation has deeply deteriorated. I consider that it is already something that the Community has been maintained as it is in the international situation.

Well, the second reason is what I would call the consequences of expansion, of the first expansion. Great Britain entered the Community, and entered the Community when we were well aware that on a certain number of fundamental points it could not adopt the rules and mechanisms of the Community. Naturally, the negotiations resulted in Britain deciding to join the Community, to adhere to its principles, to its established practices, but all those who knew the problems knew well that sooner or later the following simple question would have to be dealt with--will Great Britain adapt to the Community or will the Community adapt to Great Britain?

[Question] What is your reply?

[Answer] My reply is that we must see that the Community is not dislocated by these difficulties. I know it will not be an easy task.

[Question] On the industrial front, Mr Premier, it is being said that over recent years it has been transformed into a real funnel--that is, that our products are no longer competitive and that we will be invaded by foreign products--Japanese, for example. In your opinion, do you accept some of the things which are being proposed during the campaign, that in one way or another the curtain must be lowered and our frontiers must more or less start to close?

[Answer] That would be suicidal. It must be well understood that a country which is the third or fourth world exporter of industrial products and which is the second world exporter of agricultural products and which is the second exporter of services, if this country closes up, if it isolates itself, it is going against its own interests.

However, in certain cases, there are important problems which must be dealt with. If there is abnormal competition, or fraudulent competition, then we must bring into play all our opportunities under the treaty of Rome and international agreements. And in the case of Japan, there is a very simple principle that we French have adopted and which we are asking the Community to adopt, which is that the concentration of Japanese exports on a certain number of sectors which command our industry in the future, this concentration is impossible, since we are not going to let ourselves be excluded by a concentraion of excessive exports--we will not let ourselves be excluded from industrial sectors or branches which are capital for our further development. And this is what we must look at with our partners so that the Community can react to this attack, but do it not to retain the status quo but to better adapt to the future.

[Question] Since Europe has now become something of a joke at the moment, when only about 10 years ago it was a great hope, in particular for the younger generations, is it not necessary, as certain voices in the electoral debate now are proposing--and because it is electoral that does not mean it is necessarily minor--to renegotiate the treaty of Rome and use the opportunity perhaps to propose to Britain a real choice of staying or leaving, since apparently British public opinion is not very conclusive on this matter--it is not sure that the British want to stay in the Common Market?

[Answer] I think that sooner or later a solution must be found to Great Britain's presence in the Common Market.

[Question] For example, you are not convinced that it is its future?

[Answer] I cannot pronounce in that fashion on such a difficult and delicate subject. What I want to say is that it is for us to see that what is the core of European construction should be safeguarded and that we must do this in close liaison with the Community country which is our partner and our friend in European construction--I mean the Federal Republic of Germany. What has been Europe's luck for a certain number of years is that the cohesion and cooperation between the FRG and France has been maintained and, I would even say, has been intensified. It is on this basis that we must deal with the problems. But these problems must be tackled with much seriousness, and I will add, firmness.

MITTERRAND QUESTIONED ON PRESIDENTIAL AMBITIONS

LD171424 Paris Domestic Television Service in French 1930 GMT 16 Mar 81

[Interview granted by Francois Mitterrand of the French Socialist Party, to Alain Duhamel and Jean Elkabbach--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] What made you run as the Socialist Party candidate again Mr Mitterrand?

[Answer] First, because I think that France needs a different policy and thus a different president. Then, since we are talking about me, because I feel I am well-equipped for it, because I have acquired the experience of responsibility, not only in the government in my youth, but also in parliament and finally as the head of the Socialist Party for 10 years. I shall do for France what I have done for socialism. Finally, because I think that although I may still be a long way from the end of the road, I have followed a straight line from the time when I called for a rallying of all the popular forces to change politics.

[Question] It is practically impossible, if not at least very difficult, to get to power without the Communists, but is it just as difficult with them?

[Answer] In my opinion, as long as the Communist leaders remain, as they are today, estranged from the union which they severed, as long as they confine themselves to a passionate, systematic and sometimes calumnious antisocialist attitude and campaign, as long as they play a double game between the right and the left, as long as they remain aligned to their foreign policy positions on such serious issues as Afghanistan or Poland, it does not seem to me reasonable to think it likely that the government could pursue a harmonious policy if there were Communist ministers in it. The answer, therefore, lies with the Communist leaders. Are they prepared to return to the conditions which prevailed when we were able to finalize the signing of the joint program in 1972?

[Question] But, Mr Mitterrand, the Communists and Mr Marchais keep saying all the time that it is you who should change.

[Answer] When Mr Giscard d'Estaing, Mr Chirac, state: "I want to rally the French people," that usually means I want to rally the French people minus the 5 to 6 million of them who vote Communist. I would never say that. I have worked for 15 years to rally without exception all those who can contribute to rebuilding France. Someone else said and did this before me: De Gaulle, in 1944. It was a time of war and he needed everyone. Now it is a time of crisis and I will need everyone. That is why, having noted as I just have the Communist leadership's enormous, overwhelming responsibility for their return to a kind of desired ghetto in which they have again shut themselves up, I have always told the Communist men and women electors that I intend to achieve the broadest popular rally for national recovery.

LE MONDE: GRAIN EXPORTS TO USSR CONSIDERED

["J.G." report: "France Asks EEC for Permission To Export 600,000 Tons of Wheat to the USSR"]

[Text] France is going to ask its European partners for permission to export 600,000 tons of wheat to the USSR in 1981. According to Paris, this request does not constitute a violation of the agreement signed on 15 January 1980, in which the Nine pledged not to increase sales to the USSR above the normal level so as not to replace the United States, which had just decreed an embargo.

The French argument is based on the fact that in 1980 we exported a tonnage of wheat to the USSR equivalent to the one now in question thanks to export licenses taken out at the beginning of the year. Paris also maintains that these exports are necessary because of the size of the 1980 grain harvest and the current stocks.

Backed by the producers and cooperatives, the government authorities could also argue that the embargo which Washington decided to impose after the invasion of Afghanistan has not been properly observed by the big grain-producing countries. (Since the beginning of 1981, Argentina has sold 6 million tons of grain to the Soviets and General Viola, the future president of the Republic of Argentina, will have talks with Mr Reagan on this question in Washington on 17 March).

Within the European Ten, the French stance will be disputed mainly by the FRG and Britain. which, it is true, do not have surplus grain. The essence of their argument is that a although France did export 600,000 tons of wheat in 1980, that figure could not be used as a point of reference because French exports in previous years were markedly lower. London and Bonn are traditionally hostile to Community agricultural exports, which their public opinion regards as scandalous when the USSR is concerned. In a more general way, the two countries are not particularly in favor of asserting the EEC's vocation as an agricultural exporter.

Finally, France's partners in Brussels might argue that it is inappropriate to annoy the United States. In many respects, the firmness shown, or not shown, by France in these negotiations represents a test whose outcome will be closely observed by farmers and various political groups.

LE MONDE REPORTS 17-18 MARCH AIR FORCE EXERCISE

[Text] The biggest air defense maneuver, code-named Datex-81, will take place throughout the national territory on 17 and 18 March. These massive air maneuvers should enable the French Air Force to train in conditions as near reality as possible.

The raids will be concentrated in limited time periods and geographical sectors and at altitude levels in the upper air space permanently available to commercial aviation.

The exercise will involve airbases, radar stations, virtually all the tactical and strategic air forces' combat means, the army's antiaircraft batteries and the navy's attack aircraft. Air force units from the FRG, Belgium, Spain, Britain, Italy, The Netherlands and Portugal will take part in the exercise during which French Air Force units will be "rotated"--in other words, redeployed--from one base to another over the whole of the national territory.

SOCIALIST ON 'GOVERNMENT CONTRACT' WITH PCF

[Unattributed report: "Mr Mauroy Reaffirms Need for 'Government Contract' With Communists"]

[Text] Mr Pierre Mauroy, spokesman for the Socialist candidate, stressed to the journalists of Radio Station Europe 1's press club on Sunday, 8 March, that there is "a convergence of criticism" against the government between the Gaullists and the Socialists. "Be that as it may," he added, "Mr Chirac is presenting a rightwing program, a classically rightwing program, which is very far from the Socialist program."

The Mayor of Lille also asserted that in the second round of the presidential vote, "many electors will not want to start another 7 years of the outgoing candidate," and that Mr Mitterrand "rallies the left, the democrats and all those who have been disappointed." He added: "Thus Mr Francois Mitterrand's victory becomes more credible every day."

Questioned on the PS wish to negotiate a "government contract" with the PCF in the event of the Socialist candidate's victory, Mr Mauroy replied: "At the time of the union of the left, the joint program was a compromise between Communist and Socialist theses. With the disunity, every candidate is running in the first round and the contract problem will arise with the parliamentary elections which will follow (Mr Mitterrand's possible election).... The negotiation of a contract will be essential since there is disunity and it will be up to the people of France to arbitrate."

Questioned finally on the PCF's attitude toward the second round, Mr Mauroy exclaimed: "How can you expect that all those people earning Fr3,000 per month, how can you expect that all wage earners, that all those who truly have a leftwing outlook, all those who trust the left, how can you expect them not to be in favor of change in the second round, not to want to beat the outgoing candidate and enable Francois Mitterrand to be elected? They will all be there and no one, I say indeed no one, will be able to hinder this movement. Whoever stood up to hinder it would be erased from the entire history of the left and would be erased forever from the history of the working people and of the working class of this country."

PCF'S FITERMAN DISCUSSES ELECTION CAMPAIGN ISSUES

[Unattributed report on Joseph Palletou 9 March France-Inter interview with PCF Central Committee Secretary Charles Fiterman: "Only One Insurance Vote for Working People"]

[Text] Yesterday, Charles Fiterman, secretary of the PCF Central Committee, was the guest on the program "Let's Speak Clearly" on France-Inter. Joseph Palletou asked him about the progress of Georges Marchais' campaign and Lionel Jospin's recent remarks directed against the PCF.

Charles Fiterman: The way Georges Marchais' campaign is developing, in my opinion, the more time passes the clearer it is going to be that his result in the first round on 26 April will be the key factor in determining whether we can head for change or not [sentence as published] It is becoming and will become increasingly clear to working men and women that unless Georges Marchais makes a satisfactory showing, the road to change will be barred.

Why do I say this? Well, to reply directly to your question: First, the campaign is typified by an upswing, an upswing and no two ways about it.

This can be seen from the meetings; Georges Marchais is approaching his 50th and has brought together 370,000 people or something like that. Other leaders are doing the same. I want to Valence on Friday; I had 2,000 people, a few more than Francois Mitterand at Beauvais and I am not a candidate.

New memberships are going well: 25,000 since the start of the year. The circulation of our papers is increasing. Fundraising is going so well that we have decided to increase our target from Fr3 million to Fr4 million.

All this is developing in this way because Georges Marchais is not content with vague promises, he is not content with asking people to vote for him as if he was a sort of supreme savior. He is offering concrete solutions and a policy to change the present situation, to resolve the country's major problems. He is giving a clear answer to the question: who are we to govern with? He says quite clearly: I am in favor of a coalition government with Communist and Socialist ministers.

J. Palletou: But if everything is going well, why do you take exception to Lionel Jospin's remarks?

Charles Fiterman: I heard Lionel Jospin on your station yesterday--and I took care to listen carefully--and he spoke of trumped-up quarrels. But that's just too easy! After all, just imagine for a moment that I have just said on this station, as secretary of the Communist party: I am closely interested in Socialists who are criticizing Francois Mitterrand and the present leadership of the PS, in certain people who are criticizing him from the outside and others who are inside in the apparatus and doing the same thing.

I can already hear the outcry there would be from all the political commentators. They would say: This is inadmissible interference! Anyway, everyone knows that these are not used in the workers movement. That is completely contrary to the tradition of the left.

Not only did Lionel Jospin make that statement last Tuesday in his paper, the PS paper, but he repeated it 2 days later, this time in JOURS DE FRANCE, which is Marcel Dassault's paper. I have it right here; it's a pity we're not on television! Once again he strives to set Communist militants against their leaders and he calls our party leadership a "handful of men installed at the head of the Communist Party." I am one of that handful myself and I can tell you that it is a hurtful expression!

J. Palletou mentioned J. Elleinstein who is openly urging people not to vote for Georges Marchais.

Charles Fiterman: Jean Elleinstein is of no importance. I do not even know who he is! Let us return to Lionel Jospin. What is important is not really the specific consequences for the Communist Party of this move, because in the past there have been plenty of attempts to shake our party and undermine it by other methods as well, including the worst. And everyone has had a go. But nobody has ever succeeded.

The important thing is the political significance of this behavior. The fact that a few weeks before an election as important as the presidential election the PS leadership's prime concern, as it is demonstrating, is to attack our party and shower it with blows cannot fail to make working people ask themselves a question.

How can you want to defeat Giscard d'Estaing and head for change when you are attacking the political force without which this is impossible? Because without the Communist Party, without a pretty strong and influential Communist Party and unless Georges Marchais gets enough votes, it will not be possible to tilt the balance in the right direction.

J. Palletou: Have you no fear of a protest vote against the Communist Party leadership?

Charles Fiterman: It is very simple. What you see is the game which Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand are both playing, a game which consists of trying to make the first round disappear, a game which consists of saying: That is my opponent over there. They have chosen each other a bit like in table tennis, "your turn, my turn"; they keep sending each other the ball. It is a game which consists of not answering fundamental questions, of not saying what policy they will pursue and with whom they will pursue it, of asking the working people and the voters for carte blanche.

Well, when you see this situation, I say--and we are warning and will continue to warn working people in the weeks to come--"careful, that is a trap because they want to drag you down a blind alley once again, down the road of unkept promises, and a policy which would tend to aggravate current policy.

These are the reasons which convince me that, far from a protest vote, in the first round we will get a safeguard vote, an insurance vote for the Communist candidate, because this is the only way for working people to acquire the means to head for change.

PAPER DECRIES U.S. 'SCUTTLING' OF LOS CONFERENCE

LD170959 Paris LE CONTINENT in French 12 Mar 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Looting Treasures of the Sea"]

[Text] The foreseeable failure of the Conference on the Law of the Sea will pass unnoticed--a failure which will cause no great surprise among observers. All big so-called dialogue summits such as UNCTAD, GATT, the North-South dialogue and so forth have dragged on pitifully from partial success to partial success amid growing indifference. No one seems to believe in it all any longer.

However, the scuttling of the New York conference by the Americans only 24 hours after its opening is of much more far-reaching significance. At a stroke, Reagan has just swept aside 7 years of negotiations and compromises. This is a true image of present attitudes, whether openly expressed or not, and above all a very big mortgage on the future.

In fact, our world, 17 percent of whose surface is covered by water, can exist only thanks to the oceans. And mankind will be able to survive only if they are utilized in a rational and productive manner. It is the last virgin sphere and also the last chance.... For the mainland, which has been divided into spheres of influence, submitted to pressures and ruled by monopolies, finds it difficult to change at a speed consistent with present needs. Oceans, which are to be reclaimed, represent a unique opportunity for starting again on a basis fair to the entire international community.

Now what can be observed? Simply that, under pressure from the multinational groups which control world mineral resources, the new White House team rejects the new system for the exploitation of polymetallic nodules, in contravention of undertakings given by its predecessors and without consulting its allies. The value of those famous "potatoes" of cobalt, copper, manganese and nickel which line the ocean floor has been estimated at $2 trillion. Such U.S. companies as Kennecott Copper, Lockheed and U.S. Steel have already spent $200 million for the purpose of studying the feasability of exploiting those resources.

This is completely at variance with the spirit which prevailed only a few days ago among the delegations working on a new Law of the Sea according to which these resources are "the common heritage of mankind."

All hope has not been lost, because the United States needs to achieve an agreement on the security of an free passage through the 116 straits on which sea traffic throughout the world depends--an agreement inseparable from a global Law of the Sea Treaty. But the fact remains that a spring has again been broken.

LE MONDE: U.S. POLICY WILL SLOW NORTH-SOUTH TALKS

[Editorial: "The United States and the Third World"]

[Text] The fears aroused in Third World countries by the conservative views held by Mr Reagan's "new Americans" have proved well-founded in several spheres over the past 2 months; the reaffirmation of the Monroe Doctrine in Latin America, the abandonment of Carter's concept of human rights, the tendency to view international problems in terms of East-West confrontation, and the concentration of aid to countries determined to oppose Soviet expansionism, have all confirmed the "reactionary" philosophy, in the literal sense of the word, which inspires the Washington leaders--in other words, their desire to react against those aspects of previous policy which seemed to them to be unjustified concessions to the "mood of the times" and to give priority to the defense of vital U.S. interests once again.

It remained to be seen whether that philosophy would be reflected at world level, in other words, by a new approach to the negotiations which have been going on for several years to improve relations between the industrial world and the underdeveloped countries. Initial indications confirm that this is indeed the intention, but that at the same time those responsible for the new U.S. diplomacy must take the current international situation into account and cannot simply overturn the result of almost 10 years of patient efforts.

This is true of North-South dialogue and the event which is to crown it this year; a summit meeting in Mexico between the leaders of the main industrial and underdeveloped countries in the world. Washington probably does not really believe in the worth of such meetings, and that is one of the reasons Mr Reagan asked for an adjournment. This request has been granted by the organizing countries at a meeting in Vienna, but the U.S. President could not very well hold aloof from the operation--which he has taken care not to do so far--without annoying his colleagues in Mexico and Paris--two active architects of this project with whom he intends to maintain the best of relations. Nonetheless, in Washington's view, a summit can only serve to conclude negotiations not to open them--and this is also one way of playing for time.

The U.S. stance on the Law of the Sea is more ambiguous--a sphere in which much more specific progress has been made in the past few years. Washington initially seemed to be calling the result of this work into question, hinting that a reexamination of U.S. positions was essential and firing its entire delegation at the conference. The strong reactions prompted by that attitude seem to have persuaded the officials to show greater realism; two of the former team's experts have just been reinstated and the military leaders have pointed out that the planned convention will considerably improve passage through the ocean straits. In any case, the conference will be able to open 1 week late, which is one achievement.

Nonetheless, although Washington apparently does not intend to paralyze the mechanism of major North-South negotiations, that does not make it possible to forecast its positions on the essential points. All the indications are that those positions will be tougher than the ones adopted by the previous administration and that progress, if there is any, will be even slower than in the past.

PCF SECRETARY SEES 'FIFTH COLUMN' WITHIN PARTY

[Text] When the PCF Central Committee ended its work, PCF Secretary Charles Fiterman gave a press conference. He was accompanied by Pierre Juquin, member of the Politburo.

Charles Fiterman primarily stressed that the PCF Central Committee had decided to reply with vigor to the PS aggression, because of the grave political significance of this attempt. "We are," he said, "confronted by Socialist leaders who reveal blatantly that they are in the process of contributing their support to, if not of organizing for themselves, an attempt to shake the Communist Party, relying not only on outside elements but also, according to Lionel Jospin, on Communists actually inside the party."

"What would the comments be," he goes on, "if we had such an attitude? You do not behave like this toward somebody whom you regard as a potential ally. It is treating our party as an opponent.

"And this is all the more serious since it is happening in our present battle. How can you really claim to want to beat Giscard and then behave in this way?" Charles Fiterman asks.

And he continues: "We want to beat Giscard and his ill-omened policy. And it is precisely for this reason that we are putting these questions to the workers and the country. It is the reason why we refuse to be reconciled to this situation.

"Obviously, we can only overcome these difficulties insofar as the workers themselves, the men and women of this country who want change, act and support our battle and vote for Georges Marchais. This is how the PS will come to adopt a different way of behaving.

"We are not reconciled to unemployment, inflation and the difficulties of the workers. And we are determined to do everything in the time that remains to create a situation in which the authorities and this policy can be beaten, in which the path toward change can be opened up."

A journalist asks Charles Fiterman whether sanctions would be taken against those Communists who are participating in the PS operation against the PCF.

"It is one small aspect of the question," the PCF secretary replied, "if only because the party members taking part in this attempt are very, very few, only a handful. But this is quite simply a question of political honesty and good sense: When you are in a party and engaged in a battle like the presidential election, when you have a candidate and yet conduct a campaign against your party, against your candidate and for another candidate, this is obviously a ridiculous and politically wrong situation.

"I tell you," Charles Fiterman continues, "that all other political formations share this reasoning because it is so logical. I have noticed that Francois Mitterrand has stated that if a Socialist representative puts his signature to nominate--I do not say to support, but simply to nominate--a candidate other than the Socialist candidate, that representative would be immediately debarred from the PS. I do not see why this reasoning should be valid for the PS and not for the PCF.

"I consider that, when you are a PCF member, it is logical to take part in the battle which the party is fighting. In any case, it is totally impossible to fight a battle against your own party, against your party's candidate and for another political formation. That is illogical."

PLO 'FOREIGN MINISTER' TO MEET WITH COLOMBO

[Text] Rome, 18 Mar (ANSA)--The diplomatic chief of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) Faruq Qaddumi will arrive in Rome later today. Qaddumi will meet tomorrow with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

This will be the fifth time the PLO foreign minister meets with an Italian diplomatic chief. The first meeting was in Cairo in 1977 when Qaddumi met with then-Foreign Minister Arnaldo Forlani. A second meeting took place in New York in the same year. He made two visits to Rome in 1979.

Qaddumi's visit will permit an exchange of opinions that takes on special interest in that it precedes by a few days the European Economic Community (EEC) meeting in The Netherlands in which the European Ten will discuss the EEC Middle East peace initiative decided at the Venice summit last year.

GOVERNMENT TO SUPPLY WARSHIPS, DRYDOCK TO IRAQ

[Text] Nicosia, 16 Mar (AFP)--Italy will supply Iraq with 11 warships and a floating dock under a 1,800 million dollar contract, the Middle East Economic Survey (MEES) reported here today.

It said the deal seems to have been concluded late last year but that the Italian Government had only recently granted export authorization to the state shipyard Fincantieri.

The contract covers four Lupo type frigates, six corvettes, a logistics ships and the floating dock. The deal should have gone through earlier but was held up by the U.S. which delayed an export licence for eight General Electric turbines to be fitted in the frigates, MEES said.

PCI'S PAJETTA ON EUROCOMMUNISM, CPSU CONGRESS

LD180851 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 15 Mar 81 pp 12-14

[Nello Ajello interview with PCI International Affairs Department Chief Gian Carlo Pajetta; no date or place given]

[Excerpt] Question: You are fond of saying that history does not necessarily proceed by dint of saber thrusts. In your opinion, were the recent incidents in Moscow a saber thrust dealt to the PCI?

Answer: What happened in Moscow has highlighted difficulties which we do not want to dismiss. The handling of protocol, even in its petty aspects, showed that there was no desire to cut any Gordian knots and indeed that such Gordian knots do exist and that they are very tangled. Our independence is so natural and evident that it does not need to be reasserted. In any case, even Brezhnev asserted the possibility and legitimacy of differences of opinion among communist parties. But practical conclusions should be drawn from this assertion. I will explain myself better: Our differences with the Soviets are not merely of the kind destined to disappear in a future unanimity. They are not some kind of temporary misunderstanding or challenge on which history will issue a verdict, proving one side right and the other wrong, after which the side in the wrong will have to undergo a conversion. It is no longer the era of total conversions; it is the era of understanding and must be the era of tolerance of diversity. The pope visits Japan, is welcomed by a people whose religion is not Catholic and returns to Rome without having tried to convert anyone to Catholicism; in short, he does not act like a Jesuit missionary in 18th century China.

Just imagine us adopting such an attitude, when we do not even recognize the need for a pope or a Vatican. We are even opposed to a world conference of communist parties, which could be compared to a Vatican council....

Question: One has the impression that Eurocommunism has suffered a blow. Is the PCI not afraid of isolation?

Answer: We never intended to establish a bloc or form a monolith. We are not afraid of isolation because we are not members of any church; we simply do not recognize the existence of any church. We recently visited even Ethiopia and Madagascar and one comrade is on his way to Mexico.

Question: But I was talking about Eurocommunism.

Answer: I have never believed that Eurocommunism implied organizational links among a group of parties. Eurocommunism is something different from that. I will give you an example: My comrade [PCP Secretary General] Alvaro Cunhal gets angry when I tell him that he too is a Eurocommunist, though he makes statements about the Soviet Union and Afghanistan that differ from ours. He gets angry but I remain steadfast. I ask him whether he is Portuguese and he has to answer "yes." I ask him whether he considers unity with the Portuguese Socialist Party (with which he is not greatly enamored) a necessity, and again he has to answer "yes." I ask him whether he considers it opportune to defend democracy in Portugal and he replies in the affirmative; in fact he went as far as to withdraw the Communist candidate for the presidency of the republic in favor of a democratic general. I conclude that Cunhal is more of a Eurocommunist than he thinks.

BETTINO CRAXI PRESS CONFERENCE ON PSI POLICY

[Excerpts] PSI Secretary General Bettino Craxi took part yesterday in the "Political Rostrum" television program, during which he answered questions put to him by journalists.

Answering a question about government's stability, Craxi said that "governments are stable primarily if they are based on clear and strong alliances backed by a willingness for honest cooperation--of course, this is the raw material. Then there are some forms which facilitate instability and others which discourage it.

"For instance, in the section of our congress theses which refers to this topic, we discuss the aspect of constructive lack of confidence, since our entire approach is challenging. This implies saying that a government must not, cannot, be brought down unless it can be shown that the parliamentary conditions exist for another one to be formed. An institution of this kind, such as exists in Germany, deserves to be examined. Out of respect for the other political forces, in this constitution aspect I would be inclined to recommend that we establish a constituent commission at once, granting it a limited period in which to work. Subsequently, everyone can present their own opinions and proposals in a parliamentary debate, in the knowledge that particular results must be achieved. Improved efficiency and representativity and greater supervisory and functional roles for Parliament, more stability for the executive, and so forth. During the examination of the entire structure we will probably find other flaws that will have to be repaired. But I believe that this is the path that must be taken. A debate to be embarked upon immediately by a body that will then submit a draft revision to Parliament for approval and subsequent submission to the popular vote, in accordance with the constitution."

With regard to an imminent U.S. visit, which has been much discussed in the press, and on the much more general topic of foreign policy, the Socialist secretary general replied that he has "already had occasion to say, and I must say again, that I have no plans to visit the United States at the moment. Of course, this does not rule out the possibility of such a plan taking shape later."

"For some time I have been aware of the need for Italy's international presence to be better organized in many contexts. In the context of its own alliances and in the context of the role that Italy must play in the Mediterranean and along the load-bearing axis of the future world balance, namely the European-Arab-African axis, Italy can and must do much more than it is doing. There are significant signs of an intention to do so, apparent also in the state budget, because after all, fine words are not enough to implement a foreign policy. But the problem does exist--the problem of an international role for Italy."

Answering one journalist's question about Socialist-Communist relations and about the "responsibility" shouldered by the PSI in forming a number of major regional and municipal administrations with the PCI, even where the possibility existed of a more homogeneous option with respect to the government majority, Craxi said that "first, we shouldered this responsibility before the elections--not after. We told the voters clearly what we would do. We defended a number of administrations in which we had governed with the Communists and where the majority was confirmed. Perhaps not everywhere, but in the most significant cases, we confirmed this majority.

"The voters knew it; they gave us a mandate which we say included this political option. So much for the administrations--and no congress will alter the party line on this.

"Then, of course, there is the problem of relations with the Communist Party, which is relevant to the existence on this administration. It must not be believed that it is possible to unleash certain manifestations of splittism or hostility with respect to the Socialists without certain consequences--and at the same time have the Socialists as allies or supporters in a major municipal administration.

"So the parties cooperating in the major cities or regions must be restrained even in their differences and their problems regarding mutual relations. Relations must never be stretched beyond certain limits. The policy of rupture and sectarianism inevitably causes ruptures. And this is the advice that we have repeatedly given and which has sometimes been heeded, at other times ignored."

DEFENSE MINISTER REPORTS TO ASSEMBLY ON COUP

[Text] At the beginning of today's plenary assembly session, the defense minister reported to the chamber behind closed doors on the events of 23 February.

Indeed, it was a closed door session and therefore the information we have about it comes from comments and leaks in what are customarily known as parliamentary circles.

According to these sources, the defense minister said that those behind the abortive coup had only a small number of people involved in the attempt, although they were hoping that other units would go along with them. The rebels apparently claimed at all times to be acting in the name of the king.

According to our sources, the minister's comments revealed that General Milans del Bosch had been preparing since early that morning for the actions he took later in the afternoon. And it was only at the last minute that he announced that the members of parliament were to be held captive in the parliament building.

For his party, the military governor of La Coruna, General Torres Rojas, arrived in Madrid during the morning of the 23d, and asked for a meeting with his colleagues in the Brunete Armored Division, which he commanded until recently. At that meeting, Major Parod Zancada reported that General Milans del Bosch had told him that an event of extraordinary gravity was going to occur and that a state of emergency was to be declared in Valencia.

We were also told that at his meeting with Colonel Tejero, General Armada proposed that he should present himself to the deputies as the head of government. Tejero announced that he would only accept a military junta headed by Milans del Bosch. And the latter, Milans, told him that he should obey General Armada.

Apparently, there is a civilian also implicated in the affair, but the matter is subjudice and nothing can be reported about this.

OFFICER INDICTED FOR PARTICIPATION IN COUP

LD172326 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2000 GMT 17 Mar 81

[Text] Here is a dispatch we have just received concerning the indictiment of Major General Torres Rojas:

The Information and Public Relations Office of the Ministry of Defense this evening issued a note which reads as follows:

The special judge, Jose Maria Garcia Escudero, who is conducting the proceedings to clarify the events of 23 and 24 February which culminated in the attack on the Congress of Deputies, this afternoon ordered Maj Gen Luis Torres Rojas to be indicted for alleged responsibility for an offense of military rebellion, as provided for in Article 286 of the Code of Military Justice. His situation is stipulated to be that of preventive detention.

MINISTRY BANS CITING UNNAMED OFFICIAL SOURCES

[Text] Spain's Ministry of Defense issued a communique this morning banning the citing of all official sources in connection with reporting on the attempted coup d'etat in February unless certain conditions are fulfilled. One such condition is to give the informant's name, surname and rank or position at the Defense Ministry, or chain of military command, the headquarters of any of the three armed forces and their respective staffs. The communique also says that all official confirmation of news about the judicial proceedings which might arise from this point on must be obtained exclusively from the Information and Public Relations Office at the Ministry of Defense.

PNV'S GARAIKOETXEA ON REGIONAL, NATIONAL PROBLEMS

LD171001 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 8 Mar 81 p 15

[Javier Angulo interview with Basque Nationalist Party [PNV] leader Garaikoetxea; date and place of interview not specified]

[Text] Question: What is your opinion of the harsh criticisms which have been leveled from various quarters against the Basque government's belated reaction to the failed coup?

Answer: Despite an unenviable state of health, with a temperature of 40 degrees, I held the natural contacts, first with the Spanish Government's representative closest to me, in Vitoria, and subsequently with the captain general of the 6th military region, with whom I had a very lengthy and gratifying conversation, in which with absolute clarity and frankness he explained to me the situation, which he interpreted as one of complete normality in the area.

Next, I sought to speak with the Zarzuela Palace, which was rather like the holy of holies of the secret of the events, and as I have already repeated, at the royal household's suggestion and believing that it was very natural that it should be done in this way, I postponed my communique to the Basque people. I must state that constantly and from the beginning the government spokesman announced that this would occur, and I even succeeded in having direct contact via some local radio station with listeners in the early hours. [sentence as published] The delay in the king's address was perhaps one of the few sources of anxiety which assailed me in those critical hours. I believed that this would occur at 2100 hours or 2200 hours--peak hours and with the largest audience. This circumstance considerably delayed my address.

Question: How do you assess the situation of political uncertainty created in the Spanish state following the recent attempted coup?

Answer: I believe that we have all been left with a certain feeling of sorrow and bitterness in finding that a remote fear, which we sometimes viewed with a certain frivolity--an almost banal threat--has become a reality. I believe that the situation is grave. I would be frivolous to assert the contrary and to deny that the days of 23-24 February have made anything clearer.

But on the other hand, the circumstances under which the attempted coup occurred and its reprecussions are not yet clear in all aspects, and gloomy rumors and threatening predictions are circulating with respect to which I wish to be optimistic and believe that life will soon resume its normal course. In this connection, I have found my contacts with the central government encouraging, in seeing a man at the summit of state responsibilities viewing the future with real calm we must all sharpen our best sense, our greatest discretion.

Question: To what extent can the Basque government--that is, the PNV--contribute to stabilizing a democracy which is convalescent following the events of 23 February?

Answer: Apart, of course, from the role of justice, with which nobody can interfere, we must all contribute with our best sense to the state's stability, although without giving an inch in our respective options and without conceiving even for a moment that we must resign ourselves to a system of controlled freedoms. The Basque government, I told Calvo-Sotelo, will work resolutely to be a real pillar of the system and of the democratic institutions. And in this, if necessary, it will accept sacrifices in nonessential aspects of its own particular problems, to regard, as I believe we all should, Spain's major problems as having priority.

Question: Although the Spanish prime minister appears to have shelved the issue for the moment, are you in favor of a coalition government or government of concentration? Has your party gone so far as to consider the possibility of participating in it?

Answer: On the one hand, it seems that the circumstances existing in Spain today display all the typical features which might justify that kind of government. We--and the PNV spokesman was quite explicit in this respect--have not rejected that possibility. However, a candidate has emerged through the constitutional machinery who is fully entitled to form the government which he has formed and which he says has grounds for confidence for successfully tackling the period remaining until the next legislative term.

The government's future will depend on its capacity for consultation with sufficient political groups to achieve solidary action with respect to Spain's basic problems under the present circumstances.

"Foundations of Autonomy Process Have Been Laid"

Question: Tomorrow is the first anniversary of the elections to the Basque parliament--a year of autonomy in practice. What is your assessment of it?

Answer: I believe that there has been an irregular development of the autonomy process. First, there was an irritating paralysis of it. Next there was an indubitable acceleration which culminated at the end of the year in the agreements on the economic agreements and the autonomous police. One more, the first quarter of 1981 has been frankly sterile, although the causes are in everybody's minds and to some extent make this state of affairs explicable. The autonomy process' foundations have been laid with these agreements and with the organization--which is also an arduous task--of the Basque administration and its new human and material apparatus, which it was necessary to create from scratch.

Lest we be accused of only selling frustration, I wish to tell the Basque people that for the present the autonomy balance sheet is optimistic and positive, that, making a calm and sincere reflection, in the light of the difficulties which have arisen, perhaps we could not have sought to go further, and that, in addition, under such critical circumstances as those which we have experienced, we have been assured of the continuity of the process.

Question: In light of the program set out in the investiture session by Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and the possible effects of the failed coup, are you afraid that the autonomies will be cut back?

Answer: Frankly, I must say that I do have a certain fear that there is a temptation to slow down the autonomy process or lower the levels of autonomy which the statute potentially allows. However, I must say for truth's sake that Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo made it very clear to me that nothing will stop, even if the pace is reasonable and normal. I must therefore say that in the field of principles we stand where we have always stood. We hope that the surrounding pressures will not divert the Spanish Government members from these aims. In addition, I must state that the Basque government is not prepared to accept any cutback in the statute or in its implementation. But I will go even further: I believe that neither the state government nor anybody else can have that aim, at least in the field of principles, since it is a matter of a law, and the law must be observed.

Question: In the present situation, are not the economic agreements and the autonomous police in danger?

Answer: I emphatically do not believe so. Following the talks which I have held with Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo, I have been given assurances concerning not only these matters but also the entire autonomy process. I have also ascertained with satisfaction that the draft agreements, as had been agreed, have been submitted to parliament on an urgent basis.

With respect to the autonomous police, something important must be said, and this is that the desire to assume police powers should not be viewed as a strict feature of autonomy selfishness but rather as displaying a great sense of responsibility, because exercising police duties in the Basque country today is, to use a popular expression, like grasping a hot potato.

Question: Do you still believe that the key to peace in the Basque country lies in the complete implementation of the Basque statute?

Answer: Yes, absolutely. The same trends still exist in the Basque country--the radical and the moderate; the one favoring a breakaway and the other trusting in the democratic and institutional process, in the political and peaceful method in which we believe we now represent the majority of the Basque people. Although obviously our attention is centered mainly on Spain's general problems, it would be a very great mistake to believe that the Basque country's problems do not require the very solutions that we have presented as indispensable in the past. In view of the legitimate aspiration to self-government, I believe that the important thing is to show that this aspiration can be satisfied without endangering the state's stability and strength.

Question: At a delicate moment such as the present and in view of the resurgence of violence in the Basque country and the uncertainty of the autonomy process, are we not facing an emergency situation which demands, as in 1936, agreement among the Basque political forces, which could even be reflected in a government of concentration?

Answer: There is a clear parliamentary situation which does not lead us to envisage a government of concentration or coalition government; nor are the circumstances in the Basque country as exceptional as in 1936. I believe that unfortunately there is a gulf. Therefore no reassessment is being made in this connection. This is why, as I told political party representatives yesterday, I am entirely in agreement with the need for us all to seek agreements on fundamental topics.

Question: Many political observers of the Basque country have tried to identify its permanent climate of violence and the existence of Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA] as the basic reason for the attempted coup. What is your opinion in this connection?

Answer: I must be sincere and confess that terrorism, which our people are suffering more directly than anyone else, was and will continue to be a basic element, an excuse for those dreaming of a coup. But there must be responsible reflection to ensure that there is no return to the anger rightly attributed to the groups employing violence against an entire people.

Question: What is your assessment of the cease-fire announced by ETA's Political Military Wing [ETA/PM] and the military wing's [ETA/M] refusal to accept your invitation to support the initiative?

Answer: I must emphasize my positive assessment of the ceasefire, the cessation of armed action by the ETA/PM. It is a factor that must make us optimistic that things will improve in the Basque country. At the same time, I feel very great regret because, apart from the fact that we have not perceived a similar attitude on the part of ETA/M being realistic, we must believe that the action of ETA/M might even be stepped up in the near future.

I believe that this attitude could mean the predominance of the ideologically most sectarian sectors in the apparatus of ETA/M and the ousting and exclusion of the organization's historical elemtns, among whom there was perhaps more nationalist radicalism than ideological sectarianism. I believe that it is bad news that no rapprochement with the ETA/PM stances has been observed on the part of ETA/M--bad news because of the symptoms which this attitude entails. We will have to face this grave prospect calmly, firmly and, of course, with a stance of emphatic confrontation.

"Autonomous Police Would Act Very Toughly"

Question: You stated on your return from Madrid that one of the Basque government's aims is to observe an absolute confrontation against terrorism. How do you intend to realize this?

Answer: The Basque government will have to be, and is already attempting to become, the catalyst of the general majority opinion of a Basque people who are unambiguously opposed to violence and of a Basque people who must cry out their vigorous demand for an end to ETA's activity. Of course, we accept that role and are performing it with real conviction but we cannot be excessively optimistic. The short term difficulties will continue to exist. It would be naive on our part to believe, with the information at our disposal, that the problem of ETA will vanish overnight. In the light of the grave difficulties, we must ask for the understanding of all of Spain so that this problem is regarded as a calamity which is directly and especially affecting the Basque people.

In addition, it is a secret to nobody that the Basque government does not possess an enforcement apparatus of its own. For this reason it is not possible to expect its actions to have the effectiveness of an autonomous police which would act vigorously against terrorist actions. But I wish it to be made clear that, as a matter of pure consistency with the statute, when we possess our own police they will act as forcefully as the most forceful of police forces against any breach of the law and, of course, against that flagrant and cruel breach which is terrorism. And the autonomous police force is as consistent with the statute as the state police force, which will coexist with the former, and until it is set up, the latter will perform police functions.

But police actions are not the only ones or perhaps the most effective for tackling the problem of violence. The main political measure is to demonstrate that this country is advancing toward its self-government and that democracy is in force through the peaceful and institutional channels.

DENMARK

NEGOTIATIONS CONTINUE ON NEW DEFENSE LEGISLATION

LD161137 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 11 Mar 81 part 1 p 6

[Christian Brondum report]

[Text] Defense Minister Poul Sogaard will resume negotiations next week with the nonsocialist parties and the Liberals on new defense legislation. This is after the Social Democratic Folketing group in two meetings yesterday gave its support to the proposal that the defense minister's new defense demarche may exceed the zero-solution, which up to now has been the party's departure point for negotiations.

The defense minister told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that he has been given backing for the resumption of negotiations. "The authority to negotiate contains the proviso that we must not move too far from our previous departure point," Poul Sogaard said.

After the two group meetings yesterday, several Social Democratic Folketing group members denied that authority had been given for anything more than a zero-solution. Folketing member Jytte Hilden told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that she had not given authority for anything other than a zero-solution. Folketing member Christian Kelm Hansen and others expressed the same position at the group meeting.

Poul Sogaard told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that he has shelved the percentage discussion on the defense budget. When and if agreement is reached with the Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party on a new defense settlement, the result will be announced without referring to percentages. On the other hand, the defense minister did see the concrete contents of a new defense bill, especially its effect on employment, as important. "Percentages are not very interesting," he said.

The Folketing group will be informed of the details of the defense minister's demarche immediately before the negotiations are resumed next week, and will be kept informed of the progress of the negotiations. Sogaard is aiming to have the negotiations completed by the summer.

The decision to shelve discussion of percentages is seen by some group members as an attempt to prevent an eventual final result greater than a zero-solution from being seen as a nonsocialist victory and as conflicting with the Social Democratic congress resolution from September of last year.

Sogaard admitted that there were critical voices at the group meetings yesterday, but stressed that he has been given broad authority.

Liberals and Conservatives gave a positive reception to the decision on new defense negotiations yesterday. Conservative Palle Simonsen found it heartening that the government is moving away from a zero-solution, but stressed that Danish security policy cannot be founded on employment considerations. He also stressed that the undermining of the defense forces has been increased by the zero-solution for 1981.

Radical Liberal Jens Bilgrav-Nielsen said that unless there was an immediate decision to add 3 percent to the defense budget there would be no settlement between the Social Democrats and the Liberals and Conservatives. There was more real agreement between the Radical Liberals and the Social Democrats. He said, "it would be a historic turnabout if the Liberals and Conservatives 'contented themselves' with an increase of 1 percent." He also warned that the government should not count on Radical Liberal support for a new economic settlement including an increase in defense spending.

Earlier yesterday, Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said that a zero-solution for 1982 would mean "actual reductions in various areas of defense. This has never been the intention," the prime minister said.

DEFENSE CHIEF DISAGREES WITH BUDGET FINDINGS

LD170817 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET In Swedish 10 Mar 81 p 15

[Text] The defense force chief, Gen Lauri Sutela, is not satisfied with the expansion of the defense forces as outlined by the third paralimentary defense committee.

"The direction is correct but the speed is too slow," he told the 80th national defense course at the military academy yesterday.

The defense forces put forward a basic alternative which assumed a continued real-term rate of increase of 5 percent per year, which has been the usual one in the last few years. But the committee reduced the ceiling to 3.8 percent, which means just over 500 million [markkaa] less per year.

This reduction, if it actually comes about, will hit the new development projects with the whole of its weight, since almost half of the acquisitions during the 1982-86 5-year period are already accounted for through orders which have already been approved.

It is really a question of bringing the land forces' mobility and firepower up to date at a quicker pace than that proposed by the committee. Air force acquisitions should be able to take place according to plan.

The defense forces consider that three all-weather Hunter jet wings are needed. We now have two, one in Karelia and one in Lapland. The committee proposes half a wing for Tampere-Birkala, but the air force thinks that it needs a whole wing.

General Sutela is satisfied with the committee's proposal that the number of participants in reserve operations should be increased by 3,000 per year, so that a total of 50,000 will be reached by 1986.

However, he considers the proposal for the increase in the number of regular soldiers to be too small. The defense forces would soon be able to offer 500 socially advantageous positions, he explained.

The percentage increase in the defense budget asked for by the defense forces may seem large in comparison with that of the NATO nations, but this is forgetting that the point of departure for them is completely different.

"As a result of cuts over several years and decades, shortcomings have arisen in our military defense capability which could become impossible to eliminate with the present budget level, as would the maintenance and full exploitation of the system which we have already created," General Sutela said.

NIGERIA'S SHAGARI ASKS CUT TO SOUTH AFRICA TIES

[Excerpt] The president of Nigeria tonight appealed to the queen for Britain to cut its economic ties with the apartheid regime in South Africa. And he warned that Nigeria, unlike Britain, believed sanctions against South Africa could not be ruled out.

President Shagari, who is on a state visit to Britain, told a banquet at Buckingham Palace: "The long term socio-political and economic benefits to be derived by the Western world from Nigeria and other African countries far outweigh the short-term benefits from having economic ties with apartheid South Africa."

Nigeria is one of Britain's major world trading partners--last year the balance was about 1,000 million pounds in Britain's favour.

The president's state visit is regarded as marking a return to normality between the two countries.

He told the guests at the banquet--also attended by Prince Philip, Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer--of the "horrifying indignity and socio-economic and political deprivation of the black people in South Africa. This "horrible state of affairs has been maintained against the conscience of mankind", he added.

He said he was well aware of the economic links between Britain and South Africa--but pointed out that Nigeria was the biggest market in Africa, not just for British products and services, but for those from the EEC and the USA.

Earlier, the queen had spoken of the "demonstration of political maturity" in Nigeria, which returned to democratic civilian rule when President Shagari came to power in 1979.

MORNING STAR ON RELATIONS WITH NICARAGUA

LD161641 London MORNING STAR in English 14 Mar 81 p 1

[Noll Scott report: "Britain To Have Ambassador in Nicaragua"]

[Excerpt] The foreign secretary, Lord Carrington, is seeking closer diplomatic ties with Nicaragua's revolutionary government, despite U.S. claims that the country is being used as an arms bridge to El Salvador.

Following talks between Lord Carrington and Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Father Miguel d'Escoto on Thursday, the British intend to appoint a resident ambassador.

The Nicaraguan revolution, while it had to learn to live with the U.S., would not compromise itself "even half an inch" for the sake of imperialism, he stressed.

Nicaragua, he announced, was exploring with other countries the possibility of a political solution in El Salvador. It knew from its own experience of the armed struggle that it was important "somewhere along the process" to mix military and political action, he said. But he stressed: "If we want peace we have to work for justice."

I AVYI: POSTPONE BASES TALKS UNTIL AFTER ELECTIONS

NC171827 Athens I AVYI in Greek 17 Mar 81 p 8

[From the "I Avyi" column: "The Negotiations for the Bases"]

[Text] A significant report was published on Sunday that the government is considering postponing the signing of the Greek-U.S. bases agreement until after the elections if the relevant procedures cannot be completed by May. Regardless of whether this is officially confirmed, the report once again puts into question the current government's competency to continue relevant negotiations and thus commit the country through its decisions.

The fact that the government has set a certain deadline (until May) after which it will declare that it is not ready to undertake the responsibility of signing the Greek-U.S. agreement and that it will refer the entire issue to the government that will be formed following the elections may, of course, be a negotiating ruse. However, it also reveals how morally and politically weak the government position (a government that from the first moment represented a minority of the people) is when it attempts to impose on the country decisions of capital significance for the nation's future only a few months before elections--because what is valid in May naturally is valid at present. If is ridiculous for one to claim that the government can "legitimately" sign the bases agreement provided May (!) does not catch up with us, while the entire government policy--its basic decisions on foreign and domestic issues--has been disputed, and already the people have been called to judge, at the latest by autumn.

The bases agreement does not constitute a current "routine" issue. From the moment it is signed it will create a situation that will be very difficult for any government that may emerge following the elections. Nothing would be less simplistic for one than to consider such an agreement tantamount to a "worthless piece of paper," provided a democratic government assumes power. The Americans, who are in a hurry to sign the agreement, know this very well and they do not at all underestimate the added possibilities that will be offered to them, by a new agreement for their bases, to exert pressure on the formulation of our political life and on the decisions that will be made in future.

By continuing negotiations with the Americans for the bases, the government is essentially planning a kind of "fait accompli" that is no different than a coup against the people and the nation. Of course, this will happen not after May but now while the government is promoting a procedure and a commitment for the nation to which the great majority of the people are radically opposed.

The people's imperative demand and democracy's elementary command are that the bases negotiations cease immediately, that the people freely decide on this issue through their votes in the elections, and that the government which results from the popular verdict finally deal with it. Any other plan, either before or after May, is both antidemocratic and nationally unacceptable.

MITSOTAKIS RETURNS FROM EEC MEETING IN BRUSSELS

IRAN REQUESTS RETURN OF AIR FORCE COLONEL

TA171451 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 1440 GMT 17 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 17 Mar (AA)--Reliable sources close to the Foreign Ministry say that the Iranian ambassador to Ankara has submitted a note to the Turkish Foreign Ministry this afternoon asking for the return of the Iranian Air Colonel Javit Hussein, who landed yesterday at the Van airport in a C-130 Hercules accompanied by his wife and son.

In its note, the Iranian Government states that the extradition of Colonel Hussein was necessary in order to prevent the occurrence of similar incidents in the future.

FOREIGN MINISTRY TALKS WITH GREECE CONTINUE

TA171430 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 17 Mar 81

[Text] Talks being held between the general secretaries of the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministries for the solution of problems between the two countries are continuing in Ankara. Greek Foreign Ministry General Secretary Ambassador Roussos was received today by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. In a statement during the meeting, Turkmen said:

[Begin recording] I am pleased over the visit of the Greek Foreign Ministry general secretary to our country. As you know, we are attributing great importance to talks between the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministry general secretaries. We hope that these talks will be held in a constructive atmosphere and will bring solutions to problems existing between the two countries and will contribute to the revival of the spirit of trust between Turkey and Greece. [end recording]

In reply, Ambassador Roussos said: We are discussing differences between the two countries in a bid to find a solution to them. I believe that some small steps have been taken in this direction. There is a recess in our talks with Ambassador Gurun until Friday; however, technical talks between experts will continue. In our talks on Friday we shall assess the results of these technical talks. It is our wish that such meetings be held more frequently. It is only with more intensive work that we can achieve results in our talks toward the solution of problems.

TERCUMAN CRITICIZES U.S. STANCE ON ARMENIANS

NC180834 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 16 Mar 81 p 4

["This Is the World" column by Zafer Atay: "Fighting International Terrorism"]

[Excerpts] Today Turkey is facing Armenian attacks which manifest themselves as part of the international terrorism octopus. The Armenian brigands living abroad who have declared an open war on Turkey feel encouraged by the fact that so far they have not been pursued.

Naturally, Armenians abroad are enjoying all the support they need. It is quite normal for a Marxist guerrilla organization or for the Soviet Union, which is doing everything possible to bring about the collapse of the southeast wing of NATO, to exert efforts in this direction. What is strange is the attitude of our friends and allies in NATO, with whom we share the same destiny, toward this common threat (the Soviet attack.)

It is known that the United States is one of the centers of Armenian terrorism. A segment of the 500,000 wealthy and influential Armenians support these bloody attacks. This information is carried by U.S. papers. These Armenians speak openly and fearlessly at meetings they organize.

California is the center of the "Armenian Revolutionary Federation," which does not hide that its sole aspiration is to dismember Turkey. These false revolutionaries have their own newspapers and radio station. They also have supporters in the administration. But, unfortunately, the FBI and CIA agents, whose adventures form topics for films, do not overcome these nests of terrorism. This attitude is not compatible with statements by President Reagan and Secretary of State Haig that a decisive stand will be taken against international terrorism.

The Los Angeles TIMES, one of the most influential papers in the United States, has admitted that some of the Armenian terrorists who organize attacks on Turkish diplomats are U.S. citizens.

To put it briefly, the United States can show no valid reason why it should not go into action.

We are not at all hopeful about Lebanon, which is the largest center of Armenian terrorism. Lebanon has been an unfortunate country ever since it has been established. It is simply absurb to ask such a country to counter terrorism.

The situation is obvious: Even those whom we have come to know as our best friends refuse to help. We will therefore have to handle our problems ourselves. We will train men, we will learn from those who know [how to fight terrorism] and we will carry out our own campaign ourselves.

PAPER SEES USSR EXPLOITING ATATURK CENTENNIAL

[Article by Fahir Armaoglu: "The 16 March 1921 Pact"]

[Text] The 60th anniversary of the friendship pact signed between the Soviet Union and the national government in Ankara on 16 March 1921 is being used as material for Soviet propaganda. It is not difficult to understand the meaning and purpose of making so mcuh propaganda about an historic document entitled "The Soviet-Turkish Friendship and Brotherhood"--a document which carried some significance at one stage of Turkish history but which was rendered largely invalid by subsequent agreements and events as well as by Russian behavior itself. This is a simple example of a Soviet attempt to exploit the 100th anniversary of Ataturk's birthday.

The Lausanne treaty and the Lausanne and Montreux agreements on the Straits have invalidated several provisions of the Moscow pact. Article 5, which stipulates that the status of the Straits should be determined exclusively by the Black Sea states, is undoubtedly the expression of a great desire and aspiration which the Soviet Union unsuccessfully tried to realize in 1945 and 1946. It is possible that they would wish to revive this longing once again on the occasion of the anniversary of the Turkish-Soviet pact.

There is another point: Soviet Russia, which through this pact accepted the national frontiers of Turkey, dealt the heaviest blow to this pact itself by demanding sovereignty over Kars and Ardahan Provinces in 1945--provinces which have a purely Turkish character.

And now the Soviet Union is displaying an insincerity which presents the pact as a symbol of friendship and brotherhood--forgetting that the Soviet Union itself has destroyed the pact.

Also, Article 8 of the pact stipulates that both sides should refrain from helping organizations and communities which would attempt to work against each other's administrative and territorial integrity. Both sides also pledged not to allow such organizations to operate on their territory.

How much faith can we have in the sincerity of the Soviet Union's decision to celebrate this anniversary, when we know that it keeps under its protective wings the Turkish Communists who have been trying for years to destroy Turkey? How much faith can we have in the Soviet Union which holds the ropes of international anarchy and terrorism which aspire to ruin Turkey from within?

According to Article 4 of the pact, Soviet Russia officially approves and confirms the right of other nations to be free and independent and to be ruled by a government of their own choice. Can't we then ask the Soviet Union by what right it has invaded and occupied Afghanistan, to say nothing of its [domination] over the communist regimes in Europe?

Another aspect of the sitaation is that it is the Soviet Union--which destroyed the pact--and not Turkey--which once used to attach great importance to it--that wants to celebrate this anniversary so zealously.

DER SPIEGEL: ECEVIT DISCUSSES JUNTA, DEMOCRACY

DW171340 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 16 Mar 81 pp 163-171

[Editor Mareike Spiess-Hohnholz interview with former Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit in his Ankara office; date not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Ecevit, following the intervention by the Turkish military last September you resigned as the chairman of the Republican People's Party. Nonetheless, you are considered here in Turkey as well as abroad as the future leader of the people's republicans. How do you yourself see your role?

Ecevit: As far as I am concerned, I cannot give an assessment. What is important is not my personal situation or political career but much rather the future of the Turkish democracy. I consider it my duty to try, not necessarily as a politician but as a citizen, to make my contribution toward the transition to democracy which hopefully should be more sound and stable than it has been.

SPIEGEL: None of the now ruling military men will ask you for such a contribution. How will you make it?

Ecevit: This is one of the reasons why I resumed my former profession, that of a journalist, and publish a weekly magazine now, ARAYIS, the SEARCH. We will try to analyze in this magazine the growing economic problems in the world and of developing countries in general, and the problems of Turkey in particular, and we will try to find solutions in a social democratic sense.

SPIEGEL: Under the military regime the politicians who were ousted from power are not allowed to act politically or even make political statements. Commentaries on the period preceding the coup are as taboo as is criticism of the military government. Will your magazine nevertheless deal with domestic policy problems?

Ecevit: We will try to say all that in our view ought to be said under existing circumstances, but in doing so we will avoid the style of political polemics. Society and especially political life in Turkey are exposed to a rather serious interference, no matter whether we believe or don't believe that it is necessary. At any rate, we should try to make sure that this interference will be successful and will lead to the restoration of democracy in Turkey.

SPIEGEL: How will you tackle this concretely?

Ecevit: To this end I work together with a large number of experts and scientists in almost all spheres, including international relations, political sciences, economy, nutrition, as well as literature and philosophy.

SPIEGEL: But, did all these experts have no forum previously?

Ecevit: We have in Turkey a relatively large number of well trained scholars and specialists who had few possibilities to effectively contribute to a comprehensive search for solutions to Turkish problems. The main obstacle was that experts of various fields have not been encouraged to cooperate for such a goal. Everyone made his contribution on a one-dimensional level, as it were, although our problems have become very complex. Perhaps cooperation with SEARCH for the first time will gather scientists and experts of various fields in a more collective and far-reaching work.

SPIEGEL: Do you really believe that such a "think tank" could contribute to a solution of the Turkish problems?

Ecevit: I believe that this attempt could give political thought in Turkey a new and constructive dimension and offer feasible solutions. Naturally, we translate the language of the scientists into that of laymen.

SPIEGEL: Don't you fear that it will be very frustrating for politically and socially committed people to abstain, possibly for years, from any political and social activities and only to write instead?

Ecevit: There is a Latin proverb which says "scribere est agere," meaning to write is to act. According to the idea I have of democracy, politics in a democratic society should not be reserved to the politicians and no difference should be made between spectators and actors. Everyone should be free and prepared to actively participate in political life.

SPIEGEL: In democracies the usual way to do this is to join parties, to become a politician, to make active politics in organizations and trade unions. At the moment all this does not take place in this country.

Ecevit: Politics to me does not mean career but democratic duty. Therefore, I believe that a democracy becomes more real to the extent that men become more free and willing to participate in the political life and the institutions of a country. Not only more real but also more sound and fruitful. It is also for this reason that my next editorial comment will have the headline: "Not Less but More Democracy."

SPIEGEL: With a view to existing conditions in your country, this sounds like wishful thinking. And everything you said seems to be the words of an incorrigible idealist, a political utopist who has never descended to the low grounds of practical politics.

Ecevit: That is correct. If I am talking about politics I talk about politics as it ought to be.

SPIEGEL: How do you reconcile reality with these ideals?

Ecevit: We will have to raise the level of education and communication. This would inevitably raise the number of those who want to have a more active share in decisionmaking processes. If that is not done, democracy will be unable to cope with the problems of a period of economic crisis when the people must make many sacrifices. People can be expected to make voluntary sacrifices only if you give them a chance to participate in decisionmaking processes and share responsibility.

SPIEGEL: The burden of sacrifices in economically bad times mostly is borne by one side.

Ecevit: Democracy as a system can function peacefully only if there is preparedness for compromise and consensus, in particular in difficult times. On the whole the Turkish people have this preparedness, but unfortunately it is lacking in the higher ranks of our political life. I think this is one of the reasons why democracy in Turkey has failed.

SPIEGEL: May this be interpreted as the self-criticism of a man who for almost 9 years was prime minister or leader of the opposition?

Ecevit: You may interpret it like that. However, in the past years and particularly in the months prior to the military intervention, I did my best to create an atmosphere of compromise between the two main parties. For months I insisted on a grand coalition under a mutually recognized independent prime minister. It was to make efforts to restore the regime and the state within the rules and institutions of democracy. I considered this better than to sit there with folded hands and wait for an undemocratic process.

SPIEGEL: But, this move was rejected by the then Prime Minister Demirel and his Justice Party, quite to the satisfaction of your party's leftwing which resolutely rejected the idea of a grand coalition.

Ecevit: Indeed, I risked my political career. Even some of my most convinced followers would have agreed only reluctantly, given the tense atmosphere of the time. Therefore, I believe I did my best although I failed.

SPIEGEL: That "tense atmosphere" meant fear and horror, about 20 people killed every day as a result of terror. The military intervened to put an end to terror, and they have pledged to resign power some day. What chance do you see today for democracy in Turkey?

Ecevit: For 3 decades the Turkish people have been used to democratic rights and liberties, and no other style of life would be acceptable to the people. This is so, although a relatively large number of people may believe at present, as a result of long years of terror, that for the duration of the intervention we need to have a breathing space which must not last too long, however.

SPIEGEL: What does "too long" mean, 3, 4 or 5 years?

Ecevit: Who could tell exactly how long? When the time is ripe the moment has come. After all, the Turkish Army and the people traditionally have never become estranged, and I am sure the army always attaches great importance to having its finger on the pulse of the people.

SPIEGEL: Don't you find it bitter to see the thumb of the generals and not your own thumb on the pulse of the people?

Ecevit: What is gone is gone. At the moment I prefer to be oriented by the future instead of by the past. To me the past is the past. I draw lessons from it, but I do not shed tears over it.

SPIEGEL: Have you drawn lessons from the past about terrorism which is known to have brought Turkey to the brink of civil war? Have you found out about the causes of these cruel murders?

Ecevit: This will take some time yet, because terrorism has struck root for more than 12 years, and thousands of individuals from different camps underwent brainwashing and were trained as terrorists. Some of them already burned their boats because of their crimes.

SPIEGEL: The military regime has imprisoned thousands of criminals and tens of thousands of suspects and innocents. Do you consider this an adequate method to counter the phenomenon of terrorism in this country?

Ecevit: It is obvious that the measures taken by a military regime possibly are not in line with our democratic standards and views. We also should take into account that our serious economic and social problems could be easily exploited by those who want to encourage terrorism.

SPIEGEL: These problems are alarming indeed. The rate of unemployment is estimated at 20 percent, possibly more; the rate of inflation is over 100 percent; prices are rising rapidly, wages are frozen and strikes are prohibited.

Ecevit: that's the very reason why terrorism cannot be fought with security measures only, no matter how effective or tough they may be. In the long run, terrorism in this country can be countered more effectively only through just solutions of our economic and social problems.

SPIEGEL: You experienced yourself how difficult that is. How much more difficult it must be in world economic crises.

Ecevit: Certainly, and particularly since this crisis is being felt extremely acutely in Turkey. I am afraid an economic model which does not give sufficient attention to human and social needs does not make things easier.

SPIEGEL: You are alluding to the Friedmann model of supercapitalism that the military men took over from Demirel. But are there absolutely no indications that the military regime which allegedly has its finger on the pulse of the people looks after the social problems of the people?

Ecevit: There are indications that the regime finds itself compelled to give more attention to these problems, but the logic of the economic model complicates this considerably. But the mere feeling that these problems must be given attention can be considered an encouraging signal.

SPIEGEL: Apart from the purely economic need, haven't socio-psychological reasons also furthered terrorism in Turkey? Haven't the boredom and hopelessness of the jobless youth as well as the low educational level of broad sections of the population also contributed to making young people easy victims of various violent ideologies?

Ecevit: This is very important and the very reason why I am trying to get pedagogues, sociologists and philosophers together. Some of them have already written very good articles on these problems. Seen psychologically and sociologically, we must try above all to free some young people from dogmatism, from thinking in slogans they learned by heart and from acting like robots. I do not mean by that the large majority of youth, but small groups of militant young people who were taught that their intellectual degree could be measured by the slogans they rattle off.

SPIEGEL: Can this radicalized section of the youth really be held responsible for the horrible situation prior to the military intervention?

Ecevit: I don't accuse the youth but those who have managed behind the scenes to program the mind and soul of several youths. Kemal Ataturk in one of his famous speeches entrusted his legacy to the youth, and in the past the young people, aware of this legacy, really proved that they would be able to preserve the Turkish democracy and continue Ataturk's modernization programs. And this despite the pressure exerted by the reactionaries or those who did not want to have democracy in Turkey.

SPIEGEL: But was it not above all reactionary, fascist and doctrinaire elements who in recent years proved to be the real magnets of young people who have no orientation?

Ecevit: The large majority of the youth in the past decades proved in an extremely peaceful way that it is able to do its duty to help preserve democracy. This has earned them the support of the masses. After they realized the effective dynamics of the youth, the reactionary and undemocratic forces of different poles developed a strategy to divide the youth and to cause them to fight and kill each other and to finally to estrange them from the masses. They followed this strategy for almost 3 decades and were successful to a certain extent. Now we have to undo their disastrous work.

SPIEGEL: Could you not have started doing that in the 29 months you were in office in two governments?

Ecevit: In a way it was too late, and in addition we were prevented by our opponents in all camps from taking action. But we succeeded in the short period we were in the government in restoring peace in the youth homes for the first time in many years; this also largely holds true for the universities. As a consequence, terrorism was carried into other arenas. Moreover, we improved the efficiency of the security forces in a democratic way. More and more criminals were arrested.

SPIEGEL: What chances to you see in the long run in the methods of the generals to fight terrorism?

Ecevit: Naturally the present regime has many advantages compared to a civilian democratic government in dealing with terrorism. Seen this way, its chance can be considered to be better, provided it uses this chance in a way that does not hinder our transition to real democracy.

SPIEGEL: What do you mean by "real" democracy?

Ecevit: Generally, I mean by that the type of democracy which exists in the democratic countries of the West. In addition, I mean that democracy must be enriched by a larger degree of participation. This was started in the Federal Republic where the workers are granted more possibilities of codetermination in the management. In the Scandinavian countries and in Austria progress has also been achieved in this field.

SPIEGEL: I think that in the Federal Republic many workers would contradict you in this respect.

Ecevit: Such progress may be modest and some people rightly or wrongly may be dissatisfied with the results. But it encourages me personally to see that the necessity of such achievements is being realized increasingly in some democratic countries.

SPIEGEL: Turkey seems to be far away from such achievements and equally far away from you view of real democracy.

Ecevit: The problems and crises of Turkey can be considered to be the consequence of an extremely rapid and radical social and political change. When this unusually rapid change collided with the more recent world economic crisis our democracy fell victim to an accident. Every 5 years our population increases by 5 million, more than the population of countries like Norway and Finland. This means an equal rise in unemployment and, particularly in times of economic crises, equally much more frustration. All this has been a heavy burden on our democracy.

SPIEGEL: On other democracies, too, without the military intervening.

Ecevit: To be sure, the world economic crisis constitutes a threat to almost all governments, although to a different degree. Ways should be found to get over this crisis without harming the democratic governments. As for Turkey, I am sure that ways will be found to restore democracy, because the people will not be able to live without it in the long run.

SPIEGEL: But the economic crisis which threatens democracy has the tendency rather to deteriorate. Do you believe that the Turkish military has the right men to pave the way for a stabler democracy in the country?

Ecevit: I cannot speak for others, I can only speak for myself. The state of affairs is very serious. I think we all could try and find solutions that are rich in ideas and also feasible, without being restricted by prejudices. Therefore I called our magazine SEARCH.

SPIEGEL: Mr Ecevit, we thank you for this interview.

GOVERNMENT 'DISCONCERTED' OVER SOVIET STATEMENTS

LD181702 Hamburg DPA in German 1513 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 18 Mar (DPA)--The Federal Government today said it was "disconcerted" over statements made by Soviet politicians who had attempted, while on private visits to the Federal Republic, to mobilize public opinion against the government. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told journalists in Bonn, after the cabinet meeting, that the Federal Government especially protested the publicly expressed view of Kremlin adviser Georgiy Arbatov that, in his opinion, Helmut Schmidt had made a mistake on the recent Soviet disarmament proposals.

Becker asked the rhetorical question of what the reaction of the Soviet leaders would be if German Government spokesmen in Moscow, in a private capacity, made similar statements. He said that Arbatov's behavior did not correspond to "international convention and good manners."

The head of the International Information Department of the CPSU Central Committee, Leonid Zamyatin, cancelled at short notice a talk on the same topic. Becker said in reply to questions that the government had not influenced this decision.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON MILITARY READINESS

LD181628 Hamburg DPA in German 1441 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 18 Mar (DPA)--A violent argument on the operational capability of the Bundeswehr broke out today between the government and the opposition. After Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel had today briefed the Bundestag Defense Committee on the economy measures decided upon at the closed session on arms, the deputy chairman of the CDU/CSU Parliamentary Group, Manfred Woerner, said that after the extensions [of the period over which new weapons are to be introduced] and cancellations, the armed forces will no longer be in a position to completely fulfill their mission.

In a discussion with DPA, Apel took the opposite view.

Speaking for the SPD Parliamentary Group, Paul Neumann said that the Bundeswehr's operational capability is not endangered.

In the discussion with DPA, Apel said, after the session of the defense committee, that he had made it plain to the deputies that all important weapons projects, which are also important for NATO, are running on schedule. He said those which have not yet been ordered would come with delays of 1-3 years. He said that Inspector General Juergen Brandt had said in response to this that the importance and the combat readiness of the Bundeswehr in NATO thus also would be maintained. The armed forces remain one of the West's best equipped armies. "We can completely fulfill our defense commitment in the NATO alliance." It is better to postpone one or the other weapons systems that have not yet been ordered, but which are certainly still necessary, to be able to finance ammunition stocks and fuel for the Bundeswehr.

Looking forward to the first session on Thursday of the parliamentary investigating committee, which involves the financial situation surrounding the Tornado combat aircraft, Apel said that he was convinced it was a good thing to bring the whole debate out of the shadows of the committee meetings held so far. "Starting tomorrow, discussions will be frank and public."

'Weapons Procurement Assured'

LD181324 Hamburg DPA in German 1050 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 18 Mar (DPA)--Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel told members of the Bundestag Defense Committee that despite strong financial pressure the procurement of the major weapons ordered for the Bundeswehr--the Tornado plane, the Leopard II tank and the multirole frigates--is assured.

According to information possessed by DPA, Apel did, however, point out at the defense committee's secret session that the increase in prices of the weapons systems would have to be taken into account additionally in the federal finance plans.

FOREIGN MINISTER URGES NONINTERFERENCE IN POLAND

LD182144 Hamburg DPA in German 1954 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Berlin, 18 Mar (DPA)--On the eve of his trip to Warsaw, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) underlined that the Federal Republic intends to give Poland economic aid but will on no account interfere in the country's internal affairs. Speaking this evening at the Berlin FDP land party conference, Genscher said that the Polish people, the leadership and the social groups in the country are able to determine their own destiny. The Federal Government hopes that all the other signatory states of the Final Act of the European Security Conference in Helsinki will also exercise this restraint and noninterference in Poland.

Departs for Warsaw

[Summery] Bonn, 19 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher flew to Warsaw this morning for 2-day talks with Polish leaders. His talks will focus on Poland's economic difficulties, Poland's wishes regarding Western credits and the development of East-West relations.

Genscher will have talks with party chief Stanislaw Kania, Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski, Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek and Council of State Chairman Henryk Jablonski.

CABINET EXTENDS GUARANTEES FOR EXPORTS TO POLAND

LD181624 Hamburg DPA in German 1501 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, (DPA)--On the eve of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's visit to Poland, the Federal Cabinet today extended the framework of state guarantees for exports to Poland by DM150 million. This is intended, in view of Poland's great economic difficulties, to ensure that the urgently needed supplies of German semimanufactured goods and additional food aid for Poland has state guarantees.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told the press in Bonn that the Federal Government expects that of the increased guaranteed amount, DM130 million will apply to Poland's import of semimanufactured goods and DM20 million to supplies of food.

LAMBSDORFF INTERVIEWED ON SOVIET GAS LINKUP

DW181126 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1900 GMT 17 Mar 81

[Excerpts from reporter Kronzucker interview with Minister of Economics Otto Graf Lambsdorff in Washington; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The Federal Republic plans a linkup with the natural gas network of the Soviet Union. The Americans view this with concern. Were you able to eliminate some of that concern when you visited the State Department today?

[Answer] Secretary of State Haig asked whether this would not create too much political dependence on the Soviet Union. I pointed out that the Federal Government examined this problem very carefully prior to signalling agreement to the German gas companies with regard to concluding the natural gas deal with the Soviet Union. I pointed out that we are in a position to react so flexibly in case of supply problems that no serious disruptions will take place. Thus, one can assume that there will be no political dependence. Naturally, I had to point out in addition that the Federal Republic of Germany must import energy, and that, unfortunately, it will never be able to exist without some dependence in this field. The American side accepted these explanations with understanding.

[Question] So the difference of opinion will remain although in a friendly form?

[Answer] In a very friendly form, and regarding a different opinion, naturally, one cannot fully eliminate reservations of a political nature with even the best explanations. On the other hand, it is clear that our decision to conclude this deal, if it is to be made by the banks and firms, will prevail.

DEPUTY SAYS SAUDIS INTERESTED IN 'LIMITED SUPPLIES'

[Text] Bonn, 18 Mar (DPA)--In connection with Saudi Arabia's desire for German weapons, Saudi Foreign Minister Faysal al Sa'ud is prepared to explain his country's policy to the Bundestag Foreign Affairs Committee. On his return from a trip to the Middle East, FDP Deputy Juergen Moellemann also told journalists in Bonn today that Committee Chairman Rainer Barzel has been informed of this fact. Moellemann said that Barzel will invite the foreign minister to Bonn and that the foreign minister will probably also take this opportunity to have talks at the government level.

Moellemann, who is the FDP's foreign and security policy expert, also said that, contrary to earlier reports, Saudi Arabia is emphatically not interested in the Tornado combat plane. This decision was given to him as Riyadh's definitive attitude. The Saudi Government also described all the figures mentioned in connection with the Saudi wishes regarding weapons as "grossly exaggerated." The fact is that Saudi Arabia is interested only in "very limited supplies."

PAPER VIEWS DIVERGENT INTERESTS IN SAUDI TANK DEAL

[Text] Prior to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's trip to Saudi Arabia by the end of April, pressure on the government regarding arms exports is increasing.

Rolf Rodenstock, the president of the Association of German Industries, after his visit to the oil-producing country, said that the possible sale of German tanks was an "issue of fundamental importance" for political relations between the Federal Republic and Saudi Arabia. Rodenstock talked about a "touchstone" and called upon the Germans not to "bury their heads in the sand" any longer, because otherwise a freeze in economic relations with this important partner would have to be expected. This clear a warning was not even given by Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Fahd in his much quoted and often interpreted SPIEGEL interview early this month.

But the opposition to the tank exports still exists. It has its strongest bastion in sections of the SPD. The special arms exports investigating commission will reject the transaction, Deputy Horst Ehmke said at the end of February. The Israeli lobby with its numerous friends also plays an important role. Thus, the opponents and proponents of arms supplies to the oil region are balanced. But between them is a large group of undecided people vacillating between "restraint" and the willingness to "review in principle" the conditions of arms exports, as Defense Minister Apel admitted recently. In this respect, Rodenstock has pointed to economic interests.

The federal chancellor maintains restraint. He would like his trip at the end of April to be seen as a factfinding mission with everything in abeyance up until then. However, Schmidt is already talking clearly enough about the "big creditor" Saudi Arabia. Therefore, he has to allow others to inform the market and the German public.

DIE WELT URGES USSR TO ANNOUNCE MANEUVERS

[Commentary signed W.H.E.: "Urgent Request"]

[Text] The American appeal to Moscow to inform the West about maneuvers on the territories of Poland, the Soviet Union, the "GDR" and the CSSR is a test of CSCE agreements on "confidence-building measures"--which means observation of maneuvers. The purpose of such measures can only be to prevent the coming about of crisis situations by making larger military operations more obvious. The current staff framework exercises of the Warsaw Pact give one a fatal reminder of events preceding the 1968 invasion of the CSSR. Washington's appeal must therefore be interpreted as a signal of alarm and of intensified American attention.

If the Soviets are concerned about decreasing the tension of the situation, they ought to give information--independent of the valid criteria in line with CSCE agreements on the announcement of maneuvers. Instead, however, the Soviet and the Polish press carry polemics. This can only lead to growing mistrust on both sides.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU PLEADS FOR ARMS REDUCTION

[Karl Grobe editorial: "The Voice of Europe"]

[Text] When Gen Alexander Haig was still just slated for the post of U.S. secretary of state, he commented on war and peace to Congressmen in Washington stating that sometimes U.S. interests are more important than adhering to international treaties. This made the people in Europe feel rightly shocked, and not only in the opinion of some governments. In the meantime, however, Haig has been keeping his tongue under better control, so that at least the governments have stopped feeling horrified. They even pride themselves on having found a While House advocate for Europe in the person of Alexander Haig.

Haig does not even belong to those who primarily determine President Reagan's foreign policy. "The President makes the foreign policy of this country and not the State Department," announced James Brady, Reagan's press spokesman. And that is bad enough, but in the President's world of ideas, there is not much space left--due to all the gun smoke and the sinister communist character who should best be handled with the convincing argument of arms (without necessarily firing them)--not much space for somewhat more refined ideas. Confrontation, however, can also be achieved through talking about it and through armament, and here Reagan's predictions would fit beautifully.

Responsible European politicians still appear outwardly calm. They can't do much else in view of having given up sovereignty over defense and armament policy to the advantage of NATO. According to the current doctrine of Bonn, London and probably also Paris, only the United States can guarantee the continued existence of European societies as they are today--at least against challenges and threats from without. As long as readiness to talk exists between the two superpowers along with the will to avoid wars, this is certainly so. Federal Foreign Minister Genscher is right in this sense in pointing out to the SPD faction the Americans' readiness for talks.

Readiness for talks is not yet the ability to hold talks, particularly if icy mistrust exists between those who ought to talk. Yet those do not argue at random, who press for the second part of the "dual decision" on rearmament and negotiations, warn against the existence of an acute danger and claim that so-called counterarmament is probably a closed issue, while merely so-called talks will probably take place in the near future instead of disarmament talks.

To put it bluntly, even if Belgium and The Netherlands do not let any "Eurostrategic" arms into the country, even if France, which anyway is not an integrated part of NATO, is spared the effects of the 1979 decision, there will be some counterarmament anyway including as many Pershing II and cruise missiles as possible. If this is impossible on the Western side of the Rhine, it will take place on the Eastern side. This would confirm the Soviet fear of a threat, something which makes Moscow deploy its SS-20 missiles as quickly as possible and fan confrontation in Europe even more.

Thus, the generals, who get paid for it after all, are beginning to ponder about the height of the "nuclear threshold." In plain terms, this means whether war with nuclear "Eurostrategic" arms will become feasible--a war that would not automatically involve the United States, a war that would eliminate Europe between Brest and Brest-Litovsk--maybe up to the Volga--sparing the United States.

But at this point at the latest a gap exists between the interests of the Europeans--of all Europeans--and the superpowers--both of them. The small states in the Eastern part of the continent do not have the strength to halt their ally. They will have even less if the West Europeans do not make up their minds to speak with one voice on the other side of the Atlantic. If Europe is not to become the theater of collective annihilation, the statesmen of Western Europe must jointly and cohesively make it clear to the American President that they will not permit a policy of tension. They must do everything to make the United States pursue a foreign policy aimed at avoiding war. Europe's survival depends on talks about arms and their reduction and not on the language of arms. If Alexander Haig is unable to make that clear to his President, the Europeans must do it, jointly and emphatically.

COMMENTATOR CRITICIZES U.S. NORTH-SOUTH POLICY

DW181300 Cologne Deutsche Welle in German to North America 0210 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Peter Baum commentary: "The U.S. Third World Policy Alarms the Europeans"]

[Text] The U.S. North-South policy now has been given shape so that its outlines are clear. What is revealed increasingly alarms the Europeans and in particular the Bonn government.

Almost daily we hear from Washington, which boasts of strength, opinions on development policy which hardly square with the spirit of North-South policy as it is understood by Bonn, for instance. Whether the Americans really mean what they say about coordination within the Western alliance will also have to be judged by the degree to which the European interlocutors succeed in soothing Washington on this issue again.

According to recent reports, Washington will not participate in the sixth world trade conference, UNCTAD, which is scheduled to take place in 1983, because, they argue, it will be held in Havana. This statement only confirms the impression that Reagan's team intends to pursue a Third World policy solely from a foreign policy point of view. This manifests itself also and above all in the U.S. resolve to reduce its cooperation within multinational bodies like the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, and instead put its stakes increasingly on bilateral purposeful cooperation with friendly states in the Third World. This abrupt change in the course of U.S. North-South policy also has something provocative about it. The Americans have, for instance, blocked the UN Law of the Sea Conference with the cool and even offensive statement that they have yet to study thoroughly that result which was achieved in 7 years of laborious negotiations.

We would be able to show understanding for the new political course of the Americans in this field especially after Afghanistan, if this new course were initiated moderately, meaning without tested principles and mechanisms simply being brushed aside. This danger exists, however, if for example in its 1982 budget Washington cuts the means for multinational bodies by nearly $1 billion and jeopardizes the financial bases of the World Bank and its branch organizations. In the present situation, the World Bank is almost unable to meet credit wishes of the Third World, which are due above all to oil price hikes. Nor does Washington seem to be inclined to enable the International Monetary Fund to play the necessary role in transferring the growing petrodollar surplus to the poorer states. But all this and more than this were the targets that all Western partners, including the then President Jimmy Carter, jointly advocated at the 1980 Venice economic summit.

In the North-South policy, a dissention is emerging between America and the Europeans, unless the European interlocutors succeed perhaps in exerting some influence when it comes to formulating the U.S. policy. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher definitely holds the view that the Third World should be given aid without any political strings, without any political conditions, in order not to make if difficult for these states to make their own sovereign decisions. The contrast between Genscher's stance and the tactical assessment by his U.S. counterpart Alexander Haig just could not be greater.

It is alarming to imagine that the Americans would keep to their hard line. Economically, the world can be kept in balance only if tensions in the Third World do not turn into crises. If the Americans were to withdraw from the multinational bodies, the effect of the whole of development aid would be bound to decrease and the Europeans would have to consider to what extent the American deficiency could be offset. Politically, the prestige of the United States in the Third World would be at stake. But, the world cannot afford a superfluous confrontation at this time or a wrong solidarity of the developing countries which could be a possible consequence.

FRANCOIS-PONCET INTERVIEWED ON FOREIGN POLICY

LD181009 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 17 Mar 81 p 2

[Benoit Rayski "exclusive" interview with French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet: "Nobody Has the Right To Distort the Facts...."--date and place not given]

[Text] Question: An article in PRAVDA which seems to be favorable to Valery Giscard d'Estaing's policy is causing a great stir in France. Should this be seen as a sign that, to cite the expression being used, "Brezhnev is voting for Giscard?" Is this interference in our internal affairs?

Answer: The PRAVDA text has been distorted. It never mentions a "generally positive record." That has been dreamed up by some commentators. PRAVDA's judgments are subtle.

It is true they include the positive verdict: "France's positions on the international scene have been strengthened over the past few years." But this observation is not being made in Moscow alone. It is also being made in Washington, Bonn, London and Geneva, in fact, in all the big capitals.

Distorted Facts

I was in Vienna on Friday at a meeting between ten foreign ministers representing all parts of the world. All, be they Nigerian, Indian, Mexican or Swedish, observe this influence which France has on the international scene. France's voice is heeded. Our country counts in world affairs.

To what is this due? It is largely due to the authority, sangfroid, experience and influence of the president of the republic. There is only one place where this fact is disputed--among the Elysee candidates. The reasons for this can easily be understood, but to claim that the international press' assessments constitute "interference" in the election campaign is not a very responsible or credible affirmation.

Question: Foreign policy is therefore a focal point of the election campaign. As foreign minister, you reacted strongly to Jacques Chirac's recent criticisms. Why?

Answer: My reaction was strong but I think it was justified. I was not trying to deny a presidential candidate's right to express his ideas and criticisms, nor was I trying to intervene in an election argument. But as foreign minister, it is my duty and responsibility to ensure that the image France presents to the outside world is not distorted, because when it is distorted, it is not only the truth that is abused but France's credibility and interests which are damaged.

I repeat that Mr Chirac is entitled to put forward a different policy. He is not entitled to distort the facts by error, omission or failure to understand what France says and does.

Question: You talk of the facts being distorted. Could you be more specific?

Answer: I could give you ten examples. I will take two particularly characteristic ones. First, Afghanistan: Mr Chirac claims that France took 3 weeks before reacting. That is a lie which has become legendary.

The truth is as follows. The Soviet intervention took place on 27 December. The first French statement was made on 28 December. On 31 December, France took part in a meeting of the seven Western countries in London. On 2 January, it recalled its ambassador from Kabul. On 6 January, its Security Council representative voted for a resolution condemning the Soviet Union. On 9 January, the cabinet solemnly recalled that "the events in Afghanistan violate the fundamental principles governing international life." Those are the facts. I do not remember Mr Chirac taking a stance at that time.

To insinuate that France "allowed Afghanistan to be invaded" not only deliberately ignores the facts but is an insult to France. It suggests that our country was a part to the operation.

No Gift

Another example is the "concessions" which we allegedly made to Britain in the European budget negotiations. In this case, I would again like to counter unfounded accusations by the simple facts. What are the facts? After the agreement reached on 30 May last year, Britain's net contribution to the Community budget, in other words, the difference between what it pays to the Ten's common fund and what it receives from it, is more than Fr3.5 billion this year, in other words, twice as much as the French contribution. France has not made any gifts to Britain.

The real gift would be proposing to renegotiate the entire treaty of Rome, and hence to give it the opportunity it dreams about of calling into question one of the treaty's essential achievements--the common agricultural policy.

Question: The government is also criticized for not making France's voice heard....

Answer: Perhaps some people in France are afflicted with a special kind of deafness when it comes to France's voice. I note that this is not the case in Europe or in the world. It does not seem to be the case with Chancellor Schmidt, President Reagan or Mr Brezhnev, to take the most diverse examples. Nor is it the case with Deng Xiaoping, the Spanish prime minister or the Kenyan president, who all chose France for their first visit to a foreign country. I could cite Mrs Kirkpatrick, the new U.S. permanent representative to the United Nations, in whose view France's foreign policy has met with more success than that of most countries.

Europe's Voice

But I will not only mention verbal evidence. The facts also provide evidence. As far as the Near East is concerned France's voice has become Europe's voice. That does not suggest that France's voice has not been heard. Everybody remembers the effect of the president's trip to the Gulf countries and Jordan.

What does the growing success of the French-African summits year after year reflect if not the interest with which France is heeded?

I have just returned from Vienna where the revival of North-South dialogue was discussed. How many Western countries were represented? Only three, one of which was France. I could give many more examples. In fact, these accusations are irresponsible and have more to do with election polemics than with a concern for truth.

Question: But it is being said that France is no longer heard to defend human rights?

Answer: If it were true that France kept quiet when human rights are at stake, it would be a serious matter because it would mean that France was failing in its vocation and its honor. But this is not the case. Quite the reverse. Let people judge for themselves: In 1979, tens of thousands of men, women and children in Southeast Asia had to flee their countries in desparate condition or were threatened with famine in their country. Who took the initiative in mobilizing the international community? France. It was France which proposed the two conferences which were held in 1979--the one in Geneva on the Vietnamese refugees and the one in New York on humanitarian aid to Kampuchea.

Sanctuary

France--every presidentical candidate should make it a point of honor to recall--is a sanctuary open to all people whom misfortune drives from their homelands. France welcomes 150,000 refugees. No other country in the world is making such an effort. France intervenes at the highest level throughout the world to help individuals, communities or minorities who are harassed, threatened or persecuted. The president of the republic has intervened in person many times to solve distressing human cases.

To ignore or dispute this fact is not only to deny the truth but to seriously undermine France's credibility. It is to undermine its present credibility but also the credibility of France in the past--a France which, on President Pompidou's initiative, welcomed 6,000 Chileans on its territory.

Question: But some people accuse you of merely wanting to be on good terms with everybody.

Answer: I have heard that criticism. I have also heard the opposite criticism: France does not agree with anybody. It is often the same people who make both criticisms. This is simply an indication that France is independent, that it does not determine its position according to other countries but according to its own analyses. In short, France is itself.

People must realize once and for all that it is possible to have different views from your partners without failing in friendship or solidarity toward allies and that it is possible to hold similar views without practicing alignment.

Rather Disagreeable Criticisms

Do I need to point out that when France took practical action to successfully oppose foreign interference in Africa, it drew rather disagreeable criticisms from the Soviet Union and that, on the Near East issue, it has followed a constant line for which it has frequently been criticized by the United States.

France does not seek to incur or avoid criticisms. It says and does what it thinks is right.

Question: Let's discuss the government's diplomatic initiatives. They give the impression of rarely producing specific results.

Answer: At least your question admits that France was taken initiatives. Let's look at the results.

It was France which was behind the formation of the European Council and the establishment of the European Monetary System which constitute two fundamental elements in the consultation and assertion of Europe. At the East-West meeting in Madrid, it is the French proposal on disarmament in Europe which is the focal point of discussions in the sphere of security.

This project has been approved by all our allies without exception, recently, including the United States and the Soviet Union has just taken a major step in that direction.

The president of the republic is behind the summit meetings between the seven most highly industrialized countries (the first was held in Rambouillet in 1975) and these meetings have prevented the protectionist reactions to the crisis which made the 1929 crisis so desperately serious.

Is there any need to recall the formation of an overseas nuclear policy council (in September 1976) and France's decision to refrain from exporting reprocessing plants to combat nuclear proliferation?

Is there any need to recall the North-South conference proposed by the president of the republic, which made it possible not only to avoid a climate of confrontation being established between rich and poor countries but also to achieve a number of specific results such as canceling the debts of the poorest developing states?

Strength and Constancy

Question: Did the president of the republic not do Brezhnev a service by going to meet with him in Warsaw when Afghanistan was invaded?

Answer: I have indeed read that people criticized the Warsaw meeting for having lent support to Mr Brezhnev. I note that this criticism was not leveled at the U.S. secretary of state who met with Mr Gromyko in Vienna a few weeks before the Warsaw meeting or at Chancellor Schmidt who visited Moscow a few weeks after the Warsaw meeting. Are we to conclude from this that France alone should refrain from talking with the Soviet Union?

In fact, it was anything but support which the president of the republic gave Mr Brezhnev. He gave him a warning about the serious nature of the Soviet intervention and the consequences it would have if it continued. I indicated that to the French parliament. My statements on the UN and National Assembly platforms bear witness to the strength and constancy of our condemnation.

With all due respect to those who are far removed from responsibilities, when peace is at stake, the stateman's duty is to persistently combine strong positions with the search for dialogue.

The aim is not to win fleeting applause but to do what is necessary to safeguard peace. Those who say that the president of the republic ought not to have gone to Warsaw are the same people who, deep down inside, think that France is no longer capable of debating with the big leaders. They are the advocates of resignation.

Poland Must Survive

Question: With regard to Poland, has France taken a clear and firm enough attitude to the Soviets to deter them from intervening in that country? Was it necessary to recall, as Valery Giscard d'Estaing did recently, that Poland is in the USSR's sphere of influence--a statement which might be interpreted as recognition of Soviet domination?

Answer: I will answer your second question first. No Polish official, not even the Solidarity trade unionleaders, has called Poland's alliances into question. The president of the republic merely pointed to the geographical and political situation which that stance reflects. France's attitude is perfectly clear. It has never varied.

The president of the republic has just recalled that Poland must survive and that nobody has the right to interfere in events in that country. This stance is based on France's deep friendship and fellow feeling toward Poland and on the application of the non-intervention principle embodied in the Helsinki Final Act which is the foundation on which East-West relations have been developed. If that principle were violated, there would be a deep and lasting crisis in those relations. We have stated that clearly and plainly.

Question: Since Ronald Reagan has been at the head of the United States, people have had the impression that our foreign policy has changed and that it has moved closer to U.S. ideas...

Answer: Those who have that impression cannot understand that France has an independent policy, that it determines its policy not on the basis of other countries' policies but on the basis of its own analyses. They have difficulty in understanding that it is possible to have positions which are different from those held by your allies without betraying solidarity and that it is possible to have similar positions without practicing alignment.

Our dialogue with the new U.S. administration is based on those principles. In my talks with President Reagan and General Haig, I was able to observe that this policy is understood and accepted.

An Export Effort

Question: Nonetheless, France is being accused of abandoning its interests in Africa to the Americans, especially in the health sphere....

Answer: The government defends France's rights and interests throughout the world. That is its main duty and the main objective of its action. It does this by ensuring the spread of French culture and language, by supporting our industrialists' export effort, by defending our farmers' interests and by protecting our nationals when they are threatened. It defends our interests everywhere, as I have said. Of course, it does so in Africa.

An entirely artificial argument has been trumped up over France allegedly abandoning its health cooperation in Africa. This is a lie. Far from being reduced, this cooperation is going to be increased even further. This is desired by Africa and by France, which has unparalleled tools for such cooperation with its research laboratories and institutes.

Other countries will join us--their action will complement ours. There is no question of their action replacing ours. I leave to those who want to make disease in Africa their preserve the sorry responsibility for their egoism.

Question: Has there been no change on the Near East either? We nonetheless warmly welcomed President as-Sadat whom we had seemed to be cold-shouldering because of his peace treaty with Israel....

Answer: No, there has been no change. You will see an illustration of what I have just said because, as far as the Near East is concerned, the French and American stances are not the same. We publicly admitted this in talks with General Haig in Washington. Europe's position consists in guaranteeing Israel's existence, security and borders and settling the Palestinian problem in a just way. This is a just and balanced stance which keeps faith with the dual French tradition of friendship with Israel and the Arab world.

Question: Generally speaking, what is the great idea which guides French foreign policy?

Answer: To ensure that France, through its independent policy and fidelity to its alliances, holds it rank, assumes its responsibilities, defends its interests and helps maintain peace. That is what it is doing. It owes this to the president's authority and international audience.

L'HUMANITE VIEWS PRAVDA REMARK ON GISCARD

[Editorial: "Generally Negative"]

[Text] LE MONDE, which on Friday carried the headline: "PRAVDA Makes 'Generally Positive' Assessment of Giscard d'Estaing's Action," was forced to admit on Saturday that this phrase does not appear in the article in question.

It was its Moscow correspondent, it tells us, who added the quotation marks. However, instead of condemning the guilty party, the paper does its utmost to justify his action. Though in a somewhat pitiful manner, it is true.

According to LE MONDE, it was merely an unfortunate and unimportant "oversight." However, it fails to explain why the phrase appears three times in the report--every time in quotation marks. A triple oversight.

Nobody can doubt the fact that this newspaper--from its Moscow correspondent to its editorial staff, via its foreign desk chief--has deliberately mounted a political attack, based on a clumsy trick, not on PRAVDA, which is beyond its range, but on the PCF's presidential candidate.

All the major government-controlled media immediately, and in perfect synchronization, relayed the false report to tens of millions of French people. The radio and television channels were very careful not to restore the truth when they were able to check the information at source. AFP, which carried LE MONDE's "oversight," refused on Friday night to carry excerpts from L'HUMANITE's editorial, which contained proof of the deceit.

In a fraternal stampede, B. Beregovoy of the PS, Labbe and Pons of the RPR and all the reporters of the Elysee Palace's radio and television services rushed to the battlement, obligingly provided to trumpet or hammer home the following message: "Brezhnev votes Giscard."

So once again, we can see the "consensus" that is established between the Socialist and members of the majority when it comes to waging an anticommunist campaign on whatever pretext.

The fact remains that the PRAVDA correspondent did write--as was his right as a journalist--an article in which he presented his analysis of the political situation in France on the eve [as published] of the presidential election. So that our readers can form an accurate idea of its content, we have published it in full on page three. The author Avers says--and this is the brief statement from which the entire operation was launched--that Giscard d'Estaing "has earned personal authority as a prudent and restrained politician, particularly in the international arena, where France's positions have recently become consolidated."

This is an opinion which PRAVDA's Paris correspondent is fully entitled to express. It need hardly be said that we do not share it. And it is neither the first nor probably the last time that our analysis has not coincided with the positions of Soviet diplomacy, which is doubtless a victim of what is called the "obligation to reserve" common to all diplomacies. This obligation implies in this instance the failure to mention certain negative aspects in the legitimate desire for good relations with France and to safeguard peaceful coexistence.

For some years, the Soviet leaders have declared themselves satisfied with the development of relations with our country. To pretend to discover this now, in the middle of an election campaign, on the basis of a harmless remark by a Soviet journalists, and to conclude from it that the Kremlin is launching an official appeal for people to vote for Giscard reflects a crude political manipulation.

All the more so since the opinion expressed in this regard by PRAVDA--who could really doubt it?--has neither the intention nor the power to alter a single vote in the French electorate in the coming election.

In particular, it is unclear how such a position could harm F. Mitterrand, since Giscard d'Estaing has said that nothing fundamental separates him from the Socialist candidate and that he would vote for him against Georges Marchais.

On the other hand, it is still abundantly clear, even after this storm in a vodka glass, that the French workers have no alternative than to vote for the Communist candidate, if they really want to halt Giscard d'Estaing's generally negative policy.

PS: MARCHAIS MAKES JOINT GOVERNMENT 'IMPOSSIBLE'

LD181621 Paris LE MONDE in French 15-16 Mar 81 p 4

[Text] PS Executive Bureau member Michel Rocard visited Toulon on 13 March to support Mr Mitterrand's candidacy in the presidential election. The Yvelines deputy expressed particular satisfaction at the PS unity, asserting: "It is strong and I have contributed to that."

Turning to Mr Marchais' candidacy, Mr Rocard stated that although his candidacy clarified the situation, it "also complicates the conditions for forming a joint government, and even makes them impossible despite the Socialists' attachment to the leftwing union."

IRAQ OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH PREMIER

JN181910 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1840 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Mar (INA)--Tariq 'Aziz, Revolution Command Council member and deputy prime minister, met here this evening with French Premier Raymond Barre. Iraqi ambassador in Paris Nuri Isma'il al-Wa'is attended the meeting.

Tariq 'Aziz stated after the meeting that his current visit to France is concerned with exchanging views with the French Government on bilateral relations in the interest of the two countries. He added that such visits have become a tradition in our developed relations with the French friends.

He pointed out that his talks with the French premier dealt in general with bilateral relations in various fields, problems in the region and international issues. He expressed satisfaction with his talks with Raymond Barre.

Asked by journalists about the Iraqi-Iranian war, Tariq 'Aziz stressed that Iraq's position is quite excellent and that Iraq is facing no problems. He pointed out that the Tehran rulers are responsible for the continuation of the war and all the perils entailed by it.

He stressed Iraq's faith in peace and said: We want a just peace, but the other side is not concerned with peace. He explained that the peace efforts achieved no result because the Iranian side did not cooperate with them. He added that the Tehran rulers have adopted stands conflicting with peace, which cannot be attained by one side alone.

PLO OFFICIAL FARUQ QADDUMI ARRIVES FOR VISIT

Statement on Arrival

AU182007 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Rome, 18 Mar (ANSA)--Faruq Qaddumi, diplomatic chief of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), arrived in Rome this evening. Qaddumi will meet later this evening with the Vatican's secretary of state Cardinal Amstino Casaroli. Tomorrow he is slated to meet with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

In a brief statement after he arrived at Rome's international airport, Qaddumi said that he and Colombo will exchange views on "the aspects of relations between the Italian and Palestinian peoples. We will also examine the latest developments in the Middle East".

He went on to say that "we of the PLO, insist that any international initiative aimed at resolving the Middle East problem must not ignore the fundamental rights of the Palestinian people--return to its own nation; creation of an independent state and self-rule. Palestinians and Arabs hope that the European nations can develop a more advanced vision with respect to the Palestinian question, particularly recognition of the PLO.

"I am happy to be in Rome and I hope that bilateral relations will develop and progress."

Speaking of his encounter with Casaroli, Qaddumi said they will discuss the latest developments in the Middle East issue and the problems of Jerusalem.

"Jerusalem must be defended as a holy city and should return as it was before the latest occupation of our territories in 1967."

Meeting at Vatican

LD182000 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1800 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Faruq Qaddumi, the PLO No 2, is at the Vatican talking to Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, secretary of state. It is the first time that an official PLO representative has been received in the Vatican. The only precedent was last summer when a Catholic member of the PLO handed a petition to the pope.

The contents of talks held this evening are being kept strictly secret. They most certainly dealt with the main problems of the Middle East crisis. As is known, the Vatican has several times advocated the creation of an international statute for Jerusalem which embraces the holy places of the three great monotheistic religions, Christianity, Islam and Judaism. Tomorrow Faruq Qaddumi will be received by Italian Foreign Minister Colombo.

Vatican Communique

LD182312 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] The head of the political department of the PLO, Faruq Qaddumi, arrived in Rome today. This afternoon, he was received in the Vatican by Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, secretary of state. A communique issued by the Vatican press office at the end of the meeting explained that Cardinal Casaroli wanted to know the PLO point of view on the situation in the Middle East and on the solution of the Israeli-Arab crisis in its various aspects, as the Holy See--the communique says--had already done and continues to do with all the interested parties. Tomorrow, Faruq Qaddumi will be received by Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

PLO, Vatican Contacts Reviewed

[Text] Vatican City, 19 Mar (ANSA)--The head of diplomacy for the Palestine Liberation Organization, Faruq Qaddumi, was received here in the evening by the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, for consultations on the Middle East which marked a shift in relations between the Holy See and the PLO.

At the end of the forty-five minute meeting, the first ever between the Vatican diplomat and the official foreign policy representative of PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat, Father Romeo Panciroli, the Vatican spokesman, reported that the PLO representative to Italy and Msgr Achille Silvestrini, the secretary of the Council of Church Public Affairs, were also present.

"In accepting the request for the encounter," the spokesman said, "Cardinal Casaroli intended to learn directly the PLO points of view on the situation in the Middle East and the solution to the Arab-Israeli crisis in its various aspects, as the Holy See has done and continues to do with all the sides involved." The spokesman identified the major issues discussed as: "How to reach a just and stable peace in the Middle East, the Palestinian problem, the question of Jerusalem and finally, the presence of the Palestinians in Lebanon."

Indicating the significant development in relations between the Holy See and the PLO the meeting represented, Vatican observers said it marked the de facto recognition of 'Arafat's organization as the voice of the Palestinians for matters in the Middle East, a standing for the PLO, which has no diplomatic relations with the Vatican, equal to that accorded Israel, the other side in the conflict.

Earlier developments in these relations included a brief and informal meeting between Pope John Paul II and a personal envoy sent by 'Arafat, 'Afif (Safiyyih). During a Wednesday general audience in the Vatican on September 17. During this encounter, (Safiyyih) handed the pontiff a message from the PLO leader. A few days earlier, the PLO envoy met with the number two man in Vatican diplomacy, Msgr Silvestrini, but the contents of the discussion held during this informal encounter were not disclosed.

Earlier last year, Palestinian sources reported an exchange of letters between 'Arafat and the pope which included two letters from John Paul on the status of Jerusalem, problems in Lebanon and the Palestinian question. These same three issues have been discussed at length in conversations the pontiff has held over the past few months with a number of representatives from Middle Eastern countries.

These meetings go back to the long talk the pontiff held with King Husayn of Jordan on September 1, 1980 and include the pope's encounter with the new Iraqi ambassador to the Holy See, Anwar Sabri 'Abd ar-Razzaq, on December 18, and his conversation with Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Al Sa'ud al-Faysal two days later. At the end of this meeting a Vatican note reported that the pontiff had reconfirmed the position of the Holy See contained in a document released on June 30, "contrary to any unilateral initiative for the modification of the political status of Jerusalem."

This Vatican document was drafted in response to the unilateral declaration of the Israeli parliament identifying Jerusalem as the "eternal and indivisible" capital of the Jewish state. The pope, at that time, said that he favored the principle that "the holy city might become the meeting place for the faithful of the three monotheistic religions" and affirmed "the urgency of action to equitably settle the problem of the Palestinian people." Early last February, 'Arafat sent a note to the pope to express his pleasure at receiving the papal message delivered to Muslim leaders to mark the anniversary of the birth of Muhammad.

In a related development, a papal audience for the Israeli foreign minister, Yitzhaq Shamir, had been scheduled for March 6 on Shamir's request but the meeting failed to take place because of a delay in the foreign minister's arrival from Mexico and his subsequent refusal to reschedule the audience for the after sundown beginning of the Jewish day of rest, Saturday.

COLOMBO COMMENTS ON REAGAN DEALINGS WITH SOVIETS

[Text] Rome, 19 Mar (ANSA)--The "rough language" used by American President Ronald Reagan in dealings with the Soviet Union was identified as a means for provoking a reaction from the other side and reopening East-West dialogue on fresh ground by the Italian Foreign Minister, Emilio Colombo, in an interview slated for publication in the upcoming issue of SABATO.

In his statement to the Italian weekly, Colombo also discussed Italian foreign policy in the area of detente and the situation in El Salvador. Speaking about firmness in dealing with the Soviet Union, noted as a key element in the policy of the new Washington administration, the foreign minister said that, from an objective point of view, this policy is based on the U.S.-Soviet declaration of Moscow made on May 29, 1972. "If, therefore, firmness means the unwillingness of the United States or any other country to unilaterally give ground before a break in the balance of world power and serious danger for the stabilization of East-West relations and peace, then I will take the side in favor of everything that leads to the achievement of these objectives," Colombo said.

The diplomatic chief went on to discuss the "substantial" significance of the Italian effort to push forward the detente process. In this context, he noted that, "Especially because of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan, world public opinion has been forced to acknowledge that, far from lining up its own efforts with those of Western countries, the Soviet Union does not hesitate to inflict serious blows to detente policy."

As a preface to remarks on the situation in El Salvador, the foreign minister declared that the round of visits head of state Sandro Pertini will conduct to Mexico, Columbia and Costa Rica, beginning next week, will give him the opportunity to gather first-hand knowledge of those Latin American government's positions on matters in the strife-torn Central American state. "A highly complex situation now prevails in El Salvador," the foreign minister said, "one which is difficult to fit into a preconceived framework." Colombo went on to analvze the elements in the complex picture as. "forces of the right with a military background whose objective is to maintain a political situation linked to economic and social conditions which are untenable because they are unjust. There are, on the left, forces in opposition to the arrogance of the right but they are sullied by outside influences, like the Castroite influence, and forces within seeking to install a Marxist-Leninist inspired regime and not a puralistic system. This revolutionary front has its own militia which also takes victims in the country", Colombo continued. On the positive side, according to the foreign minister, "among the government forces, together with the more moderate cross-section of the military, there is the initiative of the Christian Democrat, Napoleon Durate, who, in extremely difficult conditions, is seeking to set in motion a democratic reform process.

"As regards Italy," the foreign minister added, "we are convinced that it will be necessary to promote a political solution over armed confrontation."

The foreign minister concluded by noting that the signals indicating the possibility of a peaceful solution for the Salvadoran crisis now make it urgently necessary to mount a joint and "responsible" initiative involving the Socialist and Christian Democrat international.

MINISTRY CONFIRMS PNG STATUS OF CUBAN ENVOY

LD181330 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Portugal's charge d'affaires in Cuba, Francisco de Sales Mascarenhas, arrived in Lisbon this morning from Havana. He declined to make any statement on arrival.

A late news report from the Portuguese news agency reaching our news desk says that a few minutes after Sales Mascarenhas had arrived in Lisbon the Portuguese Government declared the Cuban ambassador to Lisbon persona non grata. This report has since been confirmed by the Portuguese Foreign Ministry.

This development represents in practical terms a nearly total breakoff in the relations between the two countries.

Embassy To Remain Open

LD190125 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0100 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] Quoting a source in the Cuban Embassy in Lisbon, the Portuguese news agency ANOP reports that the functioning of the Cuban diplomatic mission in Lisbon will be ensured by a charge d'affaires after the departure of Cuban Ambassador Estevez Perez, declared persona non grata by the Portuguese Government yesterday.

GUN SALES TO PERU--In a communique released today, the Ministry of Defense stated that Portugal has in effect sold machinegun parts to Peru. Such deliveries were authorized at the end of 1980, after all legal formalities had been observed. The move, the communique stressed, falls within the normal framework of diplomatic relations between the two countires. [Text] [Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 12 Mar 81 LD]

MEDIA AGREEMENT WITH MOZAMBIQUE--Portugal and Mozambique have reached agreement on the opening of a joint Mozambican radio-MOZAMBICAN NEWS AGENCY office in Lisbon. The plan has been finalized during the current visit to our country by Leite de Vasconcelos, national deputy director of information of the People's Republic of Mozambique, who was yesterday received by Luis Fontoura, Portuguese secretary of state for social communication. Eugenio Corte Real will be the Mozambican radio and news agency correspondent in Lisbon. Mozambique is the first Portuguese-speaking African country to make this kind of move in the sphere of mass media. [Text] [Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0800 GMT 14 Mar 81 LD]

UCD CHAIRMAN INTERVIEWED ON NATIONAL, PARTY MATTERS

LD181625 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 15 Mar 81 pp 16-17

[Sebastian Garcia interview with Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) Chairman Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun; date and place not specified]

[Text] Question: Following the attempted coup, each political force adopted its stance on the solution which should be given to the situation, and the UCD said that the preferable solution is cooperation among the political forces, without going as far as a coalition government. For what reasons did it adopt this stance?

Answer: This is the stance for which the prime minister candidate, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, secured confidence in the chambers. It was the stance which he and the party had put forward in the investiture and for which he received confidence. Without reopening the debate on this issue, which is now over, as he very properly said at the time in agreement with the party chairman, it is clear that the democratic system must be consolidated, and it seems essential that alternation in power, which is a fundamental and decisive element of that system, be preserved.

Moreover, Alfonso Guerra himself in early February, gave a whole number of reasons why a different government would have difficulties in its internal functioning, bearing in mind that the programs are totally different and that the government must tackle all issues in its work. Combining and reconciling those programs and approaches would be tremendously complex. Moreover, within a few months we will be experiencing several partial elections, including the elections to the Galician parliament; confusion created among the electorate would be beneficial for nobody.

Also, and without entering into another kind of reason, the parties left outside the government would find their political field facilitated. I regard as important the stance adopted by the UCD that the essential thing at present is to reduce the tension in society somewhat and strengthen the state, facilitating a clear exercise of authority, with stances which will defend the stability of this state, the democratic system and the constitutional order on all fronts. And to this end we believe that the best solution is that which has been put forward: That there should be a dialogue with the most significant political and parliamentary forces, carrying it out at the same time as the points of the program to which the UCD committed itself.

Question: However, Popular Alliance leader Manuel Fraga says that the problem is that the UCD is the only party that does not realize what is happening. How would you rebut that accusation?

Answer: Well, Fraga or other parties may make statements which are then necessary to substantiate. Look, the practice of sweeping criticisms does not suit me, and I believe that those who employ it are mistaken, because it ends up by turning against them. At all events, it seems to follow from past election results that it is not the UCD but others who do not realize, even if Mr Fraga believes the contrary.

I have frequently said that I have the impression that what exists in Spain, in addition to the difficulties which may exist, is a psychological crisis based on those difficulties; the outcome perhaps of the fact that following the initial period of consensus, which lasted quite a long time and was necessary and desirable, there was a change to a situation--especially over the last few months, at the end of 1980--of the utmost confrontation, in which, in my opinion, people went beyond the interplay between government and opposition and adopted stances which were not so much parliamentary as extraparliamentary, of criticisms which sometimes destroy the institutions' image, because it is difficult for the public to distinguish between the personal and institutional aspects.

It seems to me that we should at this moment on the basis of dialogue create among everybody a political game which will always preserve the stances of government and opposition, but seeking, apart from the points of agreement, a reduction of tension, and this not only because of the nature of the situation which we are experiencing but also because it has become necessary over the last few months, when a certain distancing of public opinion with respect to the political game has occurred.

I sincerely believe that, without affecting the roles of government and opposition, which have a fundamental function in the democratic system, it is desirable that dialectics do not exceed certain bounds.

"Restore Enthusiasm for Democracy"

I believe that it is necessary to restore the Spanish people's enthusiasm for freedom, as was made clear in the huge demonstrations on 27 February throughout Spain, and I would cite Madrid as an example of the extent the Spanish people feel identified with democracy.

It is necessary to instill enthusiasm in the Spanish people in the daily defense of the democratic system and peaceful coexistence, relax society somewhat and cause an attitude of respect to be again enhanced more each day.

Question: Apart from this, how would the cooperation among the political forces be realized?

Answer: Citizens' cooperation in eradicating terrorism seems to me to be essential. It must be emphasized that terrorist actions have lost popular support. Thus in the Basque country, regardless of the demonstration concerning the Arregui affair, popular support is not the same today. The demonstrations of 1977 and 1978, which were called on the basis of opinions close to support for terrorist movements, involved thousands, whereas in 1980 they attracted maybe a couple of hundred people.

In this reduction or elimination of the support which terrorism seeks throughout Spain, the way in which politicians handle the issue is very useful: It is necessary to avoid the language and terms which the terrorists use and into which we can lapse in speaking, such as the expression "armed struggle," for instance. It also seems to be that it is necessary to take a further step, which could lead to legislative actions with respect to the commandos supporting terrorism; and last, it is necessary to mobilize the whole of society for active citizens' cooperation.

People seem to become passive in societies in which terrorism operates. And the fact is that the terrorists, apart from arrogating to themselves the macabre right to dispose of other people's lives, have played at taking advantage of those who seek to base themselves on those actions on both sides, and this results in degrading society. The latter's attitude is therefore very important. To this end, cooperation among the political forces could be very useful.

Another aspect in which dialogue seems to me to be essential is in the defense of the consitutional order. We cannot allow the justification of terrorism, or attacks against the constitution on the basis of constant distortion of the facts or constant incitement to rebellion. Here we must act urgently, and in this connection it is necessary to appraise the decisions made at the last cabinet meeting, which were the subject of the first contacts with the political forces.

We must not allow anybody to use the concept of nation ambiguously or claim the sole right to Spain's name or flag. We must ensure that Spain's name and Spain's flag are in all the places where they should be, and that the national values and symbols have everybody's proper respect.

Dialogue is also necessary for the final consolidation of the model of the state. It is necessary to ensure that a strong state emerges, which does not mean a centralist state, because the autonomous communities are also the state. It is a matter of authority being exercised and of having an administration which is capable in all fields and powers. Dialogue will be important for the laws of harmonization which will make it possible to establish smooth functioning of the coherent regional institutions, for enabling us to avert an overload in the electoral timetables of the autonomy processes, and last for consolidating and completing the Spanish autonomy model.

Question: So does the UCD rule out the reform of Title VIII of the constitution, which even leaders of the UCD itself have demanded?

Answer: Title VIII needs a task of implementation, through the process which I mentioned earlier. We are maintaining a dialogue which must be very broad, in which the issues and everybody's stances should take shape in order afterward to tackle the solutions.

Another essential aspect is the surmounting of the economic crisis and the creation of employment. On the basis of the dialogue between the government and the social forces which was offered during the investiture session, it is necessary to tackle a realistic policy in order at least to maintain the level of employment and afterward to begin to reduce unemployment. And in this formulas of agreement with the trade union and employers' organizations can continue to be found. In this connection attention to small and medium enterprises is essential, because we must not forget that over 90 percent of jobs depend on this sector. Some appropriate measures to improve the system in which it has to operate could be very opportune, as could reviewing the method of financing social security, which at present is functioning in a sense as a tax on manpower; that is, it is hindering employment.

Question: All this requires a practical form in which to implement it. How could this be done? By means of a kind of "shadow government," a monitoring committee, so to speak, or signed agreements?

Answer: I believe that the best way is a continuous dialogue with the political and social forces. The measures taken by the government already indicate what could be achieved by this dialogue. It is less important what we call it. What we must do, on the basis of the attitude deriving from this dialogue, is develop confidence within society, seeking action that will help to strengthen the institutions and give prestige to parliament, the executive and all state bodies.

"Armed Forces Duty Performed Loyally"

Question: One of the so-called state topics is the situation within the armed forces. What action whould be taken to prevent a repetition of a situation similar to the one that occurred on 23 February?

Answer: First, a distinction must be made regarding the conduct of certain particular members of the armed forces and the state security forces. What emerged clearly was that when the government was blackmailed these institutions, as such, loyally performed their duty to defend the constitutional order--a duty which thus took practical, not only theeoretical, form. Therefore, we must first be grateful to the armed forces for their clear-cut and practical conduct. This is reflected in the communiques issued by the meetings of our Executive Committee, urging the institutioyns concerned to carry out a thorough action. We must not create a witch hunt atmosphere or make generalizations, but ensure that the responsibilities of those involved are clearly defined and that they receive the proper legal response.

Any involvement by civilians which might have occurred must also be thoroughly investigated--including civilians who might have supported such plans. I believe that exemplary punishment of those involved and complete confidence in the implementation of justice in all its forms is extremely apt and positive; but at the same time it is logical that the public will want to see that firm action is being taken in these matters. Be that as it may, we political forces will demand this steadfastness and that the clarification be carried out to its final conclusions.

"Tensions Surmounted in UCD"

Question: Having outlined the possible action, the UCD's present internal situation should be tackled so as to implement this plan.

Answer: The UCD, as a ruling party, has experienced a special situation in recent months, and an outsider could confuse the party's situation with the specific situation that exists on the eve of a congress.

Ours is a pluralist party with a wealth of tendencies which makes it particularly attractive, because this pluralism enables it to embrace an extremely broad range of voters.

But one must not confuse this precongress or congress situation, which to some extent has been exacerbated by the simultaneous emergence on the political calendar of several bills which imply that several differences exist among the various stances of UCD members--one must not, I repeat, confuse this precongress period, which is an electoral period, with the outcome of the congress and, above all, with the events of the months ahead. I firmly believe in the sense of responsibility and honesty of all UCD members, and am sure that they are honestly and sometimes passionately defending their specific stances on some of the bills currently being discussed.

The UCD is fully determined that in addition to encouraging internal cohesion, within the wealth implicit in its pluralism, it will surmount the precongress phase, and that now, without prejudice to the internal debate, any possible ideas or apparent differences will also be overcome. Clearly, there are no splits or opposed sectors as such within the UCD--only stances on specified points, which are both valid and good, because they contribute to the wealth of the debate, as long as they subsequently lead to a disciplined acceptance of the bodies responsible for reaching a decision. What the UCD will produce is a stance of clear support for the government.

In this connection, some attention must be given to the meetings currently being held by the various UCD bodies. The UCD is involved in a thorough process of regeneration both in its organizational structures and in its internal functioning. The standard of specific and thorough political debate on specific and very important issues at the Executive Committee meetings that have been held has been found very satisfactory by those present. On Friday, we held a meeting to introduce all the executive secretaries to all the provincial chairmen and secretaries, and this is a good opportunity to encourage this process of communication, since another of the UCD's aims is to substantially improve the party's standards of internal and external communication in order to penetrate society.

At Friday's meeting, as I was saying, people who might be considered to be more skeptical about the party's functioning consistently expressed great praise for the work that is being done.

Question: There is a radically new element in this process of regenerating the party, namely the separation of the functions of party chairman and prime minister. What effects will this separation have on the UCD?

[Answer] I believe that the effects will be extremely positive. On the one hand, it permits the party chairman to devote exclusive attention to party matters and the prime minister to devote exclusive attention to government matters. On the other hand, cooperation between the two is complete. We meet frequently, discuss matters in depth and are entirely in agreement.

In view of the existence of this good understanding and coordination, which we are organizing carefully at various levels between government and party, the functioning of political action is guaranteed and only advantages can derive from it. The UCD has three political phases, to use what is perhaps a somewhat specialized terminology. The first phase is to support everyone concerned with decisionmaking spheres in our nation, whether in central government, at municipal level or in any aspect of the administration; to support them in the ways I was talking about earlier--the supply of cadres, ideology, guidelines, and so forth.

The second phase consists of beingconstantly prepared for elections when they occur. As I said before, we are approaching the elections to the Galician parliament and this implies an entire timetable which we will logically observe within the framework of the political strategy defined by the Political Council meeting to be held in early April.

The third phase is the party's future, its consolidation, in short, the fundamental aspect. We must live attuned to society and our voters, expressing a continuous message, as I was saying, and ensuring that these messages reach and penetrate all the sectors that make up the infrastructure of a center party's political structure--the entire combination of middle classes, members of the liberal professions, small entrepreneurs, workers and housewives.... In short, we must remain in permanent contact with them.

GOVERNMENT SIGNS $500-MILLION CREDIT AGREEMENT

[Excerpts] Finance Minister Jaime Garcia Anoveros and some 60 Spanish and foreign credit houses have signed an agreement for a credit of $500 million, some 44 billion pesetas, in Madrid today.

After the signing, the minister said that Spain has had no recourse to the Eurocredit market for 3 years and that the favorable response to the request is due to this fact and also to the confidence in its future, in its capacity for work to overcome the present economic difficulties and also in the solidity and stability of the democratic institutions.

The conditions attached to this Eurocredit indicate that it will be for 8 years, with 5 years grace, and that the rate of interest will be the U.S. preferential rate plus a margin of one-fourth for the whole term of the credit.

LABOR MINISTER AALTO TO LEAVE GOVERNMENT

LD181516 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1400 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Labor Minister Arvo Aalto is to leave the government. The Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Politburo decided today, at Aalto's own initiative, to request his resignation from government membership.

The politburo explained Aalto's return to the post of secretary general of the SKP by referring to the importance of the preparations for the party's congress in May.

Here is a report by Pentti Lumme:

The change of Finnish People's Democratic League [SKDL] ministers in the government was last discussed at the end of November last year. Then the Communists decided that the change of ministers was unnecessary, but now the change of ministers will take place in any case.

Minister of Labor Arvo Aalto resumes the post of SKP secretary general.

Aalto has been minister of labor in two governments since 1977, in Kaveli Sorsa's and now Mauno Koivisto's government. He has held the post of SKP secretary general since 1969. The exchange of SKDL ministers was discussed last autumn, and at that time it was mentioned that Education Minister Kalevi Kivisto, who is chairman of the SKDL, should also leave the government. Now, the SKDL has said that this has not been discussed.

According to an announcement by the SKP politburo, Aalto is leaving the government now in order to deal with the duties of SKP secretary general because the pressure of work in the Central Committee has grown with the approach of the party congress in May. The forthcoming SKP congress is an important event, for there is nothing to indicate that the internal division in the party will be solved at the congress. Aalto represents the majority view, and apparently the party majority needs a man of Aalto's importance to see the congress home, and home particularly in a way which is the best possible for the majority. [end Lumme report]

The Communists are proposing that Aalto be succeeded by the financial director of the housing board, Jouko Kajanoja, who is a member of the SKP Central Committee. The change of ministers is expected to take place on Friday at the earliest.

U.S., USSR CRITICIZED ON EL SALVADOR ISSUE

LD181456 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Excerpts] The foreign policy debate continues in the Riksdag. Olof Palme spoke this morning and he praised the government for its foreign policy declaration, the best issued by the bourgeois government, Palme said. But on some points he was critical, including the formulation of Sweden's foreign political obligations and the exemption given to the Sandvik Company for investments in South Africa. Olof Palme also took up the Telub affair [concerning military training to be given by the Telub Company to some Libyans] and accused the ministers concerned of lying to the Riksdag and the constitutional committee.

As regards the purely foreign political content in this debate it was a Riksdag debate without any hard exchanges of blows between the bourgeois government and the Social Democratic opposition.

The government's declaration [by Foreign Minister Ullsten] covered the entire foreign political field dealing with Poland, Afghanistan, southern Africa and disarmament. The declaration also contained, among other things, a harsh attack on the American policy in El Salvador.

[Begin Ullsten recording] If the American policy, moreover, is an attempt to provide a lesson on how the new administration intends to react in other, similar conflicts, there is full cause for the deepest anxiety. It is a dangerous and shortsighted policy to use small countries as examples in big power politics. Mr Speaker, it seems more than likely that the Soviet Union is trying to make use of the situation in El Salvador for its purposes. Nevertheless, it would be tragic if the United States once again were to show that it lacks the ability to understand the social and political realities behind the conflicts in the Third World. [end recording]

NO DATE FIXED FOR PALME GULF MEDIATING MISSION

NC142020 Paris AFP in English 1958 GMT 17 Mar 81

[Text] Stockholm, 17 Mar (AFP)--Former Swedish Premier Olof Palme has not fixed a date for his next Gulf mediating mission to Iran and Iraq, his party said today, contradicting an earlier announcement that the mission would begin next week.

The United Nations said on Monday that Mr Palme, leader of Sweden's opposition Social Democrats, would undertake his fourth un-sponsored Gulf mediation mission some time next week.

But his party said today that the plans had not been finalised, although one of Mr Palme's collaborators on the missions would shortly visit both warring countries to resume contacts.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS COVER VAROSHA ISSUE

NC182114 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] A new meeting in the framework of the intercommunal talks was held at the Ledra Palace Hotel today.

A UN statement said that during the meeting, the first of the sixth round of the talks, the Varosha resettlement, under UN auspices, was discussed and continued. The statement added that the next meeting will be held on 2 April. At this meeting discussions will continue on the practical measures to be taken by both sides to promote good will, mutual confidence and a return to normalcy.

In a statement before the meeting, Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, said that at the talks the Varosha resettlement issue is discussed on the basis of its own importance. Nevertheless, he added, outside the talks, the issue is discussed in relation to other issues. He also said that the talks will continue until the sixth round is completed. At that time, it will be decided whether there will be a break due to the forthcoming elections. Gobbi said that, if it is necessary, he will go to New York during the talks recess to meet with UN Secretary General Waldheim.

Ioannidhis, the Greek Cypriot representative to the talks, stated that there are great differences between the two sides on the Varosha issue. A suitable settlement of this issue, he added, will open the road to something better. He also said that the Varosha issue is not being discussed outside the talks in relation to the issue of reopening Nicosia airport. Ioannidhis added that the Greek Cypriot side has not asked for a break in the talks owing to the elections.

Onan, the Turkish Cypriot representative, stated that he does not know whether outside the talks anything else is being discussed in relation to the Varosha issue. He expressed the view that during the elections, it would be correct if there was a break, provided, beforehand, a date was fixed for their resumption.

Suspension of Talks Opposed

NC190914 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 19 Mar 81 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "The Talks"]

[Text] The suspension of the talks is being engineered under the pretext of the elections. This is unacceptable and a suspension would be a ruse to cover up the stagnation and to postpone an impasse. Such a ruse will neither help the talks nor help achieve a solution to the Cyprus problem. It will completely denigrate the talks and transform them officially into a parody--in fact a frozen parody. It will harm the Cyprus problem because every deceptive impression harms it. It will be deceptive to give as the only reason for the suspension the facts that the submitted Turkish proposals cannot serve as the basis for negotiations and that the Turkish side continues to refuse to submit proposals on the territorial aspect.

The Greek Cypriot side has no electoral problem that could influence the talks. It has a problem with the Turkish stance in the talks, and if the Turkish side wants the talks suspended with the elections as an excuse, the Greek Cypriot side cannot be a party to the deception. It has an obligation to tell the truth and to demand that Waldheim also tell the truth.

PROGRESS OF U.S. BASES TALKS REPORTEDLY SLOWS

NC181543 Paris AFP in English 1453 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Athens, 18 Mar (AFP)--Talks between Greece and the United States on renewing the status of four American military bases in Greece are at breakdown point, a very reliable Greek source said here today.

The major problem is what could be seen as an ultimatum by the Greek Government; U.S. military aid to Greece and Turkey should be in a ratio of 7 to 10.

Observers here said the Greek negotiators, who are at the moment busy with other matters anyway, would not be satisfied with a vague American formula stating the need to maintain the balance of forces in the eastern Mediterranean. Any such formula would have to be accompanied by a positive reply to the request for military hardware that was officially put forward to the White House on Saturday by the Greek Government.

American diplomats appear to have been surprised by the size of the request, and American sources said the Greek fears with regard to Turkey, a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Association, [NATO], failed to take into account the global objectives of NATO.

General elections are due to take place in September or October this year in Greece, and this could have a bearing on the matter of the U.S. bases.

Talks with various members of the ruling party give the impression that Greece is more interested in the balance of forces with Turkey than in border guarantees which Andreas Papandreou, leader of the Socialist opposition, has consistently called for.

The head of the Panhellenic Socialist Movement, many of whose supporters are Greeks expelled from Asia Minor by the Turks, still suspects that Turkey harbours expansionist aims concerning certain Greek islands in the Aegean Sea, including Samos, Khios and Rhodes.

Such "guarantees" would take the form of reaffirmation of an April 1976 letter from then U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger to the Greek Government saying that Washington would strongly oppose the use of force to settle problems pending between Athens and Ankara in the Aegean Sea.

Meanwhile, the talks on the bases were foundering largely due to the absence of Greek negotiators; the secretary-general of the Foreign Ministry and his deputies are in Ankara to examine matters relating to the Aegean while Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis is busy preparing for a European summit to be held in Maastricht, The Netherlands, on March 23 and 24.

THESSALONIKI HOLDS PROTEST AGAINST FOREIGN BASES

NC171734 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 17 Mar 81 p 8

[16 March correspondent's report]

[Text] The people of Thessaloniki, in a march of about 7 kilometers, today demonstrated their desire for the withdrawal of all foreign bases from Greece.

The march was organized by the Thessaloniki Committee for International Detente and Peace and started at 1730 from the Foinikas Settlement Square, and 3 and 1/2 hours later ended at Aristotle Square in the town center where the chairman of the Thessaloniki Committee for International Detente and Peace, Thessaloniki Mayor Mikhalis Papadopoulos, addressed a message of greetings.

The demonstrators carried hundreds of placards with such slogans as: "Peace--Detente--Disarmament"; "Out with the bases of death"; "Workers ask for peace and work"; "Drama has shown Hellenization," The people who gathered along the march route in the streets of Vasilissie Olgas and Tsimiski showered the marchers with flowers.

Protest Against VOA

NC182150 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 18 Mar 81 p 9

[Excerpts] Thessaloniki, 17 Mar--A message of the Thessaloniki Committee for International Detente and Peace calls on the people of Thessaloniki to maintain constant readiness and vigilance so foreign military bases will be banned from Greece, so the new Greek-U.S. agreement will not be signed, so the Pershing-II and cruise nuclear missiles will not be deployed inside the country, and so the neutron bomb will not be built.

The government has not substantively replied to the issue brought up by the KKE parliamentary group concerning abolition of the "Voice of America" radio station. Moreover, it has refused to supply to the Chamber of Deputies the texts of the station's October broadcasts.

A pertinent question has been asked, however, by Comrades K. Kappos, N. Kepesis, K. Vasalos and Maria Dhamanaki, who stressed that, "among other things, this station includes anti-Arab and cold war-style broadcasts that might result in relations between Greece and the Arab world being undermined."

The government's reply, signed by Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis, said: "I inform you that the Rhodes 'Voice of America' radio station is operating on the basis of complex agreements, the first of which was signed in 1952. The status of the 'Voice of America' relay stations' operation in our country is under negotiation, with the aim of revising it. The government follows the stations' operation and sees to it that the country's interests are protected whenever necessary."

The local peace committee has issued the following protest: "The concern of all the citizens in our area that know the deadly danger they are risking from the existence and operation near their homes of the U.S. Nea Makri base, the biggest of its kind in the Mediterranean, has become even greater since the recent release to the press and notification to the Marathon community of the decision on the enforced expropriation of about 700 acres in Kato Souli Marathona, allegedly for the Greek Navy's needs. In reality, this has been done so the U.S. base can expand."

The local peace committee is organizing a gathering against the foreign military bases on Sunday 22 March at 2230.

RIZOSPASTIS URGES APPROVAL OF BREZHNEV PROPOSALS

NC181645 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 18 Mar 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Serious Responsibilities"]

[Excerpts] The substantiated, constructive and specific Soviet proposals for peace are meeting worldwide support. People with good will see the Soviet Union's peaceful initiative as a realistic way out of the dangerously aggravated international situation--as a positive approach toward the final removal of the threat of war and the arms race and to the consolidation of world detente and security.

The Greek people have paid--and are still paying today--a high price for the painful consequences of imperialist adventures and the policy "from a position of strength."

The New Democracy government has given assurances that it will carefully study the Soviet proposals contained in Brezhnev's message. The New Democracy government has also admitted publicly that the proposals are "important and interesting." At the same time, however, it hastened to clarify that its final stand would be aligned with the "line" of the other EC and NATO member countries.

The government's first stance raises reasonable questions for every Greek citizen, every friend of peace, beyond his individual political belief:

--Where and by whom will the decision be taken on behalf of "sovereign" Greece?

Will they be taken in Athens by the responsible government or in Washington and Brussels by the big Western partners? And if it is the government that will judge and decide, what is the meaning of its advance commitment that it will, one way or another, align itself with their position?

However, the matter does not close here. The rightwing followers and all those who sided with them in the EEC issue can easily draw their conclusion:

--They had been assured that the integration [into the EEC] safeguarded national sovereignty. Now they see our sovereign rights being openly alienated in the name of some "Atlantic solidarity."

The initial government reaction to the Soviet proposals leaves ample room for ambiguity where a clear and positive stand is required. Even now the government has to face its serious responsibilities toward this country and toward our people's future. It should align its answer to the Soviet leader's message in the direction dictated by the supreme right of every man, every Greek citizen--the right to live.

IRANIAN DEFECTOR TO BE TRANSFERRED TO ANKARA

TA181554 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Erzurum, 18 Mar (AA)--Iranian Air Force Colonel Yavit Hussein, who commandeered a four-engine transport plane across the border to Van airport Monday asking for political asylum in Turkey or the United States, will probably be flown to Ankara Wednesday along with his wife, 43, who accompanied him. The 10-man crew, including the pilot and copilot, had been allowed to fly the aircraft back to Iran Tuesday, while the colonel and his wife were detained at Van.

POLITICIAN REPORTED BEATEN UPON RETURN FROM EXILE

[Text] Ankara, 19 Mar (AFP)--Turkish left-wing opposition leader Mustafa Kemal Camkiran was beaten up by police on admission to jail here on Tuesday, according to his lawyers.

Mr Camkiran, who is on the Central Committee of the country's peasants party, returned from exile in West Germany the day before, and was at once interned at Mamak military prison. He had sought political asylum in West Germany last July, before the officers' coup, and was subsequently among 275 opposition exiles the military regime summoned to return on pain of losing their nationality.

Mr Camkiran's lawyers, Ugur Uzer and Nusret Senem, said they noticed that his body and hands were covered with bruises when they visited him the day after he entered jail. They immediately sent a telegram demand to Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and the military prosecutor that he be examined by a doctor, and that legal proceedings be taken against the sergeant allegedly responsible for assaulting him.

Before leaving West Germany on Monday Mr Camkiran indicated that he was giving himself up to Turkish authorities as a gesture of recognition for their "positive efforts" to restore democracy.

BULGARIAN TRADE DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA181508 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1442 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 18 Mar (AA)--President of the Bulgarian Chamber of Trade and Industry Peter Rusov said by widening cooperation with Turkish businessmen Bulgarian business aimed at forming a "trade bridge" between the two countries.

A delegation from the Bulgarian Chamber of Trade and Industry headed by Rusov arrived in Ankara today upon the invitation of President of the Turkish Chamber of Trade and Industry Mehmet Yazar. Rusov said two fairs will be opened in Bulgaria in May and September; one for consumer goods and another on technical products. During talks with officials of the Turkish Chamber of Trade, the Bulgarian delegation will propose to exhibit Turkish goods in these fairs, Rusov announced.

Stating Bulgarian exports [to Turkey] exceeded its imports, Rusov hoped to increase trade relations between the two countries so that it would be better balanced. "We want to exhibit Bulgarian goods at the Izmir fair in particular," he added. Rusov also said the trade between Turkey and Bulgaria, which was doubled in recent years, had now reached 120 million dollars a year.

Joint investments in chemistry, metallurgy and electricity could be made by the two countries accompanied by the exchange of staff, Rusov stated. The Bulgarian delegation is expected to visit Izmir and Istanbul before leaving Turkey on March 25.

VOTCP DECRIES CANCELLING OF MAY DAY, FREEDOM DAY

TA190950 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Station commentary]

[Text] The junta has cancelled or shortened a series of national holidays. Two holidays have been cancelled completely. One is May Day which is celebrated as the day of the working class' international solidarity and struggle, and the second is Freedom and Constitution Day on 27 May.

The junta has banned May Day. This holiday had been celebrated in our country since the end of the last century. It had been celebrated with red flags since 1924 and had been legally celebrated by our working class and all the progressive forces with mass rallies since 1974. This holiday has now been banned.

Instead of punishing the perpetrators of the fascist massacre of 1 May 1977 when more than 30 citizens were killed, the junta decided to ban May Day which was appropriated by the workers who sacrificed their lives for it. The junta is very wrong if it thinks that by a simple ruling it can eliminate this revolutionary tradition upheld by the world working calss since 1886. The history of the world working class is full of struggles waged to celebrate May Day and to show both to enemies and to friends the power of labor. The Turkish working class has known how to celebrate May Day with dignity in various periods and under all kinds of pressure. Those who think they have banned May Day should know very well that the working class is loyal to its revolutionary tradition and it is creative. Neither the junta nor bayonets can ban the working class' international solidarity and struggle day. The best answer to those who banned May Day will be given by the working class.

The junta also banned the 27 May holiday. It banned the celebration as a holiday of the anniversary of the democratic event which was undertaken against the reactionary, U.S. collaborationist and traitor Bayar-Menderes dictatorship [in 1960]. By doing so, the junta ignored the defenders of the democratic tradition in the army. It made the dreams of Demirel, Bayar and the most reactionary press come true. Now, the convicted traitor, enemy of Kemalism and the enemy of national independence and laicism, Bayar, and his follower [Demirel] as well as all the other reactionary forces can dance with joy. By banning 27 May, the junta is trying to eradicate the historical roots of the 1961 constitution which has already been shelved. It is thus positioning itself against the broad masses and the democrats who defend the democratic rights--however limited--insured by the 1961 constitution.

The banning of May Day and 27 May is a new attack against the working class and all democratic forces. The working class will keep alive the May Day struggle tradition on the one hand and continue to protect the rights insured by the 1961 constitution on the other. The working class is aware of the fact that any attack against democratic rights is also aimed against itself.

The working class is also aware that, inevitably, the attacks against its rights will weaken all the democratic forces. The ruling circles will also realize soon that such bans will not be able to prevent democratic actions and that they will facilitate the unity of the other democratic forces with the working class.

KREISKY CANCELS GULF TRIP FOR MEDICAL REASONS

[Text] Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's trip to the United Arab Emirates, Kuwait and Tunisia was called off yesterday. Kreisky was to have departed by air tomorrow, Saturday. As has been learned from the chancellery, Kreisky will have to undergo some minor surgery on his right eye in the next few days. It has not yet been determined whether this operation will be performed in Boston or in Vienna. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German on 20 March, page 1, claims that Kreisky will fly to Boston today, Friday, to have the operation performed there at the "Mayo Clinic" where he had his first eye surgery in the spring of 1979. Vienna KURIER on 20 March, page 1, claims that the Boston physicians' team will come to Vienna and operate on the chancellor here.]

KREISKY COMMENTS ON MIDDLE EAST SITUATION

JN181447 Manama GULF NEWS AGENCY in Arabic 1355 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Vienna, 18 Mar (GNA)--Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky has described cooperation among the Gulf states within the framework of the Cooperation Council of the Arab Gulf States as excellent and positive.

On whether there was any European initiative with regard to the Middle East issue, the Austrian chancellor said that he does not see any possibility for the success of any European initiative at present due to the stance of Begin's government.

In a statement to the EMIRATES NEWS AGENCY today, the Austrian chancellor said he hoped that the EEC would influence the new U.S. Government and a dialogue would be conducted between the PLO and the Reagan administration.

He added that the Middle East issue cannot be solved without solving the Palestinian issue. He pointed out that a solution to the Palestinian issue requires the PLO's participation.

The Austrian chancellor expressed confidence that the day will come when Israel would recognize the Palestinian people's rights. He stated that the Israeli Labor Party has informed him of its readiness to negotiate with the Palestinians while being aware that they belong to the PLO.

He cited the changes that have taken place in the world, saying: Whereas world public opinion had been inclined in Israel's favor as a result of a guilt complex toward the Jews, it now has guilt complex toward what has befallen the Palestinian people.

FOREIGN MINISTER PAHR LEAVES FOR ASIAN TRIP

[Summary] On 18 March, Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr left for official visits to three Asian countries. The first leg of his visit is Pakistan, where he will stay until 20 March. From 21 to 24 March he will be in India, and then in Thailand until 30 March. The foreign minister is accompanied by an economic delegation.

In Pakistan, Pahr will be the guest of Foreign Minister Agha Shahi, who had been in Vienna in January this year and in June last year. Moreover, Pahr will be received by state and government chief Ziaul Haq, and will have talks with Foreign Minister Shahi, Finance Minister Ghulam Ishaq Khan and Minister of State for Tourism Begum Noon.

In India, Pahr will have talks with his host, Minister of External Affairs Narasimha Rao, and with a number of other ministers, and will be received by President Sanjiva Reddy and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi.

In Thailand, Pahr will have talks with his counterpart Air Chief Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila and, on 27 March, will open the new Austrian Embassy building. He will give a lecture at the Foreign Correspondents Club, and visit a vocational training school equipped by Austria and a refugee camp close to the Kampuchean border.

SPIES REPORTEDLY 'CHEATED' BY ROMANIAN BOSSES

AU191403 Vienna KURIER in German 19 Mar 81 p 17

[Summary] Vienna state security police officials Edgar Berger and Josef Czernanski had worked for the Romanian Secret Service to make some money on the side, but now it has turned out that they were cheated out of a considerable portion of their pay. According to the "payroll" that defected cipher specialist Florian Rotaru took with him to the West, Berger and Czernanski should have received monthly payments of 6,000 schillings each for betraying data on Eastern refugees. The intelligence officers in charge always entered these amounts on their records as "paid." "But during their questioning, the two arrested spies were able to prove that they had only been handed between 3,000 and 4,000 schillings monthly. The remainder was kept by the intelligence officers in charge and the two treacherous policemen were constantly put off with promises that their accounts would be settled at a later time--a frequent practice on the agent scene.

The heads of the agent ring were immediately recalled from Austria after Rotaru's defection. "They were Vasile Constanda, Secret Service resident agent camouflaged as first secretary of the Commerce Department, embassy first secretary Theodor Iles, and embassy second secretary George Marin. Members of the Romanian Embassy in the Austrian capital have referred to the affair as a 'regrettable incident about which there is a great unhappiness.'"

Meanwhile, Austrian security police authorities have received from the Americans new materials from the documents seized by Rotaru, but it will take some time before they are evaluated. Currently, police are trying to establish whether Berger and Czernanski have also provided information on other than Romanian refugees seeking political asylum.

GROUP TO PROTEST U.S. INTERVENTION IN EL SALVADOR

AU161327 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 16 Mar 81 p 2

[Summary] The Austrian Solidarity Committee for El Salvador, supported by important youth organizations and prominent figures, has issued an appeal for a demonstration to be held in Vienna on 24 March under the slogan "For a free El Salvador--against any intervention by the United States." The appeal was signed, among others by [prominent Socialists] Josef Cap, university professor Dantine, Johanna Dohnal, Fritz Edlinger and Josef Hindels.

The appeal says that the Christian Democratic-military junta is politically, economically and morally bankrupt and can stay in power only with massive economic and military aid by the United States. "Hence the extent of the U.S. intervention is the decisive factor for further development in El Salvador and the entire Central American and Caribbean region. In this situation the solidarity actions in Europe are of decisive importance: In our own interest we cannot tolerate the United States creating a 'new Vietnam' and thus endangering world peace even more."

The appeal demands that the Austrian Government recognize the revolutionary democratic front as a legitimate representative of the Salvadoran people and render it political and material support while condemning the military dictatorship of the junta, that Austria's Catholic Church take a clear stand against genocide in El Salvador, and that Austrian Radio and Television provide comprehensive and undistorted reports about El Salvador.

The demonstration is scheduled for 24 March in Vienna, and participants are to meet at 1800 local time on Mariahilferstrasse.

AUTHORITIES REPORT END OF HOOF-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

AU182028 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 17 Mar 81 p 6

[Summary] Lower Austrian veterinary authorities believe that the danger of a spreading of the isolated hoof-and-mouth disease cases in the Thalheim and Poenning region is virtually over. Restrictions outside the quarantine zone have been eased and will be completely lifted next weekend when the protection by vaccination is fully effective. To prevent a spreading of the disease, 2,500 hogs and 220 head of cattle had to be killed and their carcasses destroyed. The farmers concerned suffered damages of about 15 million schillings.

YUGOSLAV OFFICIAL ARRIVES--Svetozar Pepovski, Yugoslav president of the Federal Committee for Labor, Health and Social Welfare arrived in Vienna on 15 March for a 4-day official visit. He will have talks with Minister for Social Administration Dallinger, Vice Chancellor Sinowatz, Chamber of Commerce Chairman Sallinger and Chamber of Labor Chairman Czettel. [Veinna DIE PRESSE in German 16 Mar 81 p 2 AU]

JOINT COMMISSION WITH CSSR--The general Austrian-Czechoslovak Joint Commission held its fifth session in Vienna 11-12 March. CSSR delegation head Mecislav Jablonsky was received for a talk by Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr. The commission discussed the current state of relations between Austria and the CSSR and possibilities to improve them, paying special attention to questions of trade and developing economic and industrial cooperation. Both sides noted with satisfaction that bilateral relations have developed satisfactorily since the last commission meeting in 1979. "The sides stressed the need for complete implementation of all provisions of the CSCE Final Act. They expressed their determination to implement this principle in their bilateral relations, and their firm expectation that the process started in Helsinki will be continued." "The talks took place in an openminded and friendly atmosphere. The session was concluded with the signing of a joint protocol." [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 16 Mar 81 p 2 AU]

GENSCHER DISCUSSES MISSILES, U.S. RELATIONS

[Text] Bonn, 19 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher holds Moscow solely responsible as to whether the West or the East will achieve medium-range nuclear missiles arms limitation at a low level. "This is what I would like to say to all those in our country who are acting as if we are discussing an American or Western arms buildup," Genscher stated this evening in a television discussion on German television.

Genscher said the West had "truly, only by following a need" reached the so-called NATO double decision in 1979--the installation of 572 American medium-range weapons along with the simultaneous offer for disarmament of these systems--after the Soviet Union had for the 2 preceding years continually build up its medium-range weapons. "Should the Soviet Union not enter into negotiations, should it not be prepared to limit its systems, then we will implement counterarming decisions." The foreign minister, who is to visit Moscow at the beginning of April, stressed: "In such a case, the public should be left in no doubt because our people have a right to demand information about the degree of the threat to which we are exposed from SS-20 missiles which are directed at West Europe from the East."

The latest proposal by Soviet party and state chief Leonid Brezhnev for a halt to stationing medium-range weapons was again rejected by the minister. This would mean that Soviet missiles already installed in East Europe could remain where they are. The Western side, the United States, could, according to Brezhnev's offer, only produce such weapons but not install them.

Regarding German-American relations, Genscher stated that the Federal Republic must pursue, with regard to Washington, a policy which "must be entirely clear and calculable." The minister said "It would be entirely wrong to assume that the FRG could have, so-to-say, a position in the middle between the two superpowers." He continues: "I would like to warn all those who think that one should obtain latitude for action if one adopted an attitude of detachment regarding the United States. He who does that falls between two stools."

The foreign minister opposed "voices in the SPD" who believe that Bonn could in this way win a little bit of room to act. "This is not the opinion of the SPD Parliamentary Group," he said. "But there are such voices and it is particularly these which I would like to oppose publicly." Genscher stressed that the FRG and its most important allies in Europe, above all France, "in their positive attitude toward the policy of the new American administration, are fully in agreement."

In Genscher's words, Ronald Reagan's administration has proved that it does not intend to go it alone in the Western camp. "This administration has not surprised us with a set, preconceived opinion which says this is what the Europeans have to accept, but holds talks with European politicians," the minister stressed. "In this context, it not only listens, but takes the talks seriously. In many respects, the European can know that notice has been taken of their talks." Among other things, Genscher definitely was listened to in Washington regarding the German point of view "on the stability and independence of Third World states, which can be assured if social justice and social progress are created."

PRESIDENT CARSTENS CANCELS ROMANIA VISIT

[Summary] Bonn, 19 Mar (DPA)--Federal President Karl Carstens has canceled his state visit to Romania set for the end of March. According to a spokesman of the Federal President's Office, Carstens has asked Nicolae Ceausescu for a postponement of his visit due to flu accompanied by a fever. A new date will be set later.

"Observers in Bonn believe that differences with Romania concerning the program of the visit are the main cause for the cancellation. The Romanian side had rejected Carstens' wish to include in the program visits to various provincial towns which are populated by Siebenbergen Saxonians and Banat Swabians of German origin. Bucharest evidently fears demonstrations by Romanians of German origin who would like to emigrate."

SPOKESMAN AFFIRMS CHILE SUBMARINE DECISION

PY191405 Paris AFP in Spanish 1637 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 18 Mar (AFP)--A government spokesman stated here today that the FRG will uphold its decision to authorize the sale of two submarines to Chile, unless another purchaser can be found.

FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in December 1980 promised his party's parliamentary bloc that he would reexamine the permit for the deal. The permit was granted last year by a ministerial committee, after the majority of the Social Democrat deputies had demonstrated their hostility toward military sales to Chile.

According to the spokesman, financial considerations will play an important role in the new study of the transaction.

The Holwadtswerke shipyards of Kiel port, which are currently building two 1,000-ton submarines of the 209 class, indicated that it will demand DM150 million (approximately $73 million) if the government annuls its authorization, according to a reliable source.

COLUMNIST CRITICIZES NATURAL GAS DEAL WITH USSR

[Commentary signed Me.: "The Natural Gas Weapon"]

[Text] One must emphatically contradict the federal minister of economics for calling, while still in this country, the fatal "natural gas pipeline deal" natural, and for calling it, while in the United States, free of risks--cheap German money and good German steel pipes supplied immediately in exchange for Soviet natural gas 5 years from now. The reservations of the U.S. Government rightly exist and the German illusions, particularly among the banks and the steel industry, are horrifying. The minister is particularly wrong in stating that the agreement is a matter for these banks and firms; it involves all citizens. It is not merely a matter of safe credits and the safety of an admittedly high number of jobs, a general security risk is involved.

A few years ago, all reasonable people would have considered a much lower degree of dependence on Soviet natural gas as too risky. Now all thresholds of Soviet natural gas are too risky. Now all thresholds of restraint seem to be gone; a share of 30 percent of Soviet supplies does not meet with reservations on the part of the Federal Government. How can it be sure that the Soviet Union would not consider such a dependent partner susceptible to "technical breakdowns" and, thus also, to blackmail? The arguments that the Federal Republic is dependent on the oil-producing countries anyway and that dependence on Soviet natural gas would be almost advisable in order to spread the risks are no good. A threat to use the "oil weapon" would be all the more tempting the more certain the oil suppliers were that the "natural gas weapon," ready to be used somewhere else, would be available as a strengthening factor--be it only to exploit a good occasion or to act out of equal or parallel interests.

Two political points of view have not been mentioned. First, the stream of billions from the Federal Republic would permit further undisturbed and intensified Soviet armament. And second, the Soviet Union could consider German readiness to accept greater dependence as a signal; Bonn--not the steel center Duesseldorf or the bank center Frankfurt--obviously does not intend to turn down a request or link it with action. The boycott of the Olympic summer games was long ago.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG ON WARSAW PACT EXERCISES

[Article signed Schr.: "Staff Exercises as a Means of Pressure"]

[Text] The Warsaw Pact "staff exercises" on the territory of Poland are not really a confidence-building measure, although the Soviets at the last minute gave Washington information which is supposed to dispel misgivings about a military intervention. For the State Department to be less alarmed now indicates the signals from Moscow must have been relatively substantial, because staff exercises were also held in Czechoslovakia in the summer of 1968 prior to the Warsaw Pact troops marching in. The assumption that Brezhnev does not intend to torpedo his "peace offensive" himself also tells against the staff exercises being turned into a real occupation of Poland at this point. The fact that Washington has been informed indicates much rather that this diplomatic maneuver is to be made credible.

The period of probation granted Warsaw by the Kremlin leaders has not yet expired. Meanwhile, the staff exercises as such also serve their purpose. They are to bring the command posts of the Polish Army more under control and eliminate them as centers of resistance in the case of an invasion which may eventually become necessary, but they also serve their purpose as an instrument of political pressure. Intimidated by the unfriendly Soviet statement following the Moscow party congress, Prime Minister Jaruzelski and Solidarity Chairman Walesa are trying jointly to remove the reasons for strikes and to dampen the displeasure shown by Moscow and the other fraternal socialist states.

In this way, Walesa is turning away more and more from the grassroots which threatens time and again to organize new strikes and also files thousands of applications for a reform of the party. For this reason, the party leadership has postponed the party congress scheduled to take place by the end of March to the summer. This new date could also play a role in the time schedule of the Soviet military planners.

PRESIDENT GISCARD COMMENTS ON PRAVDA ARTICLE

LD191133 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Mar 81 p 12

[Text] The article published in PRAVDA on 13 March, which has been interpreted as a Soviet stance in favor of Valery Giscard d'Estaing, prompted the latter to make the following remark during an interview he granted to several regional newspapers and published on 17 March: "The only votes I want are those of French men and women. I do not ask for any other votes."

The outgoing president explained the meeting with Mr Brezhnev in Warsaw by the need to inform the Soviet Union of the consequences of its intervention in Afghanistan. Generally speaking, he said, "we had to reckon with U.S. vacillations and weakness over the past few years." France's initiative, which was aimed at countering that weakness, meant, according to Giscard d'Estaing, that the Soviet Union hesitated to commit itself further to the Afghan affair and accurately assessed the consequences of an intervention in Poland.

LE MONDE REPORTS MITTERRAND'S TV INTERVIEW

LD200935 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Mar 81 pp 8-9

[Report on Alain Duhamel and Jean-Pierre Elkabbach television interview with PS presidential candidate Francois Mitterrand on 16 March: "I Will Do for France What I Did for Socialism"]

[Excerpts] Asked by Alain Duhamel why he is running again, Mitterrand replied: "What is the purpose of an election if not to assess the record of a man and a policy?" Then he read the following statement: "I will judge the outgoing cnadidate's record honestly but without concessions; I am not a star or a gladiator or a boxer--all highly honorable professions--but a responsible man addressing responsible people, an adult talking to adults and I will ask many of the questions they are asking. With regard to the outgoing candidate [as published] I will say: Could he have done better? Could he have done no better? Was he caught in a cycle of economic crisis affecting all capitalist societies particularly in the West? I will try to give an honest verdict."

Returning to the question asked, Mitterrand explained: "Because I think that France needs a different policy and hence a different president. Second, because I feel well-equipped for it, because I have gained experience of responsibility not only in government in my youth but also in parliament and, finally, as PS leader for 10 years. I will do for France what I have done for socialism. Finally, because I think that although I am still a long way from the end of the road, I have followed a straight line since I called the people's forces to unite. I am therefore being consistent. Since I enjoy the confidence of my people, the Socialists, your question is rather pointless."

Questioned on the consequences of alternation, the PS candidate indicated: "It is true that a regime which has been established for 23 years now has acquired habits. It has its institutions. I belong to the opposition. I abide by those institutions and respect them and my only ambition is to change them in keeping with the law of universal suffrage if the French people support me....a record has to be assessed...and I will ask: Is it all going to start again, must we put up with it for another 7 years?" Mitterrand then mentioned price increases, unemployment, the foreign trade deficit (Fr60 billion in 1980), the budget deficit built up over 5 years (Fr211 billion according to him), enterprises going bankrupt and so forth. He added: "Those are the facts." Asked whether he would change society if he were elected, Mitterrand pointed out that "changing society, establishing a new society," is a "slogan" which "rings in my ears." He explained: "If I were elected president of the republic, I would change a number of things, particularly regarding the president's relations with the government or the president's relations with the citizens; while willingly maintaining the burden of the job and fulfilling it completely. I would like to return to more democratic methods."

After referring to Article 20 of the constitution according to which "the government determines and leads the nation's policy," he indicated: "A president should not have a finger in every pie. That is all I ask. When the president plays everybody's role, you gradually change your regime and this is not the regime which the French people adopted in 1958."

"Third Time Lucky"

Turning to Giscard d'Estaing's argument that Mitterrand is "the world recordholder for presidential candidacies" (note): during the great debate program on 18 March, Giscard d'Estaing awarded Mitterrand the "world title for presidential candidacy", Mitterrand explained: "I have run three times. Just imagine. Recall that when I ran for the presidency for the first time (in 1965), Giscard had already been in charge of the economy and finances since 1959, in other words for 6 years.... He had already been in charge of the economy and financial affairs for a long time. If you count--he was sacked by General de Gaulle who was tired of his services and it should be added that Giscard d'Estaing made a major contribution to General de Gaulle's departure--from 1963 to 1974 when he returned to government, and in charge of everything since 1974, it is 18 or 19 years that Giscard d'Estaing has been in charge of economic affairs and he therefore has seniority over me. Therefore, now that I am running against him again, with a possible straight fight with him in the second round, I would say that I am 7 years behind him.

"When people make such remarks and ask me why I am running...I remind myself that I was wounded, then taken prisoner during the war. I just wanted to regain my freedom. I escaped once, then a second time and then a third time and it was a case of third time lucky. Therefore, since it is a question of other people's freedom this time, my obstinacy in trying to reply in a clear and positive way to the policy I am fighting is justified."

Mitterrand then turned to the question of relations with the Communists. "Without them, it is virtually impossible to attain power; with them, it is equally difficult." Jean-Pierre Elkabbach noted. "You are right," the PS candidate stated. "Like me, you heard the torrent of remarks 1 month ago; the rightwing majority backing its outgoing candidate thought that by constantly referring to 'Communist ministers' they had a major argument which would quickly crush me. Communist ministers, Communist ministers, the other section of the orchestra echoed."

"Do you mean the two sides are playing together?" Jean-Pierre Elkabbach asked. "Sometimes," Mitterrand replied before adding: "If you ask me: 'On what political majority will you rest if you are elected president of the republic...?' My answer is: I will rest on the parliamentary majority which universal suffrage returns to the National Assembly. In a similar situation in 1978, Giscard d'Estaing who had reason to fear the arrival of a leftwing majority clearly replied at Verdun-Sur-le-Doubs that he would bow to universal suffrage. My answer on this subject is the same."

"I Will Need Everybody"

Questioned on who the Socialists' partner might be in the parliamentary elections which would follow his election as head of state, Mitterrand asserted: "In short, you are asking me if there will be Communist ministers....When I am elected president, do I intend to include Communist ministers if there is a leftwing majority? For a majority to be formed, there has to be an agreement, a government contract between the political groups concerned. Since we are talking about an essentially leftwing majority, we include the PCF and the PS, but that is not an exclusive list. Will the PS and PCF open talks after the presidential election either on agreements for candidates to stand down in elections or to go further, aiming at a government contract?

This government contract is their affair.... In my opinion, as long as the Communist leaders remain, as they are now, estranged from the union which they severed, as long as they confine themselves to a passionately, systematically and sometimes slanderously antisocialist attitude and campaign, as long as they play a double game between the right and the left, as long as they remain aligned with foreign stances in such serious matters as Afghanistan, it does not seem to me to be reasonable or right to think that a government could follow a harmonious policy if there were Communist ministers. The answer, therefore, rests with the Communist leadership. Is it or is it not prepared to return to the conditions which prevailed when we succeeded in signing the joint program in 1972? In present circumstances, how could I be rash enough to think that they are prepared to do that, especially in view of what I hear every day? That is why I can answer your question very readily: I do not think the right situation has been created to make that possible so near the presidential election, probably with partliamentary elections to follow.

"The Communist leaders must change their attitude and the form it takes....When Giscard d'Estaing or Chirac states: 'I want to rally the French people minus the 5 or 6 million who vote Communist, I would never say that. I have worked for 15 years to unite all people, without exception, who can contribute to rebuilding France. Somebody said and did that before me: De Gaulle in 1944. There was a war and he needed everybody. Today there is a crisis and I will need everybody. That is why, having noted the Communist leadership's enormous, overwhelming responsibility in this kind of return to the deliberate ghetto in which (the Communists--LE MONDE note) have locked themselves again, I have always told the Communist voters that I intend to achieve the broadest people's rally for national recovery...."

Asked to name the candidates he thinks will be present in the second round Mitterrand stated: "I do not know who the other one will be, but I will be there."

State of Grace

After refusing to consider the hypothesis that he would not be present in the second round, the PS candidate asked: "Do you think things are not going to change if I am elected? But on the very night that I win that victory, will there not be thousands and thousands of French people who immediately identify with their new president even if they have not voted for him? They will feel that they stand behind this man--whom they did not choose--out of loyalty to the republic and fidelity to democracy. Do you think that the outgoing candidate's party will withstand that blow--a party which was merely an aggregate of different ambitions? Don't you believe that my election will release throughout France new masses prepared for a bold policy based on the options I propose and which led to my election?"

Turning next to the formation of the government for the transitional period between the election of a Socialist president and parliamentary elections, Mitterrand indicated: "The government can only comprise men and women who have backed the president's options until a new expression of the people's will elects a majority to the National Assembly. Will the president of the republic be able to act? Of course, because the statutes are a vast sphere and important decisions can be taken without passing laws."

The Socialist candidate then said he is convinced that once elected, he would enjoy "a state of grace granted to him by the citizens, giving him time to justify the trust" they have placed in him "whoever is elected" [sentence as published]

He then recalled that between now and the second round of the presidential election, there will be no negotiations since negotiations are the province of the parties in preparation for parliamentary elections.

The 'Payment' for Warsaw

Questioned on the stance of the CPSU's organ, PRAVDA, Mitterrand said: "I have read that article. Can I say that I was surprised? That would be overstating my reaction.... Of course, I understand why PRAVDA, in other words, the Soviet Government, should be pleased with Giscard d'Estaing. There had to be some payment for the trip to Warsaw. In addition, the president of the French Republic, on the eve of the Venice conference--there were seven leaders in Venice, the meeting was about to take place, there were the Europeans, the United States, Japan and Canada. [sentence as published] They were facing grave problems. Afghanistan had been invaded, detente was over, people were wondering whether there was going to be a return to the Cold War, peace might be at stake.... Then suddenly a little mailman or telegraph boy arrived. It was Giscard d'Estaing. He carried a dispatch in his pocket and was the only one to know what it said. He was very pleased, of course, because it was important. And what did the dispatch say? The others were upset and rather mortified that they were not entitled to know the same secrets or to enjoy Mr Brezhnev's confidence to such an extent. No, it was Giscard d'Estaing who enjoyed that confidence, who carried the little telegram, and he said: We must not take any decisions because Mr Brezhnev has just told me or passed on the message that he is going to withdraw from Afghanistan gradually. He is pulling out a few divisions to show his good will, but at least it's a start. It was on the basis of what I would call deceit that the conference between the West and Japan broke up. People immediately realized that they had been tricked and nothing further was done. Therefore, I understand why PRAVDA should be pleased with Giscard d'Estaing.

"I Will Not Engage in Underhanded Deals"

"Why is PRAVDA displeased with me? I did not wait 11 days before protesting the invasion of Afghanistan. The outgoing candidate waited 11 days. It took him 11 days to notice that a country had just lost its independence, that it no longer had the right to decide its future, that the international balance had been broken. It took him 11 days! I noticed it immediately! And I said so the following morning and protested it. I upheld what was right: When you do not have strength, but are in the right, you are strong. It did not take me 17 days to notice that there were U.S. hostages in Iran. I am not one of those who attack the Iranians and supply arms to their enemy, but taking hostages is an act of banditry which violates the law, public law and private law, and which quite simply offends my concept of civilization. Unlike the outgoing candidate, it did not take me 17 days to notice that.

"Then one day I noticed that there were a number of nuclear missiles patiently waiting at the dividing line between East and West Europe and that those missiles could not cross the Atlantic. Hence, they were not targeted at the United States. They did not count in the general balance of forces. This was aimed only at the European countries from northern Norway to southern Italy. Those missiles, known as SS-20 missiles, were capable of accurately striking their targets to within 50 meters in 15 minutes. In 15 minutes, the entire military network in Europe could be destroyed. I noticed that, and I protested on the National Assembly's platform and since then I have become an undesirable. I am no longer the best candidate France could propose for the presidency of the republic, except that it is not the Russians who are voting but the French. So I am nonetheless fairly surprised to note that Giscard d'Estaing has never (or almost never--I believe he made a few brief allusions to this matter in press conferences specially concerned with arms problems and France's security) pointed out that we were at the mercy of these notorious SS-20 missiles.

"Finally, there is a third consideration which will moderate my remarks.... I will tell you a secret, the Soviet Union really supports the people already in office. It is rather conservative, it likes the people already in office. For instance, the Soviet Union defended Carter.... One fact which is less debatable is that it supported the Greek colonels once the coup had been carried out, it tended to favor Franco once the coup had been carried out, today, the Soviet Union does not support Reagan but wants to negotiate with Reagan. It tends to support Karamanlis' conservative government and is on good terms with the Spanish king. Well, the Soviet Union will negotiate with me and I will negotiate with it without the slightest problem since I am anxious to maintain the balance in Europe. This is, therefore, a traditional and necessary friendship between the two extremities of our continent. The only difference is that I will not engage in underhanded deals."

Change: "It Is Nigh Time!"

After expressing the wish that France should be "a sound ally for its friends," Mitterrand revealed that "Reagan congratulates the outgoing candidate and so does PRAVDA." He added: "And if that meant that we are being congratulated for aligning so well with bigger powers than us.... [sentence as published] I note that our diplomacy tends to hug the wall. It is very convenient to have a France which in all circumstances serves as an obliging intermediary to both sides."

The Socialist candidate described Giscard d'Estaing's foreign policy as a "web of mistakes." Turning to the attitude adopted by the outgoing president and by Georges Marchais toward the Socialists, Mitterrand recalled that he had used the expression "as thick as thieves." "There is, in fact, some similarity between the attitudes (of these two men--LE MONDE note) as if the essential thing was to prevent the election of the Socialist candidate who alone is capable of ensuring victory for the workers."

He concluded: "I am approaching this election with great serenity and tranquillity.

"I think that the time has come: Seven years is a long time. It is a mistake that our institutions did not make provision for only a single term of office. Seven years is a long time, 14 is so much longer.... The question I am putting to the French people is this: Do you think it is reasonable to entrust France's fate for 7 more years to those responsible for the outright chaos which unemployment and inflation constitute? Seven years, 14 years--that is the span of a whole generation! Even if there was reason to be more satisfied with them, it would be unwise to reelect them. Excessive power for too long a period is damaging to the French people's interests. I believe it is time for France to choose change."

MITTERRAND SUPPORTER CITES PRAVDA 'PREFERENCE'

[Unattributed report: "Mr Fillioud (PS): The 'Outgoing Candidate' Is Moscow's Choice"]

[Text] Georges Fillioud writes in a letter to the press, Mr Mitterrand's campaign bulletin on 17 March: "With regard to Moscow's foreign policy stances, it is, after all, best to refer to PRAVDA. Whether LE MONDE uses quotation marks where L'HUMANITE does not, does not change the essential point. It is even 'generally immaterial.' For L'HUMANITE itself is obliged to place quotation marks around the extract from PRAVDA in which the official Soviet daily says of Valery Giscard d'Estaing that he has 'won personal authority as a prudent and cool politician, particularly in the international arena, where France's positions have been strengthened in the past few years.' In Russian and in French that means that the outgoing candidate does have Moscow's preference."

FRANCOIS-PONCET TALKS WITH IRAQ'S 'AZIZ

JN191840 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1825 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Mar (INA)--Tariq 'Aziz met here this evening with French Foreign Minister Jean-Francois-Poncet. During the 1-hour-and-15-minute meeting, they discussed bilateral relations, the situation in the area and international issues of mutual interest.

The meeting, which was characterized by a friendly atmosphere, was attended by Olivier Stirn, secretary of state for foreign affairs; (Bouadvier), director of the Far East and North African Department in the French Foreign Ministry; and Nuri Isma'il Taha al-Wa'is, the Iraqi ambassador in France.

Tariq 'Aziz met yesterday with Raymond Barre as part of the continuing consultation between officials of the two countries on mutual cooperation in various fields and on current Arab and international issues.

'INTERVENTION FORCES' HOLD MANEUVERS IN MIDI

LD200006 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] The game of little wars has been played since 1100 today, when extensive military maneuvers began in the Midi. The maneuvers involve the best of the French intervention forces, particularly the 31st Brigade and the 27th Alpine Division, which simulated a disembarkment at Cavaliere in the Var near St Tropez. At this very moment, paratroops, marines and Foreign Legion troops are enjoying themselves immensely, as is our improvised war correspondent, Hughes Girard:

These maneuvers serve above all to test the future 31st Brigade, which will act as the spearhead of the French intervention forces. This brigade will consist of the 2d Overseas Infantry Regiment based in Corsica and of the 26th Marine Corps Regiment based at Frejus, all under the command of the Foreign Legion. In other words, they will be the shock troops.

Without admitting it officially, this brigade could, if necessary, lend a strong hand to a friendly or allied country in the Mediterranean or in Africa which is invaded by a foreign army. Generally, the scene would be as follows: A paratroop division, a little like in the case of Kolwezi, would drop in order to gain control of the coastline and to enable the disembarkment of the 31st Brigade. I have seen these troops in action at Cavaliere: they are quite impressive both in strength and accuracy. Moreover, this shock brigade will be equipped with new arms this year, in particular, a new light armored car specially designed to withstand torrid heat and sand. In short, the French land forces showed this morning that they had teeth and that, if necessary, they could also bite.

LE FIGARO REPORTS MITTERRAND-GISCARD POLEMICS

LD191615 Paris LE FIGARO in French 18 Mar 81 pp 1, 6

[Nicole Kern Report: "Giscard: 'Unworthy Remarks'"]

[Text] The presidential campaign yesterday took a new and polemical turn between the two main candidates. The president deems "the remarks made by Francois Mitterrand on France's foreign policy and international position unworthy." "The ambiguous attitude adopted by a president in office who pretends to be a candidate is harmful to the smooth running of democracy," Francois Mitterrand retorts. Yesterday, the president reacted through his spokesman--Jean-Marie Poirier--to the strong attacks launched by Francois Mitterrand during Monday night's "Cards on the Table" television program on France's foreign policy. Jean-Marie Poirier explained that it was the president and not the presidential candidate who was commenting on the Socialist candidate's remarks.

Obviously, what gave rise to the head of state's protest were the trenchant remarks made by the Socialist candidate when he criticized Valery Giscard d'Estaing's foreign policy. Francois Mitterrand had stated with reference to the PRAVDA article: "The Warsaw trip certainly had to be rewarded." He also compared the president's action at the Venice conference with that of "a young mailman or telegraph boy" and declared that if he were to agree to engage in discussions with the Soviets, "he, Mitterrand, would not operate secretly, under the table."

It is believed at the Elysee that such remarks could jeopardize the president's action in the international sphere where peace is at stake.

It has furthermore been observed that the way in which the Socialist candidate has acted is incorsistent with the open door policy with respect to foreign and defense policy, for which the president has always hoped. In any case, it will be remembered that, when he was PS first secretary, Francois Mitterrand, accompanied by Lionel Jospin, national secretary for international relations, visited the Elysee where he was informed about the major issues of foreign policy by the head of state himself.

Not only the president criticized Francois Mitterrand's remarks. Jean Francois-Poncet, who as foreign minister, was especially concerned by the Socialist candidate's violent criticisms, stated that Mr Mitterrand's remarks were "an insult to France." A communique issued by the Quai d'Orsay states: "Francois Mitterrand has discussed France's policy in an unworthy manner. The coarseness of his remarks, his misrepresentation of facts and his caricatural representation of international realities have brought the discussion down to an unacceptable level. Francois Mitterrand has gone too far. His remarks are an insult to France."

Francois Mitterrand replied to the head of state's criticisms at Saint-Dizier yesterday by taking the "authorities" to task for occupying the field with a view to keeping him out. "It is like rugby football," he said, "every time a Socialist states his views, he is immediately surrounded by many adversaries--not 15, but 30 or 40--but there is no referee... the very man who is responsible for irregularities is the referee."

So a tricky question has been raised: What bounds should be set on behalf of France's higher interests to criticisms and polemical remarks which are generally made during any election campaign.

L'HUMANITE: GISCARD, MITTERRAND COLLABORATE

LD161229 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 5 Mar 81 p 1

["R.A." editorial: "Side by Side"]

[Text] It is interesting to note the remarkable synchronization between the Socialist press and the government in their efforts to reduce the presidential election to a straight fight between Mr Giscard d'Estaing and F. Mitterrand.

Thus on Europe 1, Duhamel first enthused at the former's entry into the contest (it was enough for him to emerge as a candidate "for everything to change suddenly"), and then consecrated the latter as "the president's most familiar and formidable enemy."

At the same time, the Socialist Party daily carried page one headlines reading: "Giscard Names Sole Rival: F. Mitterrand," and published pictures of the two men with the caption "Face to Face Now." It would be more precise to say "Side by Side" since, apart from the inevitable invective in which the two candidates will engage during the course of the presidential campaign, the striking thing about their attitude is their basic agreement when it comes to rejecting the conditions and the means through which genuine change may take place.

This basic agreement has just manifested itself once more in the Socialists' active participation in the violent campaign launched by the main government media on drugs and on immigration; there are the same lies, the same insults, the same suggestions of racism and xenophobia. This is not face-to-face confrontation or hand-to-hand fighting but strictly shoulder-to-shoulder cooperation.

This agreement also expresses itself in the rejection of any alliance with the left other than one in which they are the masters.

A social democrat "thinker" did not hesitate to write in LE MATIN that the Communists' exclusive vocation was to act as a backup force for the Socialist command, and Mitterrand repeats willy-nilly that, in the event of victory, the admission of Communist ministers would be out of the question. this is another point on which, to use politely language dear to his heart, he is on "best buddy" terms with Giscard d'Estaing. I would recall as an example the case of Claude Cheyson, who manages to function quite naturally both as F. Mitterrand's adviser in Paris and Giscard d'Estaing's confidant in the EEC.

The agreement also manifests itself in a refusal to accept the far-reaching reforms necessary for genuine change.

Reducing the presidential stakes to a fight between Giscard and Mitterrand means that, whoever wins this mock battle, the workers are the ones who will emerge the losers.

A solution of the crisis requires a series of measures which the Communist candidate alone is proposing: It is necessary first to implement a number of fundamental and democratic reforms capable of smashing the domination of the big financial institutions and extricating the country from crisis--in particular, genuine nationalizations, a tax on capitalism and the democratization of the state.

It is then necessary to achieve a large-scale rallying of the democratic forces, which must be reflected in the formation of a left union government.

Finally, the workers must pursue their struggle through all stages, since they cannot expect salvation from any providential figure, or even from the existence of a parliamentary majority of the left. The only true guarantee is the struggle of the workers themselves.

These are the three essential conditions for political change. Anything else is mere illusion and is false.

Under these conditions, the first round of the election will be decisive; no one can fool himself about this. Large-scale capitalism knows well where its real enemy is to be found. Men, women, youth, victims of the crisis, the unemployed, must no longer be deceived on that score.

If the Communist candidate emerges in a weakened state from the election, the field will be free for all petty political maneuvers, and capital will see this as powerful encouragement to step up its policy of austerity against the workers, inevitably involving more poverty and unemployment.

The report of the highly official commission on the eighth plan which foresaw the loss of over 1 million jobs between 1978 and 1986, gives us a foretaste of what is being hatched in high places. As election day draws to a close, it will be the votes cast for G. Marchais which will weigh heavily to tip the scale from one side to the other.

L'HUMANITE DISCUSSES 'UNION IN STRUGGLES'

LD170917 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 13 Mar 81 p 5

[Bernard Frederick article: "Holy Alliance Against G. Marchais"]

[Text] Some Socialists, some former PCF members, a handful of Communists, leftists from various "factions" and trade unionists have for some time been rallying in support of a petition which they call: "Union in Struggles." The press is opening to them the columns which are closed to Manufrance workers or Destival miners. Radio and television give them a leading role while gagging young unemployed people. The PS congratulates them...

Among the small number of Communists behind this "petition", there are some who criticize the PCF for abandoning the dictatorship of the proletariat and others who assert the working class' leadership role, but all oppose the principles guiding the revolutionary party's organization--democratic centralism--and the lines laid down at the 22d and 23d congresses.

The Socialists taking part in this operation more or less support [PS Executive Bureau member] Rocard or tend to support Mitterrand. In any case, they back their party's policy and are not "critics" or "dissidents." Moreover, nobody has said they are.

In this particular affair, we also find members of the National Education Federation which never had any particular sympathy for the joint program and members of the French Democratic Confederation of Labor which only said good things about the joint program when the PS abandoned it, and CGT members upset by the workers' confederation convergences with the PCF.

The outer flank, the crack division of this little leftist grouping, is the Internationalist Communist Organization--a small Trotskyist group which is not loath to use "striking" arguments--which opposed the joint program because, it said, the Left Radical Movement was "a bourgeois party" and which serves to guard the flanks of the Socialists in the teachers' trade unions they control.

This is a Noah's ark. But in this case Noah is Mitterrand.

The "Union in Struggles" is operating for the PS candidate. Without saying so of course! But the facts can be seen.

The "petitioners'" propaganda speculates on "millions of French people's legitimate aspiration to union" (see PCF Politburo statement--L'HUMANITE 19 December 1980).

What union? For what purpose? The "petitioners" avoid those questions. What is worse, they bluntly reject them: "Whatever responsibility each side had (in the leftwing split in 1977--Frederick note) the serious nature of the present situation makes grassroots union imperative."

By dodging the question of responsibility, you also dodge the debate on the union's objectives and the means of securing change. In the "petitioners'" view, the aim should be to "defeat Giscard"--a pithy expression used by Mitterrand and Chirac alike.... Defeating Giscard means a change of policy. It is therefore important to have a clear idea of what you want, what you will do, with whom and using what means.

"Union in Struggles" does not raise those questions. It states that it lives "day by day, swimming against the tide of leadership polemics." These people, you see, are not politicians....even when they mount social democracy's paper horse and concentrate their energies on calling for the "most representative leftwing candidates to stand down" in favor of the one placed in the lead by universal suffrage. The first round? What first round?

Like Giscard and Mitterrand, the "petitioners" advocate American-style alternation.

It is somewhat dishonest to talk about "representative leftwing candidates" when the PCF and its candidates are your exclusive target, and when your preferences are so marked, for example, with regard to the parliamentary by-election in L'Eure: "Contrary to what happened in the previous six by-elections, conditions were not right for victory in the fourth L'Eure constituency."

In other words, in the opinion of those who signed "Union in Struggles" the left could not win in L'Eure where a Communist was the candidate in the second round, but in the other constituencies where Socialists stood in the second round "conditions for victory" were right.

It is clear, therefore, that the "representative candidate" who is being asked to announce that he will stand down in the second round before the first begins is Georges Marchais.

This small group of leftwingers cannot conceal behind cryptic language its refusal to see the working class play its role. Like Giscard, it has chosen Mitterrand. It is a holy alliance against the PCF candidate. It is unthinkable for anybody to claim to belong to the PCF and indulge in such an operation.

PLO'S QADDUMI HAS TALKS WITH EMILIO COLOMBO

LD192250 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2130 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] Peace in the Middle East and the role of Palestinians: These were the subjects of the fifth official meeting between representatives of the Italian Government and the PLO. The minister of foreign affairs, Emilio Colombo, met his counterpart, Faruq Qaddumi, today. The Palestinian representative reiterated the PLO's position based on three fundamental rights, namely, self-determination, a return to the occupied lands, and the creation of an independent state. For his part, Colombo replied that the European position is inspired by a global solution, a solution that cannot conflict with the decisions adopted at Camp David. In order to obtain a final solution, affirmed Colombo, it is necessary that both the PLO and Israel reciprocally recognize each other.

More on Talks

[Excerpts] Rome, 20 Mar (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo told Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) diplomatic chief Faruq Qaddumi here Thursday that Italy continues and will continue to seek a solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict and the Palestinian issue. Colombo said that in order to resolve the complicated question it is necessary that the PLO and Israel recognize each other's existence. The Italian foreign minister made the assertion in his encounter with Qaddumi yesterday at the Foreign Ministry. Qaddumi has been in Rome since Wednesday.

Colombo and Qaddumi met first for an hour and were then joined by their respective delegations for another hour. After the meeting Qaddumi was the guest of honor at a luncheon offered by the Italian diplomatic chief. Qaddumi said the rounds of talks were "very profitable". The PLO's number-two man called on the European Economic Community (EEC) partners to update their position on the Palestinian issue which is based on the "Venice declaration" issued in June last year, including in it "two essential elements": the full reference to the PLO as interlocutor in name of the Palestinian people and the affirmation of the need for the creation of a Palestinian state. Qaddumi recognized yesterday that the Venice declaration was a step forward with respect to previous positions expressed by the EEC. He acknowledged Italy's role in drafting the Community Middle East statement, and thanked Colombo.

For his part, the Italian foreign minister recalled the four most important points of the statements: the centrality of the Palestinian problem for a solution of the Middle East crisis, overcoming the concept that limited the Palestinian issue to a problem of refugees, a clear expression of the Palestinians' right to self-determination, the necessity that the PLO be associated in the negotiations. Colombo briefed Qaddumi on the evolution of the European position and his impressions on the United States attitude which he obtained personally during his recent trip to Washington.

The Palestinian leader reiterated that the right of every Palestinian to return to the Israeli-occupied territories is considered paramount by the PLO. He said that the solution viewed most favorably by his organization is the one drafted by "the committee of twenty" within the United Nations, which calls for Israel's withdrawal from the territories it occupied in 1967, their supervision by the United Nations for a maximum period of six months at the end of which they would pass over to the PLO's sovereignty. This project has always been vetoed by the United States in the Security Council.

Colombo and Qaddumi also spoke of the situation in the Middle East in general. The PLO belongs to mediation committees in both Islamic and non-aligned nations seeking a solution to the Iraq-Iran conflict. Qaddumi reported to Colombo that he is anything but optimistic about the situation.

BASQUE PARTY COMMUNIQUES CONDEMN TERRORISM

[Text] Basque political parties have issued numerous communiques condemning and demanding a firm response to terrorism. The Basque Nationalist Party Executive Committee, the Euskadi Buru Batzar, has strongly condemned the attack and says that the perpetrators have finally removed the mask covering their real intentions which are economic ruin and political retrogression. It describes them as gun-toting (?redeemers) with plastic explosives and says that the Basque people should respond firmly in a collective effort to save Euskadi.

For Txiki Benegas, secretary general of the Socialist Party of Euskadi, this latest attack clearly demonstrates that Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group [ETA] is a fascist organization which wishes to dispose of the constitution, democratic freedoms and the Basque autonomous process. The Union of the Democratic Center, for its part, says that ETA only wants killing and that the state must fight against ETA with all the force and all the strength conferred by the democratic legislation to protect the freedom and peace of all Spaniards.

Euskadiko Ezkerra has formulated a number of questions which it puts to ETA. Among them are: Do you want the Basque people to lose the democracy and autonomy it has already won? Do you want to provoke the army and justify the motives of the putschists? Do you believe that you will gain anything positive for the people with the tactic of harassment of the army? Do you want to test the theory of another coup d'etat and conduct experiments on the limits of this democracy, and what price will the Basque people have to pay for such an experiment? Do you offer us anything other than blood, sweat and tears? What political solution do you propose other than the autonomy statute which was approved by a majority in a referendum, and in whose name? Do you not believe the time has come for a cease-fire and a negotiated settlement?

Florencio Arostegui, a member of parliament for the Popular Alliance, said that the attack was a serious offense against the Basque people, and that he believes that the way to save democracy could be by declaring a state of emergency. In his view, all Basque citizens of honor would be happy to see it applied because only the murderers and criminals could be afraid of it.

Finally, in the opinion of the Communist Party of Euskadi, by attacking the army, the terrorists demonstrate their desire to do away with democracy, to do away with freedom. An attack on the army, the Communist communique says, is also an attack on Euskadi, the statute and the constitution. The freedom-loving Basque people must categorically and unmistakably demonstrate this attitude.

PSOE'S GONZALEZ: PUTSCHISTS MET WITH REAGAN AIDES

LD191447 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 17 Mar 81 p 17

[Joaquin Prieto report]

[Text] The contacts between members of the Spanish extreme right and Reagan administration aides centered on their reaction ?in the event of a Turkish-style coup in Spain." This was said yesterday by Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez, who thus clarified certain reports about the matter.

What has happened must have no repercussions on the Spanish-U.S. treaty, whose continuity is guaranteed, the Socialist leader added. He also said he is in favor of achieving complete coordination with the government on foreign policy, principally to facilitate Spain's entry into the EC.

Acknowledging that he had insufficient information to assess the importance of the putschists' consultations with the Reagan administration, Felipe Gonzalez said that Secretary of State Alexander Haig's announcement, describing the attempted coup in Spain as a domestic matter, "created a possibility of an anti-democratic evolution of the situation created on 23 February." He then cited the presence of several Spaniards at the Thanksgiving luncheon in Washington--"Elements," he said, "who could be opposed to democracy, although this is a loose interpretation, because hundreds of people attended this luncheon," adding that the rightwingers' contacts to which he referred took place in November. "The question was broached of a Turkish-type coup, which is not exactly what was tried on 23 February; but be that as it may the reply was that the United States would neither oppose it nor approve of it."

Next Felipe Gonzalez said he is convinced that the U.S. authorities will make a serious reassessment and asserted that what happened must not affect the bilateral treaty. It must simply be borne in mind that for the first time the Spanish side will be representing a sovereign people and that the negotiations must be ratified or otherwise by the parliamentary forces. The Socialists' steadfastness also affects their stance on NATO membership: Felipe Gonzalez described comments on the Atlantic alliance's deterrent capacity with respect to a future coup as "frivolous."

During a lengthy press conference, Felipe Gonzalez reiterated his thesis about the need to impart a thrust to negotiations for EC entry, denying that this should be limited to prompt political membership, with the postponement of economic negotiations.

With regard to progress in the plan for coordination, Felipe Gonzalez said he agrees completely with the constitutional penal defense bill drawn up by Fernandez Ordonez' team and stated his intention to facilitate its prompt passage through parliament. He stressed that no tolerance must be shown to media organs which talk about destroying democracy by terrorist or rightwing putschist means and expressed his "respect" for the government's decision that the parliamentary session on investigations into the coup take place behind closed doors.

The PSOE secretary general appeared relatively optimistic about the chances of reaching an agreement with the government on the timetable for the implementation of the autonomy statutes, specifying that his party would like to include in this agreement "the political forces of the state and of the autonomous communities."

He expressed a less optimistic analysis of the chances of a pact on social and economic matters, because of both the government's philosophy in this regard and the fact that the state budget makes any real change difficult.

CROWD BOOS PCE'S SECRETARY GENERAL AT RALLY

LD191123 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 15 Mar 81 pp 5-6

[Text] Santiago Carrillo's speech during the rally organized yesterday by the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] in support of democracy and as a tribute to the parliamentarians once more revived the internal conflict dividing the Catalon communists' party with respect to the Eurocommunist strategy and the concept of international independence.

Under a large banner with the slogan "For freedom, democracy, the constitution, autonomy and a coalition government," Santiago Carrillo, Francisco Frutos, Pere Ardiaca and Gregorio Lopez Raimundo occupied the rostrum table at the meeting, whose front was covered by a large Catalan flag. Behind were the members of the party's Executive Committee. A huge crowd which virtually filled the Barcelona Sports Palace was waving flags and banners of a unitary nature. Those acclaiming the last party congress were numerous, while one in support of Eurocommunism caused a slight confrontation with an isolated sector. The first to speak was PSUC Secretary General Francisco Frutos, who gave a lengthy exposition of the party's strategy in light of the new political situation. It is to be emphasized that previously Gregorio Lopez Raimundo had spoken for the first time at a public meeting since the party's fifth congress.

Defense of Autonomy

In his speech, Santiago Carrillo denied in the first place that the PCE had proposed a reform of the autonomy process. "The greatest guarantee of democracy in Spain will be the day when there is a genuine state of the autonomies; when whenever anybody wishes to repeat the 23 February kidnapping in the congress, there will be 16 parliaments and governments which can take up the defense of freedoms." The PCE secretary general then referred to a recent ministerial measure when he stated: "Let nobody be alarmed at our speaking of the Catalan nation or nationality, since there were kings who referred to it as far back as the 16th century."

The Communist leader, who praised the stabilizing factor which Catalonia's autonomy represented, denied that autonomy is an "attempt to break up Spain; rather, it is a means of breaking up the traditional centralism." However, Carrillo emphasized the need to display the Spanish flag alongside those of each nationality or region in order to "avoid pretexts." Among several isolated protests and making the sole presence of the "Senyera" [Catalan flag] on the rostrum more obvious, Carrillo was very emphatic in this connection, stating that "we are leaving the Spanish flag in the hands of the extreme right, and if we do this, that flag could turn against democracy some day."

The PCE secretary general emphasized that the country's gravest problem is that of unemployment and demanded, as a solution, an urgent action plan on the basis of a larger public debt, if necessary. With respect to terrorism, he stated: "Either we end terrorism, or terrorism will end us," although he also stressed the need for the security forces to be headed by professionals identified with democracy. In short, unemployment, terrorism and the autonomies were the issues that Carrillo confirmed the Communists' readiness for a broad pact among all the political forces.

Criticisms of NATO and USSR

From this point onward, when Santiago Carrillo attacked the anarchist-type sectors and upheld the need for broad alliances and for "defending democracy with political intelligence," the PCE leader began to be opposed by a broad section of the crowd. His attacks against U.S. imperialism and his opposition to entry into NATO were followed by a clear and deliberate allusion to the USSR. "But let nobody believe," he said immediately afterward, "that the other bloc will guarantee Spain's security."

Next, Carrillo fervently defended the PCE's Eurocommunist strategy, and this provoked strong protests which were not stifled by the weak calls of unity. After pausing for several minutes because of the booing and applause, Carrillo said firmly: "If Lieutenant Colonel Tejero was unable to make me throw myself to the ground, nobody will prevent me from speaking in this way here." The Communist leader warned that "if there is not an atmosphere of respect and we cannot listen to each other, and if we do not stop treating each other like enemies, it will be very difficult to remain in the same party." In the midst of constant booing, which was gradually muffled by loud applause, Carrillo emphatically defended the party's independence, reaffirming its explicit condemnation of the invasion of Afghanistan. "Otherwise," he asked, "with what moral authority are we going to ask Reagan to take his hands off El Salvador?" Following a final exhortation to surmount the internal difficulties and warning of the threat of a breakup of the party, Carrillo concluded his speech with hurrahs for Spain, Catalonia and freedom which were echoed by the entire crowd, which then sang the Internationale and "Els Segadors."

LIBYAN ENVOY: 'TELUB' AFFAIR WON'T DAMAGE RELATIONS

[Text] As we know, the "Telub" affair is continuing with a vehement debate, with secret hearings before the constitutional committee and various disparaging opinions about Libya and the Libyan regime by Swedes holding more or less responsible positions. One might wonder how the Libyans react to this, particularly as we have also learned that Skanska Cemetgjuteriet recently landed a gigantic contract with Libya for hotel and holiday villages worth 1 billion krono; maybe Swedish-Libyan relations have not deteriorated because of the "Telub" affair. Goran Skansberg asked the Libyan representative in Stockholm about this:

[Skansberg] We have not yet reached the end of our tether, but if the mark is overstepped Sweden will be the loser. This is stated by Khalid Jum'ah Mubarak at the Libyan People's Bureau in Stockholm, formerly the Libyan Embassy, as regards the critical statements about Libya made in the debate on the "Telub" affair by a number of Swedish politicians, including Defense Minister Eric Kronmark. As you may remember, Kronmark said a few days ago that it is repugnant to have business contacts with the Libyan regime.

The Libyan People's Bureau nevertheless, sees the "Telub" affair as a fairly meaningless event, and to date it has not damaged relations between Sweden and Libya. You only need to look at the big trade contacts between Libya and Swedish firms, Khalid Jum'ah Mubarak said: For example, the most recent billion kronor contract which became known today. This concerns Skanska Cementgjuteriet which is to build hotels and holiday villages in Libya.

New opportunities for Swedish -Libyan economic cooperation are not lacking. There are no limits for countries willing to cooperate, the Libyan representatives in Stockholm maintain. But, they add, there are no limits either for our refusal to cooperate with a country adopting an unfriendly attitude toward Libya. It Sweden treats Libya in a humiliating way it would not be difficult for us to stop all contracts and cease cooperation without any thought of the losses involved.

GALLUP POLL: CONSERVATIVES FALL BEHIND LABOR

[Unattributed report: "Social Democrats 'Could Win the Most Votes'"]

[Text] After a budget which was the most unpopular in 30 years, voting support for the Conservatives has slipped back behind Labour, according to the latest Gallup poll conducted exclusively for the DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Of those interviewed, 31 per cent would vote for a Social Democratic candidate if they had the choice, with 28 per cent, voting for Labour and only 25.5 per cent for the Conservatives.

In answer to Gallup's standard question on party support, where no parties are mentioned, the Social Democrats (still a week away from their formal launching as a party) already obtain 14 per cent in the share of votes.

	Today	Feb	Late Jan	Mid Jan
Conservative	30	36	35.5	33
Labour	34	35.5	43	46.5
Liberal	18	20	17	18.5
S Democrat	14	[as published]
Other	4	8.5	4.5	2

The interviewing for this study was completed after the budget but before Mr Christopher Brocklebank-Fowler, Tory MP for Norfolk North-West crossed the floor of the house to join the Social Democrats.

Gallup also asked if an election were to take place tomorrow, and a candidate from a new Social Democratic Party stood, how would you vote?

	Today	Feb
Conservatives	25.5	29
Labour	28	28.5
New Social Democratic Party	31	26
Liberals	13.5	14.5
Other Party	2	2

Analysis of the voting switches in the Gallup study shows that given this additional choice, 10 percent of current Conservatives said they would shift their allegiances to the Social Democrats, 14 per cent of Labour supporters said so, and 24 per cent of Liberals, thought they might do so.

When the concept of an alliance of the Liberals and the Social Democrats was introduced the new grouping obtained even higher support than a mere addition of their shares in the table above.

Replies to the following question where only the first three options were offered, if a new Social Democratic Party made an alliance with the Liberals, so that a candidate from only one of these parties would stand in each constituency, how would you vote? Were:

	Today	Feb
Conservative	25	27
Labour	27	27
New Social Democratic and Liberal alliance	46	44
Other Party	2	2

The above figures take us towards realms of which are unprecedented in opinion polling--what could be an election-winning level of support is being enjoyed by an alliance which does not exist yet between two parties one of which does not itself exist.

The unpopularity of the budget has been reflected in a decline in the popularity of Mrs Thatcher and her government--both down to their lowest level since the 1979 general election.

Mr Foot's poor public image, however, shows no signs of improving.

Mr Steel's personal popularity remains buoyant, with almost two in three thinking he is a good leader of the Liberal Party.

The public has widely differing views on the individual proposals contained in the budget--ranging from overwhelming disapproval of the increase in the price of petrol to near unanimous approval of government help for the disabled and charities.

Only 24 percent of the public thought Sir Geoffrey was doing a good job as chancellor, not even half the 51 per cent vote of confidence he obtained a year ago, and below the previously all-time low of 36 percent achieved by Selwyn Lloyd in 1961.

On the "debit" side, 61 percent thought Sir Geoffrey was doing a bad job, much worse than the public's jaundiced view of Denis Healey in 1977.

People were equally scathing about the fairness of the budget, with 22 per cent thinking it was fair and 73 per cent thinking it unfair. The previous low was Selwyn Lloyd's budget of 1961 when only 33 per cent thought it was fair.

Some of the chancellor's proposals have almost become annual events--increased taxes on drink and smoking, for example. Last year 60 per cent approved of increases in tax on alcohol and 64 per cent of increases in taxes on smoking.

Similarly, last year's increase in the price of petrol was approved by only 22 per cent of the public, while 37 per cent approved the changes in the road tax.

On the general aspects of the budget, 61 per cent of the public thought it was too tough and 63 per cent said it had made them less favourably inclined towards the government. Last year the proportions were 27 per cent and 34 per cent, respectively.

The public, however, has little faith that the financial and economic situation of the country would be any better under a Labour government. While 32 per cent thought things would improve, 24 per cent thought the situation would worsen, and 38 per cent thought there would be no change.

Another consequence of the budget is a hardening of some public attitudes towards the government's taxation policy.

For example, 72 per cent disagreed with the statement that "they (the governent) are giving the people the incentive to work harder," an increase on the 60 per cent held the same view just a week before the budget.

There were increases in scepticism on "they try to give you the money you have earned" (62 per cent disagreed) and "people who want to work will gain" (47 per cent disagreed).

But there was majority agreement on two aspects of the divisiveness of the government's taxation policy: 66 per cent thought it was "not fair to the lower paid" and 70 per cent agreed that "the rich get richer, the poor get poorer."

The proportion agreeing with the statement "they look after the middle classes" fell from 55 per cent to 47 per cent, and those disagreeing had risen from 29 per cent to 27 per cent. The middle classes are evenly divided on this proposition.

The survey was based on a nationally representative quota sample of 948 electors in more than 100 districts between March 12 and 17. Details of the "popularity" questions were:

Do you approve or disapprove of the government's record to date?

	Today	Feb	Late Jan	Mid Jan
Approve	23	29	28	26
Disapprove	67	60	58	63
Don't know	10	11	14	11

Are you satisfied or dissatisfied with Mrs Thatcher as prime minister?

Satisfied	30	34	34	31
Dissatisfied	64	60	61	63
Don't know	6	6	5	6

Do you think Mr Foot is or is not proving a good leader of the Labour Party?

Is	23	22	23	26
Is not	52	49	43	42
Don't know	25	29	34	32

Do you think Mr Steel is or is not proving a good leader of the Liberal Party?

Is	63	64	57	63
Is not	15	16	19	19
Don't know	22	20	24	18

There are, however, a few crumbs of comfort for Sir Geoffrey in his budget on individual proposals.

	Approves	Disapprove	Don't know
Help for the disabled and charities	93	5	2
Increases in pension	90	8	2
Reducing interest rates (the MLR)	81	10	9
Increases in child benefits	68	25	7

GOVERNMENT PLANS NOT TO RETURN GOLD TO ALBANIA

LD181313 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 18 Mar 81 p 4

[John Miller report: "Albania Not To Get 21 M Pounds Gold"]

[Text] Britain is not planning to hand over gold said to be worth 21 million to Albania as the price of restoring diplomatic relations with the most regimented, xenophobic, and poverty-stricken country in Europe.

An all-party group of MPs will be told this today when they call on Mr Peter Blaker, minister of state, Foreign Office, urging return of the gold. It was seized by the Germans in 1943 and later captured by the allies. It finished up in Britain.

A tripartite commission comprising Britain, France, and the United States ruled it should be returned to Albania, but because there were other claimants it was kept in London.

The issue was complicated by Albania's refusal to pay compensation of more than 800,000 pounds for the Corfu channel incident in 1946 when two British destroyers were sunk by mines in Albanian waters with the loss of 44 seamen.

A recently-formed group campaigning for diplomatic relations with Albania argues that the tiny Balkan country could be a growing market for Britain and that Tirana is looking more and more to the West. But Foreign Office (?feelers) put out to Albanian diplomats in the few capitals where Albania is represented have been rebuffed.

The MPs will be told today that even if Britain wanted to give back the gold, it would depend on a joint decision by the tripartite commission.

The communist government of Albania refuses to have anything to do with the West apart from some tourism. Stalin is still glorified there.

O AGON CRITICIZES HAIG STATEMENT ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC200833 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 20 Mar 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "However, It Can Create Them"]

[Text] The U.S. secretary of state justified his country's inactivity on the Cyprus problem as well as its failure to contribute to the search for an honest solution by saying that the United States has understood that it cannot create [as published] all the world's problems.

Certainly the United States cannot solve all problems because the solution of many of them depends on other people. However, it can solve the problems it has created or allowed to be created, like the Cyprus problem.

Haig's statement that he cannot solve all problems, which he made while speaking about the Cyprus problem, merely indicates a reluctance and lack of willingness to solve a problem for which the United States is directly responsible.

NATIONAL COUNCIL DISCUSSES INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

NC192039 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] The National Council met today under President Kiprianou. At the meeting, President Kiprianou and interlocutor Ioannidhis briefed the Council members on the latest developments on the Cypriot issue and the course of the intercommunal talks.

The meeting lasted for about 3 and 1/2 hours. Those attending were Mikhailidhis, House president and New Democratic Front chairman; Ladhas, Democratic Party spokesman; Papaioannou, AKEL secretary general; Lissaridhis, EDEK chairman; Papadhopoulos, Center Union chairman; and Sofianos, Pan-Cypriot Revitalization Front chairman. Also present were Foreign Minister Rolandhis and adviser to the talks Mrs Souliotou. Advisor to the talks Triandafilithis did not attend the meeting as he is abroad on official business.

TA NEA CRITICIZES GOBBI REMARKS ON TALKS

NC200858 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 20 Mar 81 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "Waldheim's 'Ideas'"]

[Text] Gobbi considers Waldheim's "ideas" alive. Not only this, but Gobbi surpassed his mandate when he suggested that both sides exercise flexibility toward these "ideas." It is Gobbi's right to consider Waldheim's "ideas" alive, but it is not his right to give advice and take any position regarding what should be done.

As regards our position, we have already denounced as completely unacceptable the recent proposals on both the Famagusta and airport issues. On the basis of the 19 May agreement, the Famagusta issue is an independent issue, an issue of priority that cannot linked to or made contingent on anything else. The "idea" concerning the manner in which the Nicosia airport should be reopened is also unacceptable, because, most obviously, it consitutes a plan that is tantamount to the recognition of a state and thereby changing the occupation status that Ankara imposed, through invasion and genocide, on 40 percent of the Cyprus Republic's lands.

This "idea" is not only unacceptable, but we categorically warn that the Cyprus people will not tolerate or allow it to be implemented. Waldheim and the Cyprus Government should seriously heed this warning.

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA RAPS EFFORTS TO SUSPEND TALKS

NC200914 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 20 Mar 81 p 5

[From the "I ELEVTHEROTIPIA" column: "The Talks Must Continue"]

[Text] The Turkish side's effort to suspend the talks during May and June because of the elections--as it claims--which will be held in both the occupied lands and the free areas must be included within the framework of the temporizing tactics it follows.

The reason the Turkish side wants to suspend the talks is not because the two sides will not give the talks the necessary interest with their attention devoted to the elections, but because it wishes to delay the solution of the Cyprus problem as long as possible and as long as Turkey is currently more concerned about dealing with its internal problems and the international denunciation of its military regime. The position of the Cyprus Government and of the Greek Cypriot side is that the talks should continue unimpeded and without any delay. The pretexts and false excuses put forth by the Turkish Cypriot side must be dealt with as they deserve.

O AGON: PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS POSTPONED

[Excerpt] Given the fact that it is impossible to complete all the preparations necessary for holding elections in late May as originally planned, parliamentary elections will be held in second half of June. According to our reports, the work being done both on regulations and on issues of a technical nature is considered to have caused such a delay making it impossible to hold the elections in May.

The delay is also due to existing differences among political parties regarding the kind of ballot to be used and the definition of the law on apportioning seats in both the second and third distribution.

ROLANDHIS LEAVES FOR 5-DAY VISIT TO LONDON

NC200823 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0800 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Text] This morning, Foreign Minister Rolandhis left for a 5-day visit to London. Rolandhis will attend and give addresses at two gatherings of the Cypriot community on the occasion of the 25 March anniversary. He will also have contacts with leading figures of the Cypriot community on matters concerning the community and will meet with representatives of the friends of Cyprus association as well as with prominent British journalists. Rolandhis will return to Cyprus next Tuesday evening.

GOVERNMENT SETS WATCH FOR NEW TERRORIST ACTIONS

NC180825 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 18 Mar 81 p 1

[Text] Yesterday, the government spokesman stated that the AKEL secretary general had provided timely information to the minister of interior regarding charges he had made in the House of Representatives that "fresh terrorist activities are being planned which will begin at the green line." As is well known, Papaioannou made this charge at the first meetings of the House this year, about October.

The spokesman also noted that the situation has been monitored since the information was supplied by Papaioannou. He added that up to the moment, nothing has emerged to cause uneasiness.

DENKTAS MEETS WITH MISSING PERSONS DELEGATION

NC191030 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] A delegation of the Committee of Relatives of Undeclared Prisoners and Missing Persons had a meeting with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas today. As has been learned during the meeting, which lasted 1 hour and 15 minutes, the issue of an investigative committee on missing persons was discussed and it was agreed to hold a new meeting next Thursday.

The meeting took place in Denktas' office in the Turkish part of Nicosia and had been arranged by the UN secretary general special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi.

Delegation Leader Comments

NC191215 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Excerpt] In a statement, Reverend Oikonomos Khristoforos, the president of the Committee [of Relatives of Undeclared Prisoners and Missing Persons] stated that during the meeting an exchange of views had taken place and that both sides had manifested good will. He also expressed the conviction that at the next meeting better results would be achieved. The president of the missing persons committee said, we have shown every good will for the investigation of the missing persons issue. The point upon which we have insisted is that we must participate in the investigative committee.

Bayrak Radio Comment

TA191511 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas today received a three-man delegation headed by the Greek Cypriot missing persons committee chairman, Reverend Khristoforos, and conferred with the delegation for a lengthy period. Turkish Cypriot missing persons committee chairman Dr Oguz Deri, Dr (Lapide Ergen), who is connected with the missing persons issue and Necati Munir Ertekun also attended the meeting, which was held upon the request of the Greek Cypriot missing persons committee.

In a statement at the end of the meeting, Denktas said: We have been waiting since 1977 for the Greek Cypriots to show concern in order to solve the missing persons issue. The Greek Cypriots have handled this issue as a means for propaganda. They abused this issue by stressing the details and ignored the grief of the missing persons' relatives. The United Nations is exerting efforts to establish a committee by holding contacts with both sides. These efforts are about to yield successful results. We met with Reverend Khrisotoforos within this framework and explained to him in detail that we are not obstructing the establishment of the committee.

NORDIC COUNTRIES INSTITUTE VISA REQUIREMENT FOR TURKS

TA181502 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 18 Mar 81

[Text] The governments of Denmark, Norway and Iceland have decided to impose visa requirements on Turkish citizens effective 1 May 1981. Diplomatic and official passport holders will not require a visa. According to a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, Turkish citizens who travel to those countries as tourists or who transit them must apply to the representations of those countries for visas. Persons who apply for tourist visas will not have to pay a fee.

Danish Ambassador Comments

TA191710 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 19 Mar (AA)--Ambassador of Denmark to Ankara Lorenz Peterson does not expect the decision of his government to require visas from Turkish citizens to damage relations between the two countries. Ambassador Peterson explained one reason for imposing the visa was a transit agreement between Scandinavian countries, which required for uniform practices by all. Another reason was the increasing number of requests for political asylum. The visa requirement would be temporary, he hoped, and Turkish citizens applying for visas would be shown every facility. Turkish citizens with residence permits for Denmark and holders of diplomatic or service passports were exempt from the visa, he pointed out, and journalists and businessmen would be able to obtain visas in a very short time.

BULGARIAN TRADE DELEGATION MEETS BUSINESSMEN

[Text] The Bulgarian trade delegation visiting Turkey to hold contacts on economic and commercial issues has met businessmen and various officials at the Turkish Union of Chambers headquarters. Mehmet Yazar, chairman of the Turkish Union of Chambers [of Commerce, Industry and the Stock Exchange]. Administrative Council said that economic relations between the two countries are rapidly developing. He continued: [Begin recording] Apart from good neighborly relations, economic relations between our countries have especially developed in recent years. We are hoping that the volume of trade between the two countries will be greater than 1979 and will reach $250 million in future years. The development efforts and activities in both countries for the last 20 to 30 years have been very fruitful. If the two countries better develop international highway transport and tourism as well as the raw material and agricultural products potential, and extend mutual aid in the field of industrialization, they will greatly contribute to their development efforts. [end recording]

The head of the Bulgarian delegation and chairman of the Bulgarian Chambers of Trade and Industry, Peter Rusov, said the following during the meeting: [Begin recording in Bulgarian fading into Turkish translation] These visits contribute to developing the economic relations between the two countries. It is impossible not to be satisfied by our trade volume doubled. In Bulgaria we attach importance to developing industry and agriculture in a balanced manner. Our industry has developed in the field of electronics, chemistry and metallurgy. The use of the most advanced technology in these fields has increased the level of technology in Bulgarian industry. Turkish-Bulgarian trade relations are developing in the classical exchange of goods method. We may start long term cooperation in various industrial branches. We may establish joint project offices. We may jointly invest in various projects in Turkey. We especially desire a partnership in investments and installations to be built in Third World countries. It will be beneficial to further develop naval and highway transport between Turkey and Bulgaria. [end recording]

GENSCHER TO RAISE POLISH AID REQUEST AT EEC SUMMIT

[Excerpts] Bonn, 22 Mar (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Genscher will raise Poland's request for further Western economic aid at the EEC summit due to start in Maastricht tomorrow. This was learned in Bonn today following Genscher's 2 days of talks with Polish leaders in Warsaw.

In a second German Television Service [ZDF] interview, Genscher said today that the issue of economic aid for Poland presents all Western countries with the question of whether they are fully aware of their responsibilities and interests in this matter. Talks with the West European partners should be held on the matter. The Federal Government would like the Polish people, its leadership and social forces to be able to solve their problems along the path of regeneration chosen by themselves. "A setback in Poland would affect East-West relations as a whole," he said. It would change the situation in Europe and Germans and Poles would be the main sufferers.

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON EAST-WEST TENSION

DW201114 Munich ARD Television Network in German 1915 GMT 19 Mar 81

[Interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher by program moderator Rudolf Muehlfenzl, Hans Kressmann, Suedwestfunk Network, Klaus Dreher, SUEDDEUTSCH ZEITUNG, and Carl Gustaf Stroehm, DIE WELT correspondent--recorded]

[Text] [Muehlfenzl] Ladies and Gentlemen, Bonn in the East-West field of tension is the subject of our television discussion to which I most cordially welcome Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the FDP chairman and federal foreign minister. Right after this recorded discussion, the minister will fly to Warsaw. Tonight, when this program is broadcast, he will be in the Polish capital as a guest of the government. The federal foreign minister will take part in our discussion at a time when his foreign policy is exposed to considerable doubts and burdens. America under President Reagan certainly demands from us as allies clear political support for the leading power and certainly also a military contibution which may be very high for us.

The Federal Government, understandably enough, tries to maintain as much foreign policy leeway as it can. The possibilities which the Federal Government and its foreign minister have are naturally curtailed by the fact that some parts of the SPD and also of the FDP indicate that they want a different foreign policy.

At the conclusion of the Washington talks, the usual communique was replaced by a so-called coordinated summary. But the agreement pointed out therein naturally leaves many questions open, questions which will be aksed by myself, Hans Kressmann of Baden-Baden Suedwestfunk Network, Klaus Dreher of SUEDDEUTSCH ZEITUNG and Carl Gustaf Stroehm of DIE WELT in Bonn.

Mr. Minister, let us begin with your Washington talks. While visiting Washington, you pointed out Bonn's request that the NATO dual decision be observed, that is, counter-arming while simultaneously negotiating. How prepared was the United States to negotiate?

[Answer] Mr Muehlfenzl, first I want to say that it is not usual to issue a joint communique in Washington. I have made various visits there and that was never done. What was special this time was that a coordinated statement was given, showing that we agreed in our assessment of the talks. Regarding our position vis-a-vis the United States, you mentioned that the U.S. Government expects or demands that we define our position toward the leading Western power. I think everybody knows that the FRG is the key country among the European allies in the transatlantic alliance.

It is to our advantage as Germans that the U.S. secretary of state knows from his NATO work that through our Bundeswehr and our defense efforts, we make the main contribution to the common security. This certainly contributes to the fact that the discussion on what we must do together in view of the Soviet threat can be held in an objective manner.

You are right, the discussion about NATO's dual decision (?you) mentioned was important. The statement indicates that both governments, the American and the German, believe that both elements of this dual decision must be implemented--counterarmament as well as the continuation of negotiations which began last fall, but that was actually quite natural. The reason it was taken up anyway was because the public questioned--and these questions have also been asked in our country--whether the U.S. Government wanted to link the continuation of arms control talks with other events.

The U.S. Government answered this question long ago. First, the American representative at the Madrid CSCE followup conference said yes to a European disarmament conference. In other words, arms control negotiations will be continued.

Second, the U.S. Government said in this communique that it desires to successfully continue the CSCE process.

Third, it says that the arms control negotiations should be continued with regard to medium-range arms.

Regarding our relations with the United States, everybody in our country must realize that our policy must be obvious and calculable, not only with regard to the Soviet Union, but also with regard to our allies. It would be entirely wrong to assume that the Federal Republic of Germany could have, so-to-say, a position in the middle between the two world powers, at an equal distance from the Soviet Union and the United States. We are partners of the United States. Without the United States, there would be no security in Europe. Both of us, by the way, are democracies. Therefore, we belong together.

I would like to warn all who believe one could gain latitutde for action if one adopted an attitude of detachment toward the United States. He who does so will find he has missed the boat. He will find himself situated between the United States and the Soviet Union. He who wants to adopt an attitude of detachment regarding the United States, would thus also adopt an attitude of detachment regarding our most important partners in Europe, such as France, England and Italy. That is most decisive.

[Question] May I ask to whom you address this warning? You should actually address this warning to your own coalition camp.

[Answer] There is no need to keep it a secret that voices in the German public believe a certain amount of room for maneuver could be achieved in that way. There are also voices from the Social Democratic Party, but that is not the opinion of the SPC [Bundestag] faction. I convinced myself of that on Tuesday. But there are such voices, and it is particularly these which I would like to oppose publicly.

I think that the debate which is taking place at the moment among our public on our security policy--what we are doing here is a part of this debate--can be most useful when it offers an opportunity to outline our position, the position of the Federal Government, which has very broad support in the Bundestag, including among the opposition.

[Question] Mr Genscher, it is obvious that you have taken a very plain, a very hard position vis-a-vis Brezhnev's suggestion, for example, possibly because...

[Answer] [Genscher interrupts] You mean the suggested moratorium?

[Question] The moratorium, which you rejected immediately. You added that the moratorium already existed because we are lagging behind. You have taken the clearest position of all the top European politicians. You were given the commensurate Moscow beating in PRAVDA. Is it absolutely wrong to assume that a certain cooperation on the part of your American colleague Haig, regarding readiness to negotiate, for example, must be seen in connection with your strong and plain position?

[Answer] I do not know whether it is cooperation when the U.S. Government continues to do what we have jointly decided on in the alliance. I believe this expresses only the fact that continuity exists regarding the intention to implement the decisions of the alliance. We do it and the United States does it.

But one thing is certainly correct, namely, that a country with a clear and firm position will be better heard by its partners and friends than a country which gives reason for doubts. One thing is absolutely clear--this administration did not surprise us with a set preconceived opinion laying down what the Europeans had to accept. It holds talks with European politicians instead. In doing this, it does more than merely listen, it takes what is said seriously. Europeans can see many instances in which attention has been given to their talks.

Please let me say something more--we can perhaps discuss the moratorium later on--about European-American relations, because I consider this most decisive. At the end of the meeting between the federal chancellor and the French president, with the participation of both foreign ministers last Sunday night in Alsace, the federal chancellor and the French president said that they assess the American foreign policy positively. That was not a polite phrase. It was a political statement of extraordinary importance. I believe that the European public is just beginning to realize that these two important countries, France and the FRG, fully agree in their positive attitude toward the policy of the new American administration.

This has a number of effects on us Germans. First, we are not in a position--as some people believe, some hope and some fear--that we must choose between Paris and Washington. No! We are in agreement with Paris and Washington. Another effect is that everybody must know what isolation from the United States, isolation from this important European partner, means--I do not want to limit it to France, the Italian attitude is identical, the English too. In important international situations, these important European countries show that they are in good agreement with the United States. I believe this is a good prerequisite for the West to endure the challenge it is undoubtedly facing, a challenge we will face up to with all our efforts to safeguard peace.

[Question] Mr Minister, I do not know but what this reflects wishful thinking, the things you have outlined here. You say the Federal Republic is a key country, marching shoulder to shoulder with France, Great Britain and Italy. The discussion here, however, is absolutely different. You say there are voices in public. These are important SPD politicians who are talking in different tones. The initial response to the suggested moratorium which you made and which the federal chancellor made were different. The federal chancellor was the one who last summer introduced the suggested moratorium into the discussion through his own and maybe somewhat different suggestion about a moratorium. It does not seem at all to me that we are marching arm-in-arm with our allies in accordance with Washington with regard to all problems. Strong differences exist here in connection with your coalition partners.

There is good reason why you again have warned on this occasion against not [word indistinct] because you probably know that we are not doing what we are expected to do.

[Answer] Mr Dreher, I think it was good that you inserted a reservation by saying that the chancellor's statement at that time was perhaps not exactly what is being said now. [words indistinct] and something else, so that the former statement by the federal chancellor does not produce anything for dealing with the moratorium. I assume that we will discuss this matter. You are dealing at present more with a domestic political aspect.

I wanted to say that the U.S. Government is still in a state of forming its opinion on many points. This we see by its willingness to listen. We as Europeans, not just as Germans, and the French and the others see that our statements have been listened and attended to. That is the way it ought to be among allies with equal rights.

[Question] I would like to ask you about one point. The policy toward the Third World in overall strategy is an example where one can say that smooth agreement is impossible. The Americans probably have the idea at the moment that one must oppose the Soviet Union mainly with military means wherever it has penetrated, such as in the Third World, Latin America and Africa. They are curtailing their development aid. Is that [words indistinct] do you agree with that?

[Answer] Mr Dreher, we have made a very honest statement here, Mr Haig and myself. It says, among other things, that the U.S. policy vis-a-vis South Africa is still being formulated. The Europeans are indeed interested in the U.S. supporting the Namibian initiative of the five Western states, namely Canada, England, France and the FRG, supporting it as the fifth country. This demonstrates that discussions will be necessary here.

I consider it a positive development that the United States is prepared to take part in the North-South summit in Mexico, because if it had not participated, this would have confirmed the assumption you have mentioned, an assumption based on statements, not something you have made up.

On the other hand, however, I found out in the talks that they are listening to our opinion that the stability and independence of the states of the Third World can well be safeguarded by creating social justice and social progress. This was expressed in the statement. I pointed it out in a discussion on the situation in Pakistan. The statement says very plainly that there are fields where American policy has been formulated. Agreement exists in these cases, which is recognized by the French and the others. These are not uncritical persons. We all aim at [words indistinct] and yet one must consider it a political event. France has always realized that one cannot dissociate oneself in a critical hour from one's most important ally, but that one must stand shoulder to shoulder with him, to use an expression of Mr Dreher. [words indistinct]

[Question] As important as world political involvements may be, let us discuss the main point of the controversy at the moment, namely, medium-range armament in Europe. Genscher's proposal is on the table. It lately has been explained and outlined by various advisers.

[Answer] You mean Brezhnev's suggestion.

[Question] Did I say Genscher's? [laughter] [words indistinct]

[Answer] The danger of being confused is not very great.

[Question] You rejected the moratorium and suggested a halt in production on both sides, because, as you said correctly, the superiority of the Soviets is there and it is very great. Your visit to Moscow in early April is in the offing. You have certainly considered Moscow's possible motives. Do you think that behind this very clearly demonstrated readiness for talks is merely propaganda, skillfull action or pretense? Or what is these behind it?

[Answer] I think that if one wants to asses this, one must first of all ask oneself what the counterarmament decision means and what the suggested moratorium means. In November 1979 [as heard], the federal chancellor publicly pointed out in London the dangers for the balance in Europe resulting from the deployment of the SS-20 missiles in the Soviet Union. It creates a nuclear threat to West Europe which we did not have before. The Soviet Union has a superiority in this field which the West cannot counter with something similar.

From November 1979, sorry, November 1977 to December 1979, we pointed out repeatedly in various talks--particularly emphatically in 1978 when Mr Brezhnev visited us here--by saying: If you do not stop, you will force the West to counterarm. These more than 2 years have not been used by the Soviet Union to stop production. On the contrary, they have continued it. It was, if I may say so, a self-imposed Western moratorium of 2 years. It turned out that the effect was continuing armament by the Soviet Union.

In 1979, we made a decision, saying that we plan to counterarm. The first missiles would be deployed in West Europe in the fall of 1983. But we did not want to embark on the old way by saying that counterarmament must be completed first before we will begin to negotiate. The German suggestion was that we call on the Soviet Union to begin negotiations immediately with the aim of achieving arms limitation agreements to stabilize a balance on as low an armament level as possible.

As of December 1979, the Americans had repeatedly urged the Soviet Union to negotiate. That was not accepted. Only in the summer of 1980, when the federal chancellor and I were in Moscow, did the Soviet side say: Yes, we are prepared to negotiate. Preparatory talks were opened in the fall of 1980. They were then disrupted, and now the continuation of these negotiations is at stake. Valuable time has been lost, which was not the fault of the West.

In this time, the Soviet Union continuously strengthened its missiles which threaten us in West Europe and worry us so much. Every newly-deployed missile naturally makes negotiations more difficult. Every new missile makes it more difficult to achieve a balanced armament.

[Question] May I ask you a question about developments as you describe them? You were foreign minister in 1978, is that not so?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] You say there was a self-imposed moratorium. You must have been involved in it. Brezhnev signed that statement at the time in Gymnich [near Bonn], which is quite interesting, and in which it says that no side should seek advantages in any field. Did you believe that? Did you therefore prescribe that moratorium for yourself?

[Answer] No, no. We in the West--not just the Federal Republic, but [words indistinct] of such missiles, as the Italians and the Americans--the West said through all channels in the talks that the USSR should stop, otherwise we would have to take action. Since we do not make such decisions lightly, we did not rush matters. We really exploited these 2 years for talks, Mr Dreher.

When it turned out that the Eastern side could not be prevailed upon to stop, we decided to counterarm, a decision which was hard for us to make. To avoid an arms race, we made the offer to negotiate.

Now the Soviet Union says: Well, we suggest that both of us should stop now. No more missiles should be stationed in Europe. This means that the Soviet Union has its missiles while we do not. A clarification has been added to the effect that further production is naturally permitted. This would mean that the Soviet missiles would remain standing in Europe, that no Western missiles would be added, that the Americans can produce them, but they cannot be used from American territory. The Soviet Union, however, could deploy the missiles it continues to produce, on the other side of the Ural Mountains, threatening us as before because the range of the missiles is such that they can cover West Europe from the eastern part of the Soviet Union.

There is one difference, however, Mr Muehlfenzl: The further away the missile is, the less vulnerable it is to Western systems, including the new ones with a shorter range.

In other words, a suggestion is being made here which does not create any headway as to substance. We do not want to see missiles there while we have none, which would cement the imbalance. No, we want arms limitation on a low level, we want to talk business. I believe that it is important that the Soviet Union should come to the negotiating table. The matter ought to be discussed there. Nobody should be distracted away from discussing the Soviet systems, thus undermining our negotiating position.

I think we ought to have a public discussion about this. We are an open country which also gives security to the Soviet Union. There are no surprises here. I think it is an important matter to make it clear to our public that an elementary danger for West Europe must be warded off, primarily through negotiations, if possible.

[Question] So the answer to my question is that the current proposal was nothing but a horse trader's trick?

[Answer] I would never use such a formulation; it is aimed at distracting attention from the matter. The Federal Government holds a very firm position here. There are no different opinions between the federal chancellor and myself. He was the first to point out to the world's public, not just to our own public, what was going on in the Soviet Union. I demand that we be given the support of the public in our country for this responsible peace policy, namely, to achieve arms limitation through negotiations. We must also obtain the clear support of the Bundestag.

I was very impressed by the approval of the SPD faction when I gave my report. The stronger this support is--the opposition supports us equally--the more important that will be for our position in the negotiations, the position of the West. We are not the actual negotiating partners, the Americans are.

[Question] Isn't your government, the present Bonn coalition, in a certain way, a prisoner of former wrong assessments? After all, the SS-20 did not suddenly drop out of the sky. Military experts say that this development began in the early seventies. The government said here in the Federal Republic for years that everything was working fine with the Soviet Union, that we had the treaties and that we would now have happiness, peace and pancakes. Suddenly you had to change direction and present a completely different picture of the Soviet Union than let us say 4 or 5 years ago--I do not mean you personally, but the entire government camp, including the federal chancellor. Now you run into conflicts with those parts of public opinion or those political forces which supported you in this optimistic phase. Now you have to tell them: About-face, march; it was not what it seemed to be, the Moscow treaties did not solve everything. That is the first thing.

The second question: Doesn't the Soviet Union try to exploit this situation by launching a thrust, so to speak, into German public opinion--Mr Arbatov was here recently--trying to pull the carpet from under you and the Federal Government? Isn't the Soviet Union trying to win parts of the SPD, maybe also parts of the leftwing of your party and of German public opinion over to a neutralist or special position in NATO, saying that the Federal Republic will mediate a bit between Moscow and Washington?

[Answer] Well, regarding the FDP, there is no need at all for you to worry.

[Question] They firmly follow you?

[Answer] Not firmly, but out of conviction. Naturally, the visitors from Moscow to our country try to bring the Moscow statements to the attention of the German public. I am not certain whether that serves the purpose of those who initiated it. Our discussion shows that the Federal Government is not impressed by the attempt to distract attention from the issue of the negotiations, namely arms limitation. We will tell our public very clearly about the facts of the threat.

Regarding your first question, the Federal Government, when it initiated detente policy on the threshold of the seventies, never left any doubts that this would be possible only together with the West and not by going it alone. I believe that this is a rather important realization which is standing its test now in difficult times.

Second, a realistic detente policy presupposes the ability to defend oneself and it presupposes a balance. The army report of the alliance, which said the same thing with regard to its basic philosophy, was in accordance with our ideas. This explains why we continued our defense efforts in the seventies as well, at a time when the United States abolished compulsory military service and drastically reduced its defense spending until 1977. This is why the United States now has a considerable way to catch up.

You have seen it very realistically, and I believe that you do the Federal Government an injustice by saying that it should have realized this. It was the federal chancellor who realized it and alerted the other alliance partners to it. Let us not pretend that the issue of nuclear balance is an issue of a nuclear power ratio between the FRG and the Soviet Union. This leads us to a position that we don't have and that we don't want to have. We are not and we do not want to be a nuclear country. The United States is the country facing the Soviet Union in the nuclear sphere.

But we have always observed European security interests, and this explains why the federal chancellor at the time spoke in London of all places. He used an allied country as a rostrum to make the world public aware of what was happening. We decided to implement this dual decision, and I would like to say that this dual decision--meaning negotiations and counterarmament--which originally was a military, a security policy decision, in my view has a political dimension now. The reason is that this decision and its implementation will show whether the Western alliance is in a position to enforce a decision which was considered necessary. So this is also a challenge to the functioning of the alliance, and I think that all those who deal with this decision must be aware of it. Seen this way, it is also a test of the West's steadfastness regarding the implementation of its policies.

[Question] By decision you mean the decision on stationing the weapons?

[Answer] Yes, as well as on negotiations.

[Question] Or course, but you do not have to make a decision on negotiations, because you said that they will be held anyway.

[Anwer] Yes.

[Question] Don't you fear sometimes, Mr Minister, that you are creating a wrong state of awareness again by pretending that the resumption of negotiations alone is enough to create certain conditions? Did you make it clear enough what the realistic goal of such negotiations might be? I am sure you don't believe that the Soviets will reduce what they have as a result of negotiations in Geneva. They will ask for something in return. I wonder how the Soviet military superiority that you are talking about could be cut back through negotiations alone?

What reason would the Russians have to cut back their superiority, which to them is an extremely effective instrument in the years to come both internally--meaning, control of the bloc--and externally, meaning, pressure on West Europe and the separation of West Europe from the United States? Why should they reduce this? Why should they say, do we have to do this only because Mr Haig and Mr Genscher tell us to?

May I add another question? Mr Genscher, what sanctions might we have to make the Russians--I do not want to say, more submissive but--more willing to resume negotiations? Our agreement with the Americans that you stressed so much is obvious. But the joint statement on your talks with Haig mentions economic problems in a very summary way only. Does this agreement also hold true for the important field of East-West trade which has always been a concept of detente policy, for example the German pipe deal with the Soviet Union, natural gas imports and so on? I think this question must be asked in this context. I suppose it was a subject of your talks?

[Answer] Well, this is a package of questions. Mr Dreher said something very important, I think. He said that negotiations alone will not make anyone abandon plans to station arms. I refer to an important point of the decision which says that in the light of concrete negotiating results, the West will reconsider its counterarming requirements. This means the West has not said that there will be no counterarmament if negotiations are resumed--that would be the idea of the moratorium proposed by the Soviet Union--but only if there are concrete results. This is very important for the present discussion, and we must remind all those who in this discussion believe they can make us pursue a different course.

But let me answer your question as to what such negotiations can produce. In the past, an arms race was often initiated because one side achieved superiority and the other side had reason enough to counterarm and to say that there would be negotiations later, then there was a military balance and it was much more difficult to reduce armaments. Therefore, we have adopted a new philosophy, which means that we negotiate in parallel. I must say quite frankly that the responsibility for a reduction to a low level--including a lower level than the present Soviet level, Mr Dreher--rests solely with the Soviet Union. I want to say this to all those in our country who pretend that we are talking about rearmament of the West or the United States. The point is for us to find ways to limit the Soviet arms lead. The point also is that we just had to make the counterarming decision.

[Question] But, Mr Genscher, how do we achieve this?

[Answer] Quite certainly not by asking ourselves doubtfully whenever the Soviets make a new statement, whether the missiles really exist which we know do exist, and the existence of which the Soviet Union does not deny, but only through our resolve which makes it clear to the Soviet Union that we will do what is necessary for our security if it does not agree to an arms limitation in negotiations.

This has never failed to impress the Soviets. Let me give you an example. The French proposed a European disarmament conference, the East advanced a similar proposal. As is often the case, the ideas are the same but the contents are different. The French said that confidence-building measures should be agreed upon. But, they said, they only make sense if these confidence-building measures, like the Helsinki Final Act, cover all of Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals. We had a public discussion for a whole year, because the East rejected it. In Brezhnev's speech, the Soviet side says--and we have expressly welcomed it, so that you cannot say the Brezhnev speech was strongly rejected, because we made a difference between positive and less positive aspects--now the Soviet Side says that it agrees in principle to confidence-building measures for all of Europe.

[Question] But it does not say [words indistinct].

[Answer] That has not yet been defined. But, Mr Dreher, we on our part must spare no effort to prevent an arms race. If the Soviet Union does not agree to negotiations, if it is not prepared to limit its systems, we will implement the counterarming decision. I have never left a doubt about that, and we must leave no doubt about it among the public, because our people have a right to be informed about the degree of the threat to which we are exposed through the SS-20 missiles targeted on West Europe. They must be informed about what we will do to use every possibility for negotiations so as to stabilize the balance on the lowest possible level. We must make such efforts even if we hold the view, Mr Stroehn, that the prospects are not too good. Even then, it is our duty to use every possibility for negotiations.

[Question] I have a decisive question now, Mr Genscher. If I understood you correctly, you just said that if the Soviet Union were not to agree to such negotiations, we would implement the counterarming decision. Is this the chronological order? In other words, not now?

[Answer] But we are already implementing it in two ways. Preparations in the United States for the production of the weapons are underway. This will last until the autumn of 1983. In the three West European countries where the weapons will be stationed, that is to say, Great Britain, Italy and the Federal Republic, preparations are underway to create the conditions for stationing them. No, these things are being done. If they were not, we would have the moratorium. So I thank you for your question because it gave me an opportunity to make this quite clear.

[Question] Mr Genscher, we have only a few minutes left and should say a word about Poland. A word also about economic contacts.

[Answer] Let me say a word about the joint statement. The U.S. secretary of state and I agree that economic relations with the East are an important element of East-West relations. It means that we both think that trade relations also can be advantageous for the shaping of East-West relations, if they constitute an equal value for both sides. This was and remains the Western attitude. As for the natural gas deal, the Federal Government for some years now has discussed the question very intensely as to what percentage of energy we can import from the East without becoming dependent. We must take the overall energy percentage into account. In this respect, we think we should not go beyond 5 or 6 percent. Then, there is the percentage of specific types of energy, natural gas, for instance. In this respect, we think that 30 percent is the extreme but acceptable limit, if it comes to the deal. We, including my colleague Lambsdorff, also said this in the United States.

But I also said, if we want to guarantee West Europe's independence, we must not only see the Federal Republic's independence, because the deal is not only with us, but also with France and with other states. The supplies are for all of West Europe. I am worried in this respect. There are states with a much less stable energy base than we have, namely, states which do not have the coal resources we have. These resources are important for our energy supply, and I hope that some in our country will understand at last that the use of nuclear energy for civilian purposes is also a contribution to our independence. I am surprised to hear the Hamburg governing mayor, Klose, recommend that we should build our nuclear powerplants in the GDR where nuclear waste disposal is guaranteed by the Soviet Union. He holds the view that we cannot be expected to accept nuclear energy which he considers too dangerous here, whereas our fellow citizens in the GDR in his view can obviously bear the risk that he himself wants to avoid in Hamburg. In addition, he would even (?accept) dependence on the Soviet Union in nuclear energy. I can only say that this confusion of thought is such that I ask myself whether somebody in such a responsible position shouldn't think twice before making such public statements.

There are two important countries in West Europe with large natural gas resources, Great Britain and Norway. We should talk to these partners. I told our American friends, let us together with France talk to Norway and Great Britain. Perhaps they are prepared to exploit their natural gas resources sooner and to a larger extent in order to strengthen West Europe's independence when it comes to outside energy in general. This made a big impression in the United States because they understand that [words indistinct]. But I want to make it quite clear that I think 30 percent is the extreme but acceptable limit.

[Question] Mr Genscher, you will leave for Warsaw in a few minutes. You are going there at a delicate time. The Warsaw Pact staff exercises have begun. You will meet partners there who are confronted with many problems. As for our problems, I want to make two concrete remarks. How about family reunification? Will it be a subject of your talks? It is still on the agenda, as you know, but the Germans there have limited rights, and this would certainly be a point to be discussed by the German foreign minister. [Words indistinct] in which way will the Federal Government be able in the future to take care of Germans who as in the case of (Rosch) are imprisoned for several years and receive no aid, not even consular aid? Will such problems be discussed in your talks?

[Answer] As always during such visits, these subjects will be discussed. Naturally, the continuation of family reunification in accordance with existing agreements is for us an essential part of German-Polish relations. You mentioned legal aid. But I think we would not do justice to the significance of the visit if we were to focus on this problem, important as it is. We want to make a contribution to the further development of German-Polish relations. In our country, interest in Polish developments is particularly great. Interest in this respect does not mean interference. This interest in part results from a long period of tragic interrelationship of German and Polish history and the sincere German will for reconciliation. We hope wholeheartedly that Poland will succeed in solving its problems. Since we hope for this and since we maintain utmost restraint, we also expect all states which signed the Helsinki Final Act and pledged noninterference in the affairs of other states to maintain equal restraint toward events in Poland.

[Question] Mr Minister, I want to end our discussion with this concluding word which is also an appeal, if I understood you correctly. We all wish you much success for your talks in Warsaw and naturally also for your talks in Moscow. I thank you and I thank my colleagues. Good evening.

BECKER: LIBYA ROCKETS 'NOT OF MILITARY CHARACTER'

LD201258 Hamburg DPA in German 1216 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 20 Mar (DPA)--According to the arms control office of the West European Union, the rockets which are being tested by the German private firm OTRAG in Libya are not of a military character and cannot be used for military purposes. This was stated by Government Spokesman Becker at a Bonn news conference. Becker made it clear that the Federal Government has no contact with the firm and is unable either to confirm or deny reports about its activities. However, Bonn watched with concern the possible effect of OTRAG's activities on the Federal Republic's foreign relations.

BONN REJECTS GDR PROTEST ON SCHOOLBOOKS, MAPS

LD211656 Hamburg DPA in German 1456 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 21 Mar (DPA)--The Federal Government has rejected a GDR protest against the resolution by the conference of education ministers of the laender of 12 February, according to which maps and schoolbooks will show the frontiers of Germany of 31 December 1937 and the intra-German frontier as a "frontier of a special kind." A Bonn government spokesman confirmed on Saturday that Ewald Moldt, the permanent GDR representative in Bonn, had already conveyed Berlin's protest to Gunter Huonker, minister of state at the Federal Chancellor's Office, on 9 March. Huonker, who cited the Federal Republic's known legal standpoint concerning Germany as a whole, rejected the protest.

GOVERNMENT EXCHANGES GDR 'SPIES' FOR FRG PRISONERS

[Text] Bonn, 20 Mar (DPA)--The Federal Government has exchanged a number of prominent GDR spies held in prisons in the Federal Republic for prisoners from the GDR. The Federal Press Office confirmed today that one of the exchanged prisoners was Christel Guillaume, the wife of the former chancellor's aide Guenther Guillaume.

NEW AMBASSADOR TO TOKYO ON EUROPEAN-JAPAN TRADE

OW220807 Tokyo KYODO in English 0752 GMT 22 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 March (KYODO)--Klaus Blech, newly appointed West German ambassador to Tokyo, has asked for Japanese cooperation in rectifying trade imbalance between Japan and Western Europe.

He stressed that Japanese and European business corporations should expand cooperation, especially in technology fields, to solve problems arising from the deluge of Japanese products in Europe. However, he insisted his government's basic trade position was to oppose trade protectionism, citing West Germany's heavy dependence on free trade.

Blech made the remarks in an interview with KYODO news service. He is scheduled to leave for Tokyo early next month to assume his new post.

STRAUSS PLANS VISITS TO ROMANIA, PAKISTAN

LD201732 Hamburg DPA in German 1625 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Munich, 20 Mar (DPA)--Franz-Josef Strauss, Bavarian minister-president and chairman of the CSU, will visit the Romanian capital, Bucharest, 26-27 March to open an exhibition by the Hanns-Seidel Foundation which is close to the CSU. The exhibition previously had been seen in Moscow. The state chancellery said today that Strauss is also to meet Romania's President Nicolae Ceausescu, whom he last met in January 1980 while on a visit to Romania. Strauss will be accompanied by Bavarian Social Minister Fritz Pirkl, chairman of the foundation.

During the last week in April, Strauss is to visit Pakistan. He has several times been personally invited by President Ziaul Haq.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE VIEWS FRG-U.S. TIES

DW200919 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 20 Mar 81 p 12

[Commentary signed Rm.: "Understanding and Appreciation"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Haig did not want there to be any speculation about Washington having limited confidence in Genscher and in the Government of the Federal Republic. Nothing could be less useful at this time for Washington than public friction with its most important allies. The critical words of a second-rank White House adviser on Bonn's foreign policy did not have a long life. But that is not tantamount to accord between Bonn and Washington. Some important details of Bonn's approach to the East-West conflict have not received the approval of the Americans but merely their "understanding." The Reagan government is not edified by Bonn's pressing for negotiations with the Soviets on arms control at a time when it seems most important to the Americans to first strengthen the West again in order to make it able to negotiate. Haig recently pointed out to Lambsdorff Washington's reservations vis-a-vis the German-Russian natural gas deal. And there is much less belief in Washington than in Bonn that "detente" still exists. In this respect, by the way, France is also quite a bit closer to reality.

MINISTRY REFUSES COMMENT ON NUCLEAR TEST REPORTS

NC231032 Paris AFP in English 1020 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Text] Paris, 23 Mar (AFP)--The French Defence Ministry refused comment on reports from New Zealand today of a "probable" underground French nuclear test at Mururoa Atoll in the Pacific on March 7. A New Zealand Government scientist said the 2-3 kiloton explosion was the first French nuclear test this year. Refusing comment, a Defence Ministry spokesman said France never confirmed or denied reports of French nuclear tests.

LE FIGARO VIEWS ELECTION PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

LD201021 Paris LE FIGARO in French 13 Mar 81 pp 1-2

[Charles Rebois report: "Giscard d'Estaing Wins Back Two Points"]

[Text] The announcement of Valery Giscard d'Estaing's candidacy has initiated a reversal of trends among public opinion. The sixth SOFRES opinion poll has shown this. Two months before the second ballot of the presidential election, the outgoing president and Francois Mitterrand are neck and neck, both scoring 50 points. Valery Giscard d'Estaing, whose February score dropped to 48 percent, has regained 2 points compared with his rival. A similar shift has occurred with respect to the first ballot--Valery Giscard d'Estaing scores 29 percent of voting intentions (plus 1), whereas Francois Mitterrand scores 25 percent, thus showing no progress. Our opinion poll, carried out from 7 through 10 March, ended at the time when the president-candidate gave a performance on television which was deemed remarkable. This means that it will be possible to assess its effects only at the time of the next opinion poll.

It is already possible to observe increased dynamism among the majority, as indicated by the scores achieved by its main representatives. And the very notion of majority has been given a boost, as shown by the intended transfers of votes between the two ballots.

Jacques Chirac, who embarked on his campaign in a forceful manner, profiting as much as possible from the absence of Giscard d'Estaing as candidate, has further improved his socre (plus two) even though, this time, at the expense of Michel Debre and Marie-France Garaud. As a result, he appears to be less of a rival to the outgoing president--with a 15-percent score, he is still clearly outdistanced by both Valery Giscard d'Estaing and Francois Mitterrand. It would seem difficult to overcome such a handicap, and this imparts more urgency to the problem of the transfer of votes in the second ballot.

We know that, complying with tactical imperatives--he must not demobilize his electorate--the mayor of Paris has refused to state what attitude he will adopt on 10 May. Ask Giscard first, he quipped. But since Tuesday, the ball has been in his court again. Short of running the risk of appearing as a divider of the majority, he can do no less than undertake, like Valery Giscard d'Estaing, on behalf of his friends and himself, to vote for the best placed majority candidate.

Only 20 percent of people intending to vote for Jacques Chirac now intend to switch their votes to Francois Mitterrand in the second ballot, as compared with 25 percent in February, whereas 55 percent of Chirac's supporters will apparently vote for Valery Giscard d'Estaing (25 percent will abstain). Slowly but surely, it is becoming necessary to decide what kind of society you want, as was the case at the time of the 1978 parliamentary election.

Similarly, on the left, unity is being gradually restored irrespective of quarrels among leaders.

This is an argument used by the Socialists to entice away some of the Communist electorate. It appears that they have scored a few points. Georges Marchais has every reason for alarm. Whereas it has generally been forecast that he will gradually recover lost ground, he is now only expected to win 16 percent in the first ballot (minus 1).

Even though apparently favorable to his cause, this development among the left has confronted Francois Mitterrand with a serious problem. If it were confirmed or accelerated, the Socialist candidate would be caught in a double snare. The weight of the new votes would be bound to shift him a little more toward the extreme left and to erase the reassuring image which he has tried to convey to the centrist electorate and even the RPR. An ambiguity would thereby be removed.

Yet another boobytrap has been set in the form of a maneuver by the PCF leadership which asserts, not without reason, that if elected the Socialist candidate would have no majority to back him unless he agreed to share power with the Communists.

Valery Giscard d'Estaing already emphasized this fact Tuesday night.

Francois Mitterrand hopes to overcome this obstacle by dissolving the National Assembly.

But, since his freedom of movement would be limited by the majority system, which he would be unable to modify beforehand, to ensure the election of more Socialist deputies, he would have to negotiate with the PCF which would submit its terms, including power sharing, to him. Conclusion: No credible government could be formed without Communist participation.

Francois Mitterrand believes that he can best counter this assertion by stating--as he did on Wednesday--that he will govern with the support of the majority which elected him. He could have said nothing more likely to be grist to his adversaries' mill.

How will the present trend develop in the coming weeks? If forecasts are to be believed, Valery Giscard d'Estaing has every chance of being reelected--63 percent of the people asked believe that he will win (a 3-percent increase). Even among parties of the left, the result is in no doubt. But, as far as preferences are concerned, replies have indicated something different. The outgoing president scores only 25 percent (a 2-percent drop) as compared with his rival's 29 percent (a 2-percent increase). A similar result has been seen with respect to the second--Giscard-Mitterrand--ballot.

An equally big gap has already been observed on some other occasions. It has tended to narrow as the election approached.

Let us venture an explanation: A need for change is strongly felt in these times of economic crisis, but no valid alternative can be perceived in this sphere either.

If you further analyze the wishes expressed, you will realize that they are governed by partisan preferences. You will observe in addition that, in the event of a Giscard-Mitterrand contest, 67 percent of RPR supporters would want to see Valery Giscard d'Estaing elected and that 69 percent of Communists would like Francois Mitterrand to win. This information is interesting inasmuch as it indicates that transfers of votes between the left and the majority could counterbalance each others.

The debate has now been clarified, the more completely because our opinion poll has revealed made up their minds and that they will not change them by the time of the election. This means that the public sees itself as increasingly involved in the contest. This no longer applies merely to the Communist electorate. Except for nuances, the same kind of determination can be observed among supporters of the other parties.

However, interest in the election has not increased in the same proportion--37 percent of the people interviewed still assert that they are not interested in the election. The mediocrity of the polemics which preceded the main leaders' entering the lists justifies a reserve more noticeable among the majority than among the opposition. This feeling has further been strengthened by the French people's deep-seated skepticism; 59 percent of them believe that the presidential election result will not bring any great change. This assessment is hard on those candidates who promise free beer tomorrow. All things considered, doesn't this show that people have realized the gravity of the economic crisis?

USSR GRAIN DEAL TESTS 'FRAGILE' PARIS-BONN AXIS

LD201421 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 20 Mar 81 pp 1, 6

[Report: "The Germans Do Not Want France To Sell 600,000 Tons of Wheat to the USSR"]

[Text] As recently as last Sunday, President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, dining like old friends in an Alsace restaurant, testified to the strength of French-German understanding.

Now, quite unexpectedly, 3 days later, that fine understanding so often held up as an example has suddenly been upset. In the space of a few hours on Wednesday, the atmosphere between Paris and Bonn became extremely tense.

What was the reason for this sudden change? It was a question of wheat. Before the beginning of the 1981 campaign, France, which is the biggest EEC grain producer, wants to offload its surplus from the previous season, in other words 1.2 million tons of wheat.

It would be a straightforward matter if that precious grain had not been raised to the rank of a political weapon since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, thanks to the embargo decreed by former U.S. President Jimmy Carter and confirmed by Reagan. Following that decision, the EEC member countries, while not completely stopping their grain supplies to the USSR, pledged not to act as substitutes for the United States to make good the USSR's grain deficit.

France, which claims still to be attached to this Community pledge, nonetheless wishes to offload its grain stocks. Now the only potential client prepared to take half of it is precisely the USSR. In keeping with Community procedures, therefore, Paris asked its partners for permission to export 600,000 tons of wheat to the Soviet Union but has not succeeded in obtaining the desired go-ahead. The Ten foreign ministers, to whom the question had been submitted, decided at a meeting in Brussels on Tuesday to allow the European Commission to decide, since it alone has the authority to authorize grain exports outside the Community. The Commission is to give its verdict today on whether it is appropriate to accede to the French request.

Treachery

Things would have gone no further if the FRG Government had not broken its silence on Wednesday and publicly announced that it will oppose the French plan unless the United States gives its agreement. To justify this sudden intervention, Bonn says it wishes to prevent the transaction from sparking off "pointless conflict with Washington."

The French reaction was not long in coming. The German stance is particularly unacceptable, authorized circles indicated a few hours later, since many countries, including the FRG, have not strictly adhered to the nonsubstitution agreements reached with Washington. Paris had no hesitation in indicating that the West German millers were quick to supply 800,000 tons of flour to the USSR in 1980, explaining, to gap their treachery, that the flour was made from wheat bought from the Americans. Whatever repercussions this affair has in the next few days at Community level and at bilateral French-German level, the incident to say the least raises questions about the strength of the Paris-Bonn duo, which is showing surprising fragility in this case.

LIRA DEVALUED BY SIX PERCENT; BANK RATE RAISED

[Excerpts] Rome, 23 Mar (ANSA)--The Rome government has devalued the lire six percent in the European Monetary System (EMS) in an extreme attempt to cope with the crisis afflicting the Italian economy.

The move came along with the two other drastic steps, a two-and-a-half point hike in the bank rate (bringing it from 16.5 to 19 percent) and an increase from 15.75 to twenty percent of the mandatory reserves that the banks must hold.

The six percent devaluation of the lire has been approved by the European Ten's Council of Economic and Finance Ministers, a Treasury Ministry communique disclosed last night. "The re-alignment of the lira's parity," the statement added, "will return the necessary manuevering leeway to the Bank of Italy so that it may make the most effective possible utilization of currency reserves for the protection of the lira's exchange rate."

The Italian lira has been sinking under heavy pressures on exchange markets in recent months because of three main factors, a persistently high inflation rate (more than 20 percent a year), an enormous balance of payments deficit and a growing trade deficit. The country's balance of payments showed a 6.4 billion dollar (6,445 billion lire) deficit at the end of 1980. Business during the first two months of the new year did not help the situation, adding 2.15 billion dollars (2,146 billion lire) onto that figure.

The deficit chalked up in February alone broke all previous records--1,614 billion lire. The trade balance (the difference between imports and exports) was in the red by 18.5 billion dollars (18,665 billion lire) at the end of 1980. By the end of January, that deficit had grown by another 1.5 billion dollars (1,497 billion lire).

The lira's re-alignment with respect to other EMS currencies will automatically change its parity. As of today, the Italian currency's fluctuation margin in the system will be lowered six percent.

The three measures launched by the government Sunday night were part of a broader three-year economic package, which includes measures to cut the public deficit and curb civil service wages.

PLO'S QADDUMI ON TALKS WITH CASAROLI, COLOMBO

AU201929 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Text] Rome, 20 Mar (ANSA)--Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) Diplomatic Chief Faruq Qaddumi said today that there is no doubt that the Vatican has a position of solidarity with the Palestinian people fighting for their liberation. Qaddumi made the statement in a press conference here in reference to his meeting Wednesday evening at the Vatican with the secretary of state Cardinal Casaroli.

Qaddumi also voiced [word indistinct] for his talks yesterday with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo who assured him, Qaddumi added, that Italy will make every positive effort within the European Economic Community (EEC) to take steps leading to a solution of the Palestinian problem. Qaddumi also said he spoke with Colombo of official recognition of the PLO by the Italian Government "which would be a very important fact which would contribute to the success of the just struggle of the Palestinian people." The PLO leader disclosed that he was given assurances that "this issue will be examined soon."

Colombo and Qaddumi also reviewed international problems in general.

With respect to the position of the Vatican, whose doors were opened by the mediation of Msgr Hilarion Capucci, Qaddumi indicated, the PLO's number-two man said that "the role of the Holy See and especially of the pope, could be very important" for "the moral, religious and therefore political weight" he has on the nations and peoples of the region. He added that Cardinal Casaroli is very interested in finding a political solution to the problem.

The Palestinian leader said that the clear way in which the Vatican condemned Israel's annexation of Jerusalem "is very important." He disclosed that he reiterated the PLO's opposition to the "internationalization" of Jerusalem.

"The problem of the Holy City must not be separated from the Palestinian problem as a whole," he said.

The PLO foreign minister also confirmed that Pope John Paul II has been invited to visit Palestinian refugee camps.

Asked about two Italian journalists who disappeared a few months ago in Lebanon, Qaddumi said that thus far searches by the PLO and Lebanese authorities have not turned anything up.

Qaddumi Leaves for Malta

AU211535 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] Rome, Mar 21 (ANSA)--Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) Diplomatic Chief Faruq Qaddumi said today his talks with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo were "precious and fruitful in strengthening friendly relations between Iraly and the PLO." The PLO foreign minister made the statement shortly before leaving Rome for Malta.

During his three-day visit, Qaddumi met Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni and the Vatican Secretary of State Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, in addition to Colombo.

The PLO diplomatic chief also voiced the hope that the PLO will soon be recognized as "the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people."

The number two man of the PLO went on to define the policy of the new American administration in the Middle East "certainly not encouraging and it does not favor peace in the region."

He said his talk with Cardinal Casaroli was "positive." They spoke about the Middle East and the problem of Jerusalem in particular. "The Vatican secretary of state expressed his sympathy for the struggle and cause of the Palestinian people," Qaddumi added.

In Malta, the PLO leader will meet with government authorities. On Monday he will be in Tunis where he will attend, as duty chairman, the Council of the League of Arab States.

ARMY COLONEL ATTACKED, KILLED IN PAMPLONA

NC212032 Paris AFP in English 2015 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] Pamplona, north Spain, 21 Mar (AFP)--A Spanish Army colonel was attacked and killed here today, hours after another colonel died of gunshot wounds from an attack on Thursday, police announced.

The second victim was not immediately named, and no one claimed responsibility for the murder.

Earlier today, the death was announced of Artillery Colonel Ramon Romero who was gunned down in the northwest city of Bilbao. The military wing of the Basque separatist movement Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA] claimed responsibility for that assassination.

Police later identified the officer slain today as retired provincial Police Chief Jose Luis Prieto Garcia, a 62-year-old lieutenant colonel.

They said he was hit by two bullets, in the neck and ear. The assassins were described as two young people, a man and woman, who escaped.

They shot Colonel Prieto Garcia outside a church, eye-witnesses said. He was with his wife and several of his seven children.

Ministry Advises Calm

LD212314 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] The Information and Public Relations Office of the Ministry of Defense says, in connection with the attacks which have resulted in the death of Leiutenant Colonel Romero Rotaeche and Lieutenant Colonel Prieto Garcia, murdered in Bilbao and Pamplona, respectively:

Unfortunately what this ministry announced on Thursday following the meeting between the minister of defense with the Joint Chiefs of Staff has been confirmed--the resurgence of terrorist violence by ETA in an attempt to try to take advantage of the shock suffered by Spanish society as a result of the events of 23-24 February, with the aim of frightening the whole community, provoking the armed forces, making the task of government as difficult as possible and destabilizing the system.

The Ministry of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff honourably assure all Spaniards that the armed forces will not allow themselves to be emotionally carried away by maneuvers which are as crude as they are brutal and bloody, and hope that at the same time this attitude by those who feel the terrorist claw lashing at their own bodies will serve as an example for the whole of society to remain calm in the face of this resurgence of ETA subversion.

Prime Minister Calls Meeting

LD221448 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 22 Mar 81

[Excerpt] We have a note from the Secretariat of State for Information which reads as follows: The prime minister called the ministers of foreign affairs, defense, interior, justice, territorial administration and the minister at the prime minister's office to his official office this morning. During the meeting, the situation following the latest events in the Basque country and Navarre was examined. It was agreed that the implementation of measures agreed upon recently to draw up an overall plan of new organizational measures and guidelines to reinforce the antiterrorist struggle should be accelerated. It was also agreed upon to call for the active collaboration of the political and social forces. The meeting will continue tomorrow evening. This is the official note.

The minister of justice told us at the end of the meeting, which concluded at about 1315, that the meeting had been serious, both in terms of the subject and the content. Sr Fernandez Ordonez does not know whether a cabinet meeting will be called before Friday. The minister of defense, meanwhile, left the meeting around 1100 this morning. It is thought he left to attend the funeral in Bilbao today of Lieutenant Colonel Romero Rotaeche.

DEFENSE MINISTER ISSUES WARNING ON CRUISE MISSILES

LD211342 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1130 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] Defense Minister Erik Kronmark said today that if Sweden's neutrality is violated by so-called cruise missiles flying over Swedish territory, Sweden will immediately resist the missiles. According to Kronmark, the Swedish Air Force, the antiaircraft defense and the tactical control system give us a good chance to discover and combat cruise missiles, even if several of these missiles were to violate Swedish territory simultaneously.

NAVY WANTS IMPROVED SUBMARINE HUNT POTENTIAL

LD201125 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 17 Mar 81 p 6

[Erik Liden report]

[Text] Radio traffic to Warsaw Pact submarines in the Baltic increased by 400 percent during the submarine hunt in the Stockholm archipelago last fall. There were probably two different foreign submarines with which the Swedish defense forces came in contact during the search.

For the navy to have a reasonable chance of forcing foreign submarines to the surface when they are within Swedish limits more modern equipment is required.

This was stated by Navy Chief Per Rudberg on Monday [16 March] when he discussed the contents of a study he carried out on instructions from Swedish Commander in Chief Lennart Lung after the submarine incident in September-October last year which attracted much attention. The navy then had contact with foreign submarines for a little over 2 weeks without being able to force them to the surface.

It was probably two different submarines operating in Swedish waters. According to the navy's experts one of them navigated extremely skillfully and avoided the Swedish helicopter search. In addition, electronic devices housed in tubes were also used and these misled the sonar search.

Never before had a submarine remained so near to the Swedish coast for such a long time. Radio traffic to the Warsaw Pact countries' submarines in the Baltic also increased during the period by 400 percent, according to the measurements made by various intelligence bodies within the Swedish defense forces.

The navy chief now wants money to buy better equipment and more helicopters. Last fall the navy did not have the resources for continuous surveillance of the surface by helicopters. One proposal is that the air force's 10 Vertol helicopters be transferred to the navy and equipped for submarine hunts. This could happen when the air force buys new rescue helicopters.

Then there would be 20 helicopters available for submarine hunts against 7 to 10 today. More ship-mounted hydrophones, buoys with active and passive hydrophones, fixed magnetic coils, and laser and infrared instruments are some of the other proposals which Per Rudberg submitted to the commander in chief.

The construction of miniature depth charges, which SVENSKA DAGBLADET reported, is also part of the navy's new submarine hunt arsenal. It damages propellers and steering equipment so that the submarine has to come to the surface.

NIGERIAN PRESIDENT DISCUSSES TALKS WITH THATCHER

LD201426 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1206 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Text] President Shagari of Nigeria has failed to persuade Mrs Thatcher that economic sanctions against South Africa are the only way to end apartheid without bloodshed.

President Shagari, ending a state visit to Britain today, pledged that Nigeria will do everything in its power to end "the evil system of apartheid," including a readiness to help freedom fighters in Southern Africa.

He said: "Mrs Thatcher is well aware of our stand. We tried, through our discussions, to present our point of view.

"Mrs Thatcher also tried to express her own point of view concerning a peaceful solution. We came to a position where the British Government realised it is important to cooperate with African countries and see their point of view. They are quite prepared to do so. The British have their own allies. It is their task to discuss among themselves to see if it is not wiser to accept that sanctions will be effective. Mrs Thatcher still nurses the hope that she will be able to persuade South Africa to agree to talks and negotiations. If she can do that, well and good. She has great hopes. I wish her luck."

President Shagari pointed out that economic sanctions against Rhodesia had failed "because of the connivance of the same people now." But he stressed that Zimbabwe triumphed in the end, even though there had to be an armed struggle.

The president accused the Western powers of defying world opinion in supplying arms to racists. They also used their position at the U.N. to stop demands for sanctions "which is the only effective way of ending a system of apartheid without bloodshed."

He went on: "South Africa and its supporters have not learned the most important lesson from history--the will of oppressed people will triumph in the end."

The president also indicated that Nigeria did not look favourably on the decision of the Irish Rugby Union authorities to send a touring team to South Africa. "Any sporting organisation going to South Africa is running the risk of losing the goodwill of African countries," he said.

President Shagari invited more British involvement in Nigeria's next five-year development plan. He emphasised that his government had tried to create a favourable climate for foreign investment. A number of changes had been made in procedures to meet complaints by prospective investors about delays in processing applications for the establishment of industries.

BELIZE INDEPENDENCE TO BE DETAILED 6 APRIL

FL201901 Bridgetown CANA in English 1425 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Text] London, 20 Mar (CANA-REUTER)--A constitutional conference to fix the details of independence for the British colony of Belize later this year will open here on April 6, a Foreign Office minister said today.

Minister of State Nicholas Ridley, who gave the date in reply to a parliamentary question, headed the British negotiating team which this month reached a settlement with Guatemala whereby Belize's Central American neighbor dropped a century-old claim to the territory. Gutaemala accepted in exchange a settlement package which includes navigation rights, free port facilities and a pledge of future joint development projects with Belize. Mr Ridley said negotiations with Guatemala to prepare a treaty or treaties on the basis of this month's settlement will begin on May 20. The venue is yet to be fixed. Belize, formerly British Honduras, was granted internal self-government in 1964 but Britain retained sovereignty and has maintained a force of 1,700 troops in the colony pending a settlement with Guatemala.

KHARAVYI: U.S., NATO WANT CYPRUS ISSUE UNRESOLVED

NC210657 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 21 Mar 81 p 3

[From the "Views and Comments" column: "Mr Haig Is Revealing:]

[Text] Mr Haig's recent statement reveals the U.S. intentions about the Cyprus problem. The U.S. secretary of state is hopeful that a way would be found "for some progress" in the years ahead. This statement is interpreted as follows: The U.S. and NATO want the Cyprus problem unresolved; they favor the continuation and consolidation of the faits accomplis that resulted from the invasion until a de facto "solution" of the problem is imposed, a solution that would be based on Western interests and goals. Mr Haig said: "The Cyprus problem is a problem for which a decision regarding its solution has to come first and foremost from the parties themselves." What is the interpretation of this? Washington does not intend to pressure its NATOite ally, Turkey, to withdraw its troops from Cyprus and to contribute toward a fair settlement. Thus, Mr Haig leaves the solution of the Cyprus problem to the whims of Turkey, stirs up its intransigence and gives it the green light to behave arrogantly and to foil every effort for an agreed and mutually acceptable settlement.

Thus, Washington is not eager for a solution to the Cyprus problem, a problem of invasion, occupation and flagrant violation of all rules of international law, a problem which is the result of Washington's own criminal incitement and involvement. The presence of Turkish troops and the de facto partition of Cyprus serve its interests. It expects that gradually partition will be consolidated and then it would be easy for the imperialists to lay a hand on the island. Nor does the United States feel morally obligated to put pressure on their protege, Turkey, which is grossly violating all human rights in Cyprus. The U.S. "sensitivity" is solely about problems concerning which it has no right to interfere. In the case of Afghanistan, where the legitimate government asked for and received assistance from an allied country in accordance with international law, Washington created an unprecedented furor. It gets exasperated, it makes threats and demands immediate solutions. In the case of Cyprus where, if it wanted to, it could force the Turkish troops to withdraw in a matter of few days, the United States merely confines itself to hope for "some progress in the years ahead" and to encourage occupation. The clarification of U.S. intentions toward Cyprus by Mr Haig stresses the need for the convocation of an international conference on the international aspects of the Cyprus problem. This conference should be held within the UN framework and should pressure Turkey to abandon its U.S.-guided intransigence.

Settlement Seen Vital

[From the "Views and Comments" column: "The Greek-Turkish Relations"]

[Text] Following the conclusion of the talks between Roussos and Gurun, the Foreign Ministry secretaries general of Greece and Turkey, it was stated that "This is the first time that the secretaries general agree on so many points and this is very gratifying." Indeed, understanding on so many controversial issues and reduction in tension in Greek-Turkish relations can only be a positive and pleasant development. The relations of good neighborliness between the two countries, that were founded by Venizelos and Ataturk, constitute an important factor for peace, detente and cooperation in the Balkans and Europe. However, we do not fail to notice that the Greek-Turkish talks are actually being held under the U.S.-NATO umbrella.

And as U.S. Secretary of State Haig cynically stated the other day, Washington views the improvement of Greek-Turkish relations solely as a factor that would promote Washington's own interests. "Good" relations between countries that are based on the promotion of interests of a bloc can only be artificial and to some extent they are directed against other countries.

On the other hand, it is well-known to all that the cause for the disturbance of Greek-Turkish relations is in the Turkish invasion and occupation of Cyprus. So long as this cause exists, the problem cannot be settled. So long as the Cyprus problem exists and the faits accomplis of the invasion are preserved, there cannot be really good relations between Greece and Turkey, nor peace, stability or security in the eastern Mediterranean. If Greece wants to place its relations with Turkey on healthy foundations, it must utilize its contacts with this country in order to bend Ankara's intransigence on the Cyprus problem and to bring about a fair, peaceful and viable solution based on the summit agreements and the UN resolutions. Moreover, the two countries have guaranteed the independence of Cyprus, they are deeply involved in our problem and they cannot disregard their commitments and responsibilities. Thus, for the benefit of Cyprus, for the benefit of the people of Greece and Turkey, for the benefit of peace and security in the Balkans and the eastern Mediterranean, the improvement of Greek-Turkish relations must be achieved on this basis and must be focused on this goal.

AKEL LEADER COMMENTS ON BREZHNEV PROPOSALS

NC212216 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] AKEL [Progressive Party of the Working People] Secretary General Papaioannou tonight addressed an AKEL mass meeting in Paphos and reiterated the party's goal to be elected the first party in the new House of Representatives with a considerable majority over the second party.

Papaioannou insisted on the line laid down by the ministerial and national councils in February and March 1977, and mentioned that the Cyprus issue could be resolved much easier in an atmosphere created by the acceptance of the latest proposals of Soviet President Brezhnev for measures toward detente and mutual confidence.

Papaioannou said AKEL's domestic policy aims at a radical change, which he then analyzed. Among other things, he mentioned the party supports a purge and cleansing of the state apparatus and the security forces; an investigation of economic scandals and exemplary punishment of those guilty; protection of trade unionism; and the conduct of municipal and communal elections as well as elections for school committees and school boards.

He also said AKEL supports a public investigation based on the declaration of the origin of personal income, a more just distribution of taxation burdens and the national income, a free education, free medical and medicinal assistance, and the establishment of a university.

In conclusion, Papaioannou stressed that AKEL will publicly denounce any active intervention by state services in support of anyone during the election struggle.

CURFEW IMPOSED FOR CENSUS TAKING IN NORTH

[Excerpt] A general census will be held in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus today with the goal of preparing the permanent voting lists. A curfew has been imposed in the Federated State as of 0500 this morning in order to carry out the census. The curfew will be lifted at 1800 today.

GOVERNMENT REPORTS ON COMMUNIQUE FROM ANKARA TALKS

NC211720 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] The joint communique on the Greek, Turkish Foreign Ministry secretary generals talks held in Ankara was simultaneously released in both capitals at noon today. The communique says that the discussions that the two secretary generals, Ambassadors Roussos and Gurun, had were cordial and constructive. The talks covered the issued over Aegean airspace, delineation of the Aegean continental shelf and bilateral cultural issues, as well as issues on minorities.

On the Aegean airspace, it is reported that the two sides agreed on a number of recommendations that will be submitted to the Greek and Turkish Governments. At the same time, it was agreed that both countries' air traffic control services will exchange information every 2 months on the flights in the air corridors between the control centers of Athens and Istanbul.

The two secretary generals also discussed the demarcation of the Aegean continental shelf, with a view to finding a common basis that will facilitate a settlement of the issue. The two sides agreed upon a schedule for bilateral cultural relations, which the mixed Greek-Turkish cultural committee will primarily deal with. The decision to revive this committee was made by the Greek and Turkish foreign ministers during their meeting in Brussels in December. The next meeting of the two secretary generals will be held in Athens at a date that will be fixed through diplomatic channels.

I KATHIMERINI Report

NC212207 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 21 Mar 81 p 1

[Excerpts] For the first time the Greek-Turkish talks, between secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries Roussos and Gurun, respectively, which ended yesterday, have been described as successful both in Turkey and in Greece. In statements to representatives of the press accompanying the prime minister on his Crete tour, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis described these talks as a success, even stressing they were conducted without a daily agenda. The basic issues discussed, the foreign minister stated, were the Aegean airspace and continental shelf. Questions related to the establishment of a climate of confidence between the two countries were also discussed. There was no basic discussion of the question of disarmament of the Aegean islands, with Turkey simply presenting its own views on the issue.

In another statement on the question of Greek-U.S. talks, Mitsotakis said the tempo of negotiations on the base question is fast, without this meaning either optimism or pessimism for their outcome. Since, however, the agreement in question will have to be discussed by the Chamber of Deputies plenum, the time available is additionally curtailed because of Easter. After Easter and until the summer recess, the Chamber's plenum will have both a limited number of meetings as well as a heavy load of legislative work, which also includes ratification of the law on the election of European deputies.

In respect to a possible visit to Greece by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, on the occasion of his Middle East and European tour in April, Mitsotakis said there is no information. If anything of this nature transpires, he said, it will be announced.

MANEUVERS WITH U.S. UNITS, TO BE HELD 27 MAR-2 APR

NC211728 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] The National Defense Ministry has announced that in the area of Vatika [Neapolis], Lakonias, a U.S. Marine unit and supporting units will hold landing maneuvers between 27 March and 2 April.

Greek naval units will also participate at the maneuvers to familiarize themselves in the use of modern amphibious units. Greek officers of the three branches of the armed forces will follow the maneuvers as observers in order to receive briefings on the tactics and techniques of using the modern equipment with which Greece has been supplied. No units of other countries will participate in the maneuvers.

KKE Comment

[Excerpts] The U.S. military is about to hold new landing maneuvers in our country. As the National Defense Ministry has announced, Greek units will also participate in the exercises, which will be held from 27 March to 2 April at Vatika [Neapolis], Lakonias, where similar operations have repeatedly been held. A pretext for the Greek troops' participation in this U.S. provocation is that they will "participate in the exercise" and be "briefed" on modern amphibious military operations.

In a public statement, the KKE Central Committee press office points out the provocative character of the exercises that promote "the control of the country's armed forces by the Americans and lowers the national dignity of the officers and the people's mobilized children."

The text of the KKE Central Committee press office statement reads:

"The U.S. exercises, whether they are held with the government's permission or not, like in Drama, clearly show that our country has become the arena of U.S. maneuvers and provocations to our neighbor states. Under the label that the Greek military units will participate in the exercise, the control of our country's armed forces by the Americans is promoted and simultaneously the national dignity of the officers and that of the people's mobilized children is lowered.

"Our people know very well from recent experiences the dangers that this situation brings to our national defense, our country's national independence and the people's freedom."

The visit by the U.S. militarists, who, from tomorrow and for 3 more days, will be in our country, should be placed in the same context. These militarists are a delegation of the U.S. War College comprising 13 students. During their stay here, they will visit the National Defense General Staff and will be briefed on our country's foreign, economic and defense policies.

NEWSPAPER CRITICIZES HAIG ON MILITARY ALLOCATIONS

NC201744 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 20 Mar 81 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "Haig's Fears"]

[Text] The U.S. secretary of state has asked Congress to approve greater military aid allocations for Greece and Turkey in 1982, because he considers two countries a "defense unity" and a necessary bridgehead for the United States against the USSR and the other socialist states as well as the Arab countries in the region. In trying to convince Congress of the necessity of the allocation, Haig burst out into a violent fit of rumormongering and slanderously abused the Soviet Union. This shows, in the least, a lack of responsibility and seriousness for his rank. However, Haig was sincere in certain of his arguments. In order to dispel the possible hesitation of certain congressmen, in his written report Haig reminded them not to forget that U.S. military aid is one of the foreign policy tools for promoting U.S. influence in these countries (editor's note: Gunboat diplomacy in its current form).

Of course, the one who abuses and slanders is not as strong as he thinks. At the same time, finding itself at the dead end where its insane cold war policy has led it, the U.S. leadership is demonstrating the bestial fear it has about the future of imperialism. By comparing terrorists with people struggling for their freedom and their deliverance from the stern tyranny and the exploitation of the U.S. monopolies, Haig did not confine himself to the slanders agains the USSR and the other socialist countries, that..."train terrorists"! He expressed his fear that if "this international bleeding is not put under control--he meant El Salvador--we shall find this bleeding at our borders tomorrow." Honestly, the reaction of greater numbers of people and personalities is becoming more evident in America itself against the cold war policy of Reagan's administration. What is strange, however, is that our government is pretending that it does not understand the aims and goals of our "allies" and proceeds in signing the bases agreements in order to supposedly protect our country from the...danger from the north.

RALLIS DISCUSSES FOREIGN POLICY IN CRETE SPEECH

NC220824 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2200 GMT 21 Mar 81

["Excerpt" of 21 March address by Greek Prime Minister Rallis at Khania, Crete--recorded]

[Excerpts] Venizelos, however, adjusted his foreign policy to international developments with flexibility without any dogmatism. Venizelos' policy was based on three points: 1. Placing Greece diplomatically and militarily on the side of western democracies; 2. Guaranteeing a permanent basis for cooperation with Turkey; 3. Establishment of Greek relations with the Balkan countries.

It is this policy of Venizelos, adjusted to the facts of our times, which is continued by New Democracy. This is a policy which we believe [applause] serves our national interests and for which we continually receive attacks from the opposition, whether this is from PASOK or the leftwing. [confused applause with shouts of "change" in the background]

However, the inspirer [Venizelos] of this policy was the progressive leader of his time. Those who today appear as progressive continuers of his work are, by contrast, those who deny his work. They are the ones who ridicule our own devotion toward the democratic West. They are the ones who declare that when they attain authority they will change Greek foreign policy, and who sometimes dream of luminous isolation, and sometimes of our partnership with regimes of the Third World where parliamentary democracy, in which we do believe, does not function in the majority of the countries. At other times, some of these opponents of ours timidly propose we should abandon the West in favor of the East.

As for PASOK, the foreign policy it purposes belongs to the sphere of utopia. It talks of an independent and nonaligned policy. It often quotes the Yugoslavian type, at other times the Libyan type and often the Swedish model. It ignores, or it pretends to ignore, the difference between the geographic political and economic conditions in these countries and those of Greece. It also ignores the international expediencies which allow these countries to conduct different types of nonaligned foreign policy and, between ourselves, not always with much success. [long applause]

We are particularly and exceptionally sensitive about the question of our relations with Turkey. The left opposition exploits, with excessive lack of responsibility, this sensitivity and it proposes an intransigent position. Such a position, however, can only lead to a dead end or to a dynamic confrontation. We insist on solutions dictated by wisdom, which are offered by diplomacy and dictated by the national interest. On the question of establishing limits of responsibility in Aegean airspace, we pursued the process of dialogue and negotiation.

We believe that developments which have taken place will permit the eradication of the causes for friction without endangering our national interest to the slightest degree and without touching upon our national rights. On the question of the demarcation of the continental shelf, we believe that international law and international practice are the most correct course for a just and logical settlement. [prolonged applause]

TO VIMA: LIBYA APPLIES PRESSURE WITH OIL SUPPLY

[Text] Complications over Libyan oil shipments to Greece are beginning to gain broader dimensions because, although unofficially, the Libyan Government now clearly appears to be admitting that the "delays" are not accidental but are primarily owing to a certain "disturbance" in relations between the two countries arising from the fact that the Greek Government handed a fugitive Libyan pilot over to the United Nations instead of to the authorities of his own fatherland, as well as from the visit of Greek Agriculture Minister Athanasios Kanellopoulos to Israel.

The Greek Foreign Ministry is currently dealing with the issue with particular attention. Authoritative sources hope that the demarches now in hand will overcome existing obstacles and that in the end the loading of two waiting ships will be completed. The Soviet Union is also getting involved in the whole issue, because one of the two oil shipments earmarked for delivery was purchased by Greece from the USSR but was being shipped via Libya.

The Libyan Government, in the meantime, has informed the Greek Government that the pilot who was handed over to the UN High Commission on Refugees is a "criminal under the common criminal code" and that relevant documents proving this are about to be forwarded. These documents, however, have not been presented and the relevant allegations by the Libyan Government remain unsubstantiated.

While efforts to solve the problem created by this "pressure" from the Libyan government against Greece are being conducted on the sidelines, certain public "explanations" made yesterday provide a clear indication of the magnitude of the issue and of its true causes.

In Crete, first, Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis made the following statement on the question of the Libyan pilot:

"The Greek Government absolutely respects the principles of international law and the Libyan pilot was handed to the UN High Commission on Refugees on the day after his arrival in Greece. Consequently, and in effect, this pilot is outside Greece and the aircraft was returned to Libya. As a result, there is no issue for Greece."

In reference to the issue peculiarly created by Libya in reference to the visit of Agriculture Minister A. Kanellopoulos to Israel, the Foreign Ministry observed that this visit has no particular importance and that the status of relations between the two countries remains unaltered. It was added in reference to this issue that Greece is interested in agricultural cooperation with Israel.

Foreign Ministry Statement

NC212137 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] A Foreign Ministry statement on the supply of oil from Arab countries explains the following:

All facts available to the Foreign Ministry to this moment testify to the unfounded character of certain newspaper reports that problems exist in the supply of oil from Arab countries.

Neither Greek embassies in these countries nor Arab embassies in Athens have furnished the slightest indication that there has been a reconsideration of oil obligations undertaken by these countries or, more generally, of their policy toward our country for any reason.

More specifically on Libya, apart from certain delays noticeable recently in the delivery of oil, we have no facts that can establish any change in this country's policy toward Greece on the question of oil. As already stated, the satisfaction of our country's oil requirements is guaranteed.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman also stated that no protest, either from Libya or from any other country, has been made to the Greek Government in respect to Agriculture Minister Kanellopoulos' visit to Israel.

Such a protest, in any case, would not have been justified, because nothing has changed the status of Greek relations with Israel. The visit of the minister of agriculture has had no bearing on the existing de facto relations between the two countries since 1949, nor has it altered the well-known friendly sentiments and the policy of the Greek Government and Kanellopoulos toward the Arabs.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA Comments

NC212158 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 21 Mar 81 pp 1, 15

[Excerpts] Apart from the 1.5 million tons of Libyan oil, delivery of which "was frozen" following the incident of the pilot who sought asylum in Greece, the delivery of 2 million tons of oil from Iraq, earmarked for delivery during 1981, has also become problematic.

According to exclusive ELEVTHEROTIPIA reports from absolutely authoritative Arab sources in Athens, Iraq has transferred all its oil supply obligations to all countries to Kuwait, and now Kuwait is insisting on the necessity of "giving priority to its own treaty obligations." This raises many questions, not only about the "when" but also about the "if" of the delivery of these 2 million tons of oil, because it is well-known that the Arabs have been disturbed by Agriculture Minister Athanasios Kanellopoulos' visit to Israel.

Another exclusive report by ELEVTHEROTIPIA diplomatic correspondent Louis Dhanos is also indicative of the new dimensions of the government's attempt to guarantee the supply of 3.5 million tons of oil from other countries since this quantity will represent our shortage if in the end the delivery of Iraqi and Libyan oil is completely cancelled (or considerably delayed.)

This report concerns a delegation under the secretary general of the Industry Ministry which is due to depart for Algiers in an effort to guarantee "as much oil as possible." Soundings out and contacts are also being directed toward other Arab countries, as well as toward North Sea countries (Britain, Norway).

In a statement in Sitia [Crete] yesterday, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis stressed that there are no "problems with Libya," but he did admit that oil shipments are being delayed. A reference by Mitsotakis to the question of the recognition of Israel was also "meant to pressure." Yet this question appears to seriously interest all Arab diplomatic missions in Athens, who are due to meet soon "to align their policy."

Answering a question, the foreign minister said that he does not believe there is a question of a strain in relations with Libya.

Mitsotakis admitted, though, that it is correct that there is a certain difficulty in our relations with Libya. It is incorrect, however, he stressed that they are cutting off our oil.

What is correct is that there has been a delay in the loading of two Greek tankers, one of which is scheduled to receive an oil shipment based on an agreement with the Soviets (it belongs to the Mamidhakis Company) while the other is scheduled to take on oil on the basis of the agreement with Libya with oil destined for the Greek state oil refineries.

In reference to the visit of Agriculture Minister Kanellopoulos to Israel and the reported possible strain in relations with Arab countries, Mitsotakis stressed: "This is no de facto recognition. For a long time now we have had relations with Israel at the charge d'affaires level. These relations cover a wide spectrum of trade and economic exchanges, and particularly relations in agricultural cooperation in which sector Israel has an advanced technology, especially in the area of irrigation.

RALLIS, MITSOTAKIS LEAVE FOR THE NETHERLANDS

[Text] Prime Minister Rallis, who returned early this afternoon from his tour in Crete, left by air at 1830 for Maastricht, The Netherlands, to attend the conference of leaders of EEC member-states; Foreign Minister Mitsotakis is accompanying the prime minister. During the conference, which begins tomorrow, Rallis and Mitsotakis will develop the Greek positions on international and intercommunity issues that directly concern our country.

TALKS WITH GREEK FOREIGN MINISTRY SECRETARY END

[Text] Ankara, 20 Mar (AA)--The secretaries general of the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministries Friday concluded the 8th periodic meeting in Ankara. Secretary General Kamuran Gurun of the Turkish Foreign Ministry told newsmen, and his Greek counterpart Stavros Roussos confirmed, they had reached some kind of agreement on "certain points."

Gurun clarified, however, progress should not be expected on the question of the Aegean continental shelf at this time. The question of the Turkish community in Greece and their communal property is being taken up "through diplomatic channels," he added.

Gurun and Roussos said they would take up with their respective ministers the points on which they had been able to reach agreement. The Turkish and Greek foreign ministers will meet in Rome during the spring session of the NATO Council of Ministers in May. Gurun said the date for the next get-together of the secretaries general would be set by the ministers when they meet.

Joint Communique

[Text] A joint communique has been issued on talks held between the Turkish and Greek Foreign Ministry general secretaries in Ankara between 16 and 20 March. The communique says that the issues of the Aegean airspace, the delineation of the Aegean continental shelf, bilateral cultural relations, problems concerning minorities, Greece's participation in the centennary of Ataturk and bilateral relations were discussed during talks held between Turkish Foreign Ministry General Secretary Kamuran Gurn and his Greek counterpart, Ambassador Stavros Roussos.

The communique says that the general secretaries have reached an agreement on certain recommendations to be made to their respective governments on the issue of the Aegean airspace. According to this agreement, discussions will be held in order to draft a letter for the authorized traffic offices of the two countries to meet every 2 months in a bid to exchange information on air traffic between the Istanbul and Athens regional air control centers.

The communique notes that the two general secretaries discussed the subject of the delineation of the Aegean continental shelf in order to determine the common views for the solution of this problem.

The communique adds that an agreement was reached on a schedule for bilateral cultural activities to be carried out by the joint cultural committee which was revived following talks between the two Foreign Ministries in Brussels on 13 December 1980. The joint cultural committee, whose members will be appointed by the two governments as soon as possible, is expected to hold its first meeting in the summer. The venue and time of the meeting will be determined through diplomatic channels.

During the talks, the program of ceremonies to be held in Selanik [Thessalonica] on 19 May 1981 to mark Ataturk's centennary have been completed, including the Greek Government's official participation in the ceremonies.

The next meeting between the general secretaries of the two countries will be held in Athens.

Ambassador Roussos departed Turkey today at 1115 after completing his talks. In a statement before his departure at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Ambassador Roussos said that though small, some constructive and beneficial steps toward finding a solution to outstanding differences between his country and Turkey have been made during the Ankara talks.

Pointing out that the talks were held in a warm and cordial climate, the ambassador said that agreements were reached on certain subjects on the agenda. He added that he had conducted constructive talks with Turkish Government officials on this occasion.

JUDICIARY STUDIES IRANIAN PILOT'S ASYLUM REQUEST

[Text] Ankara, 20 Mar (AA)--The request for asylum by Iranian Colonel Javit Hussein and his wife, who commandeered a transport plane to Van airport early this week, was under examination by the Turkish Judiciary, Foreign Ministry spokesman Oktay Iscen said Friday.

The Ministry of Justice was currently examining whether the Colonel had committed the offence of "hijacking" or not as well as the request of the Iranian couple for political asylum, Iscen said. He noted there was an extradition of convicts agreement between Iran and Turkey and Turkey was signatory to international agreements on hijacking and international terrorism as well. Iran's note asking for the return of the colonel would be answered as soon as possible, he added. Asked whether the colonel and his wife would be tried in Turkey, Iscen noted that offenders had been tried in a similar case in the past.

LIRA READJUSTED AGAINST U.S., OTHER CURRENCIES

TA212024 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] The value of the Turkish lira has been readjusted in accordance with the recent changes in international money markets. The Turkish lira was revalued against the U.S. dollar, the Japanese yen and the Saudi riyal and was devalued by some 2 percent against certain other foreign currencies. The new exchange rates, which will be in effect as of tomorrow, are as follows: 95.65 Turkish lira [LT] to the U.S. dollar, 45.88 LT to 100 Japanese yen and 28.66 LT to the Saudi riyal.

The Turkish lira was devalued by 1.9 percent against the Deutsche Mark and the new exchange rate was fixed at 45.95 LT to the mark. The Turkish lira was also devalued against the British pound, the Austrian schilling, the Belgian franc, the Swiss franc and the Norwegian krone by percentages ranging from 0.7 to 1.8.

DELEGATION SIGNS BORDER PROTOCOL WITH IRAQ

TA211541 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 21 Mar (AA)--The negotiations that have been held in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs since 16 March 1981 between the Iraqi delegation, led by Ambassador Riyad al-Qaysi, and the Turkish delegation, led by Foreign Ministry Counselor Asaf Inhan, on drafting a protocol relating to the redemarcation of the frontiers between Iraq and Turkey were concluded today and the protocol signed with a ceremony.

ENERGY MINISTER BINGOL DEPARTS FOR IRAQ

TA221546 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 22 Mar 81

[Text] A delegation headed by Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol left for Iraq today to hold talks for the readjustment of the fees paid by Iraq for the transport of oil through the Turkish-Iraqi pipeline. Officials from the Foreign, Finance, Energy and Natural Resources Ministries as well as from the Pipelines and Petroleum Transport Corporation [BOTAS] are accompanying the minister.

Crude oil is being pumped through the pipeline from Kirkud to the Yumurtalik District in Adana where it is being loaded on tankers for export. Iraq is currently paying about 40 liras per barrel for the oil being transported through the pipeline which has been in operation since 1975. A total of 35 million tons of crude oil is being transported yearly on the 981-km pipeline. Some 641 km of the pipeline are in Turkey and the rest is in Iraq.

DELEGATE CALLS FOR BALANCED EUROPEAN SECURITY

T/211536 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 21 Mar (AA)--Turkey demanded that the troops to be withdrawn (?eventually) from central Europe under the mutual and balanced troop withdrawal talks in Vienna should not be deployed in a way that would weaken the security of the northern and southern flanks. The Turkish view was submitted by Ambassador Emcel Barutcu in an address to the conference, the Foreign Ministry said.

AID AGREEMENTS WITH NORWAY, U.S., SWITZERLAND

TA211457 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1435 GMT 21 Mar 81

[Text] Ankara, 21 Mar (AA)--The Council of Ministers ratified three recently-signed accords with Norway, the United States and Switzerland, said separate items in today's Official Gazette. Under the accords, Norway will provide Turkey with a 50 million krone grant to be used in development projects under OECD's aid to Turkey program, the United States will extend, under the same program, a 200 million dollar credit and Switzerland will follow suit with a 35 million dollar credit, part of the 60 million dollars originally pledged.

BULGARIAN TRADE DELEGATION MEETS IZMIR BUSINESSMEN

TA202053 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Text] The Bulgarian trade delegation visiting Turkey held contacts in Izmir today. The delegation which is headed by Peter Rusov, the chairman of the Bulgarian Chambers of Trade and Industry, held a meeting with businessmen from Izmir at the Aegean Chamber of Industry. During the meeting, Rusov pointed out that trade between the two countries had doubled during the past 5 years. He said Turkey and Bulgaria could make joint investments in the fields of manufacturing and mining.

The acting chairman of the Aegean Chamber of Industry, Orhan Mentese, said that the Aegean region was the most convenient one for the investments suggested by the Bulgarian delegation.

SWEDISH SOCIAL SECURITY AGREEMENT--The ratification documents of the social security agreement between Turkey and Sweden were exchanged in Ankara today. The agreement will go into effect on 1 May. It stipulates that the 15,000 Turkish workers in Sweden will benefit from Swedish social security laws without discrimination after taking into consideration the social security benefits they have acquired in Turkey. [Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 19 Mar 81 TA]

OLIVE OIL EXPORTS--Turkey made contracts to sell 26,000 tons of olive oil to foreign countries, the exporters union announced in Izmir. An olive oil sales contract was made with Libya and with some EEC countries, officials said. Libya is expected to import an additional 15,000 tons of olive oil from Turkey and a Libyan delegation will be in Izmir to discuss olive oil purchases, officials added. MINISTERS EXPLAIN AFRICAN POLICY TO COMMITTEE

["C.B." report]

[Text] The lower house and Senate Joint committees have met to hear a fourfold exposition of foreign policy: [Foreign Minister] Mr Nothomb, Development Cooperation Minister Mr Coens and Foreign Trade Minister Robert Urbain (whose report was read by Mr Nothomb) explained Belgium's African policy. Of course, a large chapter was devoted to Zaire, which explains why Mr Martens, fresh from his visit there, gave his assessment of it and explained his famous "declaration of love."

Despite the reticence of the Flemish Socialists, who expressed themselves mainly by letter, there was no debate. A debate is planned in each committee for next week and it is possible that during the foreign affairs budget debate the African section will be the subject of debate in Parliament.

Mr Martens described the Belgian-Zairian joint communique to the parliamentarians in very positive terms and explained his "declaration of love," specifying that by "Zairian leaders" he meant not only President Mobutu but more generally all the interlocutors with whom he had spoken (provincial governors, local leaders and ministers) and who had all given him an excellent welcome. He also pointed to the new aspects of Belgian aid to Zaire: A state loan of BF400 million and a credit of BF150 million to improve Zaire's telecommunications, particularly its international communications. Zaire also proposed repaying its debts to the Telegraph and Telephone Administration, which totals BF1 billion, paying BF50 million right away. Another much more ambitious project was discussed, for a kind of "Zairian Zeebrugge": Improvements to the port of Banana, which would involve work lasting several years.

Observance of Mutual Legality

Following the meeting, Mr Nothomb spoke to journalists about the main points of Belgium's African policy. With regard to Zaire, he pointed out that two delicate subjects were broached, though not together, in Kinshasa: The status of the oppositionists in Belgium (those recognized as political refugees and the rest) and the fate of the parliamentarians still being held. Both sides agreed, Mr Nothomb said, to observe the other's laws. Belgian laws have been fully explained to Kinshasa, thanks to the works by professor de Vischer, analyzing the status of aliens in general and of political refugees in particular, and the changes introduced following the approval of a new law on aliens at the end of 1980.

The Zairian authorities accepted these explanations, Mr Nothomb added, and only asked that Belgian law be applied to Zairian nationals without special privileges.

Next the foreign minister said that a step had been taken toward improved mutual understanding. In exchange the explanations given by Kinshasa were accepted and not much consideration was given to whether the arrest of parliamentarians guilty of having sent an open letter to the president was consistent with Zairian law--not to mention human rights in general....

Economic Ties With Africa

Mr Nothomb also mentioned the importance of Belgium's economic relations with black Africa (Nigeria is our major customer, accounting for BF 11.1 billion, and Zaire our major supplier, accounting for BF 28.1 billion), though in general terms, black Africa as a whole accounts for only 4 percent of our exports and 5 percent of our imports. Nevertheless, over the past 20 years Belgium's ties have become considerably diversified: In 1968 over 90 percent of total aid was absorbed by Zaire, Rwanda and Burundi, while the other black African countries received only 1.43 percent. At present the respective figures are 60 and 10 percent.

Furthermore, multilateral aid is absorbing an increasing proportion of the budget (40 percent as against 1 percent in 1961) via the European cooperation organizations. Every year Belgium gives BF 4 billion to black Africa. This is one reason why Mr Nothomb has promised to appeal to our European partners to devote more attention and more credits to Zaire, which is relatively underprivileged with respect to other states.

Southern Africa

Stressing that Belgium wants a "liberated and stable Africa," Mr Nothomb specified his stance with regard to southern Africa. "We are steadfastly opposed to the apartheid policy," he said, "and we indicated this clearly to South African Prime Minister Mr Botha during his visit to Belgium. We also hope that Namibia will achieve independence under peaceful conditions and we particularly regretted the failure of the Geneva conference, which could have led to free elections. Belgium is, however, opposed to the plan for an oil embargo on South Africa, as advocated in the United Nations by the majority of Third World countries. Indeed, Brussels believes that such a decision cannot be taken by the General Assmebly, but must be taken by the Security Council. Moreover, Belgium does not consider itself affected by such a plan, since it has no oil to export. On the other hand the arms embargo is being scrupulously observed, Mr Nothomb added.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON WARSAW TALKS, USSR RELATIONS

DW231149 Bonn ZDF Television Network in German 1815 GMT 22 Mar 81

[Moderator Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on the program "Bonn Perspectives"--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Federal Foreign Minister Genscher will be in Moscow in early April. What will he have in mind when he goes there? But first, Mr Minister, about your Warsaw visit. Despite all the uncertainties in Poland, despite the different social systems, the Federal Republic wants to help Poland in this economic bind. Are the reasons prompting this mainly moral ones?

[Answer] Mr Reiche, the history of German and Polish dealings with each other has been full of change, and one which was sometimes tragic. This naturally is involved. But I believe that a most elementary interest on our part must also be taken into consideration here. We are interested in seeing that the Polish people, their leaders and social forces are able to solve their problems along the path of regeneration chosen by themselves. A setback in Poland would affect East-West relations as a whole. It would change the situation in Europe, and who would suffer from it most? I think it would be the Germans, who live in two states, and the Poles. Naturally, we alone cannot raise this extensive economic aid. It is a matter of whether all Western states are fully aware of their interest and responsibility here. We want to discuss that with our partners.

[Question] You stressed very strongly in Warsaw that there is a common responsibility of Poles and Germans for peace in Europe. Will you say this equally emphatically and clearly in Moscow, and do you think you will find understanding there?

[Answer] I believe people in Moscow know that the Poles and the Germans are aware of this responsibility. The considerable contributions the Germans and the Poles made after World War II toward understanding in Europe, arms control and disarmament are evidence of the fact that these two peoples in the heart of Europe are trying with all their might to promote cooperation.

[Question] Even if the American policy has not been fully formulated, Mr Minister, it is clear that the Americans want again to become number one in the world. Is this attitude, which is very outspoken toward Moscow, a handicap for the stabilization of East-West relations?

[Answer] The stabilization of East-West relations presupposes a balance. It presupposes that the United States not be weaker than the Soviet Union. The United States does not want to be stronger either. It wants to overcome the existing problems in its own defense efforts. That is a contribution to the balance, thus also serving the stabilization of East-West relations.

[Question] NATO's 1979 dual decision is a thorn in the side of the Soviet Union, a decision which called for disarmament negotiations as well as counterarmament. Mr Minister, is it possible to negotiate successfully at all in Moscow if one adheres to this dual decision?

[Answer] This dual decision is the prerequisite for negotiations leading to concrete results. We have tried prior to this decision to make the Soviet Union stop its medium-range arms production and deployment. That was not possible. With this dual decision, we know how Western defense determination is linked with the will to negotiate. In other words, if it were up to us, a new arms race would be avoided.

[Question] Mr Minister, you receive praise from the United States for your loyalty to the alliance. From Moscow, however, you get sharp and hard criticism. Will you be able to negotiate in Moscow at all on this basic line? Are what we call loyalty to the alliance, on the one hand, and stabilization of East-West relations vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, on the other, compatible with each other?

[Answer] They are not just compatible with each other, they belong indivisibly together. Only in the Western alliance, only in the European Community can we properly represent our interests in the urgently needed dialogue with the Soviet Union. The weight we carry in Moscow is determined by the weight we carry in the Western community, and whoever would like to see our standpoint be in the middle between both world powers would find out very quickly that that is untenable.

Reports to FDP Presidium

LD231316 Hamburg DPA in German 1214 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Mar (DPA)--In a report on his talks in Poland, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and federal foreign minister, today underlined to his party's Presidium how important it is for all states to refrain from interfering in Poland. FDP spokesman Josef Gerwald said that Genscher gave his assurance that the Federal Republic is strictly adhering to this precept.

Genscher put forward the view that the economic aid Poland wants could contribute to the economic and thus also to the political stabilization of the country. He hoped that in the present difficult situation commonsense and responsibility will prevail in the interest of a political solution.

Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff told the Presidium that his Washington talks resulted in general agreement in the views of the two governments. This applied in particular to the national and international aspects of energy policy. In the sphere of monetary policy, the Federal Republic must expect interest rates in the United States to remain comparatively high.

REPORTAGE ON OFFICIALS' TALKS IN WASHINGTON

Defense Minister

LD240950 Hamburg DPA in German 0337 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Washington, 24 Mar (DPA)--The Federal Republic wants negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on Eurostrategic weapons to be started at an early date. This was the line taken by Federal Defense Minister Apel in Washington today in his 2 days of talks with his U.S. counterpart Caspar Weinberger. On Wednesday, Apel will meet with Secretary of State Alexander Haig. Contrary to earlier expectations, there will apparently be no meeting with President Ronald Reagan.

It was pointed out by German delegation circles before the start of the discussions in Washington that it is important that both parts of NATO's December 1979 twin decision--counterarming with nuclear medium-range missiles while at the same time expressing readiness for talks on disarmament--should be observed. The Bonn delegation in Washington will urge that disarmament talks with Moscow should be started as soon as possible.

Alluding to a possibly divergent view on the part of the Americans, it was stated that there should be no delay by the West. The twin decision is increasingly gaining political importance for the future of the NATO alliance. It is being said in Washington that under certain circumstances the missiles might be stationed in West Europe even before talks with Moscow. The special NATO group which deals with arms control talks will meet in Brussels during the next few days.

The delegates from Bonn are also prepared to counter U.S. wishes for an even greater expansion of West German defense by pointing out the standard of the Bundeswehr's performance capacity. The German armed forces have been consistently modernized, it was said.

FDP Spokesman

LD240958 Hamburg DPA in German 2311 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Text] Osnabruck, 23 Mar (DPA)--According to Juergen Moellemann, the FDP Bundestag Parliamentary Group's spokesman on foreign and security policy, the United States wants to hold intensive negotiations before the end of this year with the Soviet Union on limiting modernized medium-range missiles. In an interview for NEUE OSNABRUCKER ZEITUNG (Tuesday's edition), Moellemann stated on his return from a trip to the United States that Under Secretary of State Stoessel confirmed a decision to this effect by President Reagan. The FDP politician welcomed the fact that the Americans said they do not, contrary to some fears in the Federal Republic, intend to delay the talks but want to hold them "with complete enthusiasm."

Moellemann stressed that the United States is dissatified with Bonn's defense efforts. Federal Defense Minister Apel will therefore have a difficult position during his visit to Washington. Increased efforts are being asked of Bonn, particularly in the conventional field. This would necessitate "considerable sums of money." The more quickly agreement is reached on this issue, the easier it will be for talks on arms control to be held constructively.

An edited version of the interview was pre-released to DPA.

REPORT OF SCHMIDT MEDIATION ON JERUSALEM DENIED

LD231418 Hamburg DPA in German 1310 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Bonn/Jerusalem (DPA)--A Bonn government spokesman today described as unfounded speculation a report in the Israeli newspaper MA'ARIV to the effect that Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt intends to mediate between Saudi Arabia and Israel in the question of the status of Jerusalem. A Jerusalem Foreign Ministry spokesman said with reference to the report that the Federal Government had as yet made no contact with Israel in the sense of the report.

According to MA'ARIV, during recent talks with Saudi Arabian politicians, Schmidt said he is willing to mediate in particular on the question of Jerusalem. A precondition for this is a change of government in Israel and a new concept for the status of the holy places in Jerusalem's old city. The Saudis had "in principle reacted positively" and let it be understood that they are prepared to examine new Israeli proposals for resolving the Jerusalem problem, the paper stated.

BAHR ON NATO DECISION, U.S. THIRD WORLD POLICY

DW231300 Bonn ZDF Television Network in German 1815 GMT 22 Mar 81

[Reporter Keller interview with SPD Bundestag Deputy Egon Bahr on the program "Bonn Perspectives"--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Bahr, the foreign minister was applauded a few days ago by the SPD faction for his report on America. Is a change of opinion taking place in the faction toward a majority for the counterarmament decision?

[Answer] No, we do not need a change of opinion for that. The SPD faction discussed the security policy situation a few weeks ago and clearly supports NATO's dual decision--simply because this is the basis for negotiations. Without the dual decision, there will be no negotiations.

[Question] But there is also the moratorium suggested by Brezhnev, the suggestion that there be a pause. How would a vote in the faction turn out, a vote on this decision?

[Answer] There was no vote on that subject. The idea of a moratorium is not strange to the Social Democrats. At our 1977 Berlin party congress, we ourselves considered it possible to discuss a moratorium. But as the discussion has now developed, I believe it will not lead anywhere. I believe one must concentrate on beginning negotiations as soon as possible. No time must be lost with an exchange of statements. If they go together to negotiate on medium-range missiles, we shall see what suggestions West and East will make to facilitate the negotiations.

[Question] It has been stressed in Bonn over and over again how absolutely reliable we are toward our Western partner, toward the United States. Does that leave us any leeway with regard to Ostpolitik?

[Answer] I have no doubts. You see, what has been called detente policy or Ostpolitik has been achieved only together with the alliance and in the alliance. We cannot do anything without being in the closest of contact with our allies. The treaties exist, and I believe that positive developments can be achieved only together with the alliance and not against the alliance.

[Question] But there are new ideas in the United States, such as, for example, with regard to the Third World and naturally with regard to rearmament. Are you worried by that? Do you believe that we can really continue to be so absolutely reliable?

[Answer] Well, first of all, I believe that when the Federal Republic of Germany concludes a treaty, one must be able to rely on that. And if the Federal Republic of Germany gives its word, one must be able to rely on it. If we were to become unpredictable, the world would become even more dangerous.

Secondly, I do not share the U.S. policy toward the Third World as it has now emerged. Nobody forces us to have the same policy. I am against involving the Third World in East-West conflicts or alliance matters. In that case, we will just make a different policy than the Americans.

[Question] What should be the aims of the foreign minister when he goes to Moscow in a few days?

[Answer] I believe that the foreign minister will be in a better position in Moscow, better than many others, to outline and interpret the latest information, arguments and considerations after his talks with the Americans, French, British and Italians, namely, that we, the FRG--supported by others--want to have negotiations as quickly as possible. He will be able to contribute a bit toward preventing the situation from deteriorating any further.

[Question] Are you worried by the fact that we in the Federal Republic have at the moment an increasing neutrality discussion here, that it is being considered a possible solution?

[Answer] No, I see it, but I am not worried by it. I am firmly convinced that a wanderer between two worlds would end up having nothing. We are firmly involved in an alliance, and we will make progress only with the alliance, not without it.

FRANCOIS-PONCET COMMENTS ON TIES WITH SPAIN, EEC

[Feliciano Fidalgo dispatch: "Francois-Poncet: 'France Wants Stable and Democratic Spain'"]

[Text] Paris--French Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet said yesterday in remarks to radio Monte Carlo that "France wants a stable and democratic Spain." The minister answered several questions concerning French-Spanish relations, centering on the question of Spain's Common Market membership, the recent failed coup in Madrid and the Basque question.

Francois-Poncet first described France's position on Spain's EEC membership, stressing that "there has been no change of position. France has always stood firm on two principles: First, Spain has a place in the EEC, and as a Latin country, France is extremely keen that Spain join the Community to counterbalance the northern influence; second, France has always pointed out that Spain's membership must be accompanied by guarantees to safeguard France's interests, particularly with regard to the agriculture of southwest France."

The minister said that these French guarantees are parallel to those which Spain wants, "regarding the industrial and also the agricultural sectors," which will require time to be brought into line with the Community's requirements. Francois-Poncet was asked about the advisability of Spain's joining the EEC promptly to prevent "failed coups such as the one in February" and replied: "The best way to consolidate the young democracy lies in Spain's preparing itself agriculturally and industrially so as to be in a position to join the Common Market."

The minister referred to an article by a Spanish journalist which appeared recently in the French press. It sarcastically criticized the aloofness of French reaction to Spanish democracy's recent difficulties and questioned France's goodwill. Francois-Poncet recalled President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's action in support of King Juan Carlos, pointing out that the French president attended his coronation in Madrid and that on the night of 23 February, it was the king who saved Spain's freedoms.

He was also asked about the apparent lack of French-Spanish cooperation "in combating Basque terrorism." The French foreign minister stated categorically that "there is cooperation. France condemns terrorism. It is untrue that France allows terrorists to circulate freely on its territory." It should be pointed out that Radio Monte Carlo, though it has the status of a private concern, is virtually controlled by the French Government. Its director Michel Bassi is a Giscard d'Estaing protege.

MITTERRAND TV INTERVIEW REMARKS CRITICIZED

Giscard Spokesman

LD231102 Paris LE MONDE in French 19 Mar 81 p 8

[Report: "M. Lecat: You Do Not Win Votes by Weakening France's International Capability"]

[Text] Giscard d'Estaing's staff reacted very strongly on 17 March to the remarks made the previous evening by Mitterrand in the "Cards on the Table" program on channel 2.

Lecat, the candidate's spokesman, said he considered Mitterrand's criticisms to be "frivolous and unworthy." Lecat added: "To caricature the search for dialogue, seeing it as a systematic proof of weakness, is to indulge in demogoguery with respect to peace and war, that is, the life and death of French people... You do not win votes and you do not seek to gain votes by weakening France's international capability."

Lecat, who specified that he was speaking not as spokesman for the president of the republic but as the candidate's spokesman, said: "We have reached the first point in the election campaign when a serious incident has occurred: One of the candidates has made irresponsible remarks on a vital subject." According to him, it is an "attempt which, being aimed against a candidate for the presidency of the republic, was aimed against the very center of action of France's foreign policy."

"Let Him Retract His 'Payment Assertion'"

The PS, Lecat continued, "has fought for 20 years against France's defense policy, not only by not voting for the defense budgets but by fighting against it extremely aggressively by the attempt to dismantle national defense through use of soldiers committees, an attempt recently resumed a month ago by the PS." Judging that "there are subjects to raise controversies over and others where one does not have the right," Lecat then said: "Considering today's incident, he (Mitterrand) has an unexpected opportunity to say: 'I criticized the form but I cast no aspersions on the desire of the president of the republic, the constitutional president up to 17 May, and of the candidate Valery Giscard d'Estaing to defend France and to pay heed only to the national interest and not the interests of the election...' If he says this, the incident is closed: Let him retract his 'payment for Warsaw' assertion."

Questioned as to whether Giscard d'Estaing enjoys a "privileged domain" which the other candidates have no right to criticize, Lecat replied: "No, there is a republican tradition which is perfectly clear, which is that you do not involve national defense in your problems. Just refer to the French republican tradition for the past century... I do not think Francois Mitterrand's remarks are taken seriously in the Soviet Union. But just imagine if they were: That would mean that a doubt has been cast on France's defense capability and that if there was a serious crisis in Europe, it might be said: 'Well, after all, since Giscard wants above all to be reelected and is ready to sacrifice anything to be reelected, we can wipe France off the map of strategic forces in Europe.'"

Finally mentioning the presence of Soviet SS-20 missiles targeted on Europe--a subject raised by Mitterrand--Lecat said: "I cannot imagine that he (Mitterrand) turned up on the East German border in a false beard to go and see the launch pads.... It is obvious that all this business is perfectly well known to the French Government, the staffs and NATO and that it has been the subject of profound reflection for a long time. So it is an argument for show and is not serious."

Georges Marchais

LD231137 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 18 Mar 81 p 3

[Report: "No Blank Checks"]

[Text] In his speech in Bastia yesterday, Georges Marchais made the following comment about Francois Mitterrand's Monday evening television broadcast:

"One phrase recurs among the commentators: Francois Mitterrand emerged as a candidate of the 'center left,' in fact, a sort of Edgar Faure...

"As far as I am concerned, I would say that the Socialist candidate entirely failed to face up to the implementation of the real conditions for change. He devoted the bulk of his statement to dodging any commitment in the direction of union and change and multiplying his pledges to the right and to employers.

"Thus, Francois Mitterrand avoided giving any specific details with regard to satisfying the workers' demands. The struggle against unemployment? Raising low wages? Utter vagueness. Full employment is not one of his goals and he gave no figure for raising the guaranteed minimum wage. For him, wages should increase 'a little more, a little less, it doesn't matter much, we shall see when the time comes.' It will be up to the employers to decide by negotiating with the trade unions and taking the crisis into account. In any case, he makes it clear that negotiations should take place calmly. And he undertakes to prevent strikes and social conflicts.

"The 35-hour week? Francois Mitterrand declares himself to be in favor of it. On one condition--that it is done at a European level. As for wages indexation, we shall see: It will be decided "sector by sector or failing that enterprise by enterprise.' In fact, if Ceyrac [of the National Council of French Employers], Helmut Schmidt and Mrs Thatcher agree, we could satisfy the workers' demands....

"We find the same confusion when Francois Mitterrand touches on the question of the means of change. The Socialist candidate puts forward no precise measure, with figures, to question profits. The tax on capital is jettisoned. On the other hand, it is now specified that employers will receive even more public funds than they do now.

"As for foreign policy, the only thing Francois Mitterrand reproaches Giscard d'Estaing for is not being sufficiently anti-Soviet.

"Today Giscard d'Estaing's entire policy is helping to weaken France's influence and role in the world. He is aligning himself with Washington and Bonn, taking part in the dangerous arms race, accelerating European integration and advocating the expansion of the Common Market. That is not enough for Francois Mitterrand. To hear him talk, we should go more quickly and further. He took care not to say the words 'national independence.' He even extends this argument to the point of accusing the Soviet Union of having preferred Franco when we know the aid which that country rendered to the Spanish republicans at the time when Leon Blum was giving the fascists a free hand in the name of the 'nonintervention' policy.

"When we enumerate all these stands, we realize that Francois Mitterrand believes that the changing of society is nothing other than a 'refrain.' And since there is no question of real change, it is logical that he should not form an alliance with the men and women in favor of change as the Communists are. He asserted yesterday that he does not want Communist ministers. At the same time, he opened up once again the possibility of cooperating with the right.

"In fact, if we had to sum up in one phrase the Socialist candidate's performance, we would have to say that Francois Mitterrand engaged in manipulating evasiveness and vagueness with regard to everything relating to the country's major problems and our people's major aspirations and that he only grew clear and precise again when it was a case of saying no to an alliance with our party, to a left alliance and--as a commentator was saying this morning--'to make possible every combination.'

"All this is serious. We have reached the point where Francois Mitterrand is indubitably reiterating that he wants to beat Giscard d'Estaing, but when it is a case of going to the heart of the matter, he talks virtually the same language as Giscard d'Estaing and Chirac. Exactly like them, I repeat, he says no to Communist ministers; he refuses to satisfy the workers' demands; he demands further aid for employers; he advocates a policy of national surrender, of alignment with the United States and Germany. How could the workers fail to be on their guard or fail to reflect on the situation created by this orientation?"

On the basis of past experience, Georges Marchais described as "dangerous" the attitude of those who, "persisting in more or less hiding reality from themselves, say: Enough of Giscard; things can't be any worse; so, anything except him."

He mentioned that for their part, the Communists "do not resign themselves to the present situation. We are and we shall remain men and women of the union, the union of the popular forces, the left union for change. We have made this choice once and for all and it is irrevocable."

The Communist candidate concluded: "It is my duty to tell you: Do not give a blank check to a man who brings you no guarantee of the change you expect, for there is a danger that tomorrow the PS may be with the right in going further in implementing the policy the employers want."

PARIS SEES ETHIOPIAN BACKING FOR REGIONAL PARLEY

[Text] The suggestion made by Giscard d'Estaing in 1978 to hold a regional conference to settle the conflicts in the Horn of Africa is gaining support, Paris thinks, after Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Stirn's return from a visit to Addis Ababa and Djibouti.

Mr Stirn, who returned on the morning of Monday, 16 March, notably conveyed a message from Giscard d'Estaing to Ethiopian head of state Lieutenant Colonel Mengistu. "I believe the time has come to make every effort to convene a regional conference even if all the right conditions have not yet been established," Mr Stirn said before returning to France. "The countries in the region must be allowed to draw up the procedures."

This plan was the focal point of his talks. The participants ought to be the countries in the Horn of Africa: Ethiopia, Somalia, Djibouti, Sudan, Kenya and possibly the nearby countries of the Red Sea. The conference should, in any case, only be held if it has been well planned and if all the participants are determined to reach agreement, which only seems possible if the existing borders are not called into question. The Ethiopians apparently stressed that point.

The proposed regional conference is also the subject of the talks which Djibouti President Hassan Gouled--who will then visit Kenya and finally Somalia--is now having in Ethiopia.

The welcome which Mr Stirn was given--French circles think--reflects the Ethiopians' desire to open up to the West, French policy in Africa and the Indian Ocean drawing no public criticism in Ethiopia. The conditions in which Djibouti gained independence and the decision to keep 3,500 French soldiers there, in fact, seem to be appreciated.

Mr Stirn indicated to the Ethiopian leaders that France is prepared to extend cooperation and to grant favorable loans for restoring the Addis Ababa-Djibouti railroad and for the supply of various other equipment. He announced that 1,000 tons of grain is to be sent as well as a Fr100,000 donation to contribute to the fight against illiteracy [apparent line drop] for the reopening of the Paris-Addis Ababa airline.

L'HUMANITE CRITICIZES COVERAGE OF PRAVDA ARTICLE

[Bernard Frederick article: "G. Marchais the Target"]

[Text] There are three clear points about the press campaign launched Friday by a LE MONDE article and headline, according to which the USSR has made a "generally positive assessment" of Giscard d'Estaing's action.

The first is that it is untrue. Georges Marchais and L'HUMANITE announced this on Saturday morning. On Saturday afternoon, LE MONDE acknowledged its "very unfortunate error." The second is that it is an anticommunist operation--yet another: "What is its aim?" Roland Leroy wrote in a L'HUMANITE-DIMANCHE editorial: "To deal blows to the Communist candidate.... Georges Marchais--and he alone--is the target." The third is that it is a "coup"--organized by the PS and the right. A scanning of the weekend press and statements by Socialist leaders or rightwingers highlight all this.

The Lie

First, the lie. It was a simple matter to consult the PRAVDA article. It contained no "generally positive assessment." So much for the sacrosanct ethics whereby a journalist must "check his sources" before publishing. The expression "positive assessment" was taken up on Saturday by Anita Hauser on Radio Luxembourg (at 1300--1 hour before the LE MONDE article, acknowledging its "mistake.") LE QUOTIDIEN proclaimed right across its front page that "Brezhnev Votes Giscard" and spoke of the Soviet daily's "great praise" for the Elysee Palace. LE MATIN published the headline "Brezhnev Giscard" across five columns, explaining that the CPSU wanted to "try to improve the majority candidate's chances." In the opinion of LA CROIX, there was "no doubt that the best French presidential candidate ('according to PRAVDA') is President Giscard d'Estaing." LE FIGARO-L'AURORE found "Moscow In Favor of Giscard's Reelection."

The radio and television did not lag behind: On Radio Luxembourg, Philippe Alexandre spoke of a PRAVDA article "officially and loudly urging the reelection" of Valery Giscard d'Estaing. Europe 1 or VOA announced that "Moscow's choice" was "unambiguous" and that the Soviets were "very clearly praising" the head of state. On French television channel 1, J. Lenoir also tried to convince viewers that the Soviet Union was adopting "a clear stance in favor of Giscard d'Estaing.

Anticommunist Operation

What was the aim of such insistence and coordination? On Saturday LE MATIN unwittingly revealed the objective of the latest Russian campaign: "Since," the editorial states, "Leonid Brezhnev wishes for Valery Giscard d'Estaing's success, how could Georges Marchais support the election of another candidate?" The same message came from Michele Cotta on Radio Luxembourg the same day: "This move by PRAVDA could make it difficult for Georges Marchais to portray himself as the most anti-Giscard candidate." Always on the lookout for a "PCF crisis," Philippe Tesson announced in LE QUOTIDIEN "new difficulties for the Communist Party." Last, LE MONDE, which set the ball rolling Friday, published an editorial on Saturday, which reads: "How can one believe that Mr Marchais is the sole 'anti-Giscard' candidate that he pretends to be?" Thus, by a clever trick, we are shown Mitterrand innocent of any blame for the failure--or failures--of the people's movement and the only truly "anti-Giscard" candidate. And so too, thanks to a lie, we see Giscard alone with the Socialist candidate whom he chose.

But in revealing their objectives, LE MATIN, LE MONDE and Giscard's media at the same time point to the instigators of this pitiful maneuver: the PS and the government. The Elysee Palace donated its radio and television services, which relayed the lie to millions of homes in an attempt to draw some kind of benefit from the implicit message: We told you that the president is "somebody"; even the Russians say so.... and to dodge the issue of the meeting with Schmidt, the foreign minister's recent Washington visit and the alignment with Reagan's stances, whether on El Salvador or on the deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe. And to ignore Leonid Brezhnev's assessment at the 26th CPSU Congress of French policy and detente, published by L'HUMANITE-DIMANCHE: "Although we do not agree with everything that France does on the international plane, our relations remain an important factor of detente and we are in favor of their dynamic developments.

As for the PS, it carefully planned the operation. Several days ago, Jean Poperen published a pamphlet containing the following headline: Brezhnev Votes Giscard." The dispatch from PRAVDA's correspondent in France had not yet appeared.... But as soon as LE MONDE published its account of the dispatch, Beregovoy rushed to the microphone to denounce the "interference." Michel Crepau of the Left Radical Movement followed in his footsteps.

Yesterday, Mitterrand's spokesman Mauroy claimed that "the Soviet leaders prefer the unemployment candidate" and spoke of a "decision from abroad." This is, to say the least, a rash statement for a party belonging to the Socialist International, which also embraces a Schmidt who is "Giscard's friend" and a Brandt who "votes Mitterrand."

PERTINI INTERVIEWED ON UPCOMING TRIP TO MEXICO

FL202251 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2206 GMT 20 Mar 81

[By Walter Machado]

[Text] Rome, 20 Mar (NOTIMEX)--For me personally, Mexico is the most important nation of Latin America. I am going to meet President Jose Lopez Portillo, to meet--something I want to do very much--the Mexican people and to meet particularly the youth of that country. I am going to walk the Mexican streets, Italian President Alessandro Pertini declared here today. Pertini begins an official visit to that Latin American nation next week.

Speaking at the Quirinale Presidential Palace this afternoon with a very small number of Mexican journalists, including this NOTIMEX correspondent, the Italian president discussed extensively this, his first trip to Latin America. He especially emphasized that he has wanted to visit Mexico since long ago and stressed the fact that Mexican soil will be the first he will be visiting in Latin America. Pertini leaves here on Wednesday and will arrive in Mexico on Thursday, 26 March.

With his usual simplicity and sincerity, the veteran antifascist resistance leader, political leader and extremely popular ruler answered many questions, evaded others and made categoric statements on fundamental topics. Pertini repeatedly expressed his determination to go to Mexico with a friendly and fraternal feeling and for the purpose of learning the situation [presumably in Mexico] and establishing increasingly more solid relations between the two countries.

We want to strengthen our relations with Mexico so that they become increasingly closer and more cordial and always more open and friendly, the president said. He added that there is interest in Italy in providing industrial technology and sending technicians and in receiving raw materials from Mexico, thereby establishing, or better said, strengthening our technical-industrial exchange and particularly cultural exchange.

He explained, however, that: I am not going to buy oil. The experts and representatives of the Italian Government will deal with that. In any case, my only task will be to pave the way for such discussions.

During the lengthy dialogue with the Mexican journalists, President Pertini repeatedly referred to one of his greatest concerns; world peace, general disarmament and the struggle against poverty in the world.

He evaded answering questions concerned with the policies of U.S. President Ronald Reagan. You should ask him these questions, (?he said). He discussed matters concerned with terrorism in Italy and spoke of the situation in the Mediterranean. He denied that what recently happened in Spain--a coup d'etat attempt--could happen in Italy. Pertini focused warmly on the subject of his close ties with the youth and talked of his friendship with Pope John Paul II.

More From Interview

FL211739 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 0231 GMT 21 Mar 81

[By Walter Machado]

[Excerpts] Roma, 20 Mar (NOTIMEX)--Resumption of the North-South dialog is a topic which the Italian president will surely discuss with the Mexican officials. However, at this time he ducks the newsmen's questions on it. He says: The world has become small. It is not what we thought it was in the past, that there were enormous distances between the north and south. It is a small world, he repeats. Without interruption, as if this topic was tied to the previous one, he adds: If due to some damned reason world war III breaks out tomorrow, even those countries which do not participate in it will be involved. We will be blown up.

Not allowing anyone to interrupt him, he goes on: That is why I am an ardent supporter of supervised total disarmament. If all the money used to produce nuclear bombs was devoted to combat hunger in the world, it would be a really useful humanitarian project. As we chat here now, there are millions and millions of human beings struggling against hunger. Some 18 million children died of hunger in 1979. This slaughter of innocents should weigh as a sentence on the conscience of all chiefs of state in the world, thus on mine too.

He appears to be almost obsessed by the topic. My most immediate aspiration is the consolidation of peace. There should be no more talk about war. I have participated in two world wars. War is a horrendous monster. It does not solve problems. It creates problems. It creates tragedies of innocents. It creates ruins. It makes the peoples regress. War is an act of barbarians that must be eliminated by mankind.

The interview has concluded. The president of the Italians, doubtlessly the statesman most admired, respected and loved by his people, says that the recipe for remaining young like him is to have a clear conscience. While calling for his aides, whom he had asked to leave the room when the interview began, he mentions his friendship with the Pope. He says he met with the Pope for 4 hours. We asked if they had agreed on all topics they had discussed. No, he says, men should never be in agreement in everything, to have one way of thinking. If there were only one way of thinking, there would be no democracy, he responds. Did any one of you convince the other? we asked. Neither one tried to convince the other. He is a religious man, I am a socialist. He respects my position of non-believer. I respect his position as head of the church. But there are many more things in which we agree.

We stand up to leave. We shake hands, the hand that millions of Mexicans will be able to shake in just a few days.

PCI'S BERLINGUER OUTLINES SOCIAL, POLITICAL ISSUES

LD231033 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 18 Mar 81 pp 1, 7

[Giorgio Frasca Polara report: "Berlinguer Speaks on Television About Social Issues (Pensions, Housing, Trade Unions) and Political and Institutional Crisis"]

[Excerpts] Rome--The most important and pressing topics of domestic and foreign policy (ranging from the problem of governability to relations with the USSR, from strike legislation to Eurocommunism and from relations with the Socialists to the tragic pensions and housing situation) were broached during yesterday evening's televised press conference with [PCI Secretary General] Enrico Berlinguer.

The discussion began at once with journalists representing six [as published] Italian newspapers and one FRG newspaper: GIORNALE NUOVO, IL MESSAGGERO, IL GIORNO, LA NAZIONE, L'OCCHIO, L'UNIONE SARDA, CORRIERE D'INFORMAZIONE, Frankfurter ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG.

International Scene

The first question concerned the issue of the new missiles, the proposed moratorium put forward by Brezhnev and the PCI's assessment of it, which supposedly conflicts with the Italian Communists' professed "autonomy from Moscow." Berlinguer recalled the terms of the proposal made by the PCI when the question of manufacturing and deploying the new U.S. missiles in Western Europe arose: A request for the USSR to suspend manufacture and deployment of the SS-20s, a similar request regarding the cruise and Pershing missiles and an immediate start to negotiations.

"At the time the proposal was not taken up by the Italian Government or by the USSR Government, though it did arouse considerable interest in West European political circles, especially among the Social Democratic parties. We now note with satisfaction that Brezhnev has made a proposal similar to ours."

As far as the PCI's autonomy is concerned, there is absolutely no need to request certificates from other parties. "From whom should we ask for them?" Berlinguer asked. "From the DC, which has always agreed with the United States, from the attack on Vietnam to the support for the reactionary Salvadoran junta, or from the other ruling parties, which are vying with each other for the Reagan administration's sympathies? We have most clearly demonstrated our autonomy by adopting freely determined stances, which have often caused us to disagree with the United States or the USSR."

[Question] But is Eurocommunism not in a state of crisis?

[Answer] I really do not believe so. It would be the case if it were regarded as a coalition or even as some kind of organization of communist parties. But if you regard Eurocommunism as a combination of ideas, these ideas extend and penetrate deeply even beyond our continent. In some Latin American countries, for instance, the combination of ideas which constitute Eurocommunism are the subject of broad debate. Of course, some people believe that Eurocommunism should be exorcised and that the PCI can be to some extent restricted in its capacity to extend its own ideological heritage. This could be one of the reasons why permission to speak from the CPSU Congress platform was not given to Comrade Pajetta, who worthily represented our party--an error which, above all, further highlighted our presence and our stances.

Governability

One journalist asked: Why did you give such a lukewarm reception to [PSI Secretary] Craxi's proposals of a grand reform? "The principal problem in Italian politics is not constitutional reforms. Indeed, to make them the principal issue could constitute a diversion from the fundamental problem, which is the inability to govern properly--that is to make decisions, to indicate objectives and to provide specific reference points for economic activity and social life." "This is the real problem," Berlinguer stressed, "and it cannot be escaped." This does not mean that there are not some contexts in which constitutional reforms can be carried out. For instance, Berlinguer declared himself personally in favor of a unicameral system and a reduction in the number of deputies: "This would greatly simplify parliamentary and legislative activity," he said. Berlinguer expressed his clear opposition to other of Craxi's proposals; for instance, the one to effectively restrict the independence of the public prosecutors and to subordinate them to political authority.

But the PCI secretary general stressed above all the basic importance of other issues not even mentioned by Craxi: the occupation of the state by the governing parties ("a phenomenon that negates the correct functioning of the institutions") through the distribution of posts and state agencies; and the establishment of a kind of steering committee, composed of secretaries of the four ruling parties, over the government and Parliament. "These are the reasons for our lack of enthusiasm and mistrust."

Relations With PSI

This led naturally to the issue of PCI-PSI relations, which was raised by a journalist who asked what the Communists intend to do to improve them and whether perhaps these difficulties are influenced by "the personal incompatibilities that are said to exist between Berlinguer and Craxi." "Our personal characters, though undoubtedly different, are irrelevant," he replied. "In any case, PCI and PSI secretaries have always had profoundly differing characters, but this has not prevented periods of good cooperation between the parties." What is important, however, is "the variance in political blueprints". "I am not sure," Berlinguer observed, "what the PSI's political blueprint is; but really it seems to me that the party's leaders want to continue cooperating with the DC in a subordinate role, though I do not know for how long. On the other hand, we want to work to create an alternative to the power system based on the DC's domination as soon as possible.

Obviously, this difference over political blueprints leads to a debate that is sometimes rather lively. But we must all work to ensure that this debate does not become embittered and that there is calm discussion." The conditions for so doing do exist: "There is a substantial unitary fabric of cooperation between Communists and Socialists in the trade union movement, in other mass organizations and in the local administrations and several regional governments. This is a basis for calmly conducting this discussion, which," Berlinguer warned, however, "must not be confined solely to exchanges of diplomatic remarks and courtesies."

PAJETTA ADDRESSES MILAN PARTY ON CPSU CONGRESS

LD231147 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 18 Mar 81 p 7

[Dino Landi Report: "Pajetta in Milan: 'Plain Words Earn More Respect'"; date not given]

[Text] Following the meeting in Bologna--a major demonstration for peace--it was Milan's turn, when [PCI International Affairs Department Chief] Gian Carlo Pajetta attended a Communist "aktiv" meeting on the international situation. This was a further opportunity, therefore, to "sound out the feelings" of the party following Moscow. The attendance exceeded all expectations: not only was the Gramsci Hall full to bursting, but so too were all the other halls and rooms at the PCI Federation headquarters in Via Volturno. A public address system enabled even those furthest away to hear.

The Moscow incident--"was it a snub?" Pajetta asked; "It was above all a political error on the Soviets' part: they only harmed themselves"--prompted the Milan Communists' interest, and the evening showed that there is a desire (and need) to talk about it.

Very well, but how is it possible to discuss something with thousands of people? So, after Pajetta's speech--which briefly summarized the picture of the international situation, partly but not only as regards PCI-CPSU relations--15 comrades came to the microphone to put questions to him. But there could not be a real debate. Of course, the questions did hint at the feelings and opinions of certain sectors of the party; "We should have spoken from the congress platform in Moscow!" Comrade Guadagnola exclaimed, and Comrade Freddi asked why "so much polemic with the USSR and so little with China" (applause). There was significant applause too when Pajetta recounted Berlinguer's visit to China. One U.S. journalist asked Berlinguer: "What are the differences between yourselves and the Chinese, which you talk about so much?" The PCI secretary general's reply was: "The first difference is that the Chinese consider the USSR an enemy, and we do not."

Nevertheless, it would be arbitrary as well as rather futile to draw distinctions among the party's various attitudes or to seek "Kabulites" at home. "We are initiating a debate," Pajetta said, "not so as to split communists into those who have the right attitude and those who as yet do not." It is a matter of debating major issues--war and peace, no less. This is why we are sounding the alarm throughout the country, with the authority earned by being a party that never omits to say what it believes. Partly because, as we demonstrated at the CPSU Congress, we know "that one compliment fewer will earn less applause, but one truth more will earn even more esteem and respect in Italy and throughout the world." Pajetta declared himself convinced that no speech in Moscow gained more attention than the one which the 5,000 CPSU Congress delegates were unable to hear and had to read in PRAVDA.

But of course the Soviet Communists' congress extended beyond the issue of PCI-CPSU relations. It broached problems crucial to world peace. Why, Pajetta asked, has this part of the congress been covered by a pall of silence by a sector of the Italian press, among others? Is Brezhnev's proposal of a moratorium on missiles in Europe (a proposal that has similarities with the one put forward by the PCI some time ago) unimportant, perhaps?

And does not the issue of the confidence-building measures (mutual information concerning armaments and troops) proposed by the CPSU first secretary, to China, among others, not set relations between the USSR and the vast Chinese state in a new context? These are initiatives that can impart a new thrust to the detente policy at the very moment when, thanks to Reagan's actions in Latin America and elsewhere, a very delicate world balance seems to be at breaking point. President Pertini did well, the Communist leader said, "to stress the Italian people's concern" at Reagan's "provocative" initiatives regarding El Salvador, among others.

In Europe today, we are witnessing U.S. pressure to persuade Spain to joint NATO. If the removal of a country such as Italy from NATO would be a factor of imbalance, Spain's insertion into the Atlantic organization would also break that balance.

We need unity on peace issues--not only among those who want "to combat the bosses" (as Comrade Premoli said)--because the communists alone cannot impose detente in the face of imperialism. This is why we need to debate--so as to be able to persuade others and to bear comparison with other proposals. This is the significance of our party's intensive international activity in so many of the world's countries--the visits, the meetings, the delegations. ("So much for being isolated Eurocommunists, as some people portray us," Pajetta exclaimed).

Is there a discrepancy between the decisions of the PCI leadership group and what the party as a whole "feels" (as Comrade Corritore suggested)? Let us see, Pajetta said: We "do not recommend democracy only for others, for export." But while it is true that "there is nothing wrong in donating a portrait of Lenin to the CPSU Congress" (as some comrades from Paderno Dugnano did), it is not this which lends the party more weight." "What we need is a commitment from all communists to specifically implement a policy of peace and cooperation among the peoples."

PAOLO BUFALINI SPEAKS ON PCI FOREIGN POLICY

LD231123 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 19 Mar 81 p 17

[Gabriella Mecucci report: "Bufalini Answers Questions on PCI Policy in Perugia"; date not given]

[Excerpt] Perugia--Whether because of the strong tradition of antiwar marches or the presence of thousands of foreign students, Perugia, although a small city, always has an open "window on the world." When the opportunity arose to discuss PCI foreign policy with [PCI Directorate member] Paolo Bufalini, who has recently returned from Moscow, success and attendance were guaranteed. The debate lasted 3 hours; many questions were asked and the audience was both large and varied. There were elderly party members, foreign students, women who joined the 8 March march, members of the Italian Communist Youth Federation and many university teachers. Nobody missed the opportunity to ask questions about the significance of the Reagan line, the CPSU Congress, Brezhnev's proposals, Poland, Afghanistan and all the burning issues of the international situation.

A middle-aged gentleman, a DC member of long standing, asked: "The Soviets have many more weapons than the Americans and there is no parity between the blocs, so in this situation what is the point of Brezhnev's proposal of ending the arms race?"

Bufalini replied as follows: "There are very different assessments regarding the quantity of weapons available to the two superpowers. Some say that the United States is in front, while others swear that the USSR is definitely in the lead. As far as I am concerned, I do not much believe in the figures supplied by the chiefs of staff.

"But I do believe that the need is not so much to attempt an impossible computation, but to opt for the negotiation and moratorium path, or at least the quest for agreements aimed at halting the arms race. This is the proposal that Brezhnev put forward at the CPSU Congress and it is a proposal which embraces suggestions which our own party made in the past, even before NATO's decision on the Euromissiles."

A young Palestinian stood up and said in somewhat labored Italian: "You claim to be opposed to bipolarism and talk in terms of a multipolarism which seems to me to be more hypothetical than real. By so doing are you not perhaps playing into the United States' hands?" Shortly before that an elderly comrade asked somewhat polemically: "Do you not think, Mr Bufalini, that the party sometimes places U.S. imperialism on the same level as the Soviet Union?"

Bufalini replied as follows: "We do not in the least deny the need for dialogue and agreement between the two major world powers and the two major blocs--indeed, we enthusiastically encourage it as a fundamental need for safeguarding peace and detente. In fact, in the recent past there has been more unipolarism than bipolarism. Indeed, the U.S.-USSR dialogue has been interrupted and only Brezhnev's very initiatives, which we assess positively, are aimed at reopening it. It is undeniable, however, that bipolarism has accumulated negative aspects in the past. We are opposed to a division of the world that maintains the status quo and reduces the influence and importance of autonomous initiatives taken by certain European countries. Unfortunately, this does not apply to the Italian Government, but we must not forget the significant stances adopted by the FRG, France, The Netherlands and even Belgium. Plus there is the entire Nonaligned Movement, which has a very important role, and finally the various people's liberation movements.

"As for placing the United States and the USSR on the same level," Bufalini continued, "I do not believe that this assessment reflects the truth. As we very well know, imperialism is a power policy aimed at exploiting the peoples. The Soviets, however, certainly do not deprive countries that have liberated themselves from the colonial yoke of their resources; if anything, they send them specific aid for their development. This does not alter the fact that the rivalry between the major powers and blocs is in itself a source of conflicts and serious threats to peace."

In his introduction Bufalini made a lengthy analysis of present U.S. policy: "The Reagan line," he said, "is worrying and dangerous. The U.S. President has begun a campaign against the liberation movements, which are all labeled terrorist, and apart from the rearmament race he has threatened to intervene in El Salvador and to send military aid to the Afghan guerrillas and various African reactionary movements.

"Fortunately," he added, "this line has in fact not been welcomed by several major allies. Brezhnev, on the other hand, has responded by issuing a number of peace proposals, which we consider positive--not only because of the proposal to resume the dialogue and halt the arms race but also because the report to the 26th CPSU Congress contains more specific pointers in the direction of detente."

Bufalini listed them as follows: Certain innovations regarding relations with the Chinese, the acknowledgement of national paths to socialism, the request for negotiations on Afghanistan among all the countries concerned.

This led to another very interesting topic of debate. Questions were asked about Afghanistan, then Poland, then many other individual issues, from the Iran-Iraq war to the assessment of the Iranian revolution and the Ethiopian question. Bufalini repeated the opinions already expressed, stressing both the points of convergence and the differences and divergencies between our party and the CPSU.

There was another major question, never asked explicitly, but implicit in many of the other questions: Does the PCI want to detach itself definitively from the CPSU? Bufalini earned applause when he said: "Autonomy does not in the least imply a rupture. We will always frankly state our opinions and will continue to express all our disagreements, but irrespective of appearances, there are now important points of contact between Brezhnev's latest proposals and the PCI's foreign policy line. Some people are demanding that we break away and claim that only after we have taken such a step will we be granted 'authorization' as democrats and a 'permit' to enter the government. But the PCI does not need such authorizations and is not so naive as to fail to understand that it is for very different reasons that some people do not want the PCI to participate in the country's government. We are motivated not by the desire for ruptures, but rather by the desire to find paths that will facilitate mutual understanding with a force such as the USSR and with all the forces throughout the world working for peace and international cooperation."

KING PLANS MEETING WITH ARMED FORCES PLENUM

[Excerpts] The Information and Public Relations Office at the Defense Ministry issued a communique at midday today, saying that tomorrow, 24 March, at 1230 in the Royal Palace, His Majesty the King will meet the plenum of the supreme councils of the three branches of the armed forces. His Majesty will be accompanied at the meeting by the prime minister and the minister of defense, the note concludes.

While the note gives nodetails, informed sources believe that the subjects discussed at the meeting will concern the latest events affecting the military which have culminated in the murder of two lieutenant colonels in Bilbao and Pamplona.

The plenum of the armed forces supreme councils does not have the status of being a body and thus has no specific decisionmaking capacity,although its advisory function is considered the highest that can be given in matters affecting the armed forces as a whole.

The supreme councils of the army, navy and air force are headed by the chiefs of staff of each of the respective armed forces, that is, Lieutenant General Gabeiras Montero of the army, Admiral Arevalo Pelluz for the navy and Lt Gen Jose Emiliano Alfaro Arregui for the air force. The committees are advisory bodies at the Ministry of Defense and among their functions is the task of submitting reports on those questions being considered by the minister.

GOVERNMENT ISSUES 'OFFICIAL NOTE' ON TERRORISM

LD232020 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Pedro Fernandez Cespedes report from Moncloa Palace]

[Excerpt] The prime minister's meeting with the ministers of foreign affairs, the prime minister's office, justice, defense, the interior and territorial administration ended at around 1930. The purpose of the meeting was to assess the present escalation of terrorism and take appropriate measures. So we can now read for you the official note issued by the Secretariat of State for Information, the text of which is as follows:

To these ends, the following points have been agreed:

1. The armed forces will for the period of time the government deems necessary collaborate with the forces and bodies of state security in stepping up vigilance at maritime borders, and international borders in those areas most affected by terrorism.

2. A single command will be set up for the struggle against terrorism; this is to be based at the Interior Ministry and the appropriate military services will collaborate in this.

3. Legal controls over the movement of persons and goods at prescribed border posts will be reinforced.

4. In the areas referred to, manpower in the forces and bodies of state security will be increased by transferring men from security duties at airports and military production centers in other parts of the country.

5. The Congress of Deputies will be asked immediately to implement procedures of high urgency and priority to deal with the draft law on the reform of certain articles of the penal code dealing with the offenses of rebellion and terrorism, and also to deal with the bill relating to the states of alert, emergency, and siege.

EMERGENCY STATE IN BASQUE COUNTRY DENIED

LD231406 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Text] Sources at the Interior Ministry have said that the government has not specifically considered the possibility of declaring a state of emergency in the Basque country as has been rumored since last Saturday.

CATALAN PARTY EXECUTIVE ISSUES COMMUNIQUE

LD230911 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 17 Mar 81 p 14

[Text] Following an extremely lengthy meeting the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] Executive Committee last night issued an assessment of Saturday's incidents at a meeting presided over by Santiago Carrillo. The statement condemns the manifestations of a division on the part of some of those present and gives priority to safeguarding unity.

In its communique, the PSUC Executive Committee also points out that both the holding of the 14 March meeting and the speakers "were unanimously approved by the Central Committee." The text of the resolution is as follows:

"1--The Executive Committee issues a positive assessment of the holding of the meeting and the attendance, as a political explanation with respect to the serious problems posed to the country by the attempted coup d'etat. This first large-scale rally in Catalonia since 23 February must be followed by further explanatory meetings throughout Catalonia.

"2--It expresses its disapproval and condemnation of the expressions of a division on the part of some of those present during the speech by PCE Secretary General Comrade Santiago Carrillo, in which he was explaining PCE policy, which basically coincides with the policy approved by the PSUC leadership bodies. The Executive Committee believes that they are antidemocratic and incompatible with rigorous collective conduct and debate among Communists both within the PSUC and between it and the PCE. Moreover, such attitudes impede the dissemination and acceptance of the substance of our policy among the workers and the people's sectors. At the same time stubborn and obstinate stances are helping to impede and obscure the debate within the party as a whole. The Executive Committee therefore urges all members and organizations to fulfill current political requirements, to involve themselves in the debate and to give priority to safeguarding party unity on the basis of democratic conduct and collective and nonexclusionist work.

"3--The Executive Committee will hold talks with the PCE leadership, in accordance with the Central Committee's decisions and with PSUC policy. The Executive Committee proposes that these talks take place in a comradely and fraternal atmosphere, as befits relations among communists, the requirements of the present political situation and the objective of a joint policy and action among communists throughout Spain at the service of the working class.

"4--It is on this basis that the Executive Committee considers contrary to these objectives and forms of work any attempt to manipulate the policy approved at the fifth congress or the PSUC's internal debate to use it as a weapon for a confrontation with the PCE or its leadership.

"5--The Executive Committee expresses its most steadfast determination to implement, and to ensure that the entire party implements, the decisions of the leadership bodies. In this connection it will take the necessary action to determine the responsibility of certain members and organizations in what it regards as a serious failure to observe the guidelines issued by the Executive Committee concerning preparations for and the conduct of the meeting."

SKP'S AALTO RELIEVED OF LABOR MINISTER'S POST

LD201546 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 20 Mar 81

[Text] The president of the republic today relieved Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Secretary General Arvo Aalto, from membership in the Council of State and from the duties as minister of labor at his own request. At the same time the president appointed director Jouko Kajanoja to become member of the Council of State and new minister of labor.

In accordance with a decision made by the SKP Politburo last Wednesday, Aalto will return to the duties as secretary general of the party. Shortly before his resignation, Aalto stressed that the Communists and People's Democrats cannot accept the legislation contained in the Kekkonen solution [overall incomes settlement agreement] in an unaltered form. Aalto estimated that the leadership of the Social Democratic Party has now turned the incomes solution into a prestige question. However, the Finnish People's Democratic League wants to hold talks on Tuesday without preconditions.

NORWAY

FOREIGN MINISTER ON SOUTH AFRICA TIES, USSR, NATO

LD231059 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 19 Mar 81 p 3

[Excerpt] In his resort to the Storting the foreign minister stressed that a unilateral Norwegian boycott [of South Africa] would not have the intended effects but would only damage Norwegian industry. The disappearance of imports from South Africa of manganese and manganese ore would create significant problems for the Norwegian ferroalloy industry. In addition, South Africa's ports are of great importance to Norwegian shipping, as far as bunkering, taking on supplies and changing crews are concerned. There are today no alternatives to the South African ports in southern Africa, the foreign minister pointed out.

As far as relations with the Soviet Union are concerned, Foreign Minister Frydenlund pointed out that both Party Secretary Leonid Brezhnev's letter to the Norwegian Goverment and his speech to the party congress in Moscow recently, indicate that Moscow now wants to come out of the international isolation which it has found itself in since the invasion of Afghanistan. The Soviet Union obviously wants to recapture the diplomatic initiative and be recognized as the United States' equal; a position the Soviet Union considered it had reached during the Nixon administration, the foreign minister pointed out.

Foreign Minister Frydenlund also said that developments in Poland will have a decisive effect on future trends in Europe, on relations between East and West and on relations between the superpowers.

"In this situation it is of fundamental importance that the Poles are given the opportunity to solve their own problems themselves, without interference from outside," Foreign Minister Frydenlund said.

Of the situation in El Salvador, the foreign minister said that the social problems and those problems relating to justice in the country cannot be solved through the use of military force and that they must be solved without interference from outside. The foreign minister also gave a clear indication that Norway does not want any extension of the NATO area of responsibility, for example toward protecting oil supplies from the Persian Gulf, which various sources have advocated.

FOOT CRITICIZES U.S. ON EL SALVADOR, REARMAMENT

LD240653 London BBC Television Network in English 2010 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Michael Foot, leader of the Labour Party, interviewed by David Dimbleby on the "Panorama" program--live]

[Excerpt] [Question] Well now, with me for the second half of this program is Michael Foot, the leader of the Labour Party in what is a difficult week for him when the Social Democratic Party is about to be formed, when his own party is doing badly in the polls, as badly perhaps as any opposition party since the war. We are going to be talking about that, but first I want to talk to him about defense and foreign affairs and in particular about El Salvador. Mr Foot, you have been very scathing about America's role; now you have talked about them propping up an offensive dictatorship. What is it you think the United States should actually do? Is it to withdraw their support from the junta altogether?

[Answer] Well, I think it is wrong as well as evil that they should support the junta as it appears they are doing from that film [shown during preceding part of "Panorama" program], a very fair film I would have thought from the impression that it gives. And by the same reckoning, I think it is wrong as well as evil that Mrs Thatcher should go across the Atlantic and give almost holus-bolus endorsement to an American Government engaged in such an operation. But in direct answer to your question of what I would like them to do, what I think should happen is an attempt at mediation and there are a number of people who have suggested some form of mediation and it has been from this side of the Atlantic and that side of the Atlantic, and I believe a British Government would be much better engaged in trying to persuade the Americans to move to that course than to back them in what is a shameful course.

[Question] You say in startling words that it was wrong and evil of Mrs Thatcher to go across the United States and give the kind of support that she did. Do you accept that there is any sense in which the Americans might justifiably fear the encroachment of communism...

[Answer] Well, I think that account that was given in that program of the people who saw some domino theory was at work in South America--I think that is an absurdity. I think it was wrong even in the case of Vietnam as it turned out, but that was maybe a plausible case. I think it is completely implausible to talk of the whole of Central America falling to this kind of thing. Moreover, I think that the Americans--it is not only El Salvador. Another evil that I think is taking place is the American support of the Pinochet regime in Chile, and I see they refer to that in the program as if it was a watertight case that they should support it. What the Americans are supporting in Chile, and what I am sorry to say, ashamed to say, the British Government is now supporting, is a shameful, shocking dictatorship in Chile much like the regime that the Americans are seeking to sustain in El Salvador and in my opinion it is going to do grievous injury to the free world if we do not speak out on these matters. I am very glad that the British Labour Party has spoken out, and we have had actually quite close associations with many of those who are fighting in El Salvador. Over the years, the International--the Labour Party international and the International--we have had associations with them, as indeed, when we were the government, we stopped sending any arms to El Salvador. We did that not only on the plea of our own fellow socialists, we did it also on the plea of the Roman Catholic Church who sent their emissaries to us. And I believe that anyone who thinks that the Americans are engaged in a wise course there should read, for example, the article by Connor Cruise O'Brien on Sunday in which he says if the Americans really want to oppose terrorism--which is what they say--international terrorism, they should stop supporting it in El Salvador.

[Question] Well, you talk about the wisdom of American policy there. Could we just look for a moment to the slightly wider canvas because there does seem to be in the United States a growing concern at the position on a number of matters, particularly on defense and nuclear disarmament, of the Labour Party and a fear that if the Labour Party comes to power again, there will be, using President Reagan's national security adviser's words at the weekend, outright pacifist sentiments. Labour's plan to renounce nuclear weapons is an example. Commonsense as well as the long history of arms negotiations with the Soviet Union tell us this is illusory. Now, is there a danger that a Labour government in Britain, if one were to be elected, and the present American administration would actually be going so far apart that it would do real damage to the Atlantic alliance.

[Answer] Well, I think if the Americans continue along some of the courses that some of them are suggesting then I think there would be a departure of one side from the other, but I think that can be avoided as for Mr Allen and what he said, well sometimes in these last few weeks statements by some spokesman on American foreign policy have been withdrawn a day or so later and maybe this will happen in the case of Mr Allen, just as this has happened in some other cases. I do not think that the present American Government is yet very certain on some of these questions.

[Question] Some people would, I think say the same about you and the Labour Party, that it is equally confusing where you stand.

[Answer] I understand, I understand the question, and I understand it is a perfectly proper one.

What we are concerned in the Labour Party, I think left, right and center, whatever you may call us, whatever labels, we are all deeply concerned about the terrible intensification of the arms race, and the nuclear arms race that has taken place in the past recent months in the last year or so, and we believe that superhuman efforts must now be made to stop it. It so happened I went this last weekend to a meeting of international socialists in Paris and there were variations of view amongst different parties representing different countries in Europe, but there is not the slightest doubt about their common desire to try and get proper international disarmament discussions going. That is our paramount aim. And there may be arguments as to how best we proceed in that way. And some of us think that it is very wrong to think that the way to get disarmament is to embark on a great new round of rearmament. But apparently in the United States, there are some people who think that is the way to go about it.

[Question] Can I just stop you there and take you through one or two of the particular decisions that you would have to face were there a Labour government in power. Now am I right in thinking that you would cancel the Trident contract the Conservative government is committed to?

[Answer] Yes indeed, we have opposed it in the House of Commons on the general grounds of the expense and of the danger and on the general grounds I do not believe there is any dispute in the Labour Party on that subject.

[Question] But had it already been initiated you would cancel it?

[Answer] Yes indeed, I think we would. I hope we'll come in a year or two's time and I think there will be full time for us to put into operation our policy on the subject.

[Question] Now on the cruise missile which is another subject on which a great deal has been said in the Labour Party, the position seems to be that you think it should be negotiated with the Russians that the SS-20 is removed from Europe so there is no need for a cruise missile. I think that is understood. Can I put this to you, that if these negotiations fail, are there any circumstances where you as a Labour prime minister would accept cruise missiles in this country or would you if they were already here have them taken away?

[Answer] In my opinion, it would be an appalling defeat for the whole process of stopping the nuclear arms race if we ever had to have cruise missiles in this country and so I trust we will never have to have them. Of course, I would much rather stop them ever coming here by getting a genuine negotiation going and it is to that that I referred a few minutes ago, that it is the common desire of many of the other socialist parties in Europe. But if, in 2 or 3 years' time, the cruise missiles are established in this country, I still hold the view that I expressed before I was elected to this job, that in my opinion they should be sent away because I do not believe they add to our protection.

[Question] And to put it very crudely, is Polaris the weapon that you would like to see so to speak, rust away.

[Answer] Well, I think it is going to fade out of existence. That is a different matter. I think these others are the most urgent decisions and I believe that most urgent of all--I must repeat and underline it because I think it is a commonsense approach to the situation--is to try and get proper, genuine full-scale negotiations going and all our driving force will be centered on that. And at every meeting, I have been to since I have been elected, up and down the country, I have stressed it. I want to make that the climate of opinion. Now I think there is a very big difference between what we are saying on this subject and what, unfortunately, the British Government is saying because they do not seem to speak in these terms.

[Question] And if you manage to get discussions going on disarmament and were those discussions at the multilateral level to which I know you say you are committed as well as the unilateral level--were they to fail, would you still as prime minister support Britain's unilateral disarmament in the sense that it was put at the Labour Party conference that you would accept this country abandoning its deterrent, refusing to rely on nuclear weapons, closing down all nuclear bases.

[Answer] All those subjects which are perfectly right ones for you to raise and for the country to put to us, there is no dodging it at all, all those subjects are going to be comprised in the discussions we are going to have in the next few weeks and what we will present to the country at the next election. But because we know that, we present it openly and fairly, and people will know what they are asked to vote about. But what I want to stress is the immediate danger of the whole race being intensified over these next coming weeks and months, and we want to get the negotiations started even before we get back. And I believe that we can play a considerable part, not only the Labour Party but in association with our fellow socialist parties throughout Europe. I believe we can play a very considerable part in changing the whole international atmosphere. I only wish the British Government was as eager to change that atmosphere as we are.

[Question] But I note that you do not answer directly the question about unilateral disarmament in the sense of Britain, if the worse came to the worst, itself giving up, which a lot of CND [Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament] people would like to see and what the Americans are fearful of, is that because you have not made up your mind?

[Answer] No, the Labour Party has to make up its mind and to present it to the country, and we will do it fairly. We are still having discussions about it, and these are great issues which people, intelligent people have to discuss. But I do not want anybody to [have] any misunderstanding of the urgency that we attach to the question. There is no matter so supreme as this one of getting the world on the course of disarmament instead of rearmament. At the moment, we are engaged in a reckless course to disaster.

CROWN PRINCE HASSAN DISMISSES 'JORDANIAN OPTION'

LD232054 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2033 GMT 23 Mar 81

[By Tom McMullan, PA diplomatic correspondent]

[Text] Crown Prince Hassan of Jordan claimed in London tonight that the time available for a political solution to the Arab-Israeli dispute who now limited.

The prince told a meeting of the European Atlantic group at the Commons: "It is clear that dynamic Zionisation of Arab territories through the establishment of over 106 settlements limits the time available for a political solution."

It appeared that Israel's objective was to transform neighbouring countries into de-stabilised political entities which made easy targets for aggression.

"Furthermore, we have no illusions about the so-called Jordanian option. To us, bypassing the Palestinians and the refusal of Israel to deal with the Palestine Liberation Organisation, their sole legitimate representative, is no option at all."

But the prince said the climate for an overall international settlement "is not wholly adverse."

European states outside the immediate conflict had the political interest and insight to take part--"existing Arab-Israeli conflicts should not be shut off from the wider Middle East realpolitik considerations."

ROLANDHIS DISCUSSES UK BASES, CYPRUS ISSUES

[Text] London, 23 Mar (special dispatch)--Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis has said that any possible presence in the British bases in Cyprus of personnel of the Rapid Deployment Force [RDF], to which U.S. President Reagan recently referred, is not provided for under the treaty governing the establishment of these bases.

Rolandhis made this statement during a press conference today in London. It was attended by representatives of all foreign news agencies and "Fleet Street" newspapers.

Answering a relevant question, Rolandhis stated: The Government of Cyprus will firmly insist on the fulfillment of British Government obligations arising from the treaty of establishment of these bases in Cyprus.

He revealed that unofficial talks between the Cyprus and British Governments will start next month on the amount Britain owes Cyprus for facilities provided regarding the operation of the British bases on the island.

The Cypriot foreign minister, answering another question, said the treaty provides for their use for British defense purposes. The sum requested by the Cyprus Government, he said, is fully documented, but he avoided any mention of the amount.

Referring to the degree that the international political climate affects the Cyprus issue, Rolandhis said he will brief the Reagan administration on the Cyprus Government's position during his forthcoming talks with the secretary of state in Washington. "We attribute special significance to these talks," he said.

Answering a question concerning Soviet positions on the Cyprus issue, Rolandhis said the Soviet Union firmly supports Cyprus in international forums.

Questions addressed to Rolandhis also covered the Cyprus Government's views on developments in the general area of Greece and Turkey, the Middle East and Cypriot relations with the EEC.

Referring to the progress of the intercommunal talks, Rolandhis said prospects for these talks are dim, owing to the intransigence of the Turkish side on all aspects of the Cyprus issue.

Answering a question on future action by the Cyprus Government, Rolandhis said that if these talks fail, the Cyprus Government would be forced to reconsider its position in the international sector.

During a speech today, the second during his London visit, Rolandhis, who is in London as the guest of the Coordinating Committee of Cypriots in England on the occasion of the 25 March anniversary, referred to the significance of this anniversary and said: The development of Cyprus was interrupted by the Turkish invasion.

We are now attempting to come out of the labyrinth created by Turkish expansionism and chauvinism. Unfortunately, the end of Ariadne's threat is not in our hands. It is held by Ankara. [Reference to the Greek labyrinth and minotaur myth.] Our resolve and our course, he said, lies in discovering some way out at the intercommunal negotiations table.

We will not abandon our numerous friends for a single moment. If the countries that support us today withdrew their support, then the meaning of the Cyprus Government would be destroyed and the dreams of certain people for a country partitioned and with two separate administrations would be fulfilled.

After stressing that the political struggle of Cyprus is not an easy one, Rolandhis added that Cyprus cannot be separated from the area in which it is situated. And he concluded: Unfortunately, what is proper and just for Cyprus is not enough at a time when this proper and just thing clashes with extremely strong currents and interests of a universal dimension.

Rolandhis met with personalities of the Cypriot community in London and with British members of Parliament who are members of the "Friends of Cyprus" Committee.

IRAN WARNS AGAINST GIVING ASYLUM TO HIJACKERS

TA240811 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Reports to the effect that Turkey is considering an extension of political asylum to Iranian air pirates that hijacked a plane some time ago has created tension in relations between the two countries. In a note submitted in Ankara, the Iranian Foreign Ministry has asked for the return of the Iranian air pirates who hijacked the Iranian airplane to Turkey.

Recalling that an extradition agreement exists between Turkey and Iran, the Iranian note says that the extension of political asylum to the hijackers would damage relations between the two countries.

CUMHURIYET EDITORIAL QUESTIONS U.S. AID IMPACT

NC240922 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 21 Mar 81 p 3

["The World Today" column by Ali Sirmen: "The Cost of the Plan"]

[Text] In a statement he made in Washington, Alexander Haig, the Reagan administration's secretary of state and former commander in chief of NATO forces, stated that the aid to be given to Europe will be concentrated particularly in Portugal, Spain, Greece and Turkey.

When we look at the U.S. approach from a military aid point of view, this is what we see: As a result of the arms embargo imposed on it soon after the Cyprus peace operation, Turkey suffered serious setbacks. That the embargo led to serious consequences was also openly stated by the secretary of state.

Turkey's NATO partners, as well as Alexander Haig, were among those who openly admitted this truth: Many local and foreign officials repeatedly stressed that Turkey could hardly fulfill its NATO obligations. They even said that it had become impossible for Turkey to fulfill its mission.

The Reagan administration may now be seeking to fill this gap through the "aid" to be extended. But two problems arise: The first is the effect on the Turkish economy, which is in a critical position, by such an approach which is characterized as "aid." It has been reported in our press that the method by which "U.S. military aid" is implemented is bound to impose serious burdens on our country, even though for a long period payment only has to be made on the interest. If this "aid" continues in its known form, it is highly probable that it will become a very great burden. We think that this situation has been explained to Washington.

The second problem too springs again from the period of the arms embargo. During this time our neighbor Greece, which has serious claims against our country in the Aegean, embarked on an intensive arms campaign.

When Greece's geopolitical position, its border relations with its non-NATO neighbors and the depth of their territory are considered, it escapes no one's notice that Greece's new arms campaign, particularly the reinforcement of its air force, is primarily aimed at Turkey. Athens' endeavors to strengthen its naval forces too can be explained in the same context.

It has been observed that this arms campaign has secured for Greece certain advantages, particularly in the air force, which, compared with Turkey's position, are not compatible with either its population, territorial size or strength.

Realizing that it could not indefinitely impede the lifting of the arms embargo, Greece is insisting that the U.S. aid to Greece and Turkey be limited to a 7 to 10 ratio. This must be examined in light of current developments.

By advancing these claims, Athens is bringing up the question of its own security against Turkey. However, if we take a closer look at the situation, we easily see that Greece is endeavoring to retain advantages that far exceed its security concerns.

When their territorial size, their population and their responsibilities within NATO are taken into consideration, it becomes obvious that the 7 to 10 ratio is not applicable. Particularly when the wounds inflicted on Turkey by the arms embargo are taken into account, this claim clearly is invalid.

Regarding the economic aspect of the U.S. aid, reports reaching Turkey give the impression that statements referring to it are rather ambiguous.

On the question of economic aid, Mr Haig is quoted as saying "We shall continue to meet the economic needs of this country along with other issues." If this is the way the Reagan administration is approaching this issue, no new developments can be expected.

No matter what plan or method is implemented in Turkey, it cannot be argued that the U.S. contribution in its old form can be adequately conducive to the settlement of Turkey's foreign credits issue, which is of paramount importance to us.

The most important issue embracing both fields is the price of the "aid plan," as is known. By stating that it will extend more aid to certain countries, the Reagan administration is openly admitting that it will demand a price for it. Moreover, whether it is military or economic, the price asked for such aid concerns both political and military arenas.

Although Foreign Minister Turkmen says that the United States has not given even the slightest hint as to what it claims from us in connection with U.S. Middle East policy would be, events and developments are the topic of the day in the world press. U.S. administrators and Pentagon officials are openly expressing demands concerning their Gulf policy. And they are not hiding the fact that they expect countries in the region, particularly NATO members, to make fresh contributions. They have even gone so far as to bring up the argument at the NATO talks.

The situation being what it is, the nature of the "aid" to be extended to Turkey by the United States assumes as much importance as the price to be asked for it. In any case, it would be to our benefit if Ankara acts with extreme vigilance in this respect.

NAVY BEGINS EXERCISE IN MARMARA, AEGEAN SEAS

TA231125 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Text] The exercise codenamed "Duty One-81" has begun with the participation of navy ships and planes. Surface warships, submarines, naval police planes and helicopters are participating in the exercise, which is being held with the goal of developing the defense readiness of the Turkish naval forces in the country. The ships will visit the ports of Izmir, Canakkale and Tekirdag during the exercise that will be held in the Marmara and Aegean Seas. The exercise, which will entail the use of live ammunition, will end by 27 March.

BANK OFFICIAL REVIEWS ECONOMIC ACHIEVEMENTS

[Excerpt] Ankara, 23 Mar (AA)--President Osman Siklar of the Central Bank said the new export credit system going into effect in 1 April would constitute a simple, uniform and easy-to-use model for credits.

At a press conference to explain the technicalities of the new system intended as an incentive to exportation, Siklar added carriers pledging to bring in part of their foreign exchange earnings to Turkey would also be given export credits under the new procedures.

Noting that the rate of inflation had fallen considerably in recent months, as a result of the January 1980 decisions of the government, Siklar announced remittances by Turkish workers abroad had reached 2.1 billion dollars in 1980, while export earnings reached 2.9 billion dollars.

The estimated volume of 3.5 billion dollars for 1981 exports could be surpassed, Siklar hoped.

With workers remittances estimated at the same level as in 1980, the 1981 deficit in the balance of payments would be around 2.5 billion dollars, he said.

It would be a "sounder" practice to meet this deficit with increased remittances from workers and higher exports rather than foreign loans, grants or debt rescheduling, the Central Bank president noted.

NEW OIL RESERVES DISCOVERED NORTH OF BATMAN

TA231747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Text] New crude oil reserves were discovered in the vicinity of Siirt's Batman district. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent has learned that oil was struck at 1,800 meters in a well located 40 km north of Batman. Oil exploration work was conducted by the Turkish Petroleum Corporation. Officials siad that the oil well named "Senho 103" can produce daily 1,000 barrels of crude oil. Officials added that though the quality of the oil is good the oil reserve area is not very large.

INDUSTRY MINISTER DEPARTS FOR SUDAN, ROMANIA

TA221719 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Mar 81

[Text] Industry and Technology Minister Sahap Kocatopcu today departed for Khartoum, the capital of Sudan, to participate in a meeting sponsored by the UN Industrial Development Organization [UNIDO]. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesitkoy Airport before his departure, Kocatopcu said that assistance to Sudan for industrial development would be discussed at the meeting.

Kocatopcu added that he would visit Romania after Sudan in order to discuss loans for the building of the fourth iron and steel mill in Sivas, as agreed upon in talks and in a protocol signed in Ankara between the two countries.

On domestic issues, the minister said that the government would exert efforts to revive the economy--particularly the construction and automotive industries--without causing inflation.

MALTA

GOVERNMENT SEEKS ACCORD WITH LIBYA, BACKS PLO

LD231605 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 23 Mar 81 p 4

[A.J. McIlroy dispatch]

[Text] Valletta--Rapprochement with Libya and the championing of the Palestine Liberation Organisation were among foreign policy priorities spelled out by Mr Mintoff, at a weekend Labour Party rally.

Mr Mintoff told the rally that he had been informed by the United Nations that Libya was prepared to send a delegation to Malta today to exchange documents showing that the agreement reached between the two countries for co-operation in 1976 had passed through all procedures.

The agreement was also a means to enabling the vexed dispute between the two countries over territorial rights to the waters near Malta to be referred to the International Court at The Hague.

Malta had objected to Libya's claim to the seabed in the dispute over exploratory drilling for oil.

Mr Mintoff welcomed to the rally a delegation of the Maltese-Arab Friendship Society which included two PLO representatives.

Mr Mintoff poured ridicule on "the seniles" sitting on the Council of Europe which he attacked for failing to condemn Britain over Malta's request that the United Kingdom remove wartime bombs and shells "littering" the island's seabed.

Mr Mintoff dwelt enthusiastically on the events leading to his government telling the British to pull out of Malta.

Malta was tied to no one and would never fight the wars of others. When Europe and the Arab world got closer together, Malta would be surrounded by friends.

Mr Mintoff said his government wanted Malta to be neutral "and fight for just causes like the cause of the Palestinians and the PLO."

COMMUNITY LEADERS DISCUSS WORLD ISSUES, PROBLEMS

Noninterference in Poland

NC241158 Paris AFP in English 1151 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Maastricht, The Netherlands, 24 Mar (AFP)--In a warning against Soviet moves against Poland, the European Economic Community (EEC) national leaders today said that Poland must continue to face its internal problems by itself and without external interference.

The leaders at their summit here said that this was important for Poland's own interests as well as for European stability. They stressed that Poland's problems must be dealt with in a peaceful manner.

The summit heads added that the EEC nations were ready, within their means and in collaboration with others, to continue contributing to the recovery of the economy, backing up the efforts of the Polish people themselves.

They reiterated their position expressed in their first declaration last December and added that this statement retained its full value, warning the Soviet Union about the risk of very serious consequences for international relations that a Soviet intervention would entail.

The summit statement stressed that all signers of the Helsinki Accords had to establish relations with Poland on the basis of the strict application of the United Nations charter and the principles of the Final Helsinki Act.

Soviet Invasion of Afghanistan

NC241206 Paris AFP in English 1155 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Maastricht, Netherlands, 24 Mar (AFP)--The ten European Economic Community (EEC) heads of state and government today reaffirmed that a solution must be found for Afghanistan "which provides for withdrawal of foreign troops and allows the Afghan people freely to exercise its right to self-determination".

Warning that developments there "remained a threat to the stability of regional and international relations", it noted "with profound concern" that Soviet troops' military operations against the population "are continuing uninterrupted".

"The European Council supports any initiative capable of bringing the desired result, and in particular welcomes the one (contained) in the United Nations resolution of November 20, 1980 and the one proposed recently by France", a statement by the 10 member states said.

(The French proposal envisioned calling an international summit on non-interference in Afghanistan, which has been occupied by Soviet troops since December, 1979.)

The Council added that "the Afghan people's bitter ordeal" was evidenced in "a massive surge of refugees, creating a heavy burden for neighboring countries, particularly Pakistan".

The text of the EEC summit statement on Afghanistan reads: "The European Council notes with grave concern that the military operations by Soviet troops against the Afghan people, who are resisting this external interference, continue without interruption. The tragic course of events in Afghanistan constitutes as severe ordeal for the Afghan people and expresses itself in the form of a massive flood of refugees who are a heavy burden for neighbouring countries, in particular for Pakistan.

"The developments in Afghanistan remain a threat to the stability of relations in the region and worldwide. In face of the situation resulting from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the European Council has called many times, and in particular at its meeting in Venice in June 1980, for respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Afghanistan and for an end to all interference in the internal affairs of that country.

"The Council has stated on many occasions the need for a solution which entails the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and which permits the Afghan people to exercise freely their right to self-determination, and for Afghanistan thus to return to its traditional status as an independent state, neutral and non aligned.

"The European Council supports any initiative which could lead to the desired result and welcomes in particular theinitiative which was the subject of the resolution of the United Nations of 20 November 1980, and that put forward recently by France."

Turkey's Expulsion Opposed

TA241755 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] The EEC foreign ministers have agreed to continue to have Turkey as a member of the Council of Europe. The foreign ministers of the 10 EEC countries held a political consultation meeting during their summit in Maastricht, a city in The Netherlands. During that meeting, the foreign ministers discussed among other issues the relations between Turkey and the Council of Europe. Our correspondent in Brussels, Nusret Ozgul, reports that the foreign ministers of the ten EEC countries stated that they were opposed to Turkey's expulsion from the Council of Europe.

Speaking to reports after the meeting, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis said that Greece was opposed to Turkey's expulsion from the Council of Europe. He said that Turkey's membership in the Council of Europe carried great importance as far as Europe's security was concerned.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON MISSILE WEAPONS, INTERCEPTORS

AU231135 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 23 Mar 81 p 2

[Report on Defense Minister Otto Roesch statements at a TV discussion with journalists on the Vienna Domestic Television Service "Press Hour" program on 22 March 1981]

[Excerpt] The question of Austria's purchasing interceptor planes should not be overrated, Defense Minister Roesch declared on Sunday in the ORF [Austrian Radio and Television Service] "Press Hour" program. As far as the purchase of missiles as defense weapons is concerned, it is of tremendous importance that the Austrian state treaty not be touched: "One can only negotiate on interpretations."

Roesch did not exclude the possibility of the missile problem being broached during the forthcoming visit to Vienna of Soviet Premier Tikhonov, but added: In the past, the Soviets always said "stick to what you have."

The purchase of interceptors, just as the army budget, comes under the responsibility of the federal government, he said. The army budget has been raised from 3 to 12 billion schillings in the past 10 years. Between 1978 and 1980 the growth rate was overproportionate and this year there is an economy budget. Next year, an additional 800 million schillings will be needed for investments, Roesch declared.

French Mirage Favored

AU231136 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 23 Mar 81 pp 1-2

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GJ"]

[Excerpts] In the TV "Press Hour" on Sunday Defense Minister Roesch clearly indicated that he was in favor of a new tax to be levied on people exempted from military service.

An internal preliminary decision has apparently been made regarding the issue of interceptor planes. Should it be possible to finance the purchase of such planes, Austria would favor the French Mirage over the American F-16. This can be concluded from Roesch's statement that the Soviet Union refused to sell MIG planes to Austria on the grounds that Austria should not have one-sided ties with big powers.

In the debate on the purchase of interceptors, Roesch repeated his earlier statements that first of all the National Defense Council would make a decision in favor of one of the two systems (Mirage or F-16) at its next meeting on 10 April. The defense minister reported on talks with Soviet politicians in which "a feeler was put out" regarding a purchase of Soviet planes. At that time the USSR refused to sell planes "because one does not want Austria to be dependent on one of the two big powers." That seems more or less to rule out a purchase of the American F-16.

BSP PRESIDENT COMMENTS ON EUROMISSILES, ZAIRE

LD230949 Brussels LE SOIR in French 18 Mar 81 p 2

[Text] Missiles, Zaire: Belgian foreign policy again seems to be straining relations between the Social Christians and the Flemish Socialists. This at least is what transpires from Monday's statements by Belgian Socialist Party [BSP] President Mr van Miert, to which Prime Minister Martens and Foreign Minister Nothomb are believed to have reacted.

On Monday, after his party's meeting, Mr van Miert recalled the recent statements by U.S. General Bernie Rogers, who suggested last week that Belgium follow the Reagan path and cut its social expenditure to strengthen its defense. "This is unacceptable interference," said Mr van Miert, who called to mind the recent meeting in Oslo of the socialist parties of Europe's little countries which concluded by asserting the need for a joint European strategy, and by comparing NATO's attitude with that of the Soviets toward the CEMA countries.

Foreign Minister Nothomb took care not to follow the BSP. Back on Monday he stated: "Mr van Miert's stance is either personal or that of his party. I find it ridiculous and absurd to compare Belgium's position within NATO to that of an East European satellite.... Only the Belgian Government is competent to determined Belgium's position in foreign policy."

Mr Nothomb recalled his "firm attachment" to the NATO decisions relating to the modernization of theater nuclear forces in Europe and to the offer of talks with the USSR on a reduction of forces.

The other firecracker let off by the impetuous BSP president on Monday was Zaire. In Mr van Miert's words, the prime minister's repeated declarations of love to the Zairian leaders "can in no way commit the Flemish Socialist ministers." "The agreements which have actually been concluded," Mr van Miert continued, "seem to me in keeping with past agreements between coalition partners."

What has been the effect of these statements on Mr Martens? No one knows yet, but the prime minister received BSP President Karel van Miert and Willy Claes, deputy prime minister and minister of economic affairs, at their request on Monday. This interview, termed "confidential," was a little surprising in the present circumstances which are creating a political climate which is nothing less than tense.

Officially it was the intention of the BSP president and the chief of the Flemish Socialist government ministers to receive the prime minister's information on his recent trip to Kinshasa. On leaving, Mr Marten's residence, Mr van Miert and Mr Claes refused to make any comment, only saying that they discussed "various points." To a journalist who tried to find out a little more, Mr Claes--on edge?--responded sharply: "There may yet be another meeting...."

SCHMIDT RULES OUT FINANCIAL 'SACRIFICES' FOR EC

LD242256 Hamburg DPA in German 2053 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Hamburg, 24 Mar (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt clearly has criticized the attitude of some member states of the European Community. Following the summit meeting of heads of EC states and governments in Maastricht, Schmidt said this evening in interviews on German television 1 and 2 that many European states presently are tempted to blame their own economic difficulties on the EC. This tendency, which could possibly spread further, must be countered by responsible governments. He would do this.

Schmidt said: "I don't want to blame any other government here, but the fact is that for many people at present charity begins at home. Things mustn't stay like this."

The Maastricht summit ended without the European questions in dispute being solved. The disputed issues that remain unsolved are fisheries, steel and agricultural prices.

Schmidt stressed that he is very sad because in the past year, the Federal Republic has assumed considerable financial burdens and has even increased taxation so that the financial burdens of other member countries, especially England, could be eased. He emphasized: "But we now see that one of the relatively small conditions for agreement, that is, agreement with regard to the shape of the fishing industry in the Community, has so far not been fulfilled." Regarding the effects on the German North Sea and Baltic coasts, Schmidt said: "They make me feel very sad."

Asked whether the Federal Republic could continue to make financial sacrifices in the future for the Community, Schmidt said: "It can make no additional sacrifices, and I have stated here that we must limit our future financial sacrifices." No one has criticized that "because everyone knows that for years we have borne by far the lion's share of net financing. But so have France and also England, it must be said."

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH WEINBERGER

LD242234 Hamburg DPA in German 2128 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Excerpt] Washington, 24 Mar (DPA)--Against all expectations, Bonn and Washington have shown great agreement regarding defense policy. Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel stated today in Washington after a talk lasting 3 and 1/2 hours with U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger that at present there are no disputed issues in defense policy.

For his part, Weinberger noted with particular satisfaction Apel's remark that "the level of German defense spending, in contrast to reports to the contrary, will rise."

In a DPA interview, Apel explained the smooth course of the Washington conference with the "strength of the German arguments." He said he thought it was also due to the fact that his counterpart Weinberger "is a fine politician who knows that in the alliance the Federal Republic is particularly important." Weinberger also recognized that in the past decade the Germans "have done more than their duty." This would remain so in the future. However, Apel did not rule out that there could again be debates across the Atlantic. "But at present there are no problems."

He said his trip to Washington was a good start to German-American cooperation over the coming years. During his meeting with Secretary of State Alexander Haig on Wednesday, he expects the "same atmosphere" as with Weinberger. Apel stressed strongly to DPA that he views German-American relations "with optimism."

SPOKESMAN AFFIRMS ADHERENCE TO NATO DECISION

[Text] Bonn, 23 Mar (DPA)--Following the decision by the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD leadership to work for an examination of the NATO decision on nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe, the Federal Government has affirmed its determination to adhere to the alliance's decision. Government spokesman Lothar Ruehl told the press today in Bonn that the Federal Government is adhering to its policy and stands by the undertakings it has entered into in the alliance.

If the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD wants to examine the NATO decision, then it should address itself to the party congress and not the Federal Government. When it was stated to him that Federal Ministers Volker Hauff and Rainer Offergeld, members of the Baden-Wuerttemberg SPD Land Executive, had also helped formulate the decision, Ruehl said that if federal ministers voted as SPD delegates, this did not mean that they dissociated themselves from cabinet decisions. The Federal Government is bound by cabinet decisions, by which all ministers stand where required.

Although intending to get the basis of the NATO decision reexamined at the next SPD federal congress, scheduled for the beginning of 1982, the Baden-Wuerttembert SPD Executive at the same time unanimously voted against bringing about a change at present in the December 1979 Berlin party congress decision on medium-range weapons.

PRESS REPORTS ON 22 MARCH HESSE COMMUNAL ELECTIONS

DW231755 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0605 GMT 23 Mar 81

[From the press review]

[Text] The Kassel HESSISCHE NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE writes: The real sensation of these elections is the successful rush by the Greens and the alternative groups for the municipal parliaments. They took the 5-percent hurdle at the first attempt and achieved election results in some problematic areas, which have totally changed the local power ratio. Here a citizens' protest expressed and manifests itself against ecological dangers which thus far obviously has been underestimated by the parties and the land government.

The Duesseldorf RHEINISCHE POST says: The Hessian communal elections have brought more surprises than was to be expected. The good outcome for the Greens should be mentioned first of all. The result of the Greens undoubtedly is a clear criticism of the others, the so-called established parties, which over the years have lost sense of the people's needs. The SPD was hit hardest by the success of the Greens. This is a revenge for the immobile and irresolute policy in Bonn. Naturally, the reasons for the election outcome were different in the individual communities. But the new losses for the SPD for which Hesse was always a stronghold can only be explained by a basic political trend. Social Democratic voters are disappointed and in doubt.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU writes: Following the communcal elections yesterday, the Hessian SPD will have to take note that its 1977 defeat was no accident. The CDU seems to be in a position now to settle down for a long time in the city halls and offices of the district presidents they conquered 4 years ago and which up until then were considered impregnable bastions of the Social Democrats. Although the reasons for the adverse outcome of the SPD have yet to be analyzed, there could be no doubt several hours after the votes were counted that the Greens pressed the SPD very hard. This probably means that a considerable part of young voters did not vote Social Democratic but alternative. Consequently, the Greens have produced the only real surprise of the communal elections, while the FDP for which opinion poll people had predicted an excellent result only scored a modest increase in Hesse. In addition, the low of the overall political weather also seems to have reached Hesse.

STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN reads in part: Although the political weather in Bonn has not had a full impact on the communal policy climate in Hesse, it did produce a certain effect. The CDU had declared the formerly Social Democrat stronghold Frankfurt a sort of federal political test case according to the motto that those who are able to govern Frankfurt would also be able to create order in the republic. But seen this way, the overwhelming election victory scored by governing Mayor Wallmann for the Christian Democrats is not confirmed to this extent by the Hessian election results. The voters primarily used these elections as the instrument they should be, a possibility for the citizens, that is, to influence political decisions in their local and regional sphere.

The daily DIE WELT comments : As usual, caution also is indicated now to see generally valid political trends in communal elections. And yet, the communal elections in Hesse are a great surprise and a warning signal for all parties in Bonn. Not only the young, but also the old people, have expressed their uneasiness with the established political forces. Partly, they did that very clearly. The SPD is the big loser, but the CDU is not the big winner on the land average. As has been so often the case, the FDP is half dead and half alive. The real winners are the Greens which hardly anybody took into account. Their rebirth in Hesse should make all parties think.

MANNHEIMER MORGEN writes: The first winner in these Hessian communal elections is Walter Wallmann. The fact that the Green groups moved into the municipal parliaments in Frankfurt and other communities on Sunday shows how large the potential of conflicts has become. The established parties have been taught a lesson, at least regarding the way of their decisionmaking processes. Bonn and Wiesbaden will intensively deal with the prevailing trends.

PAPER VIEWS APEL'S DIFFICULTIES IN U.S. TALKS

[Commentary signed Fk.: "Facing Disputes"]

[Text] Hans Apel is going to Washington on a difficult errand. The modest offer of DM1.3 billion slated for better housing for American troops stationed in this country, which he is equipped with, will not be enough to create high spirits in his discussion partners. As indicated by the report next to this commentary, much more for the military infrastructure is expected. It is even more serious, however, that the Germans are not prepared to adhere to the agreed real increase of defense expenditures by 3 percent annually, while the Reagan administration plans to add 16 percent to defense expenditures next year. The fact that Bonn spread the news that the cuts will be made with American approval has touched off cold wrath in Washington, which Apel will feel.

Washington notes with attention how the party of the federal chancellor is falling apart more and more quickly when it comes to the problem of counterarmament with medium-range arms. The SPD Land Executive Board of Baden-Wuerttemberg, headed by our good Erhard Eppler, demanded an examination of that NATO decision; the next SPD congress is supposed to handle another motion which runs directly against the policy of the Federal Government. The subordinate SPD Bezirk of Bonn demanded a few days ago that the counterarmament decision be revoked and that the stationing of medium-range arms be refused. Tormented Minister Apel even faces party disciplinary measures in Hamburg because he does not plan to execute politically what the local leftist party constituency considers the will of the party with regard to defense policy.

Politically, this cannot go on much longer for the Schmidt government because the report from Washington is almost the opposite of Eppler's imaginations and those of his political friends.

The new administration does not have in mind negotiating with the Russians from what it considers an inferior position on the umpteenth SALT treaty or similar issues. For the sake of its allies, it wants to have "talks" (as mentioned in Genscher's Washington "background summary") and not more. And the Americans ask puzzled whether the Germans in all seriousness demand more in the current situation--meaning Poland--than such noncommital preparatory talks.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU CRITICIZES ALLEN STATEMENTS

[Commentary signed -ZER: "Inappropriate Advice"]

[Text] Frank words should be something natural among friends. But a great difference exists between such honesty and rude interference in the affairs of other people.

It is time to tell this most clearly to the new American Government. If Richard Allen, the newly-appointed security adviser of President Reagan, last weekend publicly insinuated that "pacifist trends" exist among the European allies, this is shortsighted and embarrassing. The European allies of the United States are after all located in case of a conflict--which would hopefully never happen--in its fatal center. It is not merely their right, but their duty to look for political solutions to international controversial issues.

This has as little to do with yielding to the Soviet Union, as it has with the Europeans' lacking sense for realities. The Europeans know from their own experience better than many Americans what it means to be located in the sphere of Soviet power. Poland at the moment is an example in this connection. The economic help for Poland came and comes to a great extent from West Europe.

Completely incomprehensible is Allen's hardly concealed demand that the European NATO partners should bridle their social programs and expeditures. One would almost feel tempted at this point to relapse into the old European arrogance, reminding the American politicians that the Europeans have a very old tradition of pondering on the proportion between social justice and bourgeois liberty.

Moreover, the talkative Washington politicians make it complicated for the European governments to stress to their publics the priority of the Western alliance over other problems, if they cannot think of anything better than to permanently swing their mace. A leading power in every alliance has naturally the right to clearly utter its own ideas. But this Western alliance is more than an assembly of satellites around a leading power, and it ought to remain what it is in future as well.

We must represent common interests, with emphasis on the word common. The current American trauma of feeling weaker than one is cannot be the only thing to determine the alliance. Egon Bahr, the Social Democrats' manager for many years, stated this weekend that he and his friends know most exactly what is involved in this alliance. "I am firmly convinced that wanderers between two worlds will end up in nothing. We are firmly inbedded in an alliance, and we will make headway only with the alliance--not without it," he said.

The Europeans do not demand yielding or fearfulness from the United States, but the preparedness to negotiate with the Soviet Union to stop the armament spiral as quickly as possible, that is not too much of a demand.

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERS 1980 BUDGET, LOS LEGISLATION

LD241659 Paris LE MONDE in French 20 Mar 81 p 12

[Excerpts] The Council of Ministers met on 18 March at the Elysee Palace under the chairmanship of Mr Giscard d'Estaing. The following communique was released at the end of the meeting:

1980 Budget

The budget minister delivered a report on the results of the implementation of the 1980 budget. Whereas the initial finance law envisaged Fr41.3 billion expenditure, the completion of the 1980 budget shows Fr30.3 billion. Thus, the final balance is more favorable than the original forecast, for the first time since 1975.

This result was achieved mainly thanks to moderation in state expenditure, whose increase was slowed down as indicated. In 1980 France still has the smallest budget deficit of all the major industrialized countries. It is equivalent to 1.1 percent of GDP as against 3.5 in the FRG, 4.8 in Britain, 10.6 in Italy and 2.3 in the United States. The financing of the deficit was totally covered by savings, thanks mainly to medium- and long-term state loans, which totaled Fr31 billion in 1980. No recourse was had to printing money. Thus, through its rigorous management, the state has made a major contribution to strengthening the economy.

International Seabeds

The industry minister and foreign minister delivered a report on the exploitation of international seabeds.

French policy aims to develop the technological and industrial means for exploring, gathering and treating the mineral resources of the ocean floor in deep water and active participation in international negotiations to define the rules to be implemented by the world community in the areas concerned.

The government intends to safeguard the right of access to such resources of French subjects under all circumstances, taking into account the evolution of international law and of national legislation introduced by certain states. A bill will be prepared with a view to protecting these rights, pending the adoption of the international convention being drawn up by the United Nations and establishing regulations for the exploration and exploitation of mineral resources on the seabed.

The government seems determined to expedite the procedures necessary to give France national legislation on the exploitation of mineral resources--mainly polymetallic nodules--in deep water. Last summer, the United States and then the FRG adopted unilateral legislation of this kind. In other industrialized countries--Britain, Belgium and Japan, in particular--similar plans are being examined. U.S. and German legislation envisages granting their subjects exclusive rights of exploring and exploiting nodules. However, both specify:

That exploitation cannot start before 1 January 1988;

That these unilateral legislations will disappear when a future convention on the Law of the Sea places the deep seabeds, "the shared heritage of mankind," under international jurisdiction;

That companies exploiting polymetallic nodules will pay duties into a special fund to be paid to the international authority responsible, under the future convention, for the exploitation of the deep seabeds;

That both states will conclude reciprocity agreements with countries adopting unilateral legislation compatible with their own, so as to recognize exclusive permits granted by them.

(The new U.S. administration has shown since the 9 March resumption of the Law of the Sea Conference in New York that it is not espousing the stances adopted by the Carter administration. A future agreement on a draft Law of the Sea convention, therefore, seems to have been set back. The French Government seems to want to provide the country with the necessary legislation so that bilateral agreements can promptly guarantee the future exploration or exploitation permits granted to French groups--LE MONDE editor's note.)

IRAQI DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER CONCLUDES TALKS

[Text] Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq 'Aziz concluded his official talks in Paris on 19 March with talks with [Foreign Minister] Francois-Poncet and the Quai d'Orsay. According to an authoritative source, he sought chiefly to ascertain the French view of the Iraqi-Iranian conflict and the prospects for a settlement, notably in the light of the talks which the French foreign minister had in Washington in February.

It seems that the Iraqi head of state's representative took advantage of this visit chiefly to express his government's desire to find a way out of a bloody war (5,000 Iraqis have apparently been killed or wounded since the conflict broke out in September, according to French estimates) which has not had the expected results. Although the Iranian regime has been weakened, it is not about to collapse and the front has been stabilized for several months.

The tone of Iraqi declarations has, therefore, been somewhat moderated, but there is still a complete deadlock at diplomatic level since none of the proposals put forward during recent attempts at mediation has attracted Tehran's attention.

France's arms supplies to Iraq are no longer a problem since Paris has confirmed that it will honor existing contracts and has started to deliver the Mirage F1 aircraft. Since the war is being continued with extraordinarily few means, it is apparently not even necessary to speed up those deliveries.

PS LEADERSHIP CRITICIZES GISCARD CAMPAIGN TACTICS

[Text] The PS Executive Bureau, which met on 18 March, has published a statement on the polemic prompted by Mr Francois Mitterrand's criticisms on 16 March of the outgoing head of state's foreign policy.

"On the one hand," the Executive Bureau states, "Giscard as candidate does not hesitate to attack and denigrate the other candidates. But when his own policy is questioned, he withdraws behind his presidential duties. If the right to criticize is denied the other candidates, then there can be no debate and the free choice of universal suffrage is jeopardized.

"On the other hand, the mobilization of the principle modern media, especially television, at the government's service, has assumed such proportions in this connection that the conduct of the election campaign has been distorted.

"It was already a shock when a broadcast by the premier was suddenly announced to enable him, on behalf of one of the candidates--the outgoing candidate--to make an attack on his principal adversary. But that was not enough. All day Tuesday the various spokesmen for the presidency of the republic and the candidate dominated broadcasts with a view to creating a campaign incident directed against the Socialist candidate. In fact, it was an attempt to erase the very strong impression made by Francois Mitterrand's speech and to divert public attention far away from Giscard's economic record and from Francois Mitterrand's employment proposals."

GEORGES MARCHAIS INTERVIEWED ON ELECTION POLICY

LD241110 Paris Domestic Television Service in French 1930 GMT 23 Mar 81

[Interview granted by PCF General Secretary Georges Marchais on the "Cards on the Table" program with journalists Alain Duhamel and Jean Pierre Elkabbach]

[Excerpts] [Question] In January 1978, there was a national conference of the Communist Party--that was before the parliamentary elections--and you said, I will summarize and then you can tell me if I am right, you said in substance that 21 percent would not be enough, 25 percent would be good. Well, we have about a month to go before the first round of the presidential elections. What do you say? How much would be not enough, how much would be good? In the first round, of course.

[Answer] I still think that for the Communist candidate the essential thing is to collect the greatest number of votes possible. Moreover, I am fighting for that, and I am fighting to be there in the second round. I say it is decisive for the Communist candidate in the first round to collect a lot of votes.

I confirm that it is in the interest of the French people to collect the greatest number of votes possible in the first round and I note that I have against me both Francois Mitterrand and Giscard d'Estaing, who both for identical reasons want to weaken the Communist Party, which is the obstacle to their ambitions.

[Question] Mr Marchais, to be in the second round, you must agree with me, you need at least 25 percent.

[Answer] You know me, Alain Duhamel, I am a winner. I am fighting to win, and I am fighting to be there in the second round.

[Question] You said during the "Cards on the Table" program of 13 October, your first as a candidate, that the notion of automatic standing-down was outdated, that it no longer exists. Since Francois Mitterrand after all has some chance of being in the second round, this is a hypothesis one can adopt. What will you do in the second round, or between the two rounds?

[Answer] I still consider that automatic standing-down is outdated. I have written my reply to your question. I wrote it down, weighing each word, and naturally it stressed all the scope and all the importance for the voters.

[Question] Well, we will let you give it in full.

[Answer] First, I want to stress once again the fact that we should not give in to the rumpus over the attempt to whisk away the first round, since I repeat that it is in the round that a clear choice can be made by the voters, and that it can be made on a program, in other words, as I have just said, on the ways of getting our country out of the deep crisis which it is experiencing. Now I am the only candidate, and I say, the only candidate today to propose the program, and I am the only candidate who comes out clearly in favor of a government of union including Communist and Socialist ministers. Thus, all those who really want change have no other choice but to vote for me during the first round.

Now I come to your question and my written reply, you are asking whether I will not be in a position to be there during the second round, but that it will be Francois Mitterrand against Giscard d'Estaing. You are asking what would I do then.

If by chance as, I repeat, if nothing has been settled, it is Giscard and Francois Mitterrand who are in the second round, I will tell you first that I certainly would not choose Giscard d'Estaing. Since October, I have presented myself and campaigned as the anti-Giscard candidate, the candidate of change. I will continue to the end, and it is out of the question that I should vote for Giscard d'Estaing. As for abstaining, I don't want to do it. As for voting for Francois Mitterrand, I have never said I would not do it; but it poses a serious problem for me, as there is a real danger, and it is a duty to tell the workers quite clearly, and all those who sincerely want change. This serious problem is the direction of Francois Mitterrand. The listeners have seen and heard him recently.

[Question] Last week.

[Answer] I am not inventing. There was no precise commitment on the satisfaction of social demands, no precise and serious measure challenging the domination and privileges of capital, but on the contrary more gifts to the bosses. He said so. Expansion of the EEC to include Spain and Portugal, a fatal expansion for our farmers, but also for our workers. This is also true for shipbuilders, the motor industry and others. In foreign policy, it would mean confrontation with the Soviet Union and further steps toward inclusion in the West European and Atlantic straitjacket. Lastly, he said clearly and firmly that there would be no Communist ministers.

[Question] Until you change...

[Answer] No Communist ministers. You can ask me questions later if you like. The real danger is of finding Francois Mitterrand tomorrow, if he has his hands free, governing with the right to continue and aggravate the present policy. I do not say this to close the door, to be destructive. I say it first because it is the truth and because it is always bad not to face it squarely. This leads to bitter disappointments. And I say it above all because I think there is a way out. Those who really want change must equip themselves with the means to make it prevail, and to make it prevail by affirming their numbers, their strength, by clearly showing their will. And, the only way to do this is to vote Communist in the first round. If we are numerous enough, strong enough, we can make ourselves heard, impose the necessary change. If not, this change will not take place whoever gets into the Elysee.

[Question] Mr Marchais, no negotiations before the second round between you and the Socialists?

[Answer] Well, Francois Mitterrand settled this question...

[Question] I'm asking you.

[Answer] Francois Mitterrand settled this question last week. He said no talks, no discussion between the two rounds.

[Question] Again supposing Francois Mitterrand is elected president of the republic, and, as he told us right here last week, he forms a transitional, homogenous government, without Communist ministers, what would you do then?

[Answer] We would not support a government in which we do not take part. As things are in this country, no party, whichever it is, can claim to govern alone. It does not have the means, the influence. There must necessarily be a coalition. The question facing Francois Mitterrand is clearly this: With whom will he govern tomorrow?

[Question] He replied to you that he would govern with the majority that elected him.

[Answer] Either he will govern with the Communists or he will govern with the right. But as far as we are concerned, we think it is essential for the Communists to take part in the Government of France.

[Question] Mr Marchais, there are some things that the French people perhaps do not understand very well. Since you say that the Socialists have shifted to the right, that perhaps they are social-democrats, Atlanticists and so forth, why do you want to govern with them?

[Answer] Well precisely to bring them back to the left, so much is obvious.

If I speak about the Socialist Party and Francois Mitterrand so often, it is simply because my party and I have not renounced the union. We will not renounce the union for change. On the other hand, if Francois Mitterrand ignores the Communist Party except when he says we will take millions of voters from it, it is precisely because he has abandoned the union and the policy of the common program. But since I, since my party, we Communists, know that the union is the condition for change, we are fighting for that. We will be fighting with a view to the elections. And we will fight, including within a government, and with the support of the masses, to force the Socialist Party to keep to its commitments.

[Question] Mr Marchais, we have been speaking now for exactly 1 hour and 23 minutes. I will ask you a last question, which also concerns foreign policy and Poland, since it is impossible not to discuss it today. I would like to know how you judge the behavior of the Solidarity trade unions in Poland.

[Answer] [passage indistinct] It is not true. Both the Soviets and the Polish Government have denied that a decision has been taken to prolong the military maneuvers. They are quite normal maneuvers. But I stress that you have been deceiving people for 8 months. There has been no intervention either by the Soviet Union or by the other countries belonging to the Warsaw Pact. And I say myself that there will not be one. There will not be one first of all because the member countries of the Warsaw Pact and the Soviet Union itself have stated clearly and distinctly, and there is no other possible position, that it is up to the Poles and the Polish Government themselves to settle their own affairs. And this is what they are in the process of doing. I myself say that it is up to the Polish Government. It is up to the Polish United Workers' Party. It is up to the Polish people. It is up to the Solidarity trade union movement. It is up to them and them alone to resolve the problems which have arisen by thwarting the provocations from wherever they originate, by succeeding in carrying out the necessary transformations. I know that this concept of the matter is going to disappoint certain people because Poland has false friends in France and in the world, false friends who wish for the intervention of the Soviet Union. Well, I am convinced that their hopes will be disappointed.

CHIRAC COMMENTS ON OTHER CANDIDATES, POLAND

[Text] Arras--On the afternoon of Wednesday, 18 March, Jacques Chirac visited Pas-de-Calais accompanied by Olympic champion Guy Drut, a native of the region. In this department, which is represented in the National Assembly by nine Socialist and five Communist deputies, the RPR candidate held no public meetings, but in various places answered several questions concerning in particular the abolition of the employment tax, unemployment, career training, tax reform and budget cuts.

At Arras, the last stop on his visit, 49 mayors from the coastal area of Pas-de-Calais formally submitted to him sponsorship documents on his behalf, instructing him to convey them to the Constitutional Council.

In Bethune, when asked about the difficult relations between Socialist Mayor and Deputy Jacques Mellick and his Communist partners, Mr Chirac replied that he saw in this "an illustration of what would happen if by mischance--that is not too strong a word--the French people elect Francois Mitterrand." He also cited Mr Giscard d'Estaing's conduct, saying that "my main criticism of the past 7 years is that we have been misled. He has gradually allowed--more by weakness than by design, moreover--a situation to develop in the direction of socialism, having preached a free society, hence, the need for action consistent with one's words." In Lens, he repeated that "Mr Mitterrand's election would imply disorder, but a continuation of present policy would also be rash."

In this area where there are many descendants of Polish emigres , Mr Chirac was asked about the threats facing Poland. He said that if the Soviets threaten that country, France should adopt a steadfast stance toward them, "publicly denounce the violation of the Helsinki Accords and stop exports of key equipment and technology." He said: "The Soviets fully understand the language of steadfastness when this steadfastness is shown toward them."

LE MONDE PONDERS U.S. AFRICA, CARIBBEAN POLICY

[Editorial: "Washington and Its Real Friends"]

[Text] Before it has even defined a clear view of East-West relations and a coherent European policy, Mr Reagan's United States is adopting an increasing number of stances and making an increasing number of gestures in keeping with its new doctrine in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean.

You just have to recall the spectacular performances of Mr Carter's first UN ambassador, Andrew Young--a black American--more or less officially espousing the cause of all liberation movements and anathematizing South Africa, to see the extent of the change which the Republican administration intends to make. The aim henceforth is to make up lost time and ground by supporting the only state capable of resisting Soviet-Cuban enterprises in the region. This clearly means ending South Africa's quarantine or at least coming to terms with Mr Botha's "moderate" line. Hence, the shelving of the UN plan on Namibia and the--as yet discreet--offer of assistance for UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] rebels fighting a guerrilla war in Angola against the Luanda government which Washington still has not recognized.

Of course, the rapprochement now emerging between the United States and South Africa is prompting cries and protests from "progressive" or democratic African governments, especially Nigeria which is the second biggest supplier of U.S. oil. Has the risk of alienating black African opinion and leaders been carefully weighed or are declarations of intent merely being made in the U.S. capital to see how far it is possible to go in a complete reversal of the policy followed by Mr Carter? It is not true that South Africa has nothing but friends in the United States, and, under pressure from students, several universities have been forced to sell the South African shares they owned. Public opinion is, on the whole, relatively poorly informed about the African situation, and unless Mr Reagan wins unlikely victories in the field, he will find it difficult to reap any benefit at home from having challenged communist expansionism in the field.

This does not quite apply to America south of the Rio Grande or to the Caribbean where it is probable that any defeat inflicted on Mr Castro--the region's "bugaboo" whose name is known to all Americans--would be welcomed with satisfaction at least by a majority of Mr Reagan's compatriots. The initial attempts to improve the image of the Chilean and Argentinian regimes--Argentinian president-designate General Viola has just made a noteworthy and fruitful visit to Washington--have more than symbolic value.

Moves are being made toward complete "normalization" of relations between the authoritarian states and the U.S. democracy while, despite the cacophany of statements on the subject, El Salvador is still perceived as a test of the U.S. determination to halt Cuban influence and infiltration. State Department officials, followed by General Haig himself, have even hinted that the hypothesis of military actions against Cuba had not been ruled out, which tends to prove that it takes around 20 years to erase the memory of a U.S. disaster from people's imagination--in this case, the memory of the abortive landing at the Bay of Pigs.

PCF STATEMENT ON SOCIALIST OPPOSITION TO MARCHAIS

LD231211 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 17 Mar 81 p 3

[Text] The PCF Politburo yesterday published the following statement:

The Politburo denounces the machination hatched with respect to a report by a PRAVDA correspondent in Paris.

The ballyhoo organized since Friday with reference to that report has been based on deliberate falsification, misrepresentation of the text and an intentionally distorted interpretation.

In fact, even though the assessment of one aspect of Giscard's policy contained in the article in question differs from ours, it is intellectually and politically dishonest to assert that it is tantamount to an appeal by Leonid Brezhnev to vote for Giscard d'Estaing. Anyone who reads that article, whose text we reprinted in L'HUMANITE yesterday, will realize that such an assertion is completely groundless. It is distortion, a lie.

By staging this machination and pursuing it rashly and without restraint, the PS leaders have launched an inexcusable and unacceptable operation aimed yet again at distorting the PCF's policy and objectives.

In fact, no one can be unaware that the PCF is the only party in our country which has consistently denounced and fought against any interference in our national political life, wherever it may come from. It is the only party which has not asked for any foreign guarantee or support.

The accusations leveled at us are especially inappropriate because they come from the PS, a party whose candidate prepared for the presidential election by visiting in turn his godfathers in Washington, Bonn, Tel Aviv, Beijing and Pyongyang. A party which decided without any qualms to organize in Paris in a few days' time a conference of foreign leaders who were asked to support Francois Mitterrand directly in his election campaign.

We observe and deplore the fact that, once more carried away by their desire to strike blows at Georges Marchais, Francois Mitterrand and other Socialist leaders have gone so far as to launch an operation which, as must be obvious to all, can only benefit Giscard d'Estaing.

Following Lionel Jospin's revelations on the subversive activities hatched against the PCF, this new operation prompts us to ask a question which has already been put forward by Georges Marchais: Have Francois Mitterrand and the other Socialist leaders not decided that their only objective is to seek to weaken the PCF at all costs, even if they have to abandon the idea of defeating Giscard d'Estaing as a result?

As far as we are concerned, nothing, absolutely nothing, will divert us from the policy which we have adopted, namely, do everything in our power to unite the people's forces to defeat Giscard d'Estaing and to create preconditions for the real change for which the workers and France hope.

With this end in mind, the Politburo appeals to all Communists to renew their efforts to achieve what represents a decisive precondition for such a change--ensuring that as many votes as possible are cast for Georges Marchais on 26 April.

PCF COMMENTS ON MAURITANIAN COUP ATTEMPT

LD241001 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 19 Mar 81 p 12

[Text] PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz has released the following statement on Monday's attempted coup to overthrow the Mauritanian regime.

"The attempted coup d'etat in Mauritania poses some serious questions. The Moroccan monarchy is directly implicated, having waged a colonial war against the Saharan people for the past 3 years. The aggression was directed from Rabat where the initiators of the coup are to be found.

"The conspiracy unfolded a few days after Hassan II's private and confidential visit to Mr Giscard d'Estaing. Did France give the go-ahead for the operation? This is the question that all observers are asking themselves.

"Be that as it may, Mr Giscard d'Estaing is directly implicated in this because he is arming and aiding Morocco and recently sent in French troops against the Saharan people.

"Moreover, the Senegal of Mr Senghor--deputy chairman of the Socialist International and loyal ally of the French president--served as the conspirators' rear base.

"So, instead of contributing to peace in the region--by assisting the direct dialogue between the Polisario and Morocco envisaged by the United Nations--Giscard is once again stirring up conflicts.

"We can only share the Algerian Government's concern at the threats posed to the region's peace by Moroccan expansionism. The PCF, which has expressed active solidarity with the Polisario Front from the outset, confirms its condemnation of the Moroccan aggression and its attachment to the Saharan people's inalienable right to freedom and independence."

L'UNITA: QADDUMI TALKS WITH PAJETTA DURING VISIT

[Excerpt] Rome--[PCI International Affairs Department chief] Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta had a conversation yesterday with PLO Political Department Chief Faruq Qaddumi, with whom he discussed the problems of the Middle East, particularly the action conducted by the PLO for the liberation of Palestine, for the recognition of the Palestinian people's rights and for the recognition of the PLO as their legitimate representative by Italy and its government. During the meeting, Comrade Pajetta confirmed the Italian Communists' full solidarity with the Palestinian people and their combatants and stressed that the authority of Yasir 'Arafat and the PLO in Italy has certainly been strengthened by Qaddumi's talks over the past few days with Minister Colombo and Cardinal Casaroli, and that the new proposals put forward by Qaddumi will undoubtedly increase the Italian people's movement's sympathy and action for the realization of the PLO's objectives. The Italian side was also represented by PCI Central Committee member Comrade Antonio Rubbi and by Comrade Remo Salati of the PCI foreign section.

[Excerpts] Rome--There was a full house at the Foreign Policy Studies Center [CESPI] for the debate between Communists and [PSI] Lombardi group leftwingers on the subject of "Europe and the United States: What Kind of Relationship in View of the International Crisis?" This political event was advertised by posters on the city's walls for several days. Those taking part on the communist side were [PCI Directorate members] Gerardo Chiaromonte and Gian Carlo Pajetta and CESPI Secretary Romano Ledda, who organized the event together with ICIPEC [expansion unknown]. The socialists were represented by Riccardo Lombardi, Claudio Signorile, Giuseppe Santoro and Paolo Vittorelli.

With Reagan, Ledda pointed out, the area of diversity of interests between the United States and its allies is expanding, and this expansion reflects the U.S. bid to restore an absolute form of leadership--a bid which is mirrored in the Eastern bloc with the demands for bloc discipline. At the same time an attempt is being made to "eliminate" the crucial problem of a different kind of North-South rapport. Santoro discussed the characteristics of the new bipolarism, which Reagan is trying to base on the crisis in nonalignment and in North-South negotiations, pointing out that the Soviet response is balanced but bears the same mark. The Polish crisis and the ferment in the Third World in fact stem from the same kind of intolerance.

Is a return to polarism realistic now, Pajetta asked? Neither Reagan nor the Soviets are the only ones to decide. There are other protagonists: the nonaligned countries, the oil producing countries and Europe. A great deal can come from a European involvement in the dialogue between the major powers. Brezhnev has put forward some interesting proposals: How specific are they? It remains to be seen. The Italian Communists and Socialists have a role and a duty to perform in this. When in fall 1979 the communists proposed a moratorium on Euromissiles, the socialists accused them of being unrealistic. Now that proposal has been overtaken by decisions already taken. But the fact that Brezhnev is taking it up does reopen some possibilities. Europe, Pajetta added, can play an autonomous role within the alliance. But it must be able to repel pressures to distort its original framework. Italy can exert an influence if it refuses to toe the line: It is important that Colombo has received Salvadoran Front leader Ungo. It is also necessary to reject an indirect contribution to the extension of the alliance beyond its geographical limits; the principle of safeguarding the balance of forces between the blocs must be made to prevail when the issue of Spain's membership arises. The left's role is decisive; unless communists and socialists manage to join forces, they will both lose ground.

JUAN CARLOS WARNS AGAINST DECLINE IN AUTHORITY

LD241756 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] At midday today the king took the chair at a plenary meeting held at the Royal Palace of the supreme councils of the army, the navy and the air force. The meeting was also attended by Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and Defense Minister Alberto Oliart. The meeting, the first of its kind held by the king with all three supreme councils, comes in the wake of the decisions taken by the government to bring the armed forces into the antiterrorist struggle.

Don Juan Carlos delivered an important speech, of which we now offer you some of the most noteworthy passages.

On the question of the escalation of terrorism in recent days, the king said that it is aimed once more at members of the armed forces, with the purpose of fraying their nerves and causing them to lose their calm. In view of this, Don Juan Carlos said, it is necessary to act decisively, moving from an attitude of patient defensiveness to one of a vigorous offensive.

At another point in his address the king said that the law can be overruled only when circumstances lead to its being changed or rescinded through legally established procedures, not through force or mere disregard.

Further on, he said that members of the armed forces must pause and reflect on the possible consequences of actions which might lead nowhere though they might bring real tragedies. And it should not be forgotten, Don Juan Carlos said, that such tragic results, born of impetuous overreaction, might unfortunately also come about, more slowly, through a decline in authority and gradual overriding of constitutional norms.

CONGRESS TO DEBATE ANTITERRORIST DRAFT LAW

LD242056 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1830 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] The Congress of Deputies will debate a draft law next week making it an offense to belong to armed organzations or to supply such organizations with information for the implementation of terrorist actions. This was agreed today by congress officials in response to the request from the government that this law--known as "defense of the constitution"--should be dealt with under the urgency procedure as part of the spcial measures approved by the government yesterday to tackle terrorism,

In essence, this draft law consists of modifications to a number of articles of the penal code relating to terrorism and defense of the institutions.

The party spokesmen also considered the government's request for the draft law defining states of emergency, alert and siege to be dealt with under the urgency procedure. The chamber could begin to discuss this bill next week or the following week at the latest.

Finally, at this morning's meeting, the spokesman further agreed that the request from the government to draw up a law for harmonization of the autonomous communities be raised at the next plenary session.

POLICE ARREST BASQUE ACTIVISTS; REACTION PREDICTED

NC241323 Paris AFP in English 1310 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Bilbao, northern Spain, 24 Mar (AFP)--Members of the Basque autonomous parliament were among scores of activists in the separatist Herri Batasuna organisation arrested in a dawn swoop by Spanish police, a reliable source said here today.

The raid was intended to pick up more than 100 members of the organisation, which is linked to the military wing of the Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group [ETA] movement responsible for a wave of recent guerrilla attacks, but many were not at home, the source said.

Also arrested were local councillors, including the deputy mayors of Munguia, Durango and Hernani, and another councillor from Navarre who was among six people arrested in the province for suspected link with ETA.

Last night, the Spanish Government said it would use troops in a crackdown on Basque guerrilla activities and ask parliament for authority to declare varying degrees of emergency.

The army will be used under a unified command in operations against terrorists, including border surveillance to prevent guerrillas using France as a refuge.

The government moves are expected to appease hard-line elements following last month's abortive coup aimed at securing tougher measures in the Basque country, but observers predicted a violent reaction from ETA to today's arrests.

Police on Alert

NC250956 Paris AFP in English 0944 GMT 25 Mar 81

[Text] Madrid, 25 Mar (AFP)--Police were on full alert in Madrid today amid fears that Basque nationalist extremists would attempts another terror attack against a Spanish army officer, a police source said here.

Well-informed sources said police had discovered that an ETA-Military hit squad was planning to assassinate a lieutenatn-colonel in reprisal for Monday's government decision to deploy troops in the troubled Basque region.

The commando was believed led by Andres Izaguirre Gogorza, nicknamed "Gogor", who went into hiding after a shootout with security forces in Madrid on February 4. His photo was published in a number of today's newspapers here.

All police units in the capital were under orders to step up security measures and carry out scrupulous identity checks on any suspicious person.

Army officers were urged to take extra care when travelling between home and work, and bodyguards of leading political figures were also alerted.

Special security measures were in force at official buildings such as the Defence Ministry, and 250 police led by a national police captain were ringing the parliament building.

Police sources said ETA-Military extremists could also be planning to strike in Saragossa, some 300 kms (200 miles) north of Madrid, where another commando had been uncovered.

Security experts were however convinced that Madrid was the most likely place for a new terrorist operation.

The president of the autonomous Basque government was due to have talks here today with Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, and officials have pointed out that previous ETA attacks were timed to coincide with the Basque politician's Madrid meetings in an effort to sabotage autonomy talks.

GOVERNMENT SEEKS RECALL OF SOVIET FIRM OFFICIAL

NC241805 Paris AFP in English 1758 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Madrid, 24 Mar (AFP)--The Spanish Government has asked Soviet authorities to recall "(?as soon) as possible" Yuri Ivanovich Buchkov, director of the Spanish-Soviet Sovhispan firm, reliable sources here said today.

The move, accepted by the Soviet Union, was reportedly due to certain activities of Mr Buchkov which were "related to national security," the sources said.

A 53-year-old married man with one child, Mr Buchkov moved into the top position at Sovhispan following the 1978 recall to Moscow of former director Yuri Timofeyev, who was expelled from Spain after being charged with corruption and imprisoned in a financial scandal.

On March 7, the Spanish Government expelled an attache of the Soviet Embassy in Madrid, Vladimir Ilich Yefremenkov, who was accused of attempting to infiltrate the intelligence services of the Spanish Army.

Mr Buchkov's Sovhispan office is located in Santa Cruz de Tenerife, in the Canary Islands. The company, which is controlled by the Soviet Union, has often been linked in the Spanish press with KGB activities and spy fishing boats in the waters off the Canaries.

Since 1977 when Madrid established diplomatic relations with Moscow, eight Soviet citizens have been expelled from Spain.

SWEDEN, NORWAY TO PURSUE OIL-FOR-POWER DEAL

LD241607 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 21 Mar 81 p 29

[Sofie Petzell report]

[Text] Sweden will supply 2 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity to Norway a year in exchange for 2 million tons of oil a year from Norway. The two countries' economic laws will be harmonized and an industry fund with a capital of 250 million kronor [SKR] will be formed.

This is the thrust of the new Norwegian-Swedish agreement signed Friday afternoon [20 March] in Oslo.

The last 2 days saw intensive final negotiations in Oslo. The Swedish delegation with Under Secretary Robert Nilsson as its head traveled home to Sweden Friday afternoon.

"This is the first concrete result of negotiations which commenced in 1977," Industry Minister Nils Asling told SVENSKA DAGBLADET.

He said that developments in the last few years show how difficult it is to reach cooperation agreements on concrete projects. The harmonization of laws will now be a first step toward increasing opportunities in this field. The industry minister would ideally like to see a single Swedish-Norwegian capital market and a single stocks and shares market as the logical extension of this work. However, the road to this will be a long one.

First the prerequisites for economic cooperation and for the establishment of companies must be improved in the two countries.

The fund totaling SKr250 million will make this easier. According to the agreement, the Swedish Government will advance around SKr200 million and the Norwegian around 50 million. The fund will probably primarily be used to support Swedish establishments in Norway. The fund's administration will be located in Stockholm.

The exchange of oil for electricity will mean billions of kronor in trade. The oil agreement will run for 20 years and also means that the 2 million-ton figure will increase toward the end of this period.

The electricity agreement will run for 10 years. Normal prices will be paid for both the oil and electricity.

FINLAND

GOVERNMENT PROPOSES NEW DISARMAMENT INITIATIVE

LD241216 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] Finland has, at the Madrid CSCE follow-up meeting, presented a detailed initiative concerning a European disarmament conference. Finland's aim is to examine the attitude of the most important CSCE countries to a possible mediation settlement.

According to sources at the follow-up meeting, the Finnish proposal was submitted about a week ago to the delegations of the Soviet Union, the United States and France which have taken a central role at disarmament conference talks. The Finnish proposal takes into consideration the most important points in the main proposals made at the conference, particularly by France and Poland. Finland proposes that the conference be held in several stages. The first stage would concentrate on discussing confidence-building measures while the following CSCE follow-up would examine the progress made on the basis of this first stage. The agenda of the second stage would include the actual disarmament issues in full.

FOREIGN MINISTER URGES FOREIGN AID BOOST

[Text] "Finland should increase its Third World aid next year by 170 million markkaa [Emk] so that we keep to the plans for our development aid," Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen said in Helsinki Thursday [19 March].

A Emk 170 million increase in the Third World development aid program would raise Finnish Third World aid to 0.32 percent of the GNP. Finland is striving to increase its development aid to 9.7 percent of GNP by the middle of this decade, in accordance with UN recommendations.

Vayrynen thought that Finland could perhaps reach this target by 1988.

It is Vayrynen's view that Finland should adhere to the aid plans which have already been made, despite economic difficulties. Finland is trailing behind the other Nordic countries in its development aid program. Sweden and Norway are already setting aside 1 percent of their GNP for development aid purposes, and Denmark the recommended 0.7 percent.

Finland's development aid would total Emk 730 million next year if the Emk 170 million increase comes about. This year's development aid totals Emk 560 million.

Vayrynen expressed a wish that there will be sufficient willingness among politicians to maintain the pace in development aid.

Vayrynen was speaking at a seminar in Helsinki, which had met to discuss the problems of the poorest developing countries. The special UN conference will discuss this topic in the fall.

"The largest part of Finland's development aid does go to the poorest developing countries, a fact which international organizations have noted," Vayrynen said. "We cannot expect any structural changes in our development aid program, so an increase in aid to the present recipient countries is therefore the central goal."

SWEDEN

LD231543 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 19 Mar 81 p 6

[Magdalena Ribbing report]

[Text] Peace and agreement reigned across political boundaries when the Riksdag yesterday debated foreign policy. Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten (Liberal) was strikingly critical of the U.S. role in the Third World, and opposition leader Olof Palme (Social Democrat) said that yesterday's was the best foreign policy declaration which the nonsocialist government had achieved.

As usual, the Riksdag's central public gallery was filled with diplomats, the envoys from other countries, who received a simultaneous translation of the speeches. Ola Ullsten, who described on behalf of the government the outline of Swedish foreign policy at present, devoted much time to the Third World, and was very clear in his view of the United States.

"The United States' and other Western powers' active or passive support for governments or military juntas in the Third World which have shown their opposition to social change has often been justified with the explanation that the aim has been to exclude communist influence. There has been a mistake in choosing to see all conflicts in this part of the world in a simple East-West perspective. And this as a rule has benefited the interests it was intended to oppose.

El Salvador is an example of this, Ola Ullsten said: If the U.S. policy is an attempt to set a precedent for how the new administration intends to react in other situations, there is reason for the greatest concern, the foreign minister said:

"It is a dangerous and shortsighted policy to exploit small countries to set a precedent in world power politics."

These sections of the foreign policy declaration have been the subject of much discussion within the government, and not all government members appreciate the tougher tone toward the United States than Sweden normally adopts in official statements.

But for balance's sake, Ola Ullsten also raised the Soviet Union's attempts to advance its position in the Third World, and said that this exacerbated national antagonism and contributed to destabilizing world peace.

On the Middle East question, the Swedish Government is of the opinion that the Camp David agreement does not mean that any further progress will be made.

"The EEC nations' initiative through the so-called Venice Declaration last year accompanied by active traveling diplomacy must be seen as a positive contribution to the process of finding a forum for the negotiations."

This is the first time that Sweden has supported EEC efforts to try to encourage the parties in the Middle East to start to hold serious talks on a future peace.

"Rearmament is one of the most worrying elements in developments in recent years," Ola Ullsten said. "The north European and North Atlantic area's strategic importance has increased in recent years, and we cannot ignore the fact that shifts in world politics can also influence our part of the globe."

Sweden must continue its nonaligned policy and maintain a strong defense system, Ola Ullsten said, and raised the current question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic community.

"A precondition for the establishment of such a zone is that other states affected are willing to participate."

"Any future agreement on a nuclear-free zone must also include nuclear arms intended for targets in the zone, stationed near the zone and with such range that they are ideally suited for use on targets within the Nordic countries."

"The broad support for the main outlines of Swedish foreign policy is most pleasing," Social Democratic Party leader Olof Palme said, and praised Ola Ullsten for "today's satisfactory foreign policy declaration." But Defense Minister Erik Kronmark's (Moderate Coalition Party) explanation that Sweden must firmly fulfill its security policy commitments in the Nordic community was debatable, Olof Palme said:

"We have a commitment only to the policy of neutrality which we shaped ourselves. There are no other demands on us. I hope that this platitude will not be repeated."

Ola Ullsten agreed with this and thus criticized his government colleague Erik Kronmark.

"It is clear that we have a duty to ourselves. If any other formulations have given rise to misunderstandings, they must be seen as accidental ."

Olof Palme thought that this repudiation of Erik Kronmark was excellent, as he put it.

But as leader of the opposition he criticized a number of points in the government's foreign policy, principally the Telub affair [current Swedish Government scandal involving the training of Libyan soldiers to use electronic equipment]--it has foreign policy aspects, he said, and demanded parliamentary access (with representatives of all the Riksdag parties) to the one-man commission which has investigated the affair. Ola Ullsten did not wish to promise him this in the debate in the chamber. But if the constitutional committee decides that this should happen, there could be parliamentary access later.

The South Africa law and the dispensation which the government recently gave to the Sandvik Company for reinvestment were also criticized by Olof Palme. The Foreign Policy Affairs Committee should be convened in such matters, he said, and Ola Ullsten promised that this could happen in the future.

In his address Olof Palme criticized the policy of the superpowers and said that the world cannot afford to allow the detente process to end.

"Nor can the world afford a relapse into the Cold War, with a clear-cut division of the world, with propaganda instead of talks."

We also feel today great concern for democracy, Olof Palme said:

"In the time of economic crisis, with millions unemployed, with an aggressive right marketing the evaluations of egotism, a cold wind blows."

Examples of this are neonazism in West Germany and the aggressive new right in France, Olof Palme said. He too devoted a large part of his speech to the Third World, in particular to the situation in El Salvador. Later, Olof Palme dealt with a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area, which he wants the Swedish Government to look into and assess through contacts with the other Nordic governments.

Olof Palme has often spoken of the enormous arms race, and even in today's speech he raised the obvious danger of a nuclear catastrophe if nothing is done for disarmament.

"But, of course at the same time, I see hope for the future. If the public, the citizens, the people can gain access to the facts of the matter in time, public opinion could force the politicians to gain control and begin disarming."

Olof Palme thought that Soviet Party Chief Leonid Brezhnev's speech in February contained a number of interesting proposals and showed that the Soviet Union is concerned to get the detente process underway again. Ola Ullsten, who had not mentioned the Brezhnev speech in the foreign policy declaration, said in a later reply that he agreed and that the speech had a conciliatory tone.

"I hope that it was really meant," Ola Ullsten said.

Communist Left Party leader Lars Werner also referred to the current rearmament lunacy and proposed that all parties should immediately call on the superpowers to ratify SALT II as soon as possible and to break off the new nuclear arms program.

Both NATO and the Warsaw Pact should refrain from deploying their nuclear arms, Lars Werner said.

PAPER DECRIES HAIG VIEW OF JOINT DEFENSE IN AREA

NC251022 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 25 Mar 81 p 1

[From the "Positions" column: "Haig's Statements"]

[Text] From the recent statement by U.S. Secretary of State Haig before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, the portion on Cyprus must certainly have drawn the attention of most of us. The people of Cyprus eagerly await to hear what this superpower has to say about us from time to time, although U.S. policy on Cyprus is very well known. The people of Cyprus discern that, to a certain degree, U.S. interests in themselves affect our fate without our contributing to this.

Artfully worded statements, praise and esteem expressed for Greece from time to time, cannot erase the disappointment felt by Hellenism everywhere. In his latest statement, Haig does not hesitate to stress: "Turkey and Greece are two of our most important allies." The last phrase of his statement: "Greece and Turkey are extremely important to each other's defense," struck us in particular.

Our country was scorched by Turkey, and we--who have lived this tragedy and still live the tragedy of having refugees numbering one-third of our fatherland's population--read the above excerpt of Haig's statement with at least a certain amount of wondering. We do not conceal that at least some of us were estranged by it. We wonder how Haig can expect a country which invaded Cyprus, massacred, raped and uprooted the Cypriot population--which happens to be 80 percent Greek--to become a factor and even an important factor at that, for the very defense of Greece itself. What guarantees does Turkey have to offer that it will play such a role?

Has Haig forgotten that when Turkey attacked Cyprus and when Greece was forced to arm its islands against the grave danger of having to face a Turkish attack, Turkey strongly opposed this arming of the Greek islands? Has he forgotten that a Greek-Turkish clash was barely averted at that time because Turkey refused Greece the right to defend its own territory? Has he forgotten that the population massacred by the hordes of Attila in Cyprus was a Greek population? Has he stopped to think that thousands and thousands of Americans could be massacred by an invading country--if we are to use proportional figures--when the United States hasten to offer this massacring power large-scale defense aid in the event this power is in danger? Does Haig imagine that U.S. interests, defended by the alliances he mentions, are so strong that they could easily cover up crimes such as those committed against the people of Cyprus and then relegate them to oblivion?

In order to get to the core of the matter, whom must Greece fear and defend itself against with the valuable support of Turkey in such a struggle? Could this be the Eastern coalition, whose members maintain friendly relations with Greece and support Greece on such a large national issue as the Cyprus issue? Could it be that we are only shadow-boxing for the sole purpose of promoting U.S. interests in the eastern Mediterranean and beyond, in the Arabian Gulf, seeing at the same time imaginary dangers in order to leave Greece unprotected against the true danger which is none other than Turkish expansionism?

UK'S IAN GILMOUR GIVES VIEWS ON CYPRUS ISSUES

NC242121 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 24 Mar 81

[Text] In an interview during tonight's television feature "Panorama" Britain's Deputy Foreign Secretary Ian Gilmour referred to the Cyprus problem and replied to questions connected with the significance of UN resolutions and the intercommunal talks and other issues which concern Cyprus.

In reply to a question whether the reference to the tyranny of words, which he had made during his visit to Cyprus, also concerns UN resolutions, Ian Gilmour said the following:

No, I do not think UN resolutions are part of the tyranny of words, but I do think they have to be considered very carefully so that you would not want to detract in any way from their value. However, the British Government studies any UN resolution very carefully before it agrees with it. I think that certainly this is what every Western government does, like any other government. If the British Government believes that the resolution is correct and has practical value then it agrees with it. If it believes that it is erroneous, that it does not help becaue it does not have practical value, then it does not agree. In any case, I think we must admit that even good resolutions do not solve a problem. Perhaps they help in solving problems. Perhaps they constitute a basis for a solution but they do not solve problems. If UN resolutions could solve problems, the Cyprus problem would have been solved long ago and the Arab-Israeli problem, for instance, would also have been solved long ago. UN resolutions do not solve problems, and consequently, something like the Cyprus problem can only be solved I think not through UN resolutions but through talks between the parties, intercommunal talks. This is the only basis for a solution and for this reason the British Government has strongly supported the intercommunal talks that are going on.

Of course, we recognize that very strong feelings exist in both sides and we fully recognize the reasons for them. I was trying to say, when I said that, that I did not think recriminations regarding the past help the problem's solution. They do not contribute to progress in the intercommunal talks, and, therefore, I think that it is much better to proceed without recriminations.

Recently, in the talks that are going on under UN auspices, there has been some progress. The talks are going on in an exceptionally good atmosphere and we support them strongly and we hope they will continue patiently and with flexibility.

Then the following question was submitted to the British deputy foreign secretary: For humanitarian reasons, as it states, the British Government is giving aid in many forms to the illegal Denktas regime. Such aid contributes to the creation of conditions for a form of solution that has not been agreed upon by the two parties and that is contrary to UN resolutions and to the principles to which Great Britain professes allegiance.

Gilmour replied: With all respect, that is not right. Britain, let me make it clear, recognizes the Republic of Cyprus. It recognizes one regime in Cyprus, the Republic of Cyprus, that is, the government of President Kiprianou. That is our position, and that is the position of all Western governments, our allies and all others. Similarly, our policy on aid and recognition is the same as that of our partners. Thus, we do not give aid to what is called the Denktas regime. What we recognize is the reality of two communities in Cyprus. This is the reality which the agreement of 1960 and the UN resolutions which you mentioned before recognize, and which we also recognize.

The policy of the United Kingdom and the European Community is to aid both communities, not regimes--aid to both communities in proportion to their populations. I am sure you would agree that it would be wrong either for us or for the EEC to ostracize and ignore the Turkish community. That would be wrong, and certainly it would not be to the interest of the Greek Cypriots or the Cyprus Government. Our aid is not political. It is being given for humanitarian reasons and, in the view of all, the better the condition of both communities in Cyprus the more probable there will be a solution to the problem and the more suitable the atmosphere will be for negotiations.

In reply to another question whether such aid should not be funneled through the Cyprus Government, Sir Ian Gilmour said:

Well, there is a great difficulty there, as you know. Certainly, what we are doing is in no way different from what everybody else is doing, and it is to aid the Turkish community, not the Turkish regime.

Asked what Britain intends to do to help both parties find a peaceful, permament and just solution to the Cyprus problem, since it had undertaken a commitment to guarantee Cyprus' independence, the British deputy foreign secretary replied:

Obviously, we have and have had for a very long time the very closest links with Cyprus, links of history, links from the treaty that you mentioned, links because of the large Cypriot community in London, links of commerce--much trade is conducted between us--and, of course, there is the link of the Commonwealth, because both countries are members of the Commonwealth.

I do not think it helps--we go back to what we said before--to try to analyze what were the obligations of everyone as a result of the treaty and whether these were fulfilled precisely. Certainly, however, the United Kingdom has contributed to Cyprus. It has contributed the most to the UN force. We pay about 20 million [currency not identified] every year. Certainly, we have always tried to help every possibility for negotiations that there has been and when it appeared in 1978 that a gap existed, together with the United States and Canada we undertook an initiative, and, as you remember, the initiative was not very successful.

People from both sides constantly urge me to say that the British Government should undertake a further initiative. When it originates at the Greek side they say: You should exert pressure on the Turks. When it originates at the Turkish side side they say: You should exert pressure on the Greeks. No side would like to be the target. We cannot advance against the opposition of the communities. We must advance together with the cooperation of the communities, and I think it would be wrong and completely unfeasible to try to exert pressure on one or the other side. Therefore, we believe that it is right to give all the help we can to the UN initiative and we have said to the Cyprus Government, to everybody, to the Republic of Cyprus, to Turkey, to Greece that we shall give every help we can and we are ready to do so. However, we do not believe it would be right now to inaugurate a new initiative that would cross with the UN initiative which under the current circumstances we believe has much better prospects for all of Cyprus.

On the basis of the 1960 agreement, it was stated to Gilmour that Britain is bound to pay an annual sum to the Cyprus Government for certain facilities that are offered to the British bases on the island. These sums, however, have not been paid for many years. Sir Ian was asked what he had to say on this issue, and he replied as follows:

Well, with respect, I do not think that you have read the treaty lately, because, in fact, it does not say that we should pay a sum of money every year. In fact, there is no obligation on us to pay for facilities on the bases, and we have fulfilled our obligation. In addition, as I said previously, we have contributed in many ways. We have contributed technical aid. We are the first in contributions to the UN force. We have contributed for the refugees. The value of foreign exchange to the republic from the bases is about 40 million pounds every year. We offered help in 1978 and it was not accepted. We have agreed to hold unofficial talks on this problem and I think this is the best way to discuss it.

PAPANDREOU OUTLINES FOREIGN, DOMESTIC POLICY

[Excerpts] On Saturday, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou spoke at a dinner for about 1,000 party personalities. He referred to problems facing the agrarian sector of the economy, PASOK's positions on the EEC, NATO and our relations with Turkey.

"Today in Crete," Papandreou continued, "The country's prime minister and 'New Democracy' leader, Rallis, attacked PASOK's foreign policy and even stated that a change in foreign policy would mean a change in the social system as well as other things which I do not recall and which are not worth my recalling.

"I would like to say a few words on our foreign policy. We have stressed that Greece simultaneously belongs to the Balkans, to the Mediterranean and to Europe, both to the West and East Europe, to the whole of Europe. We in Greece do not have any obligation to reaffirm and ratify the Yalta and Potsdam agreements. We are interested only in the interests of our people and we ignore anything that takes place behind the backs of our people.

"It is unacceptable for the peoples of Europe--so many years after the end of the war--to live within the framework of the great division of spoils and of subjugation to the great powers. This is unacceptable for the peoples of Europe. What I say should not be taken as a provocation because it is not wise to provoke. It is being said in the form of expressing a decision by our people, by this movement, at least, on what affects its own country, and to uphold the principle that the people, and only the people, have the power and the right to lay down the course for this country.

"In reference to the Common Market we spoke very clearly to the people right from the start. We stated that our country's accession to the Common Market does not serve our national and people's interests. We said that accession will cost the working people a great deal and that the course of development will be forced upon us by foreign metropolitan decisionmaking centers. We warned the agricultural population of Greece that the EEC will destroy the countryside, it will hand over the countryside to limited companies within the framework of multinational companies and our farmers and their children will be forced to emigrate to the cities of Greece or abroad. If, to say the least, the EEC guaranteed that jobs would be available in the cities, that there would be development, that our industry would not only survive but would also develop, thus making room for those who would emigrate from the villages, then everything would be all right. Not even this, however, is likely to happen. This is because the blow to be delivered against our industry and its progress will be a decisive one. We have said this many years ago and we repeat it today. Today, however, there is also proof that we are right. The people of Greece, whether small to medium business people, professionals, or farmers already know well what the EEC means and what accession to it means."

"The great answer given by PASOK," Papandreou continues, "is that if our agriculture is to survive, develop and produce, it is essential that we must establish agricultural-industrial cooperatives as soon as possible. We have been proposing this for so many years." Papandreou continued: "In Greece we have to face--apart from the well-known official economy which is covered by Bank of Greece and statistical service bulletins--a sideline economy. This is a circuit of profiteering of untold dimensions. This is a profiteering circuit related to 150 billion drachma in tax evasions, as estimated at this moment. The farmer is truly faced by a circuit of merchandising based upon profiteering and exploitation."

"Our position has been confirmed by developments. We said we would ask one question of the people: Accession or special relations? Special relations means an agreement with the EEC which would protect two basic things that would fundamentally permit the planning of our own economy.

"First, the movement of capital and investments in Greece must be undertaken within the framework of democratic planning, which PASOK will establish right from the start. It is essential that we must speedily develop those branches of our economy which, on a long term basis, will guarantee the survival and the autonomy of our country, and our decentralized, as we describe it, economy.

"The second great issue concerns imports. If one seriously plans to proceed with a development program which will provide opportunities for a better life, year after year, then one must guarantee one's foreign exchange, one must use it very carefully. This means that the Greek Government must have the ability to intervene in imports if it is to be in a position to plan."

"It falls within the jurisdictions and the privileges of the president of the republic to permit or not to permit such a plebiscite. If he should not permit one then what should we do? The answer is that we are bound by duty to serve the interests of this economy and the people even if it becomes necessary for us to use escape clauses or even to violate regulations in the same way that England, Germany, Italy and France are doing. Are we not able to do the same?"

In reference to NATO, Papandreou reminded everyone that Greece belonged to NATO during the time of the dictatorship, which was supplied arms by the alliance. He then referred to the postdictatorial political change and added:

"The present truth is that NATO, most certainly led by the United States of America, is turning Turkey into a truly great military power. Today Turkey has the greatest army in the area of West Europe. It has an army of over 500,000; it has an Aegean army of 120,000 and it has over 100 landing craft which, I can imagine, it could use for some operation in the Black Sea against the Soviet Union! NATO supports this army apparatus and at the same time it supports Turkey's claims--only in the Aegean airspace and undersea space for the time being. In Turkey, the eastern islands are described as Aegean islands and not as Greek islands. This is not the time to go into details. This, however, is for us the character of NATO.

"We are the only country in Europe that belongs to NATO which has suffered such humiliations and such national losses. Solely on the basis of these experiences, this nation has every right to say: Why should I stay within an alliance which has undermined my own democratic institutions, my peoples' sovereignty, the alliance which today holds nearly half of Cyprus under occupation, which today encourages Turkish expansionism at the expense of our own national territory?

"What does it mean for us to be within NATO? It means that the disposition of our country's armed forces is deployed against a specific enemy described as the Warsaw Pact. The deployment of our own forces falls within plans against this specific target. At the same time, the type of arms supplied to us is useful only for operations against the Warsaw Pact. This is not the type of military equipment which would prove useful in the defense of the east Aegean islands. We must state it clearly: aircraft, missile boats, helicopters--this is the type of equipment we will require to defend the land of our forefathers, as these gentlemen describe it. We must be in a position to mount an effective defense because it is only in this way that the danger of a Turkish invasion can be averted. It is only then that there will be no danger of a conflagration and a clash in the area. I wish to underline this: Defense of the national sovereign rights of our country, over our land, our airspace and our sea, this defense is the supreme duty of the Greek nation.

"This evening Rallis stated that the government's aspirations--always according to the Venizelos-Ataturk climate, is to establish a close brotherly friendship with Turkey. He also said that those who exaggerate endanger the country. I want to reply to Rallis by telling him that he has no right, in his capacity as prime minister of Greece, to speak of ties of friendship at a time when 38 percent of Cyprus is under the occupation of the troops of Attila, at the time when our sovereign rights in the Aegean are being questioned.

"One could use extremely heavy descriptive terms. We will not do so because I believe that this suffices. I would, however, like to remind Rallis that concessions and giving in only encourage the Turks. With what right did Rallis cede Turkey rights to Aegean airspace, rights which only Greece has a right to exercise? With what right did he offer airspace to Turkey at a time when the Turkish threat does exist, when the threat is direct, and at a time when he should not speak about those who exaggerate but when he should offer explanations to the Greek people about such decisions by his government?" Papandreou then said the European socialist and social democratic parties react to President Reagan's policy because they are faced with the danger of a nuclear war in their own countries. He underlined that PASOK is determined to contribute toward the strengthening of international detente.

Government Reaction

["Text" of 23 March statement by Deputy Prime Minister K. Papakonstandinou]

[Text] On the occasion of the Kileler anniversary [Thessalia farmers uprising in March 1910], the PASOK chairman has reiterated his well-known positions and slogans which did not add anything new. The government's foreign policy is well known and serves the country's actual interests, which also include the Cypriot issue.

Mr Papandreou has even called on the country's prime minister to give explanations for Greece's alleged concession of rights to Turkey. However, the PASOK chairman certainly knows that Greece has not conceded, nor does it intend to concede, airspace rights to Turkey.

As is known, under its responsibility for the international airspace falling within the Athens FIR [Flight Information Region] limits, the Greek Government has recently acted independently and taken certain measures which aimed at facilitating air navigation. These measures are in accordance with existing international rules and by no means do they affect the country's defense or other interests.

HUNGARIAN FRONT DELEGATION ARRIVES TO VISIT PASOK

NC241612 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 24 Mar 81 p 8

[Text] A delegation of the Hungarian Patriotic People's Front arrived in Athens yesterday at the invitation of PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou. The Hungarian delegation is headed by Mr Istvan Sarlos, secretary general of the Patriotic People's Front.

At midday yesterday, the Hungarian delegation had a meeting with Mr Papandreou and discussed with him international questions, problems of the region and questions of detente and peace. In the afternoon the delegation met with members of PASOK's Executive Bureau.

In a statement upon the arrival of the Hungarian delegation, Mr Papandreou stressed, among other things, the following: "When we visited Hungary, the focal issue was the struggle for peace, for checking the course toward cold war. I believe that this is going to be the subject of our talks here because, undoubtedly, there has been deterioration of the world situation in connection with the climate for detente and the question of disarmament."

On the other hand, Mr Sarlos said that during his talks with Mr Papandreou in Budapest he noted that Mr Papandreou has similar views on international problems, while their views converge on many points regarding the way of dealing with social problems.

YUGOSLAVIA'S DJURANOVIC BEGINS OFFICIAL VISIT

Received By Kirchschlaeger

LD022024 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1335 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 2 Apr (TANJUG)—President of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council Veselin Djuranovic, who today arrived on an official visit to Austria, was received by Austrian President Dr Rudolf Kirchschlaeger. In the ensuing shorter talk, questions of bilateral importance were discussed and the role of the two neighboring countries in European and world affairs stressed. At the start of the talk, Kirchschlaeger stressed his conviction that the visit of Yugoslav Premier Djuranovic will further contribute to cooperation between the two countries and that it will proceed in their interest.

Premier Djuranovic extended thanks for a warm welcome and expressed the usefulness of cooperation and frequent contacts between representatives of Yugoslavia and Austria.

Premier Djuranovic and members of his escort were guests at a luncheon given in their honour by President Kirchschlaeger.

Cooperation Stressed

LD022340 Belgrade TANJUG in English 2150 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 2 Apr (TANJUG)—Pointing to the significance of good relations between neutral Austria and nonaligned Yugoslavia for the creation of an atmosphere of detente in Europe, Austrian President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger today pressed for still more concrete cooperation between the two countries.

In his toast at the informal lunch given in Vienna in honour of Yugoslav Premier Veselin Djuranovic, who arrived here today for an official visit, President Kirchschlaeger especially emphasized the need for the further improvement of Yugoslav-Austrian trade and the significance of joint venture on the third markets.

Yugoslav Premier Djuranovic underlined that the atmosphere in relations between the two countries makes it possible to [word indistinct] solving certain concrete questions.

"I shall do all I can, under the existing constitution, for the minorities to be ensured their rights", President Kirchschlaeger said at the talks with Premier Djuranovic.

During this meeting the discussion also covered the international situation, initiatives at the Madrid meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation, and it was underlined that Austria and Yugoslavia are faithful to the committments undertaken in Helsinki.

Yugoslav Premier Djuranovic and his host, Austrian Chancellor Dr. Bruno Kreisky, began official talks this afternoon. This is the first broader exchange of views affter last year's visit to Yugoslavia [words indistinct] Kreisky.

KING ACCEPTS PRIME MINISTER MARTENS' RESIGNATION

OW021920 Paris AFP in English 1916 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Brussels, 2 April (AFP)--King Baudouin today accepted the resignation of Premier Wilfried Martens and asked Flemish Christian Socialist Marc Eyskens to form a new government, the palace announced today. Mr Eyskens was finance minister in the outgoing government.

Premier Martens had offered his resignation two days ago but the king at first refused to accept it. Mr Martens' government, a coalition of Socialists and Christian Socialists, fell apart as the country slid into a grave economic crisis.

During the last two days, King Baudouin consulted numerous political figures, reserving his response until today. Late this afternoon, the king saw Mr Martens but the outgoing premier made no statement in leaving the palace shortly before 8 pm.

Political observers said that the king's hesitation was due to a hardening of positions among the various parties and factions, which are not only divided by political and social views but also by the linguistic clash between Walloons (French-speaking) and Flemings (Dutch). The observers said that the greatest differences among the country's political leaders concerned policies to halt the fall of the Belgian franc.

Speculation that the franc might soon be devalued was quashed today when Mr Eyskens refused to attend an informal meeting of the European Economic Community (EEC) finance ministers because of his country's government crisis. The meeting in Breda, The Netherlands, would have provided Mr Eyskens the opportunity to consult Belgium's EEC partners, a necessary preliminary step to devaluation. However, the Belgian franc again came under heavy pressure today on the exchange markets.

LE SOIR REPORTS REACTIONS TO GOVERNMENT CRISIS

LD021145 Brussels LE SOIR in French 1 Apr 81 p 2

[Excerpt] The political situation has developed at a frantic pace since Monday evening [30 March]. After the long summit between party presidents Monday evening, it became clear that the Socialists and Social Christians could no longer agree on the proposal put forward by Martens to suspend wage indexing for a fixed period. This proposal had sparked off early signs of industrial unrest in Wallonia. Of course, everybody had made some concessions and put forward new proposals but a break became inevitable Monday morning after a cabinet meeting which lasted 30 minutes.

Around 1000 hours [yesterday], Martens handed the king his government's resignation. Some 30 minutes later, a palace communique announced that the king was "suspending his reply." Meanwhile, the chamber, which met at 1000 hours, suspended its sitting at the speaker's request. It was resumed at 1140 hours just long enough for the speaker to announce that he had met with the prime minister and that the latter would make a brief statement to Parliament at 1400 hours.

A series of statements was made throughout the morning. The first statements started to come thick and fast as soon as it was known that Martens had tendered his government's resignation to the king. The first statements were made by the ministers as they left 16 Rue de la Loi. Several parties had also convened their various bodies or reacted once the news of the resignation was announced.

Claes: "Preserving the Social Consensus..."

As he left the prime minister's office, Vice Prime Minister Claes said that in his view "a consensus is still possible in a general context." Claes added that he thinks the government ought to chance one last attempt and contact both sides of industry in the next few hours in order to avoid the complete collapse of the social consensus. "Government measures taken in such circumstances would be ineffectual," Claes said.

Claes said he expects the prime minister to contact his government ministers this Tuesday afternoon.

Mathot: "Index Is Essential"

For his part, Vice Prime Minister and Budget Minister Guy Mathot said: "I deeply regret what has just happened in that a major effort was being made in the sphere of reorganizing public finances and defending the franc. This effort had the approval of all. It should, therefore, have been continued. It is important to avoid destroying the social consensus which was established with such difficulty. We Socialists cannot abandon some social protection mechanisms. In that connection, we regard the index as essential."

Vanden Boeynants: "Socialists' Agreement Is Lacking"

After the Social Christian Party [PSC] Executive Committee meeting, PSC President Paul vanden Boeynants said: "It is tragic that, faced with its crucial choice, the government failed to obtain the Socialist ministers' agreement on a vital measure. It is clear, however, that, without calling into question the fundamental principle of linking wages to the index, an adaptation of the indexation mechanism safeguards the real interests of workers, savers and enterprises much better than a forced evaluation in the worst conditions. Rejecting any control measure is a comfortable position, but it also means dashing any hope of recovery."

The president of the French-speaking Social Christians also "deplored the fact that no agreement could be reached although there had been a consensus at top government level for adopting the course of adapting the index-linking system."

De Clercq: "Advantages of Elections"

Flemish liberal circles are not ruling out the possibility of entering government with the Social Christians, provided elections are held.

"The main advantage of elections," Party of Freedom and Progress President de Clercq said for instance, "would be to separate the regional executives from the government. It would be easier to form a new coalition and it would no longer be possible to claim that a Social Christian-liberal majority is invalid on the pretext that it does not exist in Wallonia." We must stress, however, that this is merely Willy de Clercq's opinion since party bodies have not yet been consulted on this subject.

On Tuesday afternoon, after Martens' statement to Parliament, the French-speaking and Flemish liberal parties will issue a joint statement.

Spitaels: "I Deplore..."

"I strongly deplore this new crisis which is damaging both to our economic situation and to our country's image abroad. The Socialist Party [PS] has made very effort in the past few days to firmly guarantee the Belgian franc's protection." This is PS President Guy Spitaels' first off-the-cuff reaction.

"It was in that spirit," he said, "that Socialist ministers in particular contributed to saving BF131 billion in 9 months, according to the figures cited by the prime minister himself. It is in the same spirit that the Socialists are still prepared to make a new effort to save some BF30 billion today in the framework of the 1982 budget."

"The workers are certainly fully aware of the sacrifices to be made to defend the franc or save their jobs," the PS president continued. "We see examples of this every day in many enterprises or sectors both in Wallonia and in Brussels....But it cannot suddenly be demonstrated that a review of our indexing system would suddenly and miraculously put an end to a monetary speculation which has many other causes, notably the attitude of some financial circles which are at present organizing the export of Belgian capital."

"In addition," Spitaels added, "there was reason to be concerned about the consequences of such a review, which, according to the budget minister himself, would result in a BF30 billion drop in fiscal value. That would make a new hole in our public finances, while it is more important than ever to work with continuity. The government conclave 1 week ago adopted a series of measures which bear witness to a real effort. The present crisis stems from the desire of some circles to go further than the agreements reached. The result is that by trying to go further rather than quickly implementing the efforts agreed, we now have political instability which can only further weaken the currency which some people claimed to want to protect even more effectively."

Gol: "Observe the Mess..."

Jean Gol, president of the French-speaking liberals, stated for his part: "We can only observe the mess. The fourth Martens government has lived in chains imposed by the trade union organizations.... It has seriously undermined the currency's credibility.... It is now departing in chaos. We were right to predict what would happen and what has just happened; we are not pleased about that." Gol also said that, since Martens' resignation had not yet been accepted and new negotiations could not be ruled out, "the government is not yet officially dead but it is in an iron lung."

LE SOIR COMMENTS ON NEW U.S. ADMINISTRATION

LD011513 Brussels LE SOIR in French 29-30 Mar 81 p 3

[Jean Pochet article]

[Text] Something has changed in the United States since 20 January. The new President's arrival has established a climate of uncertainty, expectation and anxiety.

The administration's early days are not encouraging. Whereas people expected a strong government in which the President would keep firm control over his Cabinet--especially the famous "inner cabinet" in which some of the most influential members would make the essential decisions jointly--wrangling is virtually a daily occurrence. People boasted about the leadership qualities of men like Haig, Weinberger, Regan and Stockman, and their brilliant success in the public or private sector was stressed.

It may be the "strength" of these people which is sparking off the worst palace conflicts we have seen for a long time, barely 2 months after the investiture.

The President still has some popularity among the public, but he has so far distinguished himself more by his social activities than by precise definitions of his intentions.

However, a recent opinion poll showed that he now only has the support of 59 percent of the public, that 24 percent disapprove of his policy and that 17 percent are undecided. Some 75 percent of Americans questioned at the same point in Carter's presidency (63 percent for Nixon, 73 percent for Kennedy, 67 percent for Eisenhower) were still satisfied with his policy. This is the highest "level of discontent" ever expressed by the public after such a short time.

The White House's very structure makes confusion virtually inevitable. Like all Presidents, Reagan is surrounded by three completely loyal people: Edwin Meese, who has the rank of personal adviser, James Baker, who is "chief of staff," and Michael Deaver, who is his assistant. They have the right of veto over nominations put forward by administration officials and nobody can be appointed without their consent. This explains why many posts are still vacant and why important decisions cannot be taken for lack of experts in the sphere or simply for lack of staff. It is also this triumvirate which establishes the President's priorities and settles conflicts among government members.

As we have said, there is no lack of conflicts. But the effect on the public is deplorable. Too many voices are expressing their views on too many subjects and frequently in conflicting directions. Retractions and denials follow each other, although without always clarifying the situation. The impression received is that the President without taking sides is allowing his lieutenants to fight each other. While Carter was able to express the divergent opinions of Vance and Brzezinski in one speech, Reagan is following a policy of "no policy."

Who Decides?

This is probably one of the causes of the malaise. Political decisions seem to be taken successively and sometimes simultaneously by different members of the Cabinet.

General Haig's tribulations are a case in point. After the President had stated publicly that foreign policy would be the State Department's exclusive domain, he suddenly appointed Vice President Bush "coordinator of government actions in times of crisis." This places the former general in a subordinate position to the vice president, but gives his rivals, National Security Council Director Richard Allen and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, more direct access to the White House.

The way in which this abrupt switch of authority was carried out is also typical of the lack of coordination in the administration. On Wednesday, Haig told a Senate committee that "contrary to press reports on the vice president's possible promotion, he knew nothing about it and, in any case, had not been consulted. The President telephoned him on the same evening and told him the step had been taken, still without having consulted him.

In a conciliatory gesture Thursday, however, the President read a press statement reaffirming "that General Haig is still the main architect of his foreign policy."

But the secretary of state's prestige has been seriously eroded. And despite official denials people close to the President did not conceal the fact that the secretary of state had threatened to resign when he learned of Reagan's decision and that he had already made the same threat several times before. As one of the President's aides said: "The next time he might do it."

Semiofficial circles go even further, considering the general's departure to be inevitable sooner or later; the name of his possible successor already is being mentioned and he is none other than John Connally, the former governor of Texas and unsuccessful candidate in the 1980 elections.

By playing the petty dictator, making random statements and thinking he could stage a "one-man show," the secretary of state has attracted virtually universal animosity.

El Salvador, Public Danger

The El Salvador affair is another example of the administration's incoherence. The victim of this affair could well be the secretary of state, whose initiatives have frequently lacked "diplomacy." Two months ago, few Americans could have placed this little country on a map correctly. Suddenly, it is deemed to be endangering the very existence of the United States. "It is time," the State Department asserted, "to put an end to Russian expansionism in this region."

Initially, Nicaragua was accused of being the leftists' main arms supplier. General Haig then decided to "cut off" the supply of these arms "at the source." Since the "source" was Cuba, there was even talk of a blockade. Then, in view of the emerging opposition to these warlike statements and Nicaragua's assurance that it would no longer encourage the arms traffic, El Salvador lost some of its interest. In a confidential briefing, a State Department representative even went so far as to assert that the press was attaching much too much importance to a local event whose outcome was, after all, not likely to jeopardize U.S. survival.

The secretary of state then resurfaced to denounce that spokesman as "irresponsible" and to add that not only El Salvador but Nicaragua, Honduras and Costa Rica are the next Soviet targets and that if a hard line isn't adopted once and for all, the domino theory, now renamed the "preferred targets theory," would turn Central America into a communist stronghold.

All these about-faces, this sound of marching feet, decisions to sent military "advisers"--which are disturbingly reminiscent of the start of the Vietnam war--coupled with the announcement of a huge increase in the military budget are making opinion extremely puzzled.

Foreign policy has so far been given the limelight because economic policy is still being fought out with Congress. Vast budget cuts have been made, but it is as yet difficult to assess the real impact they will have on families. It is one thing to cut a few billion dollars from a social program, but it will be a different matter to assess the impact on a family which was receiving an allowance of $100 per month in order to survive and will be deprived of that handout.

The administration has not yet found its pace. Too many things are being discussed at the same time. Efforts are being made to mobilize opinion on the dangers of Soviet expansionism and at the same time on the need to make drastic savings. People are talking about restoring U.S. military superiority and poor people are being asked to resign themselves to being a little poorer.

However, the overriding impression is that, unless the administration puts its house in order, unless it establishes its own priorities and clearly expresses its intentions with one voice, the malaise and uncertainty which are already latent could lead to chaos.

GOVERNMENT REITERATES STAND ON NATO DECISION

LD011612 Hamburg DPA in German 1432 GMT 1 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 1 Apr (DPA)--On the eve of Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's visit to Moscow, the Federal Government today urgently reminded the Soviet leadership that it unchangingly adheres to both parts of NATO'S dual decision of December 1979.

Speaking in the Bundestag today during question hour, Schmidt said that all members of the Federal Government stand fully behind the alliance's decision. This also applies to the two criticized SPD ministers, who expressly authorized him to make this statement.

At the end of cabinet discussions about the NATO preparations, Government Spokesman Becker told a news conference that the Federal Government estimates that negotiations on medium-range weapons could start in 2-3 months time. The start of the negotiations is now a question for the Soviet side, which has declared its readiness to negotiate.

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON MOSCOW VISIT

DW030921 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1100 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Reporter Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Genscher] It is a matter of continuing the dialogue in these difficult times. In view of the important talks on arms control and disarmament problems, it is also a matter of discussing such issues as arms limitation regarding medium-range missiles, a European disarmament conference and troop reduction negotiations in central Europe. But we will also discuss important international issues.

[Question] You have heard many critical words from Moscow lately with regard to your person and your political attitude. Does that complicate the visit for you?

[Answer] In no way at all. Anyone serious about understanding and peace will not be irritated by such tones. It is more important for me that the German Bundestag indicated yesterday that it fully backs the policy of the Federal Government.

PAPERS VIEW BUNDESTAG DISCUSSION, GENSCHER VISIT

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

DW021235 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 2 Apr 81 p 4

[Commentary signed MES: "With Backing to Moscow"]

[Text] It would be desirable if the Bundestag chose more often to have a question hour instead of the lengthy foreign policy debates. Yesterday's example demonstrated that this is much better for parliament because the limited 5-minute speaking time hardly permits the speakers to indulge in party policy polemics which have nothing to do with the subject of the debate.

Foreign Minister Genscher can go to Moscow today knowing he has the total backing of parliament to seek concrete possibilities for continuing East-West negotiations on the nuclear balance in Europe. The support he achieved almost demonstratively from the opposition does not lose any value because it follows the tactical concept of fanning undeniable conflicts between Genscher and Schmidt as well as parts of the FDP and the SPD. It must be stated, however, that NATO's dual decision, linking counterparament with a negotiation offer to the Soviet Union, has been supported by the cabinet as well as by all parties of the parliament.
Schmidt's attitude is beyond any doubts. The federal chancellor told the critics in the country that both parts of the decision will remain linked with each other and that the main idea of the Federal Republic is not rearmament, but the striving for balanced disarmament. When Brezhnev's party congress speech was still freshly printed, some slight verbal differences existed between the first comments of Schmidt and Genscher; it is known now that both follow the same line. It was also a motive of the debate on the eve of the foreign minister's Moscow visit to stress this once again in public.

Press Review

DW030845 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 3 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] BADISCHE ZEITUNG of Freiburg comments: The federal foreign minister belongs to the most loyal advocates of NATO's December 1979 decision, envisaging parallel action between counterarmament in the medium-range field and negotiations. Genscher will have a hard time, despite the word of the chancellor and the vote of the Bundestag on Wednesday. The pressure increases for those who want to change the decision to the advantage of armament or the advantage of negotiations. Under these circumstances, Genscher obviously ought to demand a clarification of the situation through immediate talks on Eurostrategic arms without any prerequisites. In such a way Brezhenev's offer of a moratorium could be decoupled immediately; its weak points could be discussed and maybe even eliminated.

NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG of Essen points out: Andrey Gromyko was particularly impressed yesterday by a sentence of the federal foreign minister, who has been frequently criticized in Moscow. Namely, if we had to decide again, we would once more sign the Moscow treaty of 1970. Genscher thus indicated that the Federal Republic is interested in the continuity and duration of its relations with the Soviet Union, as was pointed out by both governments in 1973 and 1978. Both sides know that the world political crisis has become more difficult than even in the past decade, but fortunately both sides also know that they must talk to each other the more concretely. They must talk not only about missiles--which should be negotiated between the Americans and the Russians--but about the decisive question of whether world politics must inevitably develop toward confrontation between the East and West. The fact of Genscher's visit alone indicates that the Federal Government wants to avoid this.

NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG writes: Hans-Dietrich Genscher did not go to Moscow merely as a reconnoiterer of the West. He wants to act in the Kremlin also as an advocate of Poland, urging the Soviets to be moderate. This intention has lost nothing of its depressing actuality despite the inner tension existing in the country between the Bug and Oder Rivers. On the contrary, with the massive accusation of doing too little against the antisocialist forces, criticism of developments in Poland has received a new dimension. Anonymous antisocialist forces are no longer being criticized. The censure hits the fraternal party directly. The same happened in 1968 in Prague. In doing this, Moscow shows very clearly that it is discontent with the compromise between the trade union and the Polish leadership.

FRANCOIS-PONCET NOTES WESTERN AGREEMENT ON POLAND

[Text] Foreign Minister Francois-Poncet indicated on 26 March that there is agreement among the Western countries on the measures to be taken should there be a foreign intervention in Poland.

Speaking to the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, he said: "As far as France is concerned, it would be a mistake to think that, in such a hypothetical case, its economic interests would prevent it from reacting to a violation of the Helsinki agreements at all levels." After expressing the view that East-West relations have deteriorated, he recalled that the U.S. administration had expressed its readiness for dialogue with the Soviet Union and indicated that Mr Brezhnev's statements on this subject to the 26th CPSU Congress deserved careful examination. "France," he said, "particularly welcomes the progress which Mr Brezhnev's position represents as regards the security question now being discussed at the Madrid meeting." The minister was referring to the USSR's acceptance of the principle of extending the "confidence-building measures" proposed by France to the whole of Europe as far as the Urals.

LE MONDE DISCUSSES ATTACK ON U.S. PRESIDENT

LD021623 Paris LE MONDE in French 1 Apr 81 p 1

[Editorial: "History and Its Accidents"]

[Text] In a country where anybody can buy the gun of his choice without any formalities and where the powerful lobby which watches over this flourishing trade appeals directly to trigger-happy people against a background of violence and insecurity, it is not surprising that history is at the mercy of accidents like the one which Mr Reagan has just survived.

All statesmen probably run the risk of an attack irrespective of regimes and customs. Even Mr Brezhnev in his heavily-policed Russia has been the victim of an abortive attack, as was his predecessor Khrushchev in 1962. In France, the emotional sympathy immediately shown by Giscard d'Estaing, when he learned of the Washington attack while speaking to television viewers, clearly shows that a president of the republic is never completely free from this worry. After all, General de Gaulle himself escaped several attacks. Nonetheless, such attacks in France, since the war at least, have been carried out by organized fanatics who appeared, at least in their own eyes, to have some political design (to hinder Algerian independence in the case of the Fifth Republic's founder), while America constantly seems to be on the point of being swamped by the irrational, the smooth process of the President's movements being suddenly replaced by chaos which is all the more worrying since it is televised in detail. The mere fact of being the supreme leader of the world's most powerful nation attracts unbalanced people and when these people are oblivious enough to allow themselves to be captured on the spot after their action, the so-called Secret Services have no effective way of countering this.

The Washington attack reminds us of the fragility of human institutions, but also, in this specific case, the fragility of a President whose 70 years people were beginning to forget. Reagan's image will probably be consolidated among the public and that will make his relations with the press and congress easier at a crucial time for the effective implementation of his economic program. But there is reason to wonder whether his physical abilities will not be affected by a wound which will force him to spend 2 weeks in the hospital and to convalesce for an as yet indefinite period. He already is known as a "9 to 5" man, owing to the office hours he works, but will he have to reduce his working hours even further? This is not a pointless question. At a time when the various ministerial teams are being formed more slowly than usual, which is encouraging rivalry over influential positions--as we saw again on Monday with General Haig's new scheming--the President's authority is more necessary than ever.

REPORTS OF FRANCE, FRG SEEKING LOAN UNCONFIRMED

LD030926 Hamburg DPA in German 0824 GMT 3 Mar 81

[Text] Paris, 3 April (DPA)--No confirmation was available in Paris today on reports that the Federal Republic and France are seeking a loan of DM8 billion from Arab countries to stimulate the economy and fight unemployment.

On inquiry, the spokesman of Premier Barre merely referred to statements by the German Government spokesman about Barre's talks with Chancellor Schmidt in Bonn yesterday. He reiterated that there had been no talk over dinner about a loan from OPEC countries.

POLL SHOWS 'LACK OF CONFIDENCE' IN PRESIDENT

NC031056 Paris AFP in English 1027 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 3 Apr (AFP)--A month before the first round in the French presidential election, sitting President and candidate Valery Giscard d'Estaing had still not gained the confidence of a majority of the population, according to an opinion poll published today.

The poll, conducted by the SOFRES organisation for FIGARO MAGAZINE among 1,000 voters between March 20 and 24, showed that 42 per cent of those interviewed had no, or little, confidence in the president to solve France's current problems.

And although Mr Giscard d'Estaing's current "confidence rating" went up to 44 per cent compared with 41 per cent in February, his main rival, Socialist Francois Mitterrand, soared 11 points from 44 to [number indistinct] per cent in a list of opposition figures those interviewed would like most to see play a greater role in the future.

Prime Minister Raymond Barre also went up three points but he still scores a very low 28 per cent.

The other main candidates also received a boost, with the popularity of Gaullist Jacques Chirac rising from 36 to 43 per cent and Communist Georges Marchais from 18 to 24 per cent.

CORSICAN NATIONAL LIBERATION FRONT ANNOUNCES TRUCE

LD021434 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] The Corsican National Liberation Front has announced a truce in its attacks as from tomorrow and until after the presidential elections. The Corsican separatists first want to draw conclusions from the vote and will adopt a new strategy if it is called for. This news was announced during a clandestine press conference held last night deep in the Corsican countryside.

BRIEFS

NEW AMBASSADOR TO TOGO--The JOURNAL OFFICIEL of 27 March carries the appointment of Jean-Marc Voelckel as ambassador to Lome (Togo). He will replace Bertrand Desmazieres. [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Mar 81 p 38 LD]

IMPROVED TRANSMITTER--The scope of the Radio France transmitter at Allouis is to be strengthened with new equipment which will be more powerful but less energy-consuming. The head of the Allouis center explained that previously the center had two 250-kw transmitters which were installed in 1952. They are to be replaced by a new 1,000-kw transmitter with an excellent output. This will improve reception in outer propagation areas, and means fewer breakdowns. PCI'S BUFALINI CALLS FOR POLAND'S 'RENEWAL'

LD021121 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 29 Mar 81 pp 1, 18

[PCI Directorate member Paolo Bufalini commentary: "Support for Poland's Renewal"]

[Text] The Polish situation, which has experienced some moments of high tension and others of improvement, has never ceased to worry us, despite our hope and express confidence that the Polish working class, communists and people's forces will manage to resolve the crisis themselves, carrying out a task of renewal with the necessary sense of responsibility and prudence in order to consolidate the results already achieved.

It seems that we are again witnessing a moment of crucial difficulties, of acute conflicts and decisions that could prove decisive.

It seems to us that in recent months Poland has been experiencing not only a dialectic between reformists and conservatives but also a harsh conflict between extreme and extremist sectors on both sides. This has led to political tensions, splits and threats of a clash and has also hindered a resumption of production activity and an improvement in the economic situation, which even back in August seemed extremely grave--so much so that it prompted the emergence of the broad working class movement to impose thorough changes in all fields of national life.

In this period of crisis, which has dragged on for several months, there has been a further drop in production and an increase in the already massive foreign debts, which, Poland is at present not in a position to repay. A critical situation has been reached in food supplies. In this period, Poland needed and still needs specific and prompt assistance. In fact, it seems that the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries immediately provided such assistance. The assistance promised by the West has apparently not yet materialized. Certainly it has not yet arrived from Italy, despite the fact that the Italian Government had already for some time been promising and giving assurances that it was willing to send provisions. What could happen in a situation in which the workers masses, the populations of the cities, are already experiencing critical difficulties in food supplies--difficulties which might suddenly become worse in the days ahead?

But while assistance from other countries is now indispensable and a matter of urgency, obviously Poland cannot resolve its serious economic problems through that alone. Nor is that what the Poles believe--a large nation of almost 40 million people, with a weath of energies, culture and creative abilities, which they want to develop freely and to the full, motivated as they are by a lofty national awareness. The real solution must be sought in the fundamental political issues and the solution of their problems. It is precisely this path that the Polish Communist Party managed and decided to pursue by very broadly and substantially renewing its own Politburo and other leadership bodies. We also esteemed the shrewdness and moderation of First Secretary Comrade Kania, whom we consistently heard speak with steadfastness and dignity. He, Prime Minster Comrade Jaruzelski and other leaders cooperating with them along the same line have set in motion and steered the renewal process, which was an abolute necessity, since the Polish crisis exploded as a protest and a desire for a broad and thorough chance on the part of the working class, the people's masses and broad strata of intellectuals.

At the same time, however, the Polish party has rightly warned of the dangers inherent in the action of extremists wanting renewal and of all those unable or unwilling to take into account the reality of the situation, the economic compatibilities and objective international political conditions and the time needed to carry out a difficult and delicate renewal process, which demands steadfastness but also patience. Obviously, there are also groups hostile to the socialist system who are fanning the flames. It is precisely in such situations that groups of stubborn conservatives in both the party and the state apparatus, who yearn for an impossible return to the past, eventually exacerbate the reaction of the extremist wing of the reformist movement; just as the latter in turn, with its extremist initiatives, tends to drive the situation toward a breaking point. In short, a vicious circle, which could prove fatal, is being created.

We have on several occasions stressed the demonstrations of trade union, political and national responsibility given by the protagonists of Polish affairs--by the party, the government, the Solidarity trade union under Walesa's leadership and the Catholic Church and its highest authorities. We have pointed to the Italian trade union movement's experiences and the need with which it has been confronted to reconcile--opposing corporative tendencies and excessive demands--the workers' demands for improved conditions with the general requirements and interests of the nation's economy, especially in periods of crisis. Only by working harder and producing more can the working class and the forces that want society to be transformed and are called on to let it ensure a national rebirth, by building a more equitable society.

We have esteemed the responsible attitude of the Polish forces that do not want the socialist foundation of Polish society to be attacked or its alliances and membership in the Warsaw Pact to be challenged. This corresponds to Poland's decisive national interest. It also corresponds to our view of international relations, whereby the elimination of the opposed blocs in Europe cannot be pursued through unilateral breakaways and alterations of the balance, but only gradually, by carrying forward the detente and disarmament process--the very process to which socialist Poland itself has made original and important contributions over the years and again recently.

We now feel it is our duty to express our sincere concern. We do not want the responsible moderation that has essentially prevailed in the leadership of the trade union movement to be overtaken by extremists thrusts. We do not want an abuse of the recourse to strikes--in such a critical and grave economic and political situation--to lose the renewal movement consensus and prestige. We do not want the stubborn conservative forces to use this to attempt a recourse to repressive solutions that would cause upheavals with harmful consequences not only for Poland but also for Europe and the world situation and which therefore absolutely must be averted.

This is why we hope and trust, on the basis of our respect for Poland's most responsible leadership forces, that they will manage to steer and govern events in full autonomy with a harmonious effort along the line indicated by the Polish United Workers Party, so that the indispensable moderation and prudence will now prevail, so that at the same time any absurd temptations of a return to the past will be overcome; and so that the situation does not plunge toward disastrous outcomes but, so that the task of the democratic renewal of socialism can proceed in a responsible and thorough manner.

BERLINGUER ANSWERS CAGLIARI AUDIENCE'S QUERIES

LD021449 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 30 Mar 81 pp 1-2

[Ugo Baduel report: "Berlinguer gives 3-hour question-and-answer session in Cagliari; 'Only Democracy Strengthens Socialism '"]

[Excerpts] Cagliari--"Do you really believe that the DC only took 2 billion lire from Sindona, as Piccoli claimed on television?" "Is it true that we have now become equidistant from the United States and the USSR?" "I receive the minimum pension and pay 100,000 lire a month rental; tell me how I can eat every day." "What do you think of Visentini's proposal?" "Somebody recently described you as a 'conservative communist' and you too once said that communists are 'conservatives and revolutionaries'. What does that mean?" "Why are male comrades not involved with women comrades in the defense of the abortion law?" These were some of the dozens of questions asked during a very crowded meeting lasting over 3 hours at the conference hall of the Cagliari Exhibition Center.

Here is a brief account of some of the questions and answers: Berlinguer replied for instance, to a question about Poland ("Why was it possible for such a gulf to form between the communist party and working class?") by citing the points made in Comrade Bufalini's article published by L'UNITA yesterday morning and adding that for some time--it is part of the formulation of the Eurocommunist line--the Italian Communists have been asking themselves questions and expressing critical assessments regarding the development of democracy in the socialist countries. But they have done so certainly not in order to gain who knows what kind of testimonials from their adversaries, but because they believe that only a full development of democracy can restore to socialism its full force of attraction so that it can spread in Italy and throughout the world. Other questions concerned matters on which the PCI and Berlinguer himself have already spoken at length recently and very recently, including yesterday's speech in Sassari.

On the subject of the PCI's supposed "equidistance" from the USSR and the United States, the PCI secretary general said--and we report just the main points of his replies--that equidistsance is a concept of stasis, whereas the Communists believe that, irrespective of predetermined alignments, there is a need for a multiplicity of autonomous roles (for Europe, the Western workers movement as a whole and the nonaligned countries) in carrying out effective initiatives driving toward detente, balanced disarmament, a new international order and new relations between the two major powers (in this connection Berlinguer had some harsh and concerned words to say about the policy being implemented by the Reagan administration). To return for a moment to the aspects of method, it must be said that the attention and interest prompted in the audience by certain reasoned explanations, some of which repeated things that should already be known, was significant, for often amid the confusion of mass and summary information people lose the thread of the overall reasoning of the political forces.

Are the communist "conservative and revolutionary?" There is little point, Berlinguer replied, in reducing what I said to a quip, as some people have tried to do. I said and I confirm that the workers movement as a whole has a duty to safeguard mankind's major gains in the field of knowledge and the social field, to defend the workers' gains (which not accidentally are now being subjected to threatening attack), and that the communnists certainly do not want to take the world back to the year zero, as Pol Pot wanted to do. He added that the communists are revolutionaries because they want to transform society, within democracy, and to transcend the capitalist structures that are still standing and that are now so clearly in a state of crisis.

PCI DENIES RECEIVING FUNDS FROM FINANCIER

AU030912 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Rome 3 Apr (ANSA)--The Italian Communist Party (PCI) has stepped forth to repudiate press reports naming it as a beneficiary of funds from Sicilian-born financier Michele Sindona's bankrupt empire.

PCI Administrative Chief Franco Antelli issued a statement last night insisting that his party never received any funds, "either directly or indirectly" from Sindona or any of his companies. The party official also disclosed that PCI attorneys have been instructed to file libel suits against "all mass media organs, including the state-run Radio and Television Network (RAI-TV), which maligned the party through their distortion of the facts". The lawyers have "ample evidence" to back up their charges, Antelli added.

Some Italian newspapers have indicated in recent days that the reputedly corruption-free PCI was named by a former Sindona aide as one of the many clients of the financiers banking empire. The aide, Carlo Bordoni, reportedly made the disclosure while testifying recently before a parliamentary investigation commission.

PCI Commission Member Guiseppe D'Alema has also squelched the rumors as "groundless", charging that stories to the effect that the Communist Party has received Sindona funds were based on "false information and distorted facts". D'Alema admitted that a witness appearing before the commission had mentioned a bank account written in the Communist Party's name in a financial about one of Sindona's Swiss holdings. But the statement was not true, D'Alema stressed, and the same witness subsequently withdrew the claim while testifying before a Milan court.

AVANTI: LAGORIO REBUTS 'MILITARIZATION' CLAIM

LD021627 Rome AVANTI in Italian 25 Mar 81 p 9

[Excerpt] According to Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio this is "the beginning of the end of the armed forces as a separate body. We are setting our sights on modern managerial professionalism thoroughly integrated with society and its endeavors. We should always have capable people at the head of the Industrial Reconstruction Institute, the National Hydrocarbons Agency and the National Electric Power Agency, so why not at the head of our defense forces?" This is what Minister Lagorio says at the start of an interview published in the March issue of the monthly PAGINA that has just appeared on the newsstands. Lagorio's remarks sound like a response to the recent insinuations by PRAVDA, which accused the Italian Government of pursuing a "militarist" line inspired by the model of "anti-Soviet belligerence." This army which, as Lagorio suggests, "establishes links with the institutions and with local bodies" proves wrong those who identify an emergent threat of a militarization of Italian politics.

The Lagorio interview also reveals the Italian Government's determination not to align passively with the foreign policy options formulated by others but to seek an original and active position, especially with regard to the Mediterranean area. Lagorio said: "If we have a national-democratic idea at home, we must implement it abroad, with a satisfactory policy toward the emergent countries." "It is no accident," Lagorio added, "that our academies contain students from the African countries and, to a lesser extent, South Americans and Asians." As for the issue of military supplies to the emergent countries, Minister Lagorio said that he has given "instruction to the Defense Ministry representative to be guided by a form of conduct whereby decisions are made in accordance with political principles, in other words verifying the democratic and peaceful circumstances of purchasers." So Lagorio's aim is "a new conception of world relations not dictated by an aggressive spirit but committed to the quest for political and strategic balances."

CDS LEADER ADDRESSES CLOSING SESSION OF CONGRESS

[Text] "General Ramalho Eanes was elected and should fully carry out his post as president of the republic. But he should fully respect the other state bodies' prerogatives and powers and the popular mandate of the political forces representing the Portuguese people. He should be the president of the republic, but he should renounce the temptation to be at the same time prime minister, or foreign minister, or armed forces chief of staff or the sponsor for setting up political parties or election fronts," Freitas do Amaral stated at the closing session of the Fourth Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] Congress, which reelected him as party chairman.

The CDR Congress, which concluded yesterday at the Maria Matos Theater, laid down the party's strategy for 1981-1982, elected the new leaders and approved a motion requesting the government to complete and publish in full the report of the enquiry into the causes of the 4 December accident at Camarate in which the then CDS Deputy Chairman Adelino Amaro da Costa, Sa Carneiro, Patricio Gouveia and those accompanying them lost heir lives.

Presenting the conclusions of this fourth congress, which he described as "the image of the party and of the country," Freitas do Amaral broached the CDS' presence within the Democratic Alliance, the role of the opposition, relations with the president of the republic, the coming revision of the constitution and foreign policy.

With respect to his recent election as chairman of the European Christian Democratic Union (UEDC), Freitas do Amaral made a point of emphasizing that carrying out that post will not keep him away from party life at all; rather, it will make it possible to bring the CDS closer to "the Christian Democratic parties and Portugal closer to Europe."

Nor was the CDS' support for the government called into question at this congress, and as Freitas do Amaral emphasized, "nor is it more reticent or qualified than at the time of the new government's parliamentary investiture."

In the CDS chairman's opinion, during the barely 3 months which have elapsed since the government headed by Pinto Balsemao took office, "there have already been clear signs of efficiency," as in the attack on the effects of the drought; "of unity," as in the gas strike; of "national dignity," as in the case of the diplomatic incident with Cuba; of "loyalty to the model of society upheld by the Democratic Alliance," as in the renewal of the bill on the public and private sectors.

These are signs which he described as "rally positive" and worthy of the CDS' support.

Referring to political and social stability, Freitas do Amaral said that the country "does not want legislative elections before 1984, refuses to live in a permanent crisis and demands to see the problems besetting it studied and resolved or on their way to being resolved."

"It is therefore in the country's interest that the Democratic Alliance be consolidated and strengthened, that the parliamentary majority continue until 1984 and function and that the government govern and receive to that end the support it needs," he added.

After paying tribute to Amaro da Costa, whose memory, work and spirit were present from the beginning to the end of the congress, and to Francisco Sa Carneiro, whom he described as "the best of the prime ministers whom Portugal has had since 25 April [1974]," Freitas do Amaral commented on the opposition, in which the CDS continues to distinguish between the Communist Party and the Social Party [PS], and which as a whole he described as "visibly disunited and weakened...and unable to accept willingly that its next opportunity is only in October 1984.

In Freitas do Amaral's opinion, the PCP is an "antidemocratic, Stalinist and pro-Soviet: party, with respect to which there will be "no dialogue" on the part of the CDS but, on the contrary, "frontal and unqualified opposition."

With respect to the PS, the centrist leader said that it is necessary to intensify dialogue with it in order to "make viable the revision of the constitution which it is important to effect."

The revision of the constitution was also topics on which Fretas do Amaral commented, specifically to the effect that the CDS "will not accept it unconditionally."

Freitas do Amaral advocated a "clear and unambiguous" foreign policy and a stance of "firmness and toughness with respect to East-West relations.

Freitas do Amaral also announced to the CDS delegates the request for calling a special congress in a year's time on "regionalization and local government."

The announcement was justified by the importance attached to the matter and was accompanied by a request to the government to go ahead with the "great reform of the regionalization of Portugal," on the basis of the white paper on the matter which was drawn up last year by the Democratic Alliance government and on which Freitas do Amaral collaborated.

AVANTE! REPORTS CUNHAL SPEECH TO OPORTO RALLY

LD021655 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 26 Mar 81 pp 1-8 (special supplement)

[Speech by PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal at 21 Mar rally in Oporto]

[Excerpt] There Is No Legitimacy for Governing for 4 Years

If the "Democratic Alliance"/Pinto Balsemao government serves neither the people nor the country, if its policy means the exacerbation of all the nation's problems and of the Portuguese people's living conditions and if the aim of the forces comprising it is to use power to eliminate the democratic system, what stance can we and should we adopt?

I believe, comrades, that you are in agreement with our party's conclusion: The "Democratic Alliance"/Pinto Balsemao government serves neither the people nor the country and should therefore be dismissed as quickly as possible.

"The struggle continues, Pinto Balsemao out!" is a just slogan which is in keeping with our people's needs, demands and aspirations.

Some people say that our party has no right to demand the government's dismissal, because the government was formed on the basis of a parliamentary majority emanating from the 5 October legislative elections, and therefore a new government can only be formed when a new parliamentary majority is formed in new legislative elections.

The "Democratic Alliance" naturally says that the legislative elections gave the "Democratic Alliance" legitimacy to govern for 4 years. And Mario Soares has expressed the same opinion.

But these opinions have no constitutional, legal, political or moral basis.

Following the 5 October election, our party did not dispute the institutional legitimacy for a "Democratic Alliance" government to be formed, since the constitution is explicit: the president of the republic must take the election results into account in choosing the prime minister.

This is what was done.

What we dispute is that this government, like any government, has any right to govern throughout the legislative term--that is, for 4 years--merely because it is formed with majority parliamentary support.

This stance is the only constitutional, legally correct and politically just stance.

Legally correct, because the possibilities of dismissing a government constitute an integral part of the institutions' democratic functioning.

Politically just, because there are sound political reasons which make it correct and opportune.

The first political reason is that the "Democratic Alliance" has ceased to have the social, political and electoral base of support which it had 5 October and which gave it the institutional possibility of forming a government.

The reactionary propagandists showed themselves to be very indignant about our assertion that the 7 December presidential election to some extent rectified the 5 October legislative elections.

But that assertion is self-evident.

It was not we who identified a possible victory for Ramalho Eanes with defeat for the "Democratic Alliance," its government and its majority: It was the "Democratic Alliance" itself; it was its most senior leaders and component parties, it was its candidate for the presidency.

At the famous 2 December press conference, 3 days before the election, the "Democratic Alliance" leaders fabricated the story that there was a "secret agreement" between General Eanes and the PCP, and proclaimed that if Eanes won, this would mean defeat for the "Democratic Alliance", the resignation of the "Democratic Alliance" government and "within a brief space of time, the dissolution of the Assembly of the Republic."

This assertion was disseminated by all the state-owned news media over which the "Democratic Alliance" maintained (as to a large extent it continues to maintain) a complete monopoly.

So the voters, when they voted against Soares Carneiro and for Ramalho Eanes, voted according to the "Democratic Alliance" leaders themselves against the "Democratic Alliance," against its government and against its majority in the Assembly of the Republic.

The second sound political reason for the "Democratic Alliance" government not governing for 4 years and being dismissed as quickly as possible is that it is continuing the unconstitutional and unlawful policy.

And a government which does not respect the constitution and democratic legality loses for that very reason legitimacy to govern.

It is not we who are disregarding the democratic system and democratic legality by demanding the government's dismissal. It is the government which is disregarding the democratic system and democratic legality, and it is for this reason that it should be dismissed.

Legitimacy for governing cannot be recognized on the art of a government which, elected in accordance with the constitution, is not only violating the constitution in its executive activity but intends to eliminate it.

Never in history has a system recognized legitimacy on the part of a government which is governing in order to destroy it.

Because of all this, the PCP sets the "Democratic Alliance"/Pinto Balsemao government's dismissal as one of the central political aims in the present situation, and does not rule out that the Assembly of the Republic could be dissolved and a new election called, although holding a new election is not an essential condition for the "Democratic Alliance"/ Pinto Balsemao government's dismissal and replacement.

The government can be dismissed because the Assembly of the Republic denies it confidence. It can be dismissed because the Assembly of the Republic approves censure motions. It can be dismissed because the president of the republic dismisses it.

It can be dismissed because in the same Assembly of the Republic elected 5 October and with the same deputies, the government could possibly cease to hold a majority.

And it can be dismissed because the prime minister himself resigns in view of the failure of his own policy.

In any of these possible solutions, the people's struggle has a decisive role.

There Is An Alternative: Unity Among Democrats

When there is talk of the government's dismissal, the question immediately arises: "Is there an alternative?"

To this question we reply: It will not be easy, but there are democratic alternatives.

And not merely alternatives for 4 years hence, but more rapid alternatives, because this is what the situation requires.

Some people claim that the Republican and Socialist Front [FRS] is the "only possible alternative."

This is an unfounded assertion without any basis to support it. In the first place, when some people speak of that alternative, they have in mind an election 4 hears hence; an alleged alternative which at the outset, postpones the government's dismissal until 4 years hence, cannot be deemed valid.

Second, when some people speak of that alternative, they have in mind an election victory, and the FRS, as experience demonstrates, has no chance of holding a majority on its own.

Third, it is not certain that the FRS, which is beset by internal contradictions and conflicts, will last 4 years.

Other people claim that the alternative is the much spoken of "central bloc," resulting from an agreement between the Socialist Party [PS] and the Social Democratic Party [PSD].

A little thought is sufficient to conclude that this is a false alternative.

In the first place, such a "bloc" would not be for a democratic policy but would hitch the PS to the rightwing policy of the PSD/Popular Democratic Party [PPD] [former name of PSD]. Another government but not another policy could result from it.

Second, the "central bloc" would not be what some Democrats who advocate it say it would be: An alliance between the PS and a PSD converted to democratic legality and forming a government with the agreement or under the aegis of President Eanes.

This is not where matters could most likely lead. As matters currently stand, if such an alliance were concluded, the "central bloc" would not be a democratic "bloc" formed at the president's initiative but an anti-Eanes bloc destabilizing democracy.

The possibilities of an alternative must be sought in the solid base of support for a democratic policy which the 7 December election revealed.

The 7 December election demonstrated, with the massive vote against the "Democratic Alliance" candidate and with the election of Ramalho Eanes, that the overwhelming majority of the Portuguese people are opposed to the "Democratic Alliance" government, the "Democratic Alliance" majority in the Assembly of the Republic and the "Democratic Alliance's" program and plan for eliminating democracy.

As our party proclaimed, the massive vote against the "Democratic Alliance" candidate and for Ramalho Eanes demonstrated the existence of an extremely broad and majority social and political area of potential support for a democratic alternative.

Who falls within that majority area?

The PS, which continued its support for the candidate which it had put forward—Ramalho Eanes—despite the fact that its secretary general sought at the eleventh hour to pull the rug out from under his feet, falls within it.

The PCP, which set as its central and priority aim defeat for the "Democratic Alliance" candidate and to that end put forward a candidate of its own, conducted an intensive campaign to inform and mobilize the electorate and finally called on people to vote for Eanes, falls within it.

In addition to the Portuguese Democratic Movement [MDP], democratic forces which are organizationally and electorally less well represented, such as the Union of the Left for Socialist Democracy [UEDS] and the Independent Social Democratic Association [ASDI], fall within it.

Several Catholic sectors with organized manifestations of a progressive nature fall within it.

Many independents, who are proving to have an appreciable influence among broad sectors of the country, fall within it.

Leaders of other parties cannot tolerate our speaking of the "independents," do not accept the existence of "independents" and do not wish to recognize political opinions or the right to political participation on the part of those not belonging to parties.

But the fact is that the great majority of Portuguese people do not belong to political parties and many do not yet have a steady option. The independents constitute an enormous potential political force capable of adopting organizational forms--party or otherwise.

We are certain that even at this rally many independents (whom we cordially greet from here) are present who do not think as we do, who have ears with which to hear and heads with which to think, and who, while having their own opinions, believe, however, that rapprochement and understanding with the PCP are possible and necessary for a democratic policy.

It is joint action by all these forces, holding a large majority in the country which could provide the base of support for a democratic alternative.

Our party remains loyal to its tradition of a unitary policy.

Just as in the past, unity among democrats is today essential to defeat reaction.

We must not despair or abandon the idea of unity simply because leaders of other democratic parties reject unity with the Communists.

Unity among democrats is an essential condition for a democratic alternative within the framework of the democratic institutions. This is why we insist and will continue to insist on the battle for unity and trust that we will eventually win it.

There are leaders of other democratic parties who do not understand, or do not wish to understand, the impossibility of a democratic alternative without the PCP, and far less against the PCP. But thousands and thousands of members and voters of those parties are breaking with the old anticommunist prejudices instilled by a crude anticommunism and, shoulder to shoulder with the Communists, are deciding on joint action.

As far as the parties are concerned, we insist on unity with our comrades of the MDP, regretting merely that some of its wayward members (Viana do Castelo), instead of insisting on a frontal and dignifying struggle against reaction, are allowing themselves to be deluded by opportunist sirens and are seeking to separate the MDP from the PCP in order to enter into suicidal alliances.

We insist on the search for understanding and possibilities of joint action with the Popular Democratic Union and leftist criticisms of the PCP to alliances with the PS and rightist criticisms of the PCP.

We insist on the search for understandings with other groups and sectors, including the ASDI.

We attach particular importance to rapprochement, understanding and cooperation with the independents and with broad progressive Catholic sectors which are politically independent. And we continue to regard unity between Communists and Socialists as a prime aspect in the policy of democratic unity.

Mario Soares' motion for the PS congress rules out any unity with the PCP and announces "an uncompromising polemic with the Communist leaders, without ever ceasing to address the potentially Communist electorate."

If this is what he proclaims, it should cause no surprise that we criticize his line and address the "potentially Socialist electorate."

Not in order to advise Socialists to rebel against their party's leadership, not in order to sow discord, but in order to call for a struggle against the reactionary forces and joint action with joint aims, so as to guarantee with the combined democratic forces and with the struggle by Communists, Socialists and other Democrats the defense and continuation of the democratic system enshrined in the constitution.

The Situation in the PS

The PS' crisis is closely linked with the problem of the prospects of unity among Democrats and of a democratic alternative.

The internal situation in the PS is taking on a political importance which we should not underestimate. The PS' future policy is at stake. And that future policy, even if it is not decisive in itself alone, will undoubtedly influence the evolution of the Portuguese political situation.

For this reason--and because the currents confronting each other in the PS have been publicized by the PS itself in motions, interviews, articles and statements to the television and radio--the situation in the PS and the currents and motions confronting each other in the PS have ceased to be a merely internal problem to become a problem of national politics on which it is perfectly legitimate for the political forces to comment.

This is what has inevitably happened and will continue to happen.

What is strange is that when our party commented in general and political terms, protests were made against an alleged "interference" by the PCP in the PS' internal affairs, but when the reactionary forces really interfere and conduct real campaigns in support of some people against others, this seems to be regarded as perfectly normal in the PS.

We are not seeking to interfere in the PS' affairs or siding with some people against others, but it is strange that fascist and reactionary columnists and newspapers which accuse us without the slightest foundation of being advocates of the National Secretariat are not only advocates but propagandists (and in what a manner!) of the PS secretary general.

Nuno Rocha in TEMPO (12 Mar 1981) warns that in the PS, Mario Soares--"a real democrat," "a great democrat," "a Portuguese democrat," a man "with an unsullied democratic background" (it is TEMPO which is praising him)--"is in danger," and asserts that "it would be a catastrophe for Portuguese democracy if Dr Mario Soares ceased to lead the PS at his party's next congress."

Along the same lines, O DIA (9 Mar 1981) says that without Mario Soares, the PS is "a party without prospects."

Jose Miguel Judice in O DIABO (10 Mar 1981) extols Mario Soares, conducts propaganda for his victory as a condition for defeating "Eanesism" and calls on the PS members "against the majority of the present leaders."

Sousa Tavares in a CAPITAL (10 and 11 Mar 1981) openly supports against the PS Secretariat "Mario Soares' clear solution," making the appointment of the armed forces chief of staff dependent on the government's proposal.

Torcato da Luz in A TAROCE (9 Mar 1981) attacks the "obscure interests" and "the maneuvers under way" against Mario Soares, anxiously saying that "without Mario Soares leading the PS there will be no possible revision of the constitution."

Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa asserts in EXPRESSO (7 Mar 1981): "Mario Soares...remains the Democratic Alliance's inevitable and essential ally. His victory at the next congress is vitally important for the Democratic Alliance. The Democratic Alliance's best ally within the PS is Mario Soares, his short term ambition to win at the congress and his medium term ambition to be a candidate for the presidency of the republic....And the Democratic Alliance's principal opponent in the PS is the tactical alliance between former Socialist intervention group members and 'technocrats.'"

If the reactionaries have the right to express their opinion on the PS leaders' opinions, so do we.

How can we remain silent about PS leaders' public and widely disseminated opinions, if what is at stake is the PS' future role in Portuguese political life?

How can we remain silent if what is at stake is the realization or nonrealization of a new PS-PPD alliance against democracy?

When Mario Soares (in the draft motion for the PS congress) calls the General Union of Workers "a great democratic trade union federation," which "represents a step forward of truly historic significance in the consolidation of Portuguese democracy," is it not clear that he is insisting on a line aimed at splitting the working class and transforming the trade unions into scab trade unions at the service of big capital?

And if that is the case, is it or is it not our duty to point out the real significance of the stance and resolutely combat it?

And when Mario Soares regards as "new, interesting and worthy of careful study by the party" the PSD/PPD secretary general's proposal of an alliance with the PS in the future local authority elections, with the avowed aim of ousting the PCP from the municipal and parish councils where it remains in the majority--specifically in certain municipalities in the Lisbon industrial belt and on the south bank of the Tagus--is it not clear that Mario Soares, instead of desiring and planning democratic alliances to drive the "Democratic Alliance's" reactionary and correct administrations from the local authorities, is desiring and planning reactionary alliances to oust the Communists and hand local government over to reaction in further areas of the country?

And when, the day before yesterday, the committee supporting Mario Soares, in controversy with Zenha, for the first time sets its down in black and white and openly advocates an alliance with the PSD as a "democratic alternative" (that is what it calls it), is it or is it not our right and duty (without this constituting any interference in the PS' internal affairs) to warn democrats of the danger which such a line could represent if transformed into the PS' official line?

We ask not only our comrades but all democrats, and in particular the PS members and supporters:

What is the democrats' task in the present situation? Is it to defeat reaction or to defeat the Communists? Is it understanding and joint action with the reactionary parties in order to elininate our peoples democratic gains, condemn the workers to unbridled exploitation by capital, destroy the constitution and the system and hand Portugal over to the imperialism?

No. The democrats' task in the present situation can only be understanding and joint action on the part of all democrats (including, of course, the Communists) in order to save and preserve freedoms, the workers' rights, the gains of April [1974], the democratic system and the constitution.

Portuguese democracy and all democrats, including us Communists, are interested in the PS' crisis not resulting in its even greater weakening. A democratic alternative needs the PS.

But if we say that a democratic alternative needs the PS, this means that it needs a PS which is not oriented toward an alliance with the "Democratic Alliance" or with the PSD in order to strengthen the reactionary government, the counterrevolutionary offensive and the elimination of the democratic system, but is oriented toward a democratic alternative, a democratic change of direction and a democratic government with a democratic policy.

NEWS MEDIA PROTEST CONGRESS OF DEPUTIES DECISION

NC021314 Paris AFP in English 1313 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Madrid, 2 April (AFP)--Newspaper editors came out in force today against parliament's decision yesterday to give the authorities power to close newspapers and seize printing presses and broadcasting equipment used "to defend terrorism or incite violence against the constitution."

The law--"For Defence of the Constitution"--is one sign of a progressive erosion of democracy since the abortive rightwing coup 6 weeks ago, observers said.

The independent newspaper EL PAIS attacked the measure as vague and destructive of freedom of expression. It was particularly worrying that printing equipment which might be used for more than one publication should be at risk.

Other leading figures in the arts world have also signed a letter expressing concern at the threats to freedom of expression. They include writers Gabriel Celaya, Jorge Semprun and Eva Forest, and cinema directors Carlos Saura and Juan Antonio Bardem.

Other fears arise from the government's decision to use troops against Basque separatists, with 2,000 men watching the frontier with France, others posted at Spain's 18 main airports, seven warships cruising off the north coast and support from the air force.

Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson has tri[illegible] to quieten such fears, insisting that the troops will not be there for more than ten months, though not less than four, and their role was support for the Civil Guard.

But the bishops of Bilbao, San Sebastian and Vitoria in a pastoral letter published yesterday added their voices to those who consider that Spanish democracy is "wobbling precariously."

The pastoral letter, which condemned both terrorism and military pressure on democracy, was linked by observers with an urgent summons today by Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo to the Papal Nuncio in Madrid.

BASQUE REGION CLERGY CONDEMN MILITARY INTERVENTION

LD021420 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Today's first report is surrounded by controversy. The joint pastoral letter of the Basque bishops on the situation in the three provinces of Alava, Vizcaya and Guipuzcoa has upset the political world. With their document on terrorism and the judgment which they express against any kind of military intervention in the Basque country, Bishops Larrea and Uriarte of Bilboa, Larrauri of Vitoria and Setien of San Sebastian have made a regrettable impression, EFE says, citing Ministry of Defense sources.

Before going any further into the reactions, we shall now give a summary of the long episcopal document entitled: Save Liberty to Save Peace. It contains two fundamental aspects: First, the condemnation of the Basque Fatherland and Liberty Group [ETA]. Second, the condemnation of any military intervention. With regard to ETA actions, the Basque bishops say things like the following: ETA obstinately persists in carrying out military actions aimed to a considerable extent at harassing the armed forces. Everything leads one to think that this conduct is trying at least to place the country on the verge of a dangerous confrontation if it is not trying directly to provoke a coup d'etat to install a dictatorship and bring about the military occupation of the Basque country.

Now let us look at the paragraphs referring to the conduct of the armed forces. We have selected the following from the bishops letter in particular:

The mission of the armed forces in any state of law consists in serving the institutions which the people have created. It is not for them to express an opinion on the legitimacy of the democratic process. Possible changes in the basic laws governing political co-existence should be the result of a debate at the center of the institutions. When the armed forces express judgment on the process and feel tempted to intervene they constitute a serious danger rather than a genuine defense of the people.

The second paragraph of this brief selection:

In light of this (?it is easy to learn to) condemn any military intervention which attempts to supplant a legal order approved by the people by implanting another order by force. This condemnation becomes even more severe and imperative if the new established order consists of a more or less veiled dictatorship. Political life must always preserve its independence with regard to the armed forces and should not be subject to pressure from the latter.

All of this might be sufficiently understood in the light of the paragraph which the bishops put almost at the beginning of their pastoral letter when they speak about the ultraconservative sections of society which, they say, have not accepted the reform of the political regime. In this respect they say the following: This social group finds a favorable response in important sectors of the armed forces which are not insensitive to calls repeatedly inviting military intervention to control the Spanish political process. The attempted coup d'etat of 23 February and its noticeable influence on the internal working of Spanish political life are clear evidence of the reality and gravity of this situation.

Church Official Summoned

LD030144 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Excerpt] The joint pastoral letter issued by the Basque bishops was received with great surprise by government and political circles. The Papal Nuncio in Spain, Msgr Antonio Innocenti, was called urgently today to the Moncloa Palace where he had a half hour meeting with the prime minister. In political circles it was said that the purpose of the meeting was to discuss the pastoral letter from the Basque bishops. Neither the Secretariat of State for Information nor the nunciature would comment on what was said at the meeting. At the Vatican delegation, it was announced that for the time being to a communique on the pastoral letter would not be issued. The majority of the national papers have published the full text of the letter, as did the Basque papers, without comment.

RELATIONS IMPROVE BETWEEN PSUC, COMMUNIST PARTY

LD011019 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 26 Mar 81 p 10

[Excerpt] "I believe that we will reach an understanding which will fully make possible participation by the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] in the 10th PCE Congress," PSUC secretary general Francisco Frutos stated, following the meeting held with PCE leaders in Madrid throughout the morning, our office in Madrid reports.

The conversation, headed by Frutos and Santiago Carrillo, was attended by Cipriano Garcia, Javier Folch and Rafael Ribo, on the part of the Catalan Communists, and Sanchez Montero, Romero Marin and Jaime Ballesteros, on the part of the PCE.

Following over 4 hours of conversation, the two delegations issued a simple communique, stating that an examination of the overall political situation was conducted "in which there was full agreement between the two sides. As far as relations between the two parties are concerned, agreement was reached to lay down a timetable for joint work,"

According to the PSUC secretary general, the current political situation and the relaunching of relations between the PCE and the PSUC were principally discussed during the meeting.

Agreements in Analysis

As far as the political situation is concerned, full agreement was reached on the stances on terrorism, the crisis, autonomies and democratization of the state apparatus. There was also agreement on the assessment of the situation and on the measures to tackle the existing problems, "one of them within the line of a determined struggle against terrorism and in defense of democracy, the constitution and the autonomy processes, as a factor for normalizing the country's democratic life, and the other within the fundamental line of the struggle against unemployment and the crisis, with specific measures which are beginning to bear their first fruit, at least in the receptiveness which they have encountered among other political forces, and on the possible subject matter of the negotiations of the political issue, the autonomies and terrorism, as well as on the issue of unemployment and the crisis."

As far as relations between the two parties are concerned, it was a matter, Frutos said, of "resuming after this lengthy period the discussions on PCE-PSUC relations and their content, within the line begun since the first contacts of full recovery of the Communists' political unity and functioning at the level of the entire state, and beginning to broach the issues of the PSUC's participation in the 10th congress."

PCE Congress

With respect to this matter, PCE sources have stated that this participation will certainly be the means for normalizing relations--relations which, in Frutos' opinion, have improved considerably. "It has been a process insofar as we continued to engage in dialogue, frequently over the telephone, or raised certain issues within the PSUC leadership, both in the Central Committee and in the Executive Committee, and we made contact when it was time to discuss the political proposals which must be made at this specific moment: That is, a coalition government and how this should come about in Catalonia on the basis of the specific situation there."

As far as the abortive coup is concerned, Frutos stated that there had been objective agreement even before 23 February, but this had been accelerated because of objective circumstances following that date.

With respect to the possible difference of strategies between the two political parties, Frutos stated that this difference does not exist, since full agreement on all the issues discussed had been reached during the meeting.

"Even within the framework of this campaign in defense of democracy and the determined struggle against terrorism which the PCE and other statewide forces are planning, we are also working within this line that mass participation by the people in a different manner is necessary in order to undertake the defense of democracy and the struggle against terrorism."

GOBBI COMMENTS ON LATEST INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

NC021948 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Another meeting within the framework of intercommunal talks was held at the Ledra Palace Hotel this afternoon. The meeting continued discussion of the question of initial practical measures to promote good will, mutual confidence and return to normal conditions.

In his statement prior to the meeting, Mr Gobbi, UN special representative to Cyprus, said that from the technical point of view, the talks are in the first stage. He added that no early results or basic conclusions could be expected because both sides have not laid all their cards on the table. He said: This sort of talks can continue without any light at the other end of the tunnel and then, suddenly, light can be seen, as was the case with the problem of the missing persons.

The Greek Cypriot side's representative, Mr Ioannidhis, rejected the Turkish Cypriot side's allegation that he has not submitted proposals for the initial practical measures. Mr Ioannidhis said these measures are demands of both sides and thus there is no question of proposals. Ioannidhis also said the Turkish Cypriot side may not be satisfied with the answers of the Greek Cypriot side, exactly as is the case with the Greek Cypriot side about the Turkish side's answers. Commenting on Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas' statement that there are no missing persons alive, Mr Ioannidhis said that everyone knows that there are missing persons, adding: Whether they are alive or not will be ascertained by the investigatory committee which, I hope, will be formed very soon.

The Turkish Cypriot side's representative Onan said that any progress on the question of practical measures will depend on the Greek Cypriot side. He also expressed the view that, after the parliamentary elections, a new situation would emerge. Answering a question of whether after the elections he would submit a map on the territorial issue, Mr Onan replied that the map would follow automatically if there is agreement on the constitutional structure and the Greek Cypriot side accepts the partnership, as he described them, rights of the Turkish Cypriots.

New Talks Scheduled

NC021952 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] The United Nations has issued an announcement which says that, in view of the forthcoming elections to be held by both Cypriot sides, Mr Gobbi has proposed a new schedule for future meetings which has been agreed to by both sides. On the basis of the new schedule, two meetings will be held in April; one in each May and June; two in July; and then the talks will return to their normal weekly basis.

The next meeting of the intercommunal talks will be held in the afternoon of Wednesday, 15 April. The topic will be the constitutional aspect.

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA COMMENTS ON HAIG-TURKMEN TALKS

NC021325 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 2 Apr 81 p 5

[From the "I ELEVTHEROTIPIA" column: "The Haig-Turkmen Talks"]

[Text] Irrespective of positive or negative views, the talks between U.S. Secretary of State Haig and his Turkish counterpart Turkmen are deemed particularly important.

This is because the talks will discuss not only U.S.-Turkish relations and views on the efforts being exerted for bettering Turkish-Greek relations after recent talks in Ankara between the secretaries general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries, but also two other issues of equal importance.

The first is the Cypriot issue which, from the U.S. side—at least according to the most prevailing views—is absolutely linked with the wish of the Western superpower to strengthen NATO's southeastern wing. According to the same views, the settlement of the Cypriot issue would help considerably in ameliorating the Turkish-Greek differences, and would decisively contribute to NATO's strengthening. This we reiterate because the United States can, if it wants, exert pressure on Turkey to become more amenable to the Cypriot issue—naturally to the benefit of Western interests.

According to existing reports, the other issue to be discussed is U.S. policy in western Asia. In connection with this policy, Turkey is a considerable factor as a result of developments and U.S. aspirations. Thus the views to be expressed on this subject by the Turkish foreign minister will be definitive in the development of the new U.S. policy in the region. This policy will undoubtedly provoke great world reaction because it envisages creation of a new treaty—an axis in the region that would include Turkey, Israel, Egypt and Pakistan in an officially independent form parallel to the other, the NATO alliance.

The conclusion is that because of developments in the western and central Asia region which were to the detriment of the United States, the imaginative U.S. plan is designed to stabilize its presence within the new alliance, to serve U.S. interests above all, irrespective of the serious repercussions.

What the United States has omitted to examine and seems to forget is that in its efforts to stabilize its presence in a given area, it wants to use Turkey in its plans. However, with its aggressive policies, Turkey has itself created unstable situations in the same area. One cannot disregard Turkey's "performance" in human rights violations as well as U.S. "concern" as expressed every time these rights are violated, as Ecevit's and Demirel's Turkey has been violating them. There is a difference between different kinds of stabilization.

ROLANDHIS LEAVES FOR BRUSSELS TALKS WITH THORN

OFFICIAL IN COPENHAGEN ATTACKED BY TERRORISTS

TA030515 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Cavit Demir, the labor adviser at the Turkish Embassy in Copenhagen, was seriously wounded in Copenhagen last night. An Armenian secret terror organization claimed responsibility for the incident. Demir underwent surgery at the (Ritz) hospital after the incident which occurred at 0120 Turkish time. Turkish radio and television correspondent Sezai Tekinoktay reports from Copenhagen that Demir was attacked by an unidentified number of terrorists as he was going to take the elevator to his apartment, which is on the third floor. The terrorists fired six shots at Demir and fled the scene. Demir was nevertheless able to go up to the third floor but collapsed at the door of his apartment. Demir was immediately taken to the (Ritz) hospital and underwent surgery. Hospital officials said that he had received two wounds in his neck. Demir was still in the operating room when this news report was prepared.

Unidentified persons phoned the REUTER and AFP offices in Copenhagen and said that an Armenian secret terror organization was responsible for the incident. The Armenian terrorists attacked two Turkish diplomats in Paris last month and killed the Turkish press attache, Resat Morali, and religious adviser Tecelli Ari.

Condition Critical

TA031028 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Excerpt] It has been announced that the condition of Cavit Demir, the labor adviser at the Turkish Embassy in Copenhagen seriously wounded last night in an attack by Armenian terrorists, is still critical. Demir is still being operated on at the (Ritz) hospital where he was taken following the attack. Hospital officials said that part of Demir's intestines, damaged by the wounds he received, were removed, and the edemas formed in his kidneys caused by bleeding from the lungs and intestines were taken out. The officials said that Demir's lungs and kidneys resumed their normal functioning after the surgery and that the threat to his life was reduced. According to a last report by a Turkish Radio and Television correspondent in Copenhagen, Demir is now undergoing surgery to remove the bullets in his chin.

TURKMEN SAYS U.S. RELATIONS IN 'VERY GOOD STAGE'

TA022056 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is currently in Washington on an official visit, held a meeting with the members of the House of Representatives Foreign Affairs Committee this morning.

According to Turkish Radio and Television Washington correspondent Berna Kulac, in a statement at the beginning of the meeting, Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Clement Zablocki said that his country supports Turkey in its efforts to overcome its economic problem and return to civilian rule. Zablocki added that the United States is always ready to meet Turkey's economic and military aid needs.

In his statement, Turkmen noted that the bilateral relations between Turkey and the United States are currently at a very good stage. He said that his visit to Washington is aimed at developing this close cooperation. Turkmen will also meet with U.S. Vice President George Bush this evening.

Meets With George Bush

TA030726 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is in Washington for an official visit, met with U.S. Vice President George Bush in the White House. U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig was also present at the meeting. Bilateral relations, as well as international issues, were discussed during the talks. A joint communique released after the meeting by the White House says that NATO should be more sensitive toward threats in Eastern Europe and Southeast Asia.

A statement signed by President Reagan was also issued on the occasion of Turkmen's visit. The statement says that on Ataturk's centenary his motto of peace at home, peace in the world was now more appreciated in the United States. In the first official statement released after he was hospitalized following the attempt on his life, President Reagan expressed his satisfaction over the curbing of anarchic incidents in Turkey. The statement adds that the U.S. administration supports and appreciates the measures taken in Turkey to solve the economic and social problems.

Turkmen will hold a news conference at the Washington National Press Club today. He will leave Washington for New York tomorrow.

PARTIAL BAN ON CUMHURIYET FOR TORTURE ALLEGATIONS

TA021735 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] The publication and distribution of the daily CUMHURIYET will be banned in the provinces of Ankara, Cankiri and Kastamonu on 4 and 5 April. The paper has published untrue torture allegations.

According to information received by a Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] correspondent from martial law security officials, the military prosecutor's office of the Ankara Martial Law Command started an investigation of CUMHURIYET following a columnist's report on 23 March about a female teacher's allegation that she was tortured at the Security Directorate. Following the investigation, the military prosecutor's office decided that the allegation in the newspaper was not correct. Therefore, the martial law command banned the publication and distribution of CUMHURIYET.

PRIME MINISTER RETURNS FROM ISLAMIC MISSION

TA021527 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Statement by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu at Ankara's Esenboga Airport on 2 April--recorded]

[Text] I am returning from Jidda, where I participated in the second round of meetings of the Islamic peace committee that was established during the Third Islamic Conference summit in At-Ta'if to assist in ending the war between Iran and Iraq. The mission of the good will delegation is to secure a cease-fire between the two countries and ensure that this war--which is causing loss of life and property--is ended in a just and peaceful manner.

As you know, the committee submitted on 4 March a peace plan to both sides. This time the committee studied for the first time in Jidda on 29 March and answers and reactions of Iran and Iraq to the contents of this peace plan. On 30 March we went to Iran and held a meeting with Iranian President Bani-Sadr and the members of the Supreme Defense Council. On 31 March, we met in Baghdad with President Saddam Husayn and the members of the High Command. In both capitals we presented the views of one side to the other.

We listened to their respective answers. The talks were held in a sincere atmosphere and they enabled us to learn both sides' views on all issues. We returned to Jidda yesterday morning and assessed the situation.

As announced to the press by the chairman of the committee, Guinea President Sekou Toure, common views emerged regarding the following issues: 1) the establishment of the committee by the Third Islamic Conference summit to assist in terminating the war between Iran and Iraq was beneficial; 2) both Islamic countries received the representatives of the Islamic world in serious and sincere manner and talks were held on all subjects with frankness; 3) the two countries, loyal to the peace ideal, investigated the initial peace plan and did not reject it--however, naturally, both sides put forward certain conditions concerning the issues included in this plan or proposed changes; 4) the committee had the opportunity to learn the mutual proposals of Iran and Iraq; and 5) as you know, the committee is not a court and it does not have the power to judge.

The Islamic good will committee is fulfilling a sensitive duty. For the first time in history, a committee comprised of the heads of state and governments elected by the Islamic Conference is exerting efforts to resolve a dispute between two of its members. The following (?points) were generally decided at the end of the committee's meetings yesterday: Above all, the committee wants the two sides to accept a cease-fire. However, a date has not been proposed for a cease-fire. The cease-fire will be declared at a date to be agreed by the two sides. The two sides are accusing each other. Iraq considers Iran as the aggressor and vice versa. Both sides want the truth to be determined about where the attack came from. The committee, which took into consideration this view by Iran and Iraq, has decided to set up a committee comprised of very able legal experts to investigate who started the war. As you know, the main problems between the two countries are the land and river borders and the status of Shatt al-Arab. The Islamic committee is proposing to both sides the establishment of a committee to investigate the problem of land and river borders. The duty of the committee is not to reset the borders between the two countries; it is to reach an agreement on borders. As there will be representatives from Iran and Iraq in these committees, a dialogue will also be established.

The biggest aim of the members of the Islamic peace committee, which voices the feelings of all Islamic countries and of Turkey, consists of terminating the war between the two countries as soon as possible and ensuring the resumption of goodneighborly relations of cooperation between the two countries, following a lasting and just peace. The secretary general of the conference will continue the contacts with the two sides on the aspects I mentioned. When necessitated by these contacts, the committee will meet again in Jidda, the center of the conference and the committee.

Iraqi Comments

TA021643 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1525 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 2 April (AA)--Iraqi Minister of Regional Administrations 'Abd al-Fatah Amin said the Islamic good will committee could not succeed because of "Iranian intransigence" to end the Gulf war during a brief stopover at Ankara's Esenboga Airport today on his way back home from an official visit to Bulgaria. "The only alternative we are left with is to go on fighting."

REPORTAGE ON OFFICIAL VISIT OF SFRY'S DJURANOVIC

Visit to Parliament

LD031218 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1116 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 3 Apr (TANJUG)--President of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council Veselin Djuranovic visited the Austrian Bundesrat (parliament) this morning. Djuranovic was welcomed by Bundesrat Vice-Chairman Rudolf Dalhammer, who pointed out the importance of cooperation between non-aligned Yugoslavia and neutral Austria in the international field, especially efforts and aspirations for the maintenance of international detente.

Talks With Kreisky

[Text] Vienna, 3 Apr (TANJUG)--Yugoslav Premier Djuranovic, currently on an official visit to Austria, and Austrian Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky [words indistinct] international questions and further advancement of cooperation between the two neighboring countries. The talks particularly focused, reports are, on questions of cooperation and security. In the talks it was stressed that (?everything) possible should be [words indistinct] detente in [words indistinct] of the Helsinki conference.

[Words indistinct] functionaries with whom Djuranoivc had talks in the course of his visit so far--Austrian President Kirschlaeger and Chancellor Kreisky, as well as representatives of the Austrian parliament--have stated Austria's interest in further advancement of the cooperation with Yugoslavia. The role and activities of nonaligned Yugoslavia in the struggle for peace and security in Europe and the world were also assessed very positively.

Premier Djuranovic tomorrow ends his visit to Austria.

Further Report

LD041358 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0900 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 4 Apr (TANJUG)--President of the Yugoslav Federal Executive Council Veselin Djuranovic last night ended talks with Austrian Federal Chancellor Dr Bruno Kreisky. Veselin Djuranovic today completes his three-day official visit to Austria.

In the closing talks yesterday, Djuranovic and Kreisky discussed Austrian-Yugoslav relations. In the talks, it was stressed that bilateral relations are developing successfully. Djuranovic and Kreisky particularly focused on the question of the Slovenian and Croatian minorities in Austria. They stressed the need for a further comprehensive development of these minorities as a precondition for preservation of their identity. The Austrian side promised to do everything necessary for the preservation of the minority languages and identity, as well as to guarantee their rights.

Joint Communique

[Text] Vienna, 4 Apr (TANJUG)--A joint Austrian-Yugoslav communique was issued here today at the close of a three-day state visit by Veselin Djuranoivc, president of Yugoslavia's Federal Executive Council, to Austria, asserting that cooperation between the two neighboring countries has been developing successfully.

Dr Kreisky, Austria's chancellor, and Yugoslav Premier Djuranovic laid stress on the importance of all-round development for Croatian and Slovene national minorities in Austria and drew attention to the two minorities' role as a bridge for strengthening mutual understanding between the two countries' peoples.

On this occasion too, the Austrian side confirmed its readiness to fulfill its obligations proceeding from the Austrian state treaty and other international law obligations. It will do everything to guarantee the observance of their languages and national features, all-round development of their culture, education, social forms of life and their economic positions.

Kreisky and Djuranovic agreed on the need for the two countries' governments to invest efforts towards advancing economic cooperation. They particularly stressed the importance of establishing higher and more up to date forms of economic cooperation on long-term basis. The two premiers stressed the necessity of taking measures towards a better balanced trade between Austria and Yugoslavia.

The communique stresses that the two sides particularly focused on the position of Yugoslav workers temporarily employed in Austria and declared for advancing their living and working conditions.

Kreisky and Djuranovic stated concern with the aggravation of the international situation. They agreed on the necessity for further efforts towards a continual and consistent development of cooperation and strengthening of security in Europe and the Mediterranean founded on the final Helsinki document.

Kreisky and Djuranovic also urged further efforts towards settling most urgent international economic problems, particularly problems of the developing countries.

Meeting With Yugoslav Workers

LD050701 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1200 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Vienna, 4 Apr (TANJUG)--At the end of his visit to Vienna, Veselin Djuranovic, president of the Federal Executive Council, this morning visited the Yugoslav Embassy in Vienna where he had a meeting with embassy staff, businessmen and consular representatives in Austria and acquainted them with the political situation in Yugoslavia. The president of the Federal Executive Council was greeted by Ambassador Novak Pribicevic who thanked him for having found, despite his full and strenuous program and talks, the opportunity to acquaint Yugoslav citizens with important processes in the country.

Replying to questions, Djuranovic discussed some aspects of economic cooperation between Austria and Yugoslavia which had been referred to during his stay in Austria and which had also been mentioned in the joint communique.

Afterward, the president of the Federal Executive Council had a meeting at the embassy with representatives of our citizens currently working in Vienna and lower Austria.

Djuranovic told the workers about the talks which had been held to improve their position and in this context he also mentioned the need for a change of the existing, obsolete agreement on the employment of our labor force as well as the existing convention on social insurance. A whole series of issues were raised on which solutions are expected and on which both sides are working. Djuranovic also stressed that it was certainly the obligation of the country to provide for the people who, having worked in Austria, would return home--this being certainly one of the important problems.

The president of the Federal Executive Council thanked the workers for their patriotism, political sense of responsibility, maximum commitment and efforts to preserve their identity. "It is obvious," he added, "that you work in the best possible way under existing conditions."

Reception of Minority Representatives

LD032340 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1350 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 3 Apr (TANJUG)--Veselin Djuranovic, president of the Federal Executive Council, who is on an official and friendly visit to Austria, today received in Vienna the representatives of the Slovene and Croat minority in Austria. The meeting was attended by Dr Franz Zwitter and his associates, representing the Association of Slovene Organizations in Carinthia, and by Dr Matevz Grilc and members of the inner leadership of the national Council of Carinthian Slovenes.

The meeting was attended by Dr Ivan Miler, representing Burgenland Croats, and honorary President Dr Alfons Kornfeind on behalf of the Croat Cultural Society in Eisenstadt. The Croat Printing Society from Burgenland was represented by Chairman Stefan Emrich. Also present were representatives of the Organization of Burgenland Croats in Vienna; Marijana Grandic, chairman of the Croat University Students Club; Demetral Karal, chairman of the Croat Burgenland Society in Vienna and Hubert Resetaric, chairman of the Committee for the Rights of Burgenland Croats.

The representatives of the Slovene and Croat minority acquainted the president of the Federal Executive Council with the current situation and problems of development of the Slovene and Croat nationality in Austria. They spoke especially about the activities of their organizations in attaining the international legal guarantees and rights which they have under the state treaty. In this context, they emphasized questions of consistent implementation of equality with the majority, the rights of representation in public administration and other rights concerning bilingualism, the financing of children's nurseries, schools and minority organizations, as well as the problems of economic development of minorities and some other topical questions.

The representatives of the minorities also acquainted the president of the Federal Executive Council with the development of the dialogue with the Austrian Federal Government and with the dialogue at the regional level. They emphasized that this was a positive fact which, however, can only be assessed as important progress when satisfactory solutions are attained for questions related to the position and rights of the minorities. These questions have also been included in the timetable of proposals submitted to the federal government.

The representatives of the minorities welcomed the positive development of Yugoslav-Austrian relations in the conviction that this will contribute to a faster solution of all questions of importance for the position and all-round development of the Slovene and Croate national minority in Austria.

President of the Federal Executive Council Djuranovic emphasized the interest of the SFRY in the position and development of the Slovene and Croat minority in Austria and its consistent support to the just demands of the minorities for full implementation of the rights determined by the Austrian state treaty. In this connection, Veselin Djuranovic emphasized that the Yugoslav Government and public attach full importance to the continuation of the dialogue between the representatives of the minorities and the federal government in Vienna and at the provincial level, from which they expect fruitful results in the spirit of the Austrian Government's readiness to fulfill all its obligations under the state treaty. This readiness was also confirmed during this visit. The existing good-neighborly relations also favor concrete measures in this respect.

During the talks, it also was emphasized that the positive role of the minorities as a factor linking the friendship and cooperation between the two neighboring countries also implies constant progress in the creation of conditions for their all-round development.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY SPEAKS TO YUGOSLAV JOURNALISTS

TANJUG Interview

AU030823 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1314 GMT 1 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 1 Apr (TANJUG)--The good relations between Yugoslavia and Austria are a corner-stone of stability in central Europe, said Austrian Chancellor Dr Bruno Kreisky in an interview with TANJUG's correspondent in Vienna Davor Culic.

Dr Kreisky also underlined the importance which the small and non-bloc countries have in European political relations.

Yugoslavia, Austria and Switzerland make up a very important region of disengagement in Europe, Dr Kreisky noted, adding that it was actually the neutral and nonaligned countries which made it possible for the Madrid meeting on European security and cooperation to continue which he said, in itself is a success.

The Austrian chancellor assessed the nonaligned movement as "an important political alliance" which "enjoys a good reputation." He also came out in favour of the policy of non-interference and non-intervention both in Europe and Latin America. In his view, all kinds of military intervention cannot but result in failure.

Dr Kreisky particularly underlined his conviction that the social problems in Latin America cannot remain unresolved and that regimes founded on military dictatorship with outside support must collapse.

Further Remarks

LD032116 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1748 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 3 Apr (TANJUG)--It is a question of how the Madrid meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE) would develop and whether [words indistinct] active, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky said here today in a talk with the Yugoslav journalists who cover the Austrian visit of Veselin Djuranovic, premier of Yugoslavia.

Some preconditions have been created in Austria for the fulfillment of the demands [words indistinct] Kreisky evaluated. Answering the question what Austria is going to do for the implementation of the [words indistinct] state treaty Art. 7, Kreisky added that there also exist conditions for setting up councils of ethnic groups as bodies on which representatives of national minorities should also sit.

The Austrian chancellor expressed [words indistinct] for direct talks before long with representatives of the Slovene and Croatian national minorities on these questions, adding he thinks the most urgent thing now is to safeguard full employment in Austria, since its worsening would hit Carinthia as well.

REPORTAGE ON FOREIGN MINISTER'S MOSCOW TALKS

Genscher Interview

DW060951 Bonn ZDF Television Network in German 1710 GMT 5 Apr 81

[From the "Bonn Perspectives" program: Reporter Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on the flight from Moscow to Bonn--recorded]

[Text] [Question] That was a stay of 48 hours in Moscow and many hours of intense talks with the Soviet leadership, Mr Minister. Did the German-Soviet dialogue get going again? Is there resurgence after a certain lull?

[Answer] This dialogue always existed. I just want to recall last summer's Moscow visit of the federal chancellor and myself. We consider it very important that the dialogue will be continued in this extremely serious international situation, although we do not want to overrate our international position. I believe that we cannot assess highly enough the interest particularly of the Germans in an improvement of East-West relations and thus also of international developments.

[Question] Mr Minister, stabilization of East-West relations has been one of your demands for a long time. It was in your opinion a prerequisite for positive developments regarding certain bilateral developments between us and the Soviet Union as well as developments in Poland. Did the two days in Moscow contribute something in this sense beyond bilateral matters?

[Answer] I think that the Soviet side has understood that the Federal Government wants to contribute its share together with its allies to peaceful developments in the People's Republic of Poland through economic aid, for example. The creation of outward framework conditions would also facilitate peaceful developments in Poland, particularly a strict noninterference policy vis-a-vis the People's Republic of Poland. We expect all signatory states of the Helsinki Final Act to adhere to this vis-a-vis the People's Republic of Poland.

[Question] Regarding bilateral Bonn-Moscow relations, mostly economic relations have been involved in past years, now it is security policy problems. Did a change take place here, making the German position more difficult than it was in the past when it involved mainly economic offers?

[Answer] Economic relations are as before a stabilizing element of East-West relations, so that they continue to be important. No doubts exist at all that the CSCE followup conference in Madrid and the discussions on setting up a European disarmament conference will make security policy problems play an important part in these talks.

Everybody knows--and this has been pointed out in Moscow again--what concern on our part and on the part of other Western partners has been caused by the Soviet armament lead in the medium-range field. It was therefore necessary to explain NATO's dual decision--counterarmament together with a negotiation offer--while pointing out simultaneously that from our point of view negotiations on medium-range arms ought to take place as quickly as possible. It is an important result of this visit that no doubts can exist after a clear-cut statement of the Soviet leadership that the moratorium introduced by the Soviet side in the talks is not a prerequisite for taking up medium-range negotiations.

[Question] Mr Minister, the talks took place in a good atmosphere. There was no sharpness involved. And yet, opinion has hardly changed with regard to the matter involved. How can a solution be achieved in the difficult medium-range matter? How can some motion be introducted? No motion was felt in Moscow.

[Answer] Well, the assessments of the reasons for tension in the world and the assessments of the balance of forces are different. That is known. It was important with regard to this visit to express the seriousness of the situation and the fact that the possibilities of negotiations have been factually discussed. That is our aim. We want to negotiate not only in Madrid. We want to negotiate also on medium-range arms. The clarification I have already mentioned, namely, that no prerequisites will be demanded, is naturally an important element, and I believe it is an element that can be termed positive.

[Question] One can probably say after this Moscow visit that a communique will be issued on the Madrid CSCE conference. The CSCE efforts will be continued. But how do you see the further panorama in Vienna at the negotiations there and in Geneva? What will the panorama be like in the months to come?

[Answer] Mr Reiche, you have correctly said that a chance exists after the talks to achieve what we would consider a positive conclusion of the Madrid conference. I hope that a political climate thus will be created facilitiating progress at the Vienna troop reduction negotiations.

[Question] Mr Minister, you maintain that German East-West policy can take place only in the framework of international worldwide East-West policy. Do you believe that the firm attitude of the United States vis-a-vis the Soviet Union has been complicating your talks with Moscow lately?

[Answer] Not at all. On the contrary, the Soviet leadership indicated very clearly that it attributes a key position to Soviet-American relations, an opinion we share. And the fact that we are a firm and reliable partner of all our Western allies including the United States and the European Community, this fact does not decrease but increases our significance as a negotiation parter. I believe that this also ought to be an important realization for some people in our country.

Government Spokesman

[Text] Baden-Baden, 5 Apr (DPA)--Lothar Ruehl, Bonn deputy government spokesman, is expecting the resumption this year of the Geneva talks on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles. Ruehl said on Sunday in an interview with Southwest Radio Baden-Baden (SWF) that one of the substantial results of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher's negotiations in Moscow was that the Soviet Union is prepared to resume the Geneva negotiations without preconditions. The Soviet Union is not making the moratorium proposal a precondition.

Ruehl went on to say that during Genscher's visit, the Soviet Union had not voiced any criticism of the Federal Republic's aid to Poland. Asked about fears of Soviet intervention in Poland, he said that at present there is no reason not to believe Soviet assurances that the obligations of the Helsinki Final Act are being taken seriously.

Ruehl stressed that in Moscow Genscher also brought up humanitarian issues such as family reunification. The Soviet foreign minister promised him a "serious examination," and he was assured that no artificial barriers would be set up. It is conceivable that these problems will develop favorably because the Soviet Government quite obviously remains interested in relaxed and as good as possible, but in any event normal, relations with the Federal Republic of Germany, and attaches great improtance to these relations.

The station prereleased an edited version of the interview to DPA.

CDU/CSU Official

LD041634 Hamburg DPA in German 1249 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] Hamburg, 4 Apr (DPA)--According to the CDU/CSU, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) during his Moscow visit "consistently maintained" the positions advocated beforehand in the Bundestag and supported by the CDU/CSU. The foreign policy spokesman for the CDU/CSU, Alois Mertes, in an interview with the paper WELT AN SONNTAG, called Genscher's visit "a draw," as he and the Soviet leadership had done no more than outline "incompatible standpoints." According to Mertes, the Soviet double strategy is clearly speculating on "an increasing weakening of the American negotiating position due to the pressure of time put on Washington by the SPD, and is banking on a joint undermining of the NATO double decision by communists, socialists and naive pacifists.

ECONOMICS MINISTER MEETS WITH PRC VICE PREMIER

[Text] Bonn, 4 Apr (DPA)--In Bonn today, Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff had a meeting arranged at short notice with Gu Mu, People's Republic of China vice premier responsible for economic matters. Gu Mu is currently on a European tour and has already had talks in Brussels with the European Commission.

An Economics Ministry spokesman said that during the talk, which lasted about 2 hours, the two sides emphasized the desire to continue the hitherto good cooperation. The talk centered on China's decision to cancel and scale down large foreign orders worth billions, which to a large extent, also affects German business.

Gu Mu assured that his country intended to realise as much as possible of the promised orders. Lambsdorff said the Federal Government is willing to make a contribution toward overcoming present difficulties, but stressed this is primarily the task of the Chinese and their German partners.

The Federal Republic is China's fourth biggest trading partner after Japan, Hong Kong and the United States.

FINANCE MINISTER COMMENTS ON SAUDI TANK DEAL

LD041350 Hamburg DPA in German 1230 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 4 Apr (DPA)--Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer (SPD) said that the Federal Government should at least "agree to a sympathetic examination" of Saudi Arabia's wish for the supply of German Leopard II tanks. In an interview with Radio Bremen broadcast in Bonn, the SPD politician gave as his reason for this view his belief that it would be very difficult "simply to say no" to such a good and "exemplary" business partner as Saudi Arabia. Matthoeffer pointed out that the Saudis last year sold their oil exports below world market prices and thus waived around $14 billion worth of income. Apart from this, the country is one of the best customers of the Federal Republic.

SCHMIDT ON CURRENCY EXCHANGES, INTRA-GERMAN TALKS

[Text] Bonn, 3 Apr (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said that a reduction of the mandatory currency exchange requirement for travel to the GDR, which was drastically increased by the GDR in the autumn of 1980, is no precondition for a meeting with SED General Secretary Erich Honecker, which remains on the horizon.

In an interview with the BERLINER MORGENPOST (Saturday edition), Schmidt pointed to the fact that the Federal Cabinet had not set any such condition. The further progress of talks between Bonn and East Berlin does, however, depend on the general world political development, as West-East politics in general have considerable importance for intra-German relations. "The cooler the air throughout the world, the more difficult it is for the two German states. The more cooperative the mood throughout the world, the more cooperative the two German states can be toward one another," Schmidt declared.

GOVERNMENT CRITICIZES SCHOOL BOOKS, MAPS DECISION

[Excerpt] Bonn, 2 Apr (DPA)--The Federal Government has made plain its critical attitude toward the decision by the ministers of education and culture of the federal laender that in schoolbooks and on maps the German borders are to be marked as they existed in 1937. Klaus von Dohnanyi, minister of state in the Foreign Affairs Ministry, said today in the Bundestag question hour, that the government had "doubts and reservations" about depictions which could be misunderstood by Poland. He stated that in this matter the Federal Government is not the responsible authority, but stressed that the Polish Government knows the Federal Government's position with regard to recognition of the Odra-Nysa line as Poland's Western borders.

In reply to CDU/CSU questions about the aim to keep the German question open from a legal point of view, Dohnanyi replied that the concept of something being open from a legal standpoint is a different matter from the possibility of children being misled regarding the geographical realities in Europe.

DIE WELT VIEWS DIFFICULTIES FOR HAIG MISSION

DW060949 Bonn DIE WELT in German 6 Apr 81 p 1

[Friedhelm Kemna commentary: "Haig in the Field of Conflict"]

[Text] Alexander Haig's search for a strategic consensus in the Middle East transpires in a stormy stage setting. This highly sensitive crisis region is where the lines of force of regional and world political conflicts cross and touch each other. The civil war flaring up again in Lebanon may indeed be more than just a temporally incidential interconnection with the dramatically intensifying threat of intervention against Poland by the Soviets. A quarter of a century ago, the Western world was mesmerized by the Suez crisis when Russians tanks quelled the Hungarian uprising.

But the reverberation of the Syrian artillery salvos on the Christian district of Beirut not only conjures up the terrifying vision of another Middle East war, it also and defintely conveys a warning to the pro-Western Arab states against accepting a U.S. containment strategy in the Middle East. And these are not just Syrian signals. The destiny of the Assad government is insolubly interlocked with Moscow's strategy of influence in the Middle East and in the Gulf region as a result of Syria's friendship treaty with the Soviet Union. And this is exactly what causes Washington to plan on setting up reliable counterpositions between Egypt and the Gulf of Oman. Yet, the maintenance of this priority met with clear resistance in Cairo. Anwar as-Sadat does not want spoiled the Camp David process in which he had invested his stateman's prestige at the cost of the rift with the rest of the Arab world. As far as he is concerned, peace with Israel and the solution of the Palestinian problem constitute a precondition [as published] and not the potential fruit of a containment of the East-West conflict in the Middle East.

The new, reverberating trouble in Lebanon is in fact reminiscent of the nearness of the Israeli-Arab conflict. And in Riyadh and Amman, it will be difficult for Haig, of course, to presuade the regimes, in view of this hot neighborhood, to adopt the cool long-range view of a geopolitical balance of forces between East and West in that region, even though the realization is imperative that Moscow, through the arm of Syria, will remain present in the hot zone of conflict all the time.

CABINET ISSUES COMMUNIQUE ON AID TO POLAND

LD031523 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Apr 81 p 14

[Excerpts] The cabinet met at the Elysee Palace Wednesday, 1 April, under Giscard d'Estaing's chairmanship. At the end of the meeting, the following communique was issued:

Aid to Poland

The president of the republic informed the cabinet of his talks with Mr Jagielski, first deputy chairman of the Polish Council of Ministers responsible for economic questions. During his visit to Paris, the latter also met with the foreign affairs, economic affairs and foreign trade ministers.

The president of the republic stressed the attention and friendship with which France is following Poland's renewal process. He pointed out the confidence expressed by Mr Jagielski in the ability of the Polish authorities and people to preserve what has been achieved without foreign intervention or internal violence. It is in this spirit that French aid will be continued in its various forms in order to enable Poland to overcome its difficulties and bring about an economic recovery.

Regarding food, France will increase its bilateral efforts and will rapidly implement its participation in the Community aid program approved by the last European Council meeting.

In view of Poland's large food requirements and France's willingness, the cabinet approved the decision to rapidly export 4 million quintals of wheat to that country.

POLAND DISCONTINUES REPAYMENT ON WESTERN CREDITS

LD031712 Hamburg DPA in German 1536 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 3 Apr (DPA)--Poland at the beginning of this week discontinued repayments on credits secured with Western banks. As VWD [VEREINIGTER WIRTSCHAFSDEINST, a press service] was reliably informed on Friday by French banking circles and foreign banking circles in Paris, this applies to installments which fall due between April and the beginning of June. The Polish leadership in this connection wants a 6-month postponement, it is said.

Debt servicing is being maintained for the majority of syndicate credits, but not for all of them. At present, it is not known which part of the total Polish foreign debt (to the West), which amounts to DM24 billion, is affected by discontinuing the repayments.

STIRN HOSTS FINNISH PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

[Text] Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Stirn gave a lunch 30 March in honor of a Finnish parliamentary delegation headed by parliamentary speaker and former Prime Minister Virolainen. The delegation, invited by the Foreign Affairs, Industry and Foreign Trade Ministries, comprises 14 members from the various Finnish parties and during its visit showed particular interest in French achievements in high technology industries, notably the nuclear and aeronautics industries.

POLICE ARREST PRESUMED RED BRIGADES LEADER

NC041940 Paris AFP in English 1827 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] Milan 4 Apr (AFP)--Mario Moretti, a presumed leader of Italy's feared Red Brigades terrorist group and one of the country's most wanted men, was arrested in the Milan area during a police operation, police sources said today. Three other people were arrested with Mr. Moretti, sources at the Milan police headquarters said. The identities of the three were not released by officials.

Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni was at the headquarters to observe the police operation, the sources added. Mr. Moretti [words indistinct] of having planned or participated in all Red Brigades attacks in Rome since 1978, including the kidnapping and subsequent assassination of former Premier Aldo Moro.

PERTINI CURTAILS TRIP BECAUSE OF FAMILY DEATH

AU041512 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 4 Apr (ANSA)--Italian President Sandro Pertini will be home later today after cutting short an official visit to Portugal because of the death of his sister, Maria Pertini Tonna. The 83 year old Mrs Tonna died this morning in a Genoa hospital after suffering a cerebral hemorrage Friday.

Pertini cancelled his visit to Lisbon yesterday when he learned of his sister's stroke while winding up an official visit to Colombia in Cartagena, the former Spanish stronghold in the new world on South America's Caribbean coast.

The Italian chief of state managed to complete his Latin American tour, which took him to Mexico, Costa Rica and Colombia, before his sister's sudden collapse.

The original itinerary called for a state visit to Portugal on the president's way back to Italy, a visit scheduled for the weekend with Pertini's return to Rome set for Monday, April 7. The presidential flight stops off today in Lisbon, where Pertini will give a formal account of the reasons for cancelling the visit to Portuguese President Antonio Ramalho Eanes before reboarding an air force plane for Genoa.

BERLINGUER DEMANDS DC PARTY CONFERENCE ON MAFIA

AU060913 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Masala, Sicily, 6 Apr (ANSA)--The secretary of the Italian Communist Party, Enrico Berlinguer, has thrown out a challenge to the Christian Democrat (DC) party to fulfill a promise made in August to hold a Christian Democrat Party conference on the Mafia.

Speaking in this Sicilian city Sunday, Berlinguer recalled that, "In August last year, the mayor of Cstelvetrano, Vito Lipari, a Christian Democrat, was slain by the Mafia. That crime was committed a short while after a series of other brutal killings.

"On the day of Lipari's funeral," the Communist leader continued, "there was a statement by the Christian Democrat secretary, Flaminio Piccoli, in which he said that the Christian Democrat Party was sharply alarmed by the terrible onslaught of Mafia crimes which required a response, an initiative against the Mafia, and announced that, for this purpose, the DC would hold a conference inthe autumn, within a few weeks."

Berlinguer went on to note that the ruling party replied to queries from the Communists on why the national conference was not scheduled with a note attributing the delay to "organizational difficulties."

The leader of the opposition party then said, "so we came to January 9, this year, the date for the Silician Regional Council commemoration for the first anniversary of the slaying of Piersanti Mattarella," the DC Regional Council president.

Berlinguer reported that Piccoli was then questioned again by newsmen on the projected DC national conference on the Mafia and replied by "reaffirming the DC commitment to convene its conference before the Sicilian regional election.

"Three more months have passed, we have reached April 5, and this highly-touted conference is still not organized," the Communist Party secretary said with an eye on the June date for the regional election here.

Berlinguer went on to mention his party's activities on the anti-Mafia front and those on the program, including a gathering next week in Sicily on the matter of Mafia and the drug traffic.

After declaring that the problem of the Mafia has assumed "such serious and dangerous proportions" and the commitment and mobilization of all the nation's democratic forces are required to combat it, Berlinguer asked, "why are the other parties keeping their silence? Why have the Christian Democrats not yet scheduled their conference?

"Is it perhaps because someone in the DC does not want this conference, should find it uncomfortable" he continued. He went on to question the thinking of the Christian Democrats at the regional level and wound up with the statement: "We challenge Piccoli to stand by that commitment he repeatedly made in the name of his party, before the people of Sicily and the civil conscience of the nation. Let us see if he can maintain it."

VATICAN REPORTS PAPAL STATEMENT ON POLAND

LD051536 Vatican City in Polish to Poland 1515 GMT 5 Apr 81

[Excerpt] At his angelus address in St Peter's Square today, the pope spoke about the right to life. He also spoke about peace in Lebanon and in Poland:

Once again I have to speak about the problems of my fatherland. The events of the last week have shown once again that the Poles are trying in a peaceful way to solve their difficult internal problems, being guided by a sense of responsibility for the common good.

It is right then that the opinion of the whole world, of all countries which truly love peace, underlines, in conformity with the principles of international coexistence, that the right of the Polish nation and the state to be able to continue to solve their important internal problems must be fully respected.

Important problems are involved, problems which concern the very dignity of man's work, which can be solved in a human way only through peaceful means.

Once again, I entrust the problems of my fatherland to the prayers of the church and all people of good will.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS INTERVIEWS PSD LEADER CAPUCHO

LD021343 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Mar 81 pp 17-18

[Jose Nunes Pereira interview with Social Democratic Party [PSD] Secretary General Antonio Capucho--date and place not given]

[Excerpt] DIARIO DE NOTICAS: Your recent remarks in Oporto concerning the 1982 local elections have prompted some turmoil in political circles. To what do you attribute the reactions that we have witnessed?

Antonio Capucho: My remarks caused some controversy and arguments because they were exaggerated by some of the media. They were even reported inaccurately. The context in which I made those remarks needs to be clarified again. I made them at a meeting of municipal councillors. It was therefore natural for the journalists present to raise the question of possible alliances for the 1982 local elections. On that occasion I merely mentioned the possibility of an alliance extended to the Socialist Party in individual cases. These remarks were, let us say, transformed to imply that I had proposed a general alliance with the Socialist Party without defining the relative context for it. This possibility is envisaged in the conclusions of the PSD national bodies and in no way affects the unity of the Democratic Alliance, as was made clear at the meeting of the alliance's coordinating committee on Tuesday. So there was a hasty exploitation and misinterpretation of my remarks.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Does this mean that when you mentioned this possibility you believed that any such agreement would invariably be discussed within the Democratic Alliance?

Antonio Capucho: It could not be otherwise. The Democratic Alliance has its coordination bodies. Back in 1979, when in the PSD National Council's conclusions accepted this kind of agreement in PCP-dominated local authorities, the idea presupposed prior discussion and approval within the Democratic Alliance.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: So what caused the Social Democratic Center Party's [CDS] reaction? Do you consider the matter entirely clarified?

Antonio Capucho: I am not much interested in saying anything more in this regard. The important thing is that the Democratic Alliance's Coordinating Committee has held a cordial meeting and confirmed in a brief discussion that there was no cause for alarm. The local authorities will not affect the Democratic Alliance's cohesion. The communique issued following that meeting is clear on this point.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: How do you now interpret the reactions of other parties, particularly the Socialist Party?

Antonio Capucho: It is not very difficult to interpret. It has to do with the Socialist Party's internal situation, which is the concern of the Socialist alone. I have listened carefully to the statements made by their principal leaders. I have noted them. I insist, however, that after a fortnight the media, instead of providing a true version of my remarks and instead of protraying them as mere working hypotheses in line with the decisions of my own party bodies and within the spirit of the Democratic Alliance, are still insinuating that I made a special proposal, which is untrue.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: That is not how we see it. But even in the context which you mentioned, were your remarks entirely innocent? Did they not have some objective in mind?

Antonio Capucho: They had no objective in mind, specifically to try to interfere in the Socialist Party's internal affairs to benefit this or that motion [to be discussed at coming Socialist congress]. They stemmed from the problems of my own party, of the local authorities and of the country.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: But some people believe that your remarks were aimed at aiding Dr Mario Soares' position....

Antonio Capucho: I had no intention of either helping or hindering Dr Mario Soares. He is the Socialist Party's leader and knows better than anyone else what his party wants. What we want above all--and what will doubtless happen--is for the Socialist Party to remain within the genuinely democratic camp.

No crisis in Democratic Alliance

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Why did the PSD not agree to the bringing forward of the Democratic Alliance Coordinating Comittee meeting, as requested by the CDS?

Antonio Capucho: At first an ordinary meeting of the Coordinating Committee was planned for 26 March. The CDS asked us whether it could be brought forward to last Friday. We believe that this was not justified once the Assembly of the Republic had began to debate the draft general state budget, on which the attention of the PSD's principal leaders was centered. Nevertheless, we agreed to bring it forward from the originally planned date, in view of the fact that the CDS' national congress is due to meet this weekend and its leaders will also need some latitude. The meeting took place in a very cordial atmosphere.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Were the reasons you mentioned accepted by the CDS?

Antonio Capucho: Nobody raised the issue at the Democratic Alliance Coordinating Committee meeting. I assume that our reasons were accepted.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: What was the main topic of discussion at the Democratic Alliance Coordinating Committee meeting?

Antonio Capucho: It was a brief meeting--the budget debate was taking place at the same time--but an important one. We analyzed the present stage reached in the work of the Constitutional Revision Committee, discussed the political situation within the context of this discussion and broached the matter of the 1982 local elections.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Let us discuss the last point. What was decided concerning local elctions?

Antonio Capucho: Basically we decided to maintain the extremely positive working method that has always prevailed among the Democratic Alliance partners. At my suggestion we also agreed to form an electoral commission, specially elected for the purpose. Through dialogue and consensus by 1982 we will plan the most suitable ways for the Democratic Alliance and its member parties to approach the local elections. The electoral commission will also be expected to concern itself with by-elections as they occur.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Was your viewpoint regarding possible individual agreements with the Socialist Party accepted?

Antonio Capucho: No hypothetical agreements with other parties were discussed. The principal of the specific nature of each local authority was asserted. It was acknowledged that the PCP does in fact dominate certain major municipalities and that to combat it and strengthen the position of the Democratic Alliance and its parties plans must be drawn up within the Democratic Alliance, without prejudice to each party's affirmation of its own potential and identity.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Some sectors of the media have said that your remarks jeopardized the Democratic Alliance itself. Is there a crisis within the Democratic Alliance, or not?

Antonio Capucho: I believe that there is no crisis. Such a conclusion stems naturally from the way in which the government is working and from the harmony that prevailed at the Democratic Alliance Coordinating Committee meeting. There are not the slightest grounds for any speculation in this regard.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Does that mean that the situation is calm within the Democratic Alliance?

Antonio Capucho: I stress that the situation within the Democratic Alliance is perfectly normal. Obviously the solutions put forward by the Democratic Alliance's various parties for the very grave problems assailing Portuguese society are not exactly the same. But the Democratic Alliance has a very specific common denominator in its agreements, in the program that it presented to the Portuguese people and in its government program. I see no crisis.

Discussion of Constitutional Revision Premature

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: You said that the coordinating committee discussed the constitutional revision. Is the work being done in this connection still based on Professor Freitas do Amaral's plan?

Antonio Capucho: Yes indeed. Professor Freitas do Amaral's plan has formed the basic document in the Democratic Alliance's work. Its three member parties have made suggestions and alterations to introduce agreed improvements to the document. This task is going on and has reached a very advanced stage; it is being carried out by a committee headed by Professor Freitas do Amaral. We might be in a position to present our own proposed constitutional revision in April.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Your colleague Angelo Correia has told us that only after the socialist party congress will it be possible to decide whether or not it will be possible to secure the necessary two-thirds vote for a constitutional revision. Hitherto, the Democratic Alliance and the Republican and Socialist Front have announced substantially different stances. Do you believe in the viability of a rapprochement between the two alliances in this connection?

Antonio Capucho: Taking into account the Democratic Alliance's agreements, there is a great willingness on our part to carry out a constitutional revision in agreement with the Socialist Party. We will make efforts in this direction. However, I cannot enter the realm of political futurology with regard to what kind of plan will emerge from the Socialist area after the Socialist Party congress. I believe it is premature to speculate on this now.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: So all the Democratic Alliance has to do is calmly await the development of events.

Antonio Capucho: The Democratic Alliance has to present its own proposal for a constitutional revision. Then it will have to wait the appearance of other proposals and then try to secure the necessary two-thirds majority in the appropriate forum, the Assembly of the Republic.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: You have declined to discuss other parties' affairs. Be that as it may, we believe that the Socialist Party's internal situation is relevant to the country's life and therefore to the PSD. Is your party indifferent to the outcome of the Socialist Party congress?

Antonio Capucho: As a democrat, I believe that the opposition must itself constitute a government alternative. As has been seen in the draft budget debate there is at present no alternative to the Democratic Alliance. Therefore, I can only hope that all the democratic parties will emerge strengthened from their struggles in defense of their underlying ideology.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: I will ask you again: Will the Democratic Alliance, and above all the PSD, be merely an indifferent spectator?

Antonio Capucho: Not indifferent. A very attentive spectator, yes, but without interfering. It is up to the members of the Socialist Party to resolve the issue.

Return of Members to PSD

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: You recently mentioned your own party's problems. What problems?

Antonio Capucho: When I mentioned my party's problems, I was thinking specifically of the form in which we must jointly lend specific form to, or implenent, the measures which emerged from the conclusions of our congress. I was thinking of the strengthening of internal organization--in the labor, municipalities and political training sectors, for instance. It is only in these contexts that my party has any problems. There is also at present a great mobilization with a view to finding the best methods for achieving the objectives set by the congress.

DIAIRIO DE NOTICIAS: Is this mobilization being carried out also by the defeated list of candidates for one of the PSD's principal bodies?

ANTONIO CAPUCHO: Though there were two lists, there was a single strategy motion which was approved unanimously. Therefore everyone has the same reference point. We all have the objectives to attain. I do not believe that anyone intends to stop cooperating at all levels.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: What is your opinion of the return to the PSD of prominent figures who left the party in the past?

Antonio Capucho: I am very pleased to see them rejoining the party, on the decision of the grassroots and, as always in such cases, of those who were with us in the struggle for social democracy. Provided, however, that they have not harmed the party or its social democratic character. We are fighting for the enrichment of the PSD's political cadres.

Government for 4 Years

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Does the Democratic Alliance government of which you are a member correspond to the Portuguese people's aspirations and needs? Does it meet the conditions to last 4 years?

Antonio Capucho: In accordance with its plans, the government is deeply committed to satisfying the Portuguese people's aspirations and needs. I believe that it is a united and efficient government with abundant skills in the various fields. It has very clear aims. In some fields it has already shown that it knows how to tackle and resolve problems. Time will soon show that we have a stable government to govern the country for the next 4 years.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Do you believe so?

Antonio Capucho: I am thoroughly convinced of it. I see nothing on the horizon to make me in the least pessimistic.

DIARIO DE NOTICIAS: Dr Antonio Capucho, you achieved a rapid and discreet rise within your party. You have suddenly become the center of a lively polemic. Why?

Antonio Capucho: I do not understand why I am the target for attacks both from the left (which labels me as a narrow-minded anticommunist on the basis of the remarks we discussed and from the right (which dubs me a dangerous Red and a Eanesist). Though the reasons for this escape me, it seems to me that it was necessary to find a scapegoat for certain situations. That does not worry me.

PRIME MINISTER, PSOE LEADER DISCUSS AUTONOMY

LD040056 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo met this evening with Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE]. During the meeting, the two men stressed the need to make a determined effort to set up the overall pattern of a state of autonomies within the framework of the constitution, as well as respecting the autonomy processes already underway, the official note says. They also agreed on the need to clearly outline the administrative structure resulting from the autonomy process and also to define the pending regulations concerning state powers. Of course, this definition of principles does not clarify the possible level of agreement which might have been reached at this high-level meeting. Our colleagues on "Open Night" [title of this program] spoke a few moments ago with Felipe Gonzalez who spoke in more detail about the subject of agreements in the short term and long term.

[Begin Gonzalez recording] I think so. I think that the first stone, at least, has been laid for a possible policy of agreement on matters of fundamental interest for the state, although this doesn't mean these stones have not been laid before. There have been some ideas formed by the public opinion which do not correspond with reality. This is the first step taken in this new phase to tackle a subject of such importance as the construction of a state of autonomies. [end recording]

The official note issued by the Secretariat of State for Information also says both men agreed on the need for a collaboration committee of independent experts, appointed by both sides, to be chaired by Professor (Eduardo Gracia de Enteria) to bring about an efficient handling of the autonomy problem.

MOROCCO'S BOUCETTA COMMENTS ON BILATERAL TALKS

LD021720 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] On leaving Madrid, the Moroccan minister of state for foreign affairs, M'hamed Boucetta, told newsmen that he did deliver a message from Hassan II to King Juan Carlos, although, he said, naturally he cannot reveal its content because this should be done by its recipient. He did say that it does carry with it all kinds of considerations on points regarding political relations between the two countries. Boucetta said that the two countries have a desire to promote the bilateral relations which the two monarchs share and that those relations should be taken to the highest level.

Regarding the visit by Hassan to Spain, he said that is possibly would take place soon, perhaps in the coming months. On the negotiations between the two countries, the Moroccan minister said that the possibility exists that the signing of the cooperation agreements will mark a positive step in the political relations between Spain and Morocco. Boucetta did not hide the fact that it has not meant a radical change unilaterally on the Spanish side, which wanted to point negotiations in the direction of fishery matters and not toward the specifically Moroccan objective. He said that there are other matters which concern Rabat such as the security of its territory and the Polisario Front, whose members undergo training in Libya.

On reviewing the recent relations between Spain and Morocco, Boucetta did not hide the fact that relations have experienced difficult times. For this reason, he said, we have come to Madrid to look for the necessary balance so that situations of this kind are not repeated. In his opinion, this balance should be centered upon the expansion of cooperation in the agricultural, economic, industrial and cultural fields, in collaboration in the professional training of Moroccan workers and the facilitation of fisheries exploitation in Moroccan waters in common agreement with Spain and its interests.

MP URGES BACKING OF U.S. FORCES IN MIDDLE EAST

LD031219 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 3 Apr 81 p 18

[Alan Clark, member of House of Commons, article: "Why We Must Again Take a Middle East Role"]

[Text] The secretary of state and the chief of the defence staff have been in the Gulf region for over ten days. They have visited every principality in the area and put in a great deal of hard work in the fields both of diplomacy and arms sales. No team of such high rank has had so long or so fruitful a sojourn in the region for a quarter of a century, since the old pre-Suez days of imperial ascendancy. At the same time Lord Carrington has been further east, visiting the Afghan refugees in Pakistan, while the prime minister has confirmed our commitment to an intervention capability, which she made to President Reagan at their meeting in Washington when the idea of British participation in the United States Rapid Deployment Force was first put about.

All these factors are portents of a major, and long overdue, shift in the emphasis of British defence planning--one made more rather than less urgent by the desperate inadequacy of resources which afflict it. The likelihood is that there will be a defence review, deeper and more comprehensive than the anodyne assumptions of the coming white paper, to appear sometime in the autumn. Political and diplomatic protocol may inhibit the directness with which its conclusions are stated, but it is these conclusions--although some of them remain contentious, particularly among the soldiers--that can now be regarded as having general acceptance at senior level in the services and among civilian experts. They rest on three basic truths which I shall first state baldly, and then elaborate.

1. The resources of the United Kingdom are inadequate to sustain its existing defence commitments.

2. The threat of a direct Soviet attack in central Europe is minimal.

3. A high level of vulnerability exists in Third World areas whose resources are of fundamental importance to Western industry.

Reverting to the first, the use of the word "inadequate" is not strictly true. The resources are adequate in themselves but the national or political will is absent. An increase of 3 percent (itself unlikely to be sustained) is insufficient to maintain force levels in fields where inflation of weapons costs runs world-wide at between 12 per cent and 18 per cent. At present we are committed to the Trident strategic deterrent system, the air defence of the United Kingdom, the protection of the North Atlantic sea lanes and oil fields, the maintenance of the highly efficient expeditionary force and its complete infrastructure on a permanent basis in north Germany, and putatively, the capacity to intervene by land, sea and air outside the NATO area.

Before drawing inferences as to which of these capabilities is overdue for reappraisal let us proceed to the second proposition. This can be more sensationally expressed by saying that Russian power in Europe--as measured at least in geographic and opportunist terms--has been steadily on the wane since the time of the Berlin airlift, and the formation of NATO in 1948.

Austria, formerly with half its territory occupied by the Red Army, is neutral but ideologically aligned to the West. Finland's neutrality has become steadily more positive. Yugoslavia has defected irrevocably. Hungary's level of subjugation has gradually, but significantly altered since the revolution in 1956. Rumania has become so self-assured in her own independence as actually to pass and publish resolutions deploring the possibility of Soviet intervention in Poland.

And Poland...what on earth is happening there? How diminished in self-confidence, in authoritarian certainty, have the Soviets become not to have moved instantly in August of 1980 to suppress that most dangerous of all heresies, the rejection of communist party supremacy in the affairs of state. Indeed, it could be argued that far from being aggressive, Soviet forces levels in East Europe are intended to deter.

In contrast, the level of Soviet opportunism in areas where Western strength is feeble or absent altogether, proceeds apace. My own view is that the occupation of Afghanistan was primarily defensive and consolidatory and even in this region the Soviets continue to show caution where they judge that the West might consider their vital interests at stake (although how they were to judge that during the hesitant period of the Carter administration is another matter) and this is demonstrated by their cautious "stand off" attitude to events in Iran and their obvious reluctance to take up a position in the Iraq-Iran war. But other operations, notably the reinforcement of Angola in 1975, and the airlift of men and heavy equipment into Ethiopia in 1978 (one of the most outstanding long-range military operations staged by any power since the end of World War II) show that their incisiveness and speed of reaction still offer great danger to the West in sectors which we have demonstrably neither the strength nor the will to protect.

The principal difficulty for the West in defending its interests is the requirement to deploy its own nationals. Western proxies have proved to be unreliable, incompetent or, where militarily effective (as Israel or South Africa), politically unacceptable. Furthermore, the presence of NATO servicemen virtually guarantees that there will be no direct intervention by the Soviets. It should be remembered that no British soldier, sailor or airman has been killed by a Russian for 60 years, nor has a United States serviceman ever fallen casualty to a Russian.

But both the logistics and the political difficulties of maintaining a force adequate to deal instantly with proxy communist units armed to the teeth with front-line Soviet equipment and directed by Cubans and East Germans are formidable. Permanent base facilities are no longer a realistic prospect--indeed the Soviet experience, both in Egypt and Somalia, seems to indicate that even when supported by a repressive "people's" government, such arrangements have only a finite life. The nearest fixed installations from which the West could respond are in Cyprus and Diego Garcia some 2,500 miles apart. It is expected that such a response could only be by invitation.

The great carriers of the American Navy with its immensely complex electronic systems of defence and detection are the best "policemen" for these. But the Americans are reluctant to shoulder the burden alone, rightly foreseeing that they may be exposing their own people to combat and casualties while the European allies, in whose interest such action is taken, remain impassively behind their Maginot positions on the central front. Nor did the abortive hostage rescue operation against Tehran do much for confidence in unilateral American military action in this region. As the European land powers are adamant in their refusal to be diverted into the political and military complexities of the Middle East, being anxious not to offend either Israel or OPEC, they must be persuaded to release, by assuming greater responsibilities on the central front, those of their allies who are prepared to do so.

For Britain this is a special opportunity. Our commitment to a permanent expeditionary force with a fixed and costly infrastructure on the European mainland is now over 30 years old. Such an arrangement was last rejected by the Angevins over 500 years ago, on the grounds of expense, and it has once again out-lived the circumstances which may have made it desirable after the defeat of Nazi Germany created a power vacuum in central Europe. Britain's traditions are maritime and much of her strength and skill is diplomatic. It is a natural evolution in the developing pattern of world power that she should assume a sharing role in decision, policy and action in those sectors where uncertainty and Soviet expansionism offer the greatest threat.

NEWSPAPER CRITICIZES HAIG RESPONSE TO TURKMEN

NC040734 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 4 Apr 81 p 5

[From the Comments column: "Turkish Suggestion and U.S. Silence"]

[Text] Turkmen, the foreign minister of the Ankara Government, and his U.S. counterpart, Haig, met in Washington last Tuesday. During this meeting, Turkmen made a suggestion to Haig which reflects the Turkish intentions toward and policy on the Cyprus problem. The Turkish foreign minister called on the United States to apply greater pressure so that the deadlock in the intercommunal talks, as he termed it, might be overcome. And undoubtedly with this statement Mr Turkmen implies that the United States must pressure the Greek Cypriot side. This shows that Turkish intransigence and insolence knows no limits.

This is the first useful conclusion that must be drawn from the Turkish foreign minister's recent meeting with General Haig. But there is something else as well that should be noted. This is the way in which the U.S. secretary of state received the recommendation of his Turkish counterpart, or rather the way in which Mr Haig avoided referring to the Cyprus problem. We believe that he should have answered Mr Turkmen's recommendation and should have clearly pointed out to him that the side which must move in a more positive way at the intercommunal talks is the Turkish side, that Ankara and Denktas must abandon their intransigence and their various excuses, and must contribute to the promotion of a fair Cyprus solution. However, Mr Haig chose to remain silent. Thus, we have every right to give our own interpretation to his silence.

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA DISPUTES MITSOTAKIS SUGGESTIONS

NC031310 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 2 Apr 81 p 1

[Dispatch by Athens correspondent Y. Ioannidhis]

[Excerpt] Athens, 1 April--Speaking to foreign correspondents in Athens, Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis stated that Greece "does not believe that it would be expedient now to remove Turkey from the Council of Europe." Mitsotakis expressed the conviction that if something like this happened "the outcome would be negative for domestic developments and democracy in Turkey." He also added that the rest of the EEC foreign ministers agreed to this.

NC031323 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 3 Apr 81 p 5

[From "I ELEVTHEROTIPIA" column: "Mitsotakis' Statement"]

[Text] Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis' statement has caused at least concern to the foreign correspondents in Athens. Mitsotakis maintained that "Turkey's removal from the Council of Europe would not help" and that the Cypriot issue is "the beginning and the cause of the Greek-Turkish differences." There are opposing views to both subjects mentioned by Mitsotakis; views that are strengthened by historical facts and adherence to democratic procedures and principles of freedom and justice. Mitsotakis maintained that if Turkey were expelled from the Council of Europe, the outcome would be negative to domestic developments and democracy in Turkey. Briefly, the Greek foreign minister suggested to reward the generals, who seized power in Turkey by means of a coup and, according to one point of view, dealt a blow to the vast majority of Turkey's progressive people, who have been struggling against the military regime, and in favor of democracy.

But the purpose of the expulsion of the "Turkey of the generals" from the Council of Europe would be to strengthen the adherence to democratic principles and to deprive dictatorial governments—not countries--of the right to have a say in the affairs of democratic countries in Europe, as was the case with the Greek junta of Papadhopoulos and Ioannidhis.

Allow us to disagree on what Mitsotakis said about the Cypriot issue being "the cause of the Greek-Turkish differences." The differences existed already a long time ago, even before the Cypriot issue had grown to its present dimension, and when the goals of Turkish policy toward Greece were different. Therefore, we must look for the cause and beginning of Greek-Turkish differences elsewhere, and not link or mix them with the Cypriot issue.

ROLANDHIS HOLDS PRIVATE TALKS ON EEC WITH THORN

NC031602 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] The republic's foreign minister, Rolandhis, today had a private meeting in Brussels with Thorn, chairman of the EEC Executive Committee, during which recent developments in the Cyprus problem were reviewed in detail along with issues that concern Cyprus' relations with the EEC within the framework of the association agreement.

Following the almost half-hour meeting, Thorn, in a statement to our station's correspondent in Brussels, emphatically stressed that the EEC, that is, the Executive Committee and the 10 member states of the EEC, converse exclusively with the Cyprus Government. Thorn added that this assurance had been given to Rolandhis during their meeting today. He also said that an exchange of views had taken place on the future status of relations between Cyprus and the EEC in view of the beginning of the procedure for the agreement's second stage.

In this connection, he said that he will ask the EEC Ministerial Council for instructions to start negotiations with the Cyprus Government concerning the future status of the association agreement for the years 1982 and 1983. Thorn expressed the hope that he will secure these instructions by next June.

For his part, Rolandhis described the meeting with Thorn as exceptionally good and mentioned that Thorn is vitally interested in Cyprus' problems and in the island's relations with the EEC. He also mentioned that contacts with the Executive Committee will continue so that the association agreement can be advanced to its final goals.

For the Cypriot side, today's meeting was also attended by the republic's permanent representative to the EEC, Ambassador Agathoklecus, and responsible ministry officials. Rolandhis will return to Cyprus tomorrow.

[Text] This evening Foreign Minister Rolandhis returned from Brussels, where yesterday he had a meeting with Thorn, chairman of the EEC Executive Committee. During the meeting they discussed the latest developments in the Cyprus problem and issues concerning Cyprus' relations with the EEC within the framework of the association agreement.

SPOKESMAN ON INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS POSITION

NC041116 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] The position of the government and of the Greek Cypriot side at the inter-Cypriot talks is that concrete proposals on the territorial aspects of a map should be introduced at the negotiations table so that we can conduct a constructive, substantive and effective dialogue in accordance with UN resolutions and in compliance with the opening statement by the UN secretary general at the time of the resumption of the talks. The above statement was made today by the government spokesman following the recent statements by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas and Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan that the Turkish Cypriot side will submit its proposals on the territorial aspect after the conclusion of agreement on the constitutional aspect. The government spokesman added that discussion on the territorial and constitutional aspects, which are dependent on and connected to each other, must be held simultaneously and in correlation to each other. The spokesman said that this position was supported at the negotiations table and that it is expected that the Turkish Cypriot leadership and the Turkish Cypriot side will respond so that normal continuation of the dialogue be secured.

AKEL PARTY LEADER OUTLINES ELECTION PLATFORM

NC051035 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 5 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] The communist AKEL party is not aiming at the assumption of power and transformation of society to the socialist pattern while the country is still under occupation. This was stated by AKEL leader Mr Papaioannou at a press conference at which he outlined the party's election programme. He repeated the party's stand of readiness to cooperate after the elections with all the "patriotic forces" which agree with the policy line agreed at the National Council during the lifetime of President Makarios. Asked if in the light of the parliamentary elections the AKEL party would reconsider its attitude towards President Kiprianou, from whom it had withdrawn its support, Mr Papaioannou said that so far no consideration has been given to the question of presidential elections. Mr Papaioannou expected that the house will be disbanded on Thursday week, April 16 and that elections would be held by the end of May. The AKEL party is ready to go into elections when things are ready.

Mr Papaioannou reiterated the party's aim and ambition to be the leading party in the new house but avoided saying the number of deputies it expects to return during the elections, the first to be held under the proportional representation system. "The more deputies we have in the house the more certainty there is for its programme to be implemented," he said.

TERCUMAN: AKEL ADMITS TIES IN NORTH, WITH TCP

[Text] Lefkosa (Nicosia) (AKAJANS)--Papaioannou, secretary general of Greek Cypriot Communist Party AKEL, which is active in the Greek Cypriot sector of Cyprus, has stated that his party was maintaining friendly relations with the illegal Turkish Communist Party [of the mainland] and that the two parties were in close collaboration.

Responding to questions put to him on the Greek Cypriot sector by Ayer Delideniz, publications director of the Turkish Cypriot weekly magazine OLAY, Papaioannou said: "It is true that we maintain friendly relations with the Soviet Communist Party, but this does not mean that we receive directives from Moscow. We maintain equally friendly relations with the Turkish Communist Party with which we are in close cooperation." After asking the OLAY correspondent to turn off his tape recorder, Papaioannou said: "In north Cyprus, too, there are persons with whom we are on friendly terms. This is quite normal."

BREZHNEV OPEN TO NONAGGRESSION TREATY WITH GREECE

NC04123 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 4 Apr 81 p 1

["Text" of interview with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev by Yiannis Kapsis, editor of Athens evening daily TA NEA--date and place not given]

[Text] Question: Mr President, speaking at the 26th CPSU Congress, you gave particular emphasis to the efforts for international detente. Among other things, you also stated that the Soviet Union would never use nuclear arms against nonnuclear countries which also refuse to accept the installation of nuclear weapons on their territory.

L. Brezhnev: The Soviet Union has repeatedly stated that it would never use nuclear weapons against those countries which refuse to manufacture and acquire nuclear weapons or to install them on their territory. This fact constitutes a very firm guarantee.

Question: Could this statement by you acquire the form of concrete guarantees for such countries as Greece, for instance?

L. Brezhnev: We are prepared to proceed even further and at any time conclude a special agreement with any nonnuclear country, including Greece of course, if, in its turn, the other country undertakes the obligation not to install nuclear weapons on its territory.

Question: Would you like to address any special message to the Greek people?

L. Brezhnev: Availing myself of this opportunity, I would like, in the name of the Soviet people, to wish the people of Greece peace and prosperity.

Party Leaders Comment

NC042100 Athens I AVYI in Greek 4 Apr 81 pp 1, 6

[Excerpts] All the democratic opposition parties yesterday reacted positively to Brezhnev's statement (made in an interview with TA NEA) that the Soviet Union is prepared to conclude at any time a special agreement with Greece "if in its turn the latter undertakes the obligation not to install nuclear weapons on its territory."

However, the government yesterday refrained from taking a stand on the Brezhnev proposal, stating that it would like "to study if first."

According to B. Dhrakopoulos, secretary of the KKE-Interior Central Committee, "President Brezhnev's proposal must be met with a positive answer from our country because this is dictated by specific national interests, the need to protect our country from thermonuclear destruction and by the cause of peace." B. Dhrakopoulos added that efforts by every country, a small one in particular, to dissociate itself from nuclear weapons and foreign bases "should be combined and coordinated with the more general struggle of all peace-loving forces for the gradual limitation and abolition of nuclear weapons, disarmament, detente and peace, progressive abolition of military blocs and for a new and more just international order."

For his part, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou has made the following statement:

"PASOK firmly maintains the stance that the existing nuclear warheads should be removed from Greece as soon as possible and, consequently the installation of new nuclear weapons on the Greek territory should definitely be prevented. It is the duty of political leaders to prevent the possibility of our country becoming a holocaust in the event of a nuclear confrontation between the two superpowers."

At the same time, key parliamentary spokesman N. Kaloudhis stated that "there is no doubt that Brezhnev's specific and realistic proposal fully responds to the interests of Greece and the Greek people." N. Kaloudhis concluded that "the Soviet stance now offers us a positive and constructive way out of the 'vicious circle' and the dangers of a nuclear war. Undoubtedly, Greek public opinion will expect the government to show a positive response to the Soviet leader's proposal."

According to EDA [United Democratic Left], Brezhnev's proposal is of "great national importance" and the government has the obligation to immediately give a positive answer in accordance with the nationwide demand that our country never witness the holocaust of a nuclear disaster.

In the meantime, KODISO [Party of Democratic Socialism] Chairman I. Pesmazoglou placed the Brezhnev proposal within the more general spirit of Soviet proposals for disarmament, as they had been outlined at the 26th CPSU Congress. He stressed that "the Soviet proposals should be given appropriate consideration."

Finally, Center Front Chairman Y. Mavros stressed that the problem of nuclear disarmament should be taken up on a worldwide scale in conjunction with a balance of conventional weapons and, therefore, bilateral agreements do not solve the problem. "Nevertheless, President Brezhnev's proposal is worthy of attention in this respect because it is conducive to the creation of the necessary climate that would assist in facing the problem in its true dimensions."

Government Statement

NC051452 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 5 Apr 81 p 5

["Text" of 4 April government statement on Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's interview with the Athens evening daily TA NEA]

[Text] The joint statement signed in October 1979 by then-Prime Minister Karamanlis and then-Soviet Prime Minister Kosygin made it clear that it is commonly realized by the two governments that the arms race constitutes a threat to peace and that they would do whatever they could to bring it to an end. It was in this spirit that the Greek Government has studied Mr Brezhnev's interview with TA NEA.

The Greek Government's view is that the problem of international security and stability is a composite one and that it has two aspects. On the one hand, the control not only of nuclear but also of conventional armaments. The securing of a balance of both of these elements, at the lowest possible level, is essential to reduce the anguish the small countries--in particular and justifiably--suffer.

On the other hand, the limitation of armaments, both nuclear and conventional, is not an issue that can be resolved through bilateral agreements. It requires a broader understanding that would secure stability and balance in Europe and, more generally, under conditions of effective control. The Greek Government has always maintained this stance, both at the United Nations and in the European and bilateral framework, and it will continue in the same spirit to work in this direction.

KKE Rejects Government Stance

NC051906 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 5 Apr 81 p 1

[Statement issued 4 April by the KKE Central Committee Press Office]

[Text] In its statement today the government is dodging Soviet President L. Brezhnev's serious and constructive proposal to Greece and attempting to mislead the people by avoiding to give an answer to the substance of the proposal.

The problem of reducing the balance of and controlling armaments is certainly an international issue that cannot be fully resolved through bilateral agreements. In the case of President Brezhnev's recent statements, however, we have a specific proposal to Greece: that our country undertake the obligation not to have nuclear weapons installed on its territory and that the Soviet Union undertake the obligation not to use its nuclear weapons against Greece.

Such a bilateral agreement not only would not run counter to the more general issue of disarmament but, on the contrary, it would help and contribute positively to the more general efforts of promoting the consultations for the reduction of nuclear and other armaments. Against the cause of disarmament and international security stand only the maintenance and expansion in our country of U.S. bases, which the government is negotiating, as well as the presence of U.S. nuclear weapons in Greece.

Such a bilateral agreement may not resolve the question of international or European security, but it could contribute substantively to the cause of safeguarding our country from nuclear disaster. It is inconceivable to every patriot not to utilize such a big opportunity under the pretext that--naturally because of the U.S. and NATO cold war orientation--the international negotiations for the reduction of the arms race are still blocked.

BOMBS PLANTED UNDER U.S. AUTOS AT ELLINIKON

MORE REPORTAGE ON TURKMEN'S VISIT TO WASHINGTON

TA031601 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Turkish Radio Television Washington correspondent Berna Kulac report on Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen's visit in Washington--recorded]

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is continuing his official visit in Washington, met U.S. Vice President George Bush yesterday. A statement issued by the White House after the meeting in which U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig also participated, said that Bush and Turkmen discussed bilateral and international problems in a friendly atmosphere. The statement added that Bush and Turkmen stressed the necessity for all NATO members to exert efforts to increase their defense capabilities in the face of the existing installations [as heard] in southwest Asia and Europe. According to the White House statement, during the meeting Bush praised Turkey's efforts to develop its relations with Greece and its support of the intercommunal talks continuing in Cyprus. The statement said that Bush also referred to the existing excellent Turkish-U.S. relations and to the significance of 1981 which is the 100th birth anniversary of Ataturk, the founder of modern Turkey.

Speaking to reporters after his meeting with Bush at the White House, Turkmen said that during the meeting the U.S. administrators were briefed on Turkey's views on various regional problems and especially the Middle East. Turkmen noted that Turkey's views on the Middle East were listened to with [word indistinct] attention. Noting that Turkey's need for military aid will be reviewed within a perspective of 4 to 5 years, Turkmen added that U.S. administrators will also look into alleviating the conditions of the military and economic aid envisaged for Turkey.

Turkmen yesterday also met with members of the House of Representative Foreign Affairs Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Turkmen will attend a working breakfast with journalists at the Washington National Press Club today and will make a speech. Turkmen will leave Washington for New York tomorrow.

News Conference

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is on an official visit to the United States, has concluded his contacts in Washington. Turkmen held a news conference in Washington at the end of his 3 days of official contacts.

Turkish Radio and Television Washington correspondent Berna Kulac reports that Turkmen said that during his contacts bilateral relations, Turkey's position within NATO and Turkey's military and economic needs were among the subjects discussed. In reply to a question, Turkmen said that the threat facing southwest Asia can only be prevented through the strengthening of the region's countries. Turkmen added that Turkey is one of these countries.

Turkmen noted that during his contacts it was again confirmed to him that the U.S. administration is determined to continue the support it provides Turkey.

On the armed attack against Cavit Demir, the labor attache at the Turkish Embassy in Copenhagen, Turkmen said that Armenian organizations are distorting historic realities. Turkmen will leave Washington for New York tomorrow.

More on News Conference

TA041601 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1513 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] Washington, 4 Apr (AA) Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen reiterated in a Washington press conference his conviction that the defence of the Gulf was a matter that concerned the states in that region.

He made the statement in a news conference at the National Press Club Thursday during his current visit to the United States, in response to a question about the security of the Gulf and the possibility of the United States sending units to the area.

Turkmen declined to conjecture about future "scenarios" in the area, but stated Turkey will not in principle take on any responsibility beyond her commitments to NATO.

Asked about Turkey's view of the current Islamic revival in her region as a republic which has rejected "Islamic fundamentalism" at its foundation, Turkmen said in the sense that it aimed at closer cooperation among Islamic countries for a more effective role in world affairs, Islamic revival was a concern of the Islamic Conference and its summit meetings. As for the revival of Islam in domestic administration observed in some Islamic countries, that did not involve Turkey at all.

The investigation currently being conducted in connection with certain ex-deputies in Turkey on charges of violating the constitutional principle of secularism had no bearing on Turkey's relations with other Islamic countries, including Saudi Arabia, Turkmen said. On the contrary, he believed other Islamic countries were aware of Turkey's special situation and functions and that Turkey's relations with them and her role in the Islamic Conference had grown stronger over the past 6 months.

Asked about the modernization needs of the Turkish Armed Forces, Turkmen cited economic difficulties as the major problem. Turkey needed modern tanks, equipment and supplies as specificied in a 5-year program. He expected U.S. military aid under the new defence and economic cooperation agreement and Federal German aid under another special agreement to be of help in the solution of the problem, however.

The Turkish foreign minister hoped the intercommunal talks in Cyprus, carried on without interruption since September 1980, would be continued at the same pace after a slowdown mutually agreed upon for elections in both zones.

He believed relations between Greece and Turkey had recorded a significant improvement recently. Contrary to certain claims set forth by Greece when she quit NATO's military wing, anything against the interests of Turkey would also be against the interests of Greece because it would hurt NATO's southeast flank.

Turkmen termed the situation in southwest Asia as critical, with the situation in Afghanistan and the Iran-Iraq war the major causes of instability in the region. The best way to counteract the current threat was to strengthen the countries of the area individually, he believed [words indistinct] and Pakistan as examples.

Turkmen confirmed that 17 Turkish diplomats have been assassinated abroad so far in attacks by Armenian terrorist organizations. He charged these Armenian organizations with misrepresenting historical facts and collaborating with international terrorist organizations, particularly with Marxist-Leninist groups.

TERCUMAN HINTS AT SOVIET-REAGAN PLOT COMPLICITY

[Editorial by Guneri Civaoglu: "Attempt on Reagan's Life"]

[Excerpts] The truth behind the attempt on U.S. President Ronald Reagan's life was still a mystery until 25 minutes after midnight when these lines were being written. Was the 22-year-old youth from Colorado a lunatic or a fanatic or were there other forces pulling his strings? As is seen, figures behind attempts to assassinate U.S. Presidents vary a great deal; fanatics, international politics and even lunatics are involved.

Latest crimes carry traces of international terrorism as well as of international politics. When examined from that angle, the attempt on President Reagan's life is thought-provoking. In reality, those who had considered Reagan a second-class actor and a cowboy remnant, realized even after the first few weeks of his administration that they were grossly mistaken. Reagan had formed a strong, realistic and effective staff and had begun displaying a definite and resolute attitude, creating new vistas in international politics under the U.S. leadership.

Instead of the former U.S. policies, which had been retreating for years before Moscow's expansionist policy, and which resulted in the fall of Free World countries one after another like dominos, Reagan had begun to implement a foreign policy which courageously protected the interests of the Free World. The Reagan administration stood up to Moscow without adopting a 'conceding' attitude.

Undoubtedly, the new U.S. foreign policy, which envisages the formation of a Rapid Deployment Force as well as the warning that a Soviet intervention in Poland will not be permitted, has disturbed the Soviet Union.

Naturally, we cannot definitely argue that this disturbance in Kremlin has led to a dangerous gamble such as an attempt on Reagan's life. This would be a highly speculative argument. But neither can we argue that absolutely no political implications should be sought behind the attempt to assassinate Reagan, who has introduced an extremely strong and dignified foreign policy in the United States as well as in the Free World. Such a thing would be extremely naive.

Supposing Soviet troops storm Poland in the next few days--a U.S. administration under a wounded Reagan would be less 'frightening', wouldn't it?

REACTIONS TO COPENHAGEN ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT

Foreign Ministry Statement

TA031333 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1300 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] The condition of Cavit Demir, the labor attache at the Turkish Embassy in Copenhagen who was seriously wounded in an attack by Armenian terrorists last night, is still serious. Demir is still being operated on at the (Ritz) hospital where he was taken following the attack.

Meanwhile, the Turkish Foreign Ministry has issued a statement in connection with Demir's condition and the incident. The statement noted that because of operations performed on him, Demir's chances of survival have increased.

The statement issued by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General said the following: The Danish police have swiftly investigated the incident. According to initial information, there were no witnesses. Persons who heard the gunshots made statements.

The Danish police have announced that border exit points have been informed of the attack and that airplanes have not taken off from the Copenhagen airport since the incident. The necessary work is continuing in order to apprehend the assailants.

Attack Condemned

TA031550 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 3 Apr (AA)--Acting Foreign Minister and Minister of State Ilhan Oztrak said, with reference to last night's armed assault on Turkish Labor Counselor Cavit Demir in Copenhagen, it was imperative for all countries to cooperate closely in order to wage an effective campaign against such terrorism. He noted Turkish diplomats and officials abroad had been the target of 51 such attacks since 1973, with 17 losing their lives as a result.

Oztrak invited Danish Ambassador to Ankara Lorenz Petersen to his office to tell him that the Turkish Government expects Danish authorities to apprehend and bring the assailants to justice as soon as possible.

Danish Ambassador Lorenz Petersen described the Armenian terrorist assault against Turkish Labor Counselor Cavit Demir as "terrible." His government condemned the act and would try its best to find the murderers through various means, including cooperation with INTERPOL, he told reporters. The assailants were "professionals" he added, however, and managed to disappear quickly from the scene of attack.

Danish Minister's Remarks

[Excerpt] Danish Minister of Foreign Affairs Kjeld Olesen made a statement after a meeting with Turkish Ambassador to Copenhagen Bemcet Turemen today. In his statement, Olesen said: We are again faced with a treacherous assassination attempt. Our government strongly condemns these meaningless acts of terrorism that have extended into Denmark as well. Every effort will be exerted to apprehend the culprits. Olesen also noted that he extended the Danish Government's grief to Turkish Labor Attache Cavit Demir and his family.

The investigation by the Danish police into the assault against the Turkish labor attache in Copenhagen is continuing. A special unit has been established within the Danish security organization to conduct the investigation. Security at border posts and airports was also increased in order to prevent the assailants from fleeing the country.

Foreign Minister's Reply

TA041053 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] Foregin Minister Ilter Turkmen has said the struggle against international terrorism can be successful only with the cooperation of the concerned countries. Turkmen replied to a message sent to him by Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen following the attack on Turkish Labor Counselor Cavit Demir in Copenhagen.

In his reply message, Turkmen said: This inhuman attack constitutes a new crime in a long list being perpetrated against innocent Turkish diplomats by terrorists who have not yet been identified. I was pleased to read in your message that the Danish police will not forego any efforts in the investigation of this incident. The struggle against international terrorism can have a chance only if all the concerned countries carry out full cooperation.

UNION OFFICIAL CRITICIZES NEW LABOR LEGISLATION

TA051603 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1437 GMT 5 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, April 5 (AA)--Mustafa Ozbek, leader of the metal workers union, "Turk Metal Sendikasi," affiliated with the National Confederation of Labor "Turk-Is," expressed satisfaction with the successful campaign against anarchy and terror by the authorities since September 1980, but added the same could not be said of practices concerning labor.

Addressing the congress of the union's headquarters branch, Ozbek charged "certain bureaucrats and employers used to earning fast profits" with "misleading" the authorities, and called for a "reconsideration by the National Security Council" of all recent labor legislation and practices, including those on severance indemnity, taxation, bonuses and social security payments and benefits.

If the needed "readjustments" which "discriminate" between civil servants and workers and "seem to punish workers as if they were guilty" are not made, there will be needlessly hurt feelings, he predicted, leading to a fall in production and eventually "social unrest."

The metal workers union leader blamed, particularly, Social Security Minister Sadik Side, who is at the same time secretary general of Turk-Is, for the recent "work-labor" amendments to Law No 506, and believed Side should be "brought to account."

As for the Supreme Arbitration Board in charge of redrafting expired labor contracts, Ozbek noted the two representatives of labor on the board could not affect decisions taken by the votes of the seven other board members.

"A process has begun of going back on labor's rights, step by step" he warned, citing the example of the (?decision on) severance indemnity, which represented a 40-50 percent loss for some workers.

Turk-Is training secretary Kaya Ozdemir, who represents his confederation on the committee on minimum wage, said Turk-Is might reconsider returning to the committee session scheduled for Tuesday, April 7, if there is an indication of a positive development in the committee's attitude. He was aware that Labor Minister Tufan Esener had contacted government representatives on the committee with regard to Turk-Is objections.

Otherwise, Turk-Is would continue to be absent from the committee sessions, from which its representatives had walked out last week.

The Turk-Is board of directors will hold a special session Monday to hear Social Security Minister Sadik Side "explain" the recent amendments in social security legislation. The board will also review the work of the committee on the minimum wage and the Supreme Arbitration Board.

GOVERNMENT TO HEIGHTEN EFFORTS TO JOIN EEC

[Text] Ankara, 4 Apr (AA)--Official sources in Ankara have announced that the National Security Council made a decision to accelerate efforts in the social, industrial and economic fields in Turkey in a bid to facilitate Turkey's entrance into the EEC. This decision was made following a meeting in which the Council members were briefed on relations with the EEC. This decision will be transmitted to the EEC, the same sources reported.

However, Turkey will apply formally for membership to the EEC after the restoration of democracy in the country. In fact, it is for the Council of Ministers of the EEC to make the final decision on this subject, these sources indicated.

FORMER SOLDIERS CHARGED WITH SPYING FOR BULGARIA

TA031613 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Istanbul, 3 Apr (AA)--The trial of 8 persons charged with spying on behalf of Bulgaria started at an Istanbul military court Thursday. Defendant Muzaffer Cengil, dismissed from the army after he had been acquitted in a 1973 trial of the so-called "revolutionary officers" group, accepted the charges contained in the military prosecutor's indictment, which said a tip-off had led police and secret service (MIT) agents to 45 pages of classified documents containing military secrets hidden in a warehouse owned by Cengil.

Cengil, a member of the illegal left-wing group "Dev-Sol," (Revolutionary Left) had set up contact with a Mr Rusiberov, cultural attache at the Bulgarian Consulate in Istanbul after his dismissal from the army, and had travelled to Bulgaria under a false passport supplied by the consular officer, the prosecutor charged. He demanded 15 to 20 years in prison for the defendants. The other defendants, an army captain, a second lieutenant, 3 sergeants and 2 retired noncommissioned officers, rejected the charges. The next hearing on spying charges will be held 30 April.

INDUSTRY MINISTER KOCATOPCU RETURNS FROM ROMANIA

TA031607 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1420 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Istanbul, 3 Apr (AA)--Industry and Technology Minister Sahap Kocatopcu returned Friday from an official visit to Romania. At Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Kocatopcu said his talks with Romania's minister of machine-building industry, Ioan Avram had concentrated particularly on possible bilateral cooperation in the construction of an iron and steel complex in the central Anatolian province of Sivas. Kocatopcu added he had communicated in person goodwill messages from Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and Premier Bulent Ulusu to Romania's President Nicolae Ceausescu.

Protocol Signed

KREISKY, OTHER SOCIALISTS CRITICIZE U.S. POLICY

AU061100 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 5 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Graz--At the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOE] Styrian provincial party congress [on 4 April] SPOE Central Secretary Karl Blecha criticized the armament policy of the current U.S. administration: "While eliminating social welfare benefits, they are spending 3 trillion schillings on armament over there this year." Hans Gross, SPOE deputy governor of Styria, called the neutron bomb, as well as the other weapons of mass destruction, a "perversion of the mind." Chancellor Kreisky also criticized the U.S. policy of strength, arguing that Vietnam has shown where this leads.

USSR'S TIKHONOV TO VISIT VIENNA, LINZ, MAUTHAUSEN

[Summary] Honoring an invitation extended by Chancellor Kreisky during his official visit to Moscow in 1978, USSR Council of Ministers Chairman Nikolay Tikhonov will arrive in Vienna on Monday afternoon for a 5-day official visit. "Since this is his first visit to the West since the 26th CPSU Congress, it is to be expected that Tikhonov will elucidate the proposals made there by USSR President Leonid Brezhnev, general secretary of the CPSU Central Committee." Tikhonov will be accompanied by USSR Deputy Foreign Minister Nikolay P. Firyubin, First Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Nikolay D. Komarov, Nikolay Inozemtsev, deputy chief of the State Planning Commission, and by more than half a dozen high-ranking civil servants.

On Monday, Tikhonov will be received by President Kirchschlaeger. On Tuesday, he will visit Parliament, lay wreaths at two memorials--the Freedom Fighters Memorial at Aeusseres Burgtor and the Soviet Soldiers Memorial on Schwarzenberg-Platz--call on Chancellor Kreisky, have working talks with him at the Chancellery, and in the evening he will attend an official dinner given for him by Kreisky.

On Wednesday, Tikhonov will visit City Hall, resume the working talks at the Chancellery, attend a luncheon given in his honor by President Kirchschlaeger at the Hofburg Palace, attend a meeting with members of the Austrian-Soviet Society, and give a reception at the Vienna Soviet Embassy.

On Thursday, the Soviet guests will proceed to Upper Austria and visit the Mauthausen concentration camp site and the Voest-Alpine steel plant in Linz. On Thursday evening, they will attend a performance of "Fledermaus" at the Vienna Volksoper. Their departure by air is scheduled for Friday afternoon.

PRESS REVIEWS VISIT BY SFRY'S DJURANOVIC

AU061115 [Editorial Report] Most Vienna dailies on 4-5 April note the conclusion on 4 April of Yugoslav Premier Veselin Djuranovic's 2-day official visit. VOLKSSTIMME in German on 5 April states that there was "no joint communique at the conclusion of the official visit." WIENER ZEITUNG in German on 5 April says that "no communique was issued," but adds that "following the working talks, Chancellor Kreisky declared that there had been far-reaching agreement on all bilateral problems, and that there were no controversial viewpoints regarding international politics, either."

DIE PRESSE in German on 4-5 April carries a special report "Vienna-Belgrade 'Axis' Strengthened After Djuranovic Visit," pointing out that the short visit of the SFRY Federal Executive Council president has "further strengthened and improved the relations between Austria and Yugoslavia"--relations which have developed positively in the past few years.

The paper notes a Djuranovic statement at the Austrian parliament--that during the past 2 years a "positive climate has been created for solving the minority problem"--as an indication that Vienna-Belgrade relations have also improved in the sector of the Slovenian and Croatian minorities in Austria.

According to DIE PRESSE, Kreisky "countered Yugoslav queries about measures to reduce Yugoslavia's deficit in trade with Austria by stating that this deficit was 'to a large extent' covered by the transfers of Yugoslav guest workers' earnings to their country, and by Austrian tourists in Yugoslavia." The paper points out that although joint projects of the two countries, such as the Karawanken tunnel, are hampered by financial problems of both countries, it is hoped at the Chancellery--on the strength of the Kreisky-Djuranovic talks--that Yugoslavia will give a green light to the tunnel project within the next 6 weeks, while only a slight chance is seen for other major investment projects.

HUNGARIAN PAPER INTERVIEWS CHANCELLOR KREISKY

AU031310 Budapest NEPSZABADSAG in Hungarian 22 Mar 81 p 5

[Peter Renyi interview with Dr Bruno Kreisky, federal chancellor of the Republic of Austria]

[Excerpt] The neutral countries pursuing an active peace policy are playing an important role in the struggle for both European and world peace. The Republic of Austria, to which good-neighborly relations bind our contry, is such a country. This role is of particular importance today when the detente process has come to a halt and international tension is intensifying. We have posed questions about this situation and possibilities and tasks to Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, who is also known in our country as a statesman who is very active in promoting peaceful coexistence and a social democratic politician who--on his own political and ideological platform, of course--approaches problems realistically, makes outspoken statements even on topics where his position differs from that of the U.S. administration and, notwithstanding the fact that he also voices views that are dissimilar to ours, professes his commitment to the great significance and further development of cooperation with the socialist countries. Commissioned by our editorial office, deputy chief editor Peter Renyi had the following interview with him at the Vienna chancellery at the end of last week.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, Austria's role in detente and your personal very active contribution to that process are held in very high esteem throughout the world and also in Hungary. Still, you stated very bitterly in a recent interview that the policy of detente is actually deprived of any scope for maneuvering today. What conclusions do you draw from the present situation? How do you appraise the proposals made by Leonid Brezhnev regarding development and resumption of the detente process at the 26th CPSU Congress? Do you see here a new scope for maneuvering?

[Answer] First of all, someone in my position making such a remark does not mean that one gives up, it is merely a remark from which those who are active in political life have to draw their conclusions. As far as I am concerned, the first conclusion is: Someone who is engaged in political life and has participated in so many struggles must not give up the struggle. He cannot abandon, even under unfavorable circumstances, the ideals for which he has been struggleing, not even when their realization is in jeopardy. That, so to say, is part of my political organism.

How else could I have held out, as a social democrat, in the knowledge of the immense power wielded by Nazism, which cast a shadow on 12 years of my own life as well? It is a fact that, to a great extent, World War II was decided by the Soviet Army, which involved a considerable display of the force of communist ideas.

Alongside such tremendous developments, as a Social Democrat, one had to rely on one's own ideals and had to strive asserting one's own principles. I regard detente as a cardinal ideal of socialist democracy--not precluding that it can be represented by others as well--regard it as a fundamental foreign policy concept in today's divided world. I note all this only as proof that it is possible consistently to represent a concept that must determine our political trend. Of course, although I realize the difficulties inherent in it, I will also not cease in the future to represent with great consistency the idea of detente.

Since you have asked me about the specific significance of Brezhnev's speech, I would, of course--beyond and apart from my basic social democratic ideological stance--be glad to state my views on various points. Brezhnev struck a tone that does not lead in any case to shutting doors even firmer than it almost seems sometimes. I think that, by so doing, he has strengthened the forces that do exist also in the present U.S. administration, forces which themselves do not want to shut all the doors, either. Thus, I do not deny that the speech is a positive contribution. However, one should not make light of the realistic dangers that threaten detente, such as the case, for instance, where a political solution is not found for the Afghanistan problem, or intervention from outside took place in Poland.

[Question] There is no sign indicating that.

[Answer] And the Helsinki spirit is certain to play a very important role in that. In any case, this is how I want to interpret it, because I--we--have no interest in Helsinki being forgotten. Helsinki was a visible symbol, radiating far, of the fact that the policy of detente is being recognized and further developed throughout the world. Just as I would disavow any military intervention in Europe, I disavow intervention and interventionism in El Salvador as well. I am not even prepared to let myself in for debating whether these or those experts are fulfilling these or those tasks there. Those who send military experts somewhere contribute to the military acts prepared or executed by them as well. Therefore, in a very comitted manner, I side with all the warnings that caution against this. It would be terribly dangerous for European democracy, the prestige of democracy in general, if the impression arose that they serve the purpose of supporting dictatorial structures for the shake of a sham stability.

[Question] You said in a very noteworthy lecture in Davos that there would be a need for "a creative dialogue of Europe with democratic America." Do you think that such a dialogue will commence?

[Answer] No matter how its administration develops, the United States has been and remains a great democracy. The democratic forces are very strong and deeply rooted in the people and institutions in America. It is of very great significance that the West European democracies, in areas where their views differ from those of the new administration (or of prevailing public opinion, which is, of course, exposed to effects even in a democracy--it would be a pity to ignore or not to notice this), should adopt a positive basic stance when they enter into a dialogue, that is, with the intention to persuade their partners. Let me give you an example of an area where such a dialogue would be urgently needed: In his election campaign, the present U.S. President (although I do not want to overestimate this) expressed some quite strange views about the Middle East problem. Actually, he only supported the position of the present Israeli Government in his speeches. There can be no question that, according to the position prevailing in the EEC and its organs (and outside of the Economic Community as well), the Palestinian issue is the central problem of the conflict and that it must be resolved, consistent with the right of self-determination, to which the Palestinians are entitled.

It is very important in this instance that this position has been formulated by governments. After all, it is particularly significant here that that Giscard d'Estaing, Helmut Schmidt and Lord Carrington are coming out for a solution which U.S. opinion finds hard to accept. As I notice, this has not failed to make an impact on the U.S. attitude.

[Question] Doesn't the impression arise that U.S. pressure is so strong that the atmosphere in Europe has already changed in recent months and not in Europe's favor?

[Answer] The kind of pressure that could determine the attitude of the West European parliaments does not exist, even if a certain stubbornness can be experienced at talks with the allies. Nor has there been any change in the fact that the large social democratic parties of Europe are not prepared simply to dance to someone's tune. There are also strong currents in the large Christian democratic parties that do not simply submit themselves to dictates from outside. This is also felt in America. Look at the modification that has taken place in the matter of the neutron weapon, to what extent formulations have changed--and those of the same people, at that!

[Question] Still, the neutron weapon is again on the agenda.

[Answer] Repeated attempts have been made to prevent aggravating things and to surmount differences through meetings--like one between Brezhnev and Reagan. I think that, if the Americans are approachable, only something good can come from such discussions. One should not dramatize complementary armament endeavors. They could all be subject to discussion.

[Question] To return to the Middle East conflict, the Republic of Austria and its government is playing a specific role in relations between the West and the "Third World." You personally are known and respected as a person who is thoroughly familiar with the Middle East conflict and the Arab world, who was among the first to realize the problems of the area and who is actively participating in certain processes. How would you define your viewpoint?

[Answer] On the basis of a thorough knowledge of Middle East relations, I think that a peaceful solution is feasible. Of course, it would require certain political developments, and that in Israel itself, for instance. That means that there should be a process among the Israeli people themselves, which would make an aspiration to a peaceful solution more evident. If one really wants peace, then he must divest himself of certain rigid ideas such as wanting to select the partners to talk with on the matter. That cannot be done. The awareness of the Israeli public should further develop in the direction of realizing that the Palestinians should appoint preferably undisputed representatives for such a dialogue. The Palestinians do not have another recognized representative than the PLO. This representation has been recognized by the United Nations and there are only a few--although very important--governments that have not as yet done so. However, they, too, know exactly that the PLO is the sole true representative of the Palestinian people.

That would be the one side. Of course, a similar process, a shaping awareness, should also take place on the other side among the Palestinians, also making them want peace, which they also need, so that they cannot avoid talks in which they must recognize Israel's existence as a state. Without that, nothing can be achieved. It is unrealistic to persist in the romantic formula that they will go on fighting for even 100 years. People want peace now. If they persist in the path of war, in the course of war, then this area is facing the kind of destruction that has historical examples. One will have to reach the ultimate conclusion that the sides must sit down together and mutually "explore" each other. One must give peace a chance. I regard this as attainable and possible.

I would also like to discern a positive tone from Brezhnev's speech with regard to this subject. I, too, think the Soviet Union should participate in a peaceful settlement. A solution must be found.

WIENER ZEITUNG REVIEWS MBFR PLENARY SESSION

AU031204 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 3 Apr 81 p 2

[Test] Thursday's meeting of the Vienna negotiations on a reduction of forces in central Europe was marked by a sharp controversy between East and West. British Chief Delegate Ambassador Edwin Jackson charged the Warsaw Pact countries with having continuously improved their armament. In view of this fact he rejected on NATO's behalf the Eastern charge that the Atlantic alliance was constantly raising the level of its armament in central Europe. Soviet Chief Delegate Nikolay Tarasov replied in a speech, which was not previously announced, that the West only wanted to negotiate on a forces reduction of the United States and the Soviet Union while excluding the armament issue, and that the West did not recognize the existing approximate military balance in central Europe. The debate about Eastern troop strength waged endlessly by the West, Tarasov said, was nothing but an attempt to "keep up the absurd lie of an existing threat."

According to a Western press spokesman, Jackson underscored the need for NATO--in view of the Soviet armament--to improve its own armament. The British chief delegate also stressed the importance of reaching agreements in the negotiations on the controversial Eastern troop strength figures. (NATO maintains that the Warsaw Pact countries have a numerical superiority of 150,000 men in the reduction area.) Any process, Jackson declared according to the spokesman, whether it concerned a first or a second reduction phase, would depend on an agreement about the troop strength figures.

Ambassador Tarasov objected that the Western side obviously did not want to discuss a general troop and armament reduction, and that it rejected any debate on fixing a joint ceiling for the air force. The last session before the Easter break will be held next Thursday.

PRESS COMMENT ON SPIES IN GOVERNMENT POSTS

AU011429 [Editorial Report] Vienna DIE PRESSE in German on 1 April 1981 carries a Peter Zehrer report headlined: "Foreign Ministry 'Spies' Sat in Key Departments." The paper gives the names of the three Foreign Ministry officials suspended from duty by Foreign Minister Pahr as Yuriy Standenat, Helmut Wessely and Donatus Koeck. According to the paper, all three are currently being investigated on suspicion of "betrayal of state secrets" and "misuse of office." Standenat was employed in the East European Department of the political division of the Foreign Ministry, while Wessely worked at the ministry's Council of Europe Department. The paper quotes an AUSTRIA PRESSE AGENTUR report as saying that state security police are currently investigating two higher-ranking police officers--in addition to the two that were already arrested--and several civil servants of the Foreign, Justice and Science Ministries.

Vienna KURIER in German on 1 April 1981 carries an Erich Grolig report,"Another Two State Security Police Officials Unmasked as Eastern Agents; Counterintelligence Specialist Turned Around by Romanians." Without revealing the names of the two police officials concerned, the paper asserts that one worked in the State Security Police Department of Lower Austrian Police Headquarters in Vienna, the other at Federal Police Headquarters State Security Police Bureau as a counterintelligence agent specializing in activities of Romanian Secret Service Securitate. Although both are denying all charges, their names appear at regular intervals on the "wage lists" of Securitate, which were taken along by Romanian cipher specialist Florian Rotaru when he defected to the West, the paper says. It adds that the two suspects appear on these lists as receivers not of regular payments but of "gifts" and that Austrian authorities are investigating a fifth, already retired state security police official, who is also listed as having received such "gifts."

[Text] Brussels, 6 Apr (AFP)--King Baudouin today officially named Marc Eyskens prime minister of a Socialist/socio-Christian government, the palace announced. The other members of the government were confirmed in their duties. King Baudouin asked Mr Eyskens last Thursday to form a government.

NICARAGUAN OFFICIAL: SOMOZISTS PLAN INVASION

PA061519 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1240 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Brussels, 6 Apr (EFE)--Commander Carlos Nunez, president of the Nicaraguan State Council, said in Brussels today that "over 6,000 Somozist guardsmen, trained with the consent of the United States, plan to invade the country."

During a news conference, Carlos Nunez, accompanied by other leaders of the Nicaraguan State Council (the legislative branch) on a tour of Europe, reported the existence of training camps in Miami where anti-Castro Cubans and Somozist guardsmen are preparing to eliminate the Sandinist revolution.

The Nicaraguan delegation, made up of Plutarco Anduray, vice president of the state council and representative of the Independent Liberal Party; and Luis Sanchez, secretary and member of the Socialist Party, began its European tour in Geneva last week. After visiting Brussels, the Nicaraguans will go to Yugoslavia, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Sweden at the invitation of the respective legislatures.

"In Geneva," Carlos Nunez explained, "we have officially presented an application for the Nicaraguan State Council to be admitted to the IPU."

The basic objective of this European tour is, according to the president of the Nicaraguan State Council, to publicize the "war of reconstruction begun after the triumph of the revolution, when the country was faced with a foreign debt of over $1.2 billion."

"Despite the aid of many governments like Spain, the FRG and Sweden," Nunez added, "the new U.S. administration is beginning to exert strong pressure on Nicaragua."

"An example of this," he said, "is the suspension of all credits and loans approved by Carter."

Carlos Nunez said that "the great enterprise of reconstructing Nicaragua is not a simple task. In addition to having to bear the destabilizing pressure from the United States, it is necessary to face up to the Somozist threat and the disastrous legacy from the previous regime."

Asked about charges of human rights violations by the Sandinist regime, the president of the state council said that "at present there are some 4,000 prisoners in jail, but no torture of any kind is practiced. Some 38 percent of those tried for complicity with the Somoza dictatorship are sentenced to a maximum of 5 years imprisonment."

BRIEFS

CONSULAR AGREEEMENT WITH GDR--Brussels, 3 Apr (ADN)--A consular agreement between the GDR and Belgium was signed in Brussels on Friday. The document was signed by GDR Ambassador to Belgium Heinz Hoffmann and Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs Charles-Ferdinano Nothomb. The preamble to the agreement stresses that the two sides are guided by the desire to develop further the friendly relations between their states in the spirit of the Helsinki Final Act. BREZHNEV WANTS TO VISIT FRG IN 'NEXT FEW MONTHS'

LD061336 Hamburg DPA in German 1211 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 Apr (DPA)--Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev wants to visit Bonn in the next few months. Federal Government Spokesman Kurt Becker announced in Bonn today that dates for the visit are currently being discussed in mutual contacts. Becker did not rule out the possibility that Brezhnev will visit the Federal Republic before the summer recess.

The initiative for the visit came from Brezhnev himself. Through diplomatic channels, he informed the Federal Government that he is now interested in taking up the invitation to pay a return visit, which Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt issued on 1 July 1980 in Moscow.

Becker confirmed that talks are already in progress on possible dates for a Brezhnev visit. In any event, the visit is to take place this year. The visit will not be affected by the question of whether a Soviet-American summit takes place beforehand.

SCHMIDT PREDICTS 'DIFFICULTIES' WITHOUT ARMS TALKS

LD061514 Hamburg DPA in German 1234 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 6 Apr (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt expects at least limited counter-arming by the West in the sphere of nuclear medium-range missiles. In an interview in the SUDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG (Tuesday's issue), he expressed his firm expectation that there will be negotiations this summer, or late summer, between the United States and the USSR on the limitation of this category of weapons, but adds: "The probability has not increased that all counterarming will be superfluous." Schmidt says that there will not only be internal political difficulties, but also difficulties in relations with the administration of the United States if negotiations between Washington and Moscow do not start this year.

Schmidt says that the reason for the West's probable counterarming is the USSR's arms production. The Soviets have made great efforts, above the 1979 level, among other things with regard to the deployment of over 200 SS-20 missiles. If the USSR withdraws all weapons in this category, the West will undoubtedly not have to deploy a single additional weapon, but he thinks it "not very probable that the Soviets will reduce everything to zero."

On the question of supplying German tanks to Saudi Arabia, the chancellor says that at no time has the Federal Government encouraged expectations by the Saudi Government that it could count on Bonn's agreement. Against the background of Saudi Arabia being the world's largest oil supplier and the largest creditor state with corresponding credit possibilities and, moreover, having an enormous need for investment goods, he is pursuing in relations with Saudi Arabia the clear aim of as good, reliable and long term economic cooperation between the two countries as possible. He is not sure that supplying tanks is really necessary for the achievement of this aim.

Schmidt notes that the Saudis know that according to the principles observed by Federal Republic since 1971 whereby weapons are not to be supplied to areas of tension, such supplies of weapons are out of the question. The guideline should not be changed for one individual country. But a working group of the Federal Government is at present examining these principles under consideration of the following points: First, the restraint practiced hitherto and adherence to the general statement of principle must continue; and second, there must be no expansion for the arms industry in order not to impose upon it the burden of followup orders.

CDU/CSU SPOKESMAN CITES FRG-U.S. 'DIFFERENCES'

DW061110 Saarbruecken Saarlaendischer Rundfunk Network in German 0620 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Excerpts from correspondent Schneider interview in Bonn with Manfred Woerner, defense policy spokesman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag faction; date not given--recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Where do we go from here with the Americans? Everything seems to be in perfect shape after the latest consultation visits. What do you think the development of relations will be and what and where are the bones of contention with the Reagan administration?

[Answer] The differences of opinion either were covered up or shelved for the time being. Quite obviously, it is the intention of the new U.S. administration to have calm on the Atlantic front for the time being. It does not want to wage any differences of opinion with the Europeans in a difficult period of which it is trying to solve economic problems above everything else. Hence, the good course of the Genscher and Apel visits. Yet, this does not mean that the problems have been eliminated; they soon will quickly shift into the foreground again.

Differences of opinion exist primarily over the German defense contribution. It is absolutely evident that the Federal Government has failed to keep promises in that respect and that it is lagging far behind the expectations of the Americans, and not just behind the American expectations but also behind its own promises. Another bone of contention is the policy toward the Soviet Union. Just think of the natural gas deal. What we also note, furthermore, is different views in the field of arms control. And finally, policies toward the Third World definitely differ between Washington and Bonn.

BUNDESTAG VICE PRESIDENT ANALYZES ANTI-AMERICANISM

DW061215 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 4 Apr 81 p 12

[Article by Bundestag Vice President Annemarie Renger: "Alliance at a Turning Point"]

[Excerpts] Anyone viewing the trends in the Federal Republic of Germany can clearly say: Plain anti-Americanism presently is visible and not only in intellectual circles. It's never been as plain since 1945 and since the storming of the American Houses by the APO [extraparliamentary opposition] movement of the students. The hysterical version of narrowminded bourgeois anti-Americanism of the fifties and sixties is about to be replaced by the new anti-Americanism of the seventies and eighties with a similar imprint of exorcism.

It is considered evidence of intelligence and of satirical abilities to distort the U.S. administration and particularly President Reagan in such a way as to compare his political awareness and his state of mind with that of John Wayne when he was heading an attack of the U.S. Cavalry. Since plain swordsmanship could be misunderstood as being too harmless, other indications must be used such as the certainly not coincidental German television replay of Kubrick's "Dr Strangelove, or How I Learned to Love the Bomb."

One can hear and read everywhere: "Fear of Ronald Reagan and his crusaders, bombs, violence, and overkill." They are part of the public opinion and they are strengthened by contradictory and boasting statements coming from overseas. It is depressing to see how a provocative carelessness over there, as well as an obvious insufficient sensibility for moods in Europe, play into the hands of the U.S. adversaries. President Reagan often enough appears to be the incorporation of hysterical anticommunism, an incredible adventurer, the helper of big business and neocolonialism or as the representative of a wolfish society which exposes the lower and middle classes to misery. All these are quotations from papers. A part of the German intelligentsia thinks along such lines, finding an echo among youths who consider the uncritical taking over of resentments as a sign of ability to form a crictical opinion.

It would be too simple to focus the original or politically wirepulled irritation by the United States on a certain administration or certain persons. The dissent is deeper. The days are gone when Kennedy's or Johnson's concepts of a "Great Society" were the models of the social-liberal reformist politicians. At least for the core of the suprisingly influential alternative movement, the United States, in the meantime, has become a synonym of the things one rejects: a symbol of a reckless growth society sacrificing the values of life to materialism; a symbol of the technical world civilization eradicating the cultures that have grown everywhere, which has emanated from the annihilation of the Indians, so to speak; a symbol for the destruction of the urbane environment. German intellectuals who claim to be reflective, consider the "consumption" of the American pattern as the new fascism which silently and without physical violence destroys all humanist values with its information and communication means.

The conclusion is: The attacks on the U.S. administration are not aimed at the respective holders of the office. They are an indicator of deep anti-American convictions which, in turn, contain tendencies toward an isolation of the Federal Republic of Germany from the West as a whole. This dangerous development is sometimes being covered up by harmless sounding slogans, such as Europe has its own interests vis-a-vis the United States, which it must express. In fact, however, the contradicting interests of big European states are much smaller than one says in the Federal Republic of Germany. The following danger increases particularly in this country: One is about to maintain a neutral attitude vis-a-vis both world powers, the United States and the Soviet Union, although one of them is a democratic-parliamentarian and the other a totalitarian state.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU CRITICIZES HAIG MISSION

DW061355 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 6 Apr 81 p 3

[Article signed -ZER: "Traveling Educates"]

[Text] Traveling educates, people say. This also holds true for politicians. Since airplanes have become quicker and distances therefore seemingly shorter, traveling diplomacy has become more and more fashionable. Alexander Haig, the new U.S. secretary of state, is following in the footsteps of Henry Kissinger, the U.S. secretary of state who has become famous for his shuttle diplomacy in the Middle East. Haig also wants to talk with Arabs and Israelis. But it seems the new man not only wants to inform himself, but also to restate a very old political philosophy.

Whereas U.S. diplomacy since Kissinger at the latest proceeded on the assumption that without a solution of the Palestinian issue there could be no lasting peace in the Middle East, that is to say, between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf, Haig obviously wants to convince the Arab governments that the greatest danger doesn't lie in the Palestinian problem, but is constituted by the omnipresent Soviet expansionism in this part of the world.

If the new U.S. President and his secretary of state had had more detailed talks with the U.S. Middle East experts, Haig probably would have departed with a different concept, because they would have explained to him that very clear lines between various causes and motives are rare in international politics.

Naturally, the Governments of Egypt, Jordan and Saudi Arabia are right to watch the Soviet Middle East policy with utmost suspicion. They really feel threatened by Moscow. Therefore, they were and are willing to rely, to a relatively large degree, on the other world power. But concluding from this that these governments and their nations might be prepared to shelve the Palestinian issue certainly is a mistake.

This also is correct even if Israeli politicians are trying to convince Washington that the opposite is correct. Israel itself will not have peace, unless a solution can be found to the Palestinian problem which is backed by at least a majority of the Arab neighbors of the Jewish state.

NATO DEFENSE MINISTERS MEETING OPENS IN BONN

LD070916 Hamburg DPA in German 0738 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Apr (DPA)--The NATO defense ministers are meeting in Bonn this morning for the 29th session of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group. The meeting is chaired by NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns. The ministers are to discuss in strictest secrecy the nuclear balance of power between East and West.

Protest Demonstration

LD071008 Hamburg DPA in German 0841 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Apr (DPA)--About 300 women demonstrators blocked the main entrance to Bonn's Ministry of Defense this morning at the start of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting. The women, some of whom had small children with them, sat or lay down in the road and refused to move when asked to do so by police. The police had to carry the demonstrators, who put up considerable resistance, individually to the roadside. According to the police, two demonstrators were taken into temporary custody. No one was injured. Patrol cars were sprayed with spray paint.

The start of the ministers' meeting was not delayed, however, since the delegations had entered the Hardthoehe gate before the women's action began.

BRIEFS

TRADE WITH GDR--Wiesbaden, 27 Mar (DPA)--Figures published by the Federal Statistical Office show that goods delivered from the Federal Republic to the GDR and East Berlin in February totalled DM468 million against deliveries in the opposite direction of DM486 million. Compared with February 1980, deliveries to the GDR rose by DM27 million, or 6 percent, and by the GDR to the Federal Republic by DM21 million, or 4 percent. During the first 2 months of 1981, deliveries to the GDR and East Berlin amounted to DM776 million, 4 percent less than for the same period last year, while deliveries to the Federal Republic were DM926 million, 1 percent more than during the first 2 months on 1980. [Text] Rome, 6 Apr (ANSA)--Italian Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio left here for Bonn today where he will take part Tuesday and Wednesday in the 29th ministerial session of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group.

The defense ministers of Belgium, Canada, Denmark, West Germany, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, Holland, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom, Turkey and the United States will be on hand for the meetings led by NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns.

MINISTER REJECTS CRITICISM OF ECONOMIC PLAN

LD021551 Rome AVANTI in Italian 26 Mar 81 pp 1, 18

[State Participation Minister Gianni De Michelis article: "Premises Established for Investments Envisaged in 3-year Plan"]

[Text] By now many things have been said and written about the monetary and credit measures adopted by the government. However, they have not all been true or motivated by the same effort of objectivity or--despite the gravity of the situation--divorced from the temptation to use them for purposes of political speculation.

Everyone is agreed on their "toughness"; many of the "necessity" for them. Apart from that, there is much approximation in the analyses and superficiality in the assessments, even with regard to the stances adopted by the Socialists in dealing with the facts of the situation and with the other members of the government, which have certainly not been easy. Let us see, then, whether it is possible to help elucidate matters somewhat.

The government was summoned to make some pressing decisions at the climax of a troubled phase of the country's economy, which was assailed by increasingly vicious inflation, a growing deficit in the balance of payments, the lira's extreme weakness on the money markets and a worrying increase in extended public expenditure. If any reservations are to be made, they concern not the necessity for the measures but, if anything, the very short time in which these measures took shape.

In view of the situation, vigorous measures could no longer be postponed. But what measures? The first discussion within the government began with the kind of scenario to outline with the measures to be adopted. One possibility was to proceed tentatively by means of stopgap measures--monetary, fiscal and credit--divorced from a general frame of reference. Another possibility (and such temptations were expressed by more than one voice within the government) was to return to a framework of "compatibility" with other countries' economic and commercial competitiveness; but that meant carrying out a savage squeeze, attacking the indexing system, and adopting fierce deflationary measures and drastic cuts in public spending--especially in investments (though, as everyone knows, current public expenditure is difficult to restrain). Both these paths were rejected, though not without some opposition. Eventually everyone agreed that the remedy could have proved worse than the disease.

A third path was chosen--the "return" to the framework of compatibility of the medium-term plan, which had been strayed from because of a number of domestic and international economic factors. This was a framework of consistency (no increase in the public debt over the 3-year period, a progressive and substantial reversal of the balance between current public spending and public spending on investment, the financing of investments partly through recourse to loans on the foreign financial market) which, it is most important to remember, constituted the policy basis on which the Forlani government was formed and to which the Socialists gave their approval and consent.

The point that has escaped many commentators is this: The measures adopted by the government do not alter the framework within which the medium-term plan (an economic policy--that is, one characterized by a positive growth rate and a progressive fall in inflation) must operate; on the contrary, they restore the framework so that it can begin to function.

This is shown by the decision to maintain and promote investment expenditure, both as embodied in previously adopted measures and as envisaged in measures shortly to be adopted.

The same argument applies to public spending. The Socialists' position on this is unequivocal: The deficit must be restored to the conditions envisaged by the 3-year plan, making a distinction between budget deficit and cash deficit. The figures cited over the past few days seem inaccurate in the light of this distinction--which is in fact the only one that counts--and in the light of the finance bill. I believe that the cuts or revenue increases needed are equivalent not to these but to much lower figures. The path chosen to contain the public debt is well known; to adjust welfare contributions (measures not unconnected with a reform of the entire sector); measures in the health spending field (particularly through wage drift affecting agreement with the medical staff); and payment of funds to local authorities in installments (funds for current spending, in instances where local authorities prove inefficient in their spending).

As regards the civil servants' work contracts, it should be confirmed once again that no "block" has been contemplated, but a pause for reflection has been requested to re-establish a framework of compatibility in public spending and to prevent pay races among the various groups.

One last point; the allegations (or fears) that there will be a "second wave" officially modifying the indexing mechanisms. As Socialists we say that the indexing problem exists, but we also say that we reject any initiative without discussion with those concerned. This discussion must be serious and far-reaching, must call on everybody's sense of responsibility, and not be "strangled" by time limits imposed by the "urgency" of the situation. If all sides have the necessary political will, discussion can begin immediately on this and on other urgent problems. As for indexing, we say that as Socialists we consider that the question does not only concern wages but also other aspects; for instance, the cost of money, "fiscal drag," and charges. I would like to end with an observation. To those who have spoken of the government's "gamble", we can reply that it is possible to agree with that judgment. But it should also be said that if this economic policy gamble were to fail there would be much harder times ahead for all, and much more drastic measures would burden the workers and the country. The opposition of the Socialists, the trade unions and others would then become a "gamble" of a very different kind. The same considerations apply to those who describe the medium-term plan as a superficial way of concealing the monetary and credit predicament. We have fought and will continue to fight to ensure that this country's economic policy can count on a sound operating tool and sound points of reference. Without these, all that is left is the practice of following economic trends, cyclical upheavals, and the country's gradual economic and social deterioration.

PCI'S MACALUSO EXPLAINS POSITION ON 'COALITION'

AU031020 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 3 Apr (ANSA)--Italian politics were still tuned in today to an apparently "misinterpreted" sign from a Communist Party (PCI) official that the powerful opposition force might change its mind about the present ruling coalition if the premier's office was filled by a non-Christian Democrat.

The source of the controversial statement, PCI leadership official Emanuele Macaluso, stepped forth yesterday to squelch the furor by confirming his "full agreement" with the party Secretariat.

The PCI Secretariat issued a brusque denial Wednesday to apparently misinterpreted indications from Macaluso that the party was open to supporting some form of the present coalition provided it was led by a Socialist, and not a Christian Democrat. The denial caused as much sensation as the earlier statement had, not only because it represented a blow at Socialist Party (PSI) leader Bettino Craxi, but also because it seemed to enmask an internal dispute in the PCI leadership.

In an interview, Macaluso declared that the major problem was to remove the Christian Democrats (DC) from the prime minister's office. "We place no limitation on the party from which the new head of government may come", he said.

Speaking in Milan yesterday, Macaluso stressed that he "fully agreed with the Secretariat", claiming that his interview remark was distorted in subsequent interpretations.

The PCI official insisted that by "government" he meant a government which included the nation's two leading leftist parties in its ranks, not the present ruling arrangement. And it was in that context, he stressed, that the PCI had no bias against a Socialist Party premier.

But the sensation created by the PCI leadership's denial brought on a reaction from the Socialist Party. PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi abruptly denied the widespread rumor that he was aspiring to the premier's office. He cut short the whole dispute by asserting that the Forlani government as it now stood had to be supported and it was useless to rack brains about hypothetical alternatives.

PRI Secretary Giovanni Spadolini commented Thursday that the dispute "confirmed and even broadened the gap between the two major parties of the Italian left". The Republican leader acknowledged that, on a longterm basis, "everything was possible, both within and outside the left".

"But in the short-term perspective, the only thing I can do is reiterate the Republican Party's loyalty to the (present) government".

PCI WILL NOT NEGOTIATE WITH CURRENT GOVERNMENT

LD061343 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 2 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] Rome--Following the DC National Council meeting on Saturday and Sunday, even the Forlani government is (at least in one sense) "frozen." The parties of the majority, particularly the DC and PSI, have decided to avoid a government crisis but have done so for the sake of their partisan calculations and not because they believe in the viability of the four-party government. The government's credibility has been reduced to a very low level. Even a representative of the [PSI Secretary] Craxi group, Deputy Dell'unto, has stated quite frankly that Forlani's government has a limited life; it could last until the 21 June local elections, and then we shall see ("either it opts for reform," the Socialist said, "or it will change").

This is the issue on which attention is centered in the political debate. Nobody believes that the four-party government can suddenly regain the ability to impart coherence to the implementation of a program. The DC [PCI Secretariat member] Alessandro Natta points out in a RINASCITA article, "must not believe that it is enough to declare itself united and unanimous and to remain tied to a policy aimed at guaranteeing its own centrality, while confusedly boosting the untenable logic of the center-left together with the faded vestiges of democratic solidarity."

On the other hand, the PSI majority "must not envisage entrusting its own party's prospects to an idea of governability whereby a special understanding with the DC and prejudice against the PCI, instead of giving the PSI greater scope and strength, threaten to limit it to a recessive policy of an antipeople character, thus nullifying reformist and ambitious leadership plans." Having reasserted the reasons behind the democratic alternative proposal put forward by the Communists, Natta says that whoever wishes to hold a dialogue with the PCI must point to solutions that can "mark a change of direction and conduct": "We are not setting traps for anyone," he concludes. "We are not enticing anyone. We say that we are willing, albeit from opposition, to carefully assess possible proposals aimed in the direction of real and constructive relations with the PCI for a policy of reform. But not with this government."

The PCI's stance on the question of the political outlook emerges also from a note issued by the party Secretariat following the emergence of certain interpretations of a passage in [PCI Secretariat member] Comrade Emanuele Macaluso's interview with IL MONDO. At one point in the interview, Macaluso tried to outline an abstract "identikit" picture of a hypothetical new premiership. Having stated that the important consideration is that there be no "discriminations against the Communists," he answered as follows the question whether the PCI might "support another attempt by Craxi to form a government": "The problem," he said, "is to discover whether the Socialists would intend to maintain the present majority, which discriminates against the Communists, or whether they would agree to surmount this discrimination and work toward the establishment of a government whose reference point is leftwing unity. In the latter case things would be different."

To put an end to the interpretations ventured by some newspapers, not to mention political circles, the PCI Secretariat yesterday morning released an explanation (published separately) stating that the PCI Directorate has never discussed or stated an opinion on hypotheses regarding the premiership.

AVANTI today will publish a commentary on the PCI Secretariat note, based on entirely arbitrary premises. The Socialist paper asks whether--"since obviously the conditions do not now exist for a Communist-led government"--the PCI Secretariat's intention is to imply that "until then the premiership must remain DC; or whether, alternatively, other "nonsocialist" candidates would be possible. This is a further attempt, by clinging to old models, to nurture the sequence of hypotheses and inferences which, however, the Secretariat note makes impracticable (and in any case the PCI secretary general spoke very clearly on this point on Saturday in Sassari). The present matter in hand is not the discussion of hypothetical scenarios, in the absence of any of the information needed to assess them; it is in fact the very pressing task of clearing away a government (unquestionably headed by a Christian Democrat!) and the burden constituted by its policy.

POPE GIVES AUDIENCE TO ISLAMIC CONFERENCE GROUP

AU061536 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Vatican City, 6 Apr (ANSA)--Habib Chatti, secretary general of the Islamic Conference and former Tunisian foreign minister, along with his wife Ansay, who is the conference's permanent U.N. observer, and other members of Chatti's party were received here today by Pope John Paul II.

The audience, which follows one granted to the head of the Palestinian Liberation Organization's political department chief, Faruq Qaddumi on March 18 by Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, lasted 20 minutes and was granted at Chatti's request. As the audience was a private one, the Vatican did not disclose the topics discussed by the pope and Chatti and his party.

PSOE, PCE LEADERS ISSUE COMMUNIQUE OF 'AGREEMENT'

LD061015 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 1 Apr 81 p 15

[Joaquin Preito report: "Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE) and PCE Claim Autonomy and Antiterrorism Plans Not Agreed With Left"]

[Excerpt] PSOE and PCE delegations headed by Felipe Gonzalez and Santiago Carrillo met yesterday for 3 hours and signed a joint communique expressing their "agreement" on essential aspects of the political situation and reiterating the demand for a broad-based government.

With this initiative, the principal leftwing parties aimed to end the lack of dialogue with the government and to disprove to the public that the antiterrorist measures adopted by the government and its autonomy plans have the consensus of the principal national parties.

In this connection, the two parties agreed to hold talks with the other parliamentary forces--particularly with the Basque Nationalist Party and the Catalan minority--and to meet again in about 10 days, leaving the possibility open for the government to implement its announced policy of consultation.

The parties agreed in their joint communique:

--To counter, responsibly and determinedly, any form of action that might in one way or another prompt a regression toward authoritarian measures;

--To combat terrorism resolutely, strictly within the constitutional framework, urging the people's cooperation with the state security forces with a view to isolating the terrorist groups, to discover and to prevent their actions;

--To tackle the socioeconomic crisis efficiently with a view to combating unemployment, reactivating investments and consistently defending the interests of the nation and of the working class;

--To support the autonomy process in the belief that it helps, through the solidarity of the nation's various separate peoples, to assert Spain's unity and the constitutional rights of its communities.

To achieve these ends, the communique published by the two parties mentions the need for "a government with a broad parliamentary majority enjoying the broadest support among the peoples." The real aim of the meeting, however, was less ambitious: to get the government to discuss political issues with the opposition within the framework of the "consultations" that have been announced but not yet realized. In this connection, the PCE's Enrique Curiel, who attended the meeting, said that "although talks on socioeconomic measures have begun, with meetings between the government and the trade union forces, an unclear situation is emerging with regard to political issues, and as for terrorism and the autonomies, the government is trying to present us with faits accomplis."

INTERIOR MINISTER VIEWS ANTITERRORIST STRUGGLE

LD061551 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 1 Apr 81 p 8

[Mary Merida interview with Spanish Interior Minister Jan Jose Roson: "Essence of Antiterrorist Struggle Lies in Intelligence Services"]

[Excerpts] Juan Jose Roson, who is minister of the interior and therefore our country's top security leader, said of last night's attack on U.S. President Reagan: "It is an absolutely deplorable act, as is any attack, with very serious repercussions not only in the United States but throughout the Western world. I believe that such attacks, wherever they occur, are a palpable demonstration of how difficult it is to live and safeguard life and freedom in a climate of world violence. We are in an era when we often see how easy it is to convey this climate of political violence to a country is this way."

On the subject of Spain's own security, which is of course the subject of most direct concern to us, we discussed the major anti-terrorist offensive which presently is being mounted. The interior minister said: "This is the result of very gradual and silent action by the state security bodies and forces, particularly the higher police corps, and corresponds to an improvement in the intelligence services and a line of action which is now reaching a successful culmination, but which is not the result of day-to-day haphazard activity. These operations have been going on for some time in accordance with plans for an antiterrorist struggle drawn up by the leaders of the bodies concerned."

[Question] But the offensive now seems to be much more intensive. Is this so?

[Answer] It is another phase of the police action, whose previous phases occurred in November and December. The first phase achieved a number of immediate objectives, such as the dismantling of a number of headquarters and appendages of the terrorist apparatus. Added to this, there are the further operations being carried out now. Sometimes the work is not disclosed, but it is carried out nonetheless and as intelligence and knowledge of the terrorist organizations' structure and superstructure are improving, this investigative task is now one of the most important objectives. I would add that this work is secret precisely because it is essential that it be so.

[Question] Is this investigative work into knowledge of the terrorist organizations' structure devoted exclusively to Basque Fatherland and Liberty [ETA] or to other armed groups as well?

[Answer] Action is being carried out simultaneously against all the terrorist groups, but the success against ETA reflects the fact that ETA is Spain's major terrorist organization. But there have also been recent successes in the struggle against other terrorist groups, both of the extreme right and of the extreme left, such as the 1 October Armed Revolutionary Group.

[Question] What is the government's assessment of the latest blow against ETA at Alava?

[Answer] The impression is that because of the intelligence which we gathered, Alava was a very important operation, which represents a heavy and major blow to the terrorist network in Alava Province. We have dismantled an essential part of the ETA apparatus, if not all the ETA groups.

Training and Structure

[Question] But it has been shown that when some groups are dismantled others emerge even more strongly. Are the terrorist groups' training, equipment and skills much better than those of the security forces? If not, what is the reason for this?

[Answer] I must say that the security forces have made considerable progress in their specialization against terrorist crimes, but that they have not yet fully realized their potential. As for the terrorists' training, I will tell you that they have a very well-defined strategy and a high standard of training and that, furthermore, they have links with terrorist structures and organizations in other countries and are able to achieve major objectives fairly easily. In modern society, it is extremely easy to commit a crime, but the important thing is the immediate response capability of the security forces; we are trying to advance in this direction as fast as possible and I sincerely believe that we are to a large extent succeeding.

"Single Command' Improves Coordination"

[Question] If you are willing, let us talk next about the subject of the "single command," which seems like an important one in this objective of the present anti-terrorist offensive. What does it imply? What does it consist of? What is its effect? What results is it achieving now and could it achieve in the future?

[Answer] It is a step to substantially improve the internal coordination systems within the security bodies and will enable us to improve the decisive aspect of the antiterrorist intelligence services, thus making it possible also to extend the context of the antiterrorist struggle from other viewpoints which, while they are not universally regarded as being directed against violence, are important forms of action for eliminating the popular backing enjoyed by the terrorist groups in some sectors of the Basque population. There are other important aspects to this single command, but obviously it is possible to report on this structure only inasmuch as this information does not jeopardize the objectives of the antiterrorist struggle. Of course, I can guarantee that it represents major progress in the process of organizing state antiterrorist action.

Armed Forces Cooperation

[Question] What is your assessment of the army's cooperation in this offensive in the antiterrorist struggle?

[Answer] The army's cooperation makes it possible to allocate the security forces' personnel to more selective operations in the antiterrorist field. This cooperation centers on surveillance to make it more difficult to move from one country to another by land and sea. Since the ETA terrorist phenomenon gravitates toward the shelter afforded by the border situation, anything that hinders their movements constitutes a success. I believe that with this cooperation from the armed forces, it is quite possible that we will achieve successes not only in the medium term but even quite soon, and I believe that the cooperation is adequate. It must be borne in mind that the essence of the antiterrorist struggle lies in the intelligence services and inasmuch as we achieve progress in this direction, we will target in better on the terrorist phenomenon and will be able to say in the medium term, if not immediately, that terrorism has at last been brought under control by the state machinery.

SENATE DEFENSE CHAIRMAN ON NATO MEMBERSHIP

LD061047 Madrid ABC in Spanish 1 Apr 81 p 11

[Text] Huesca--"By joining the Atlantic alliance Spain will contribute to detente and peace," Alberto Ballarin Marcial, deputy for Huesca and senate defense committee chairman, said in exclusive remarks published yesterday by the daily NEUVA ESPANA-EL PERIODICO DE HUESCA.

Ballarin Maricial says: "We are not proceeding in a warlike manner. Our joining will not be an unfriendly act toward the Soviet Union or its Warsaw Pact allies. According to its constitution, Spain can neither wage nor support offensive wars."

"The 23 February coup," he adds, "served to show that 99 percent of our armed forces are loyal to the constitution and that the king's orders are obeyed by all soldiers. Nothing can justify the armed forces straying from constitutional channels. The coup was the work of a group of rash soldiers, not of the army as a whole."

NEWSPAPERS CONSIDER IMPLICATIONS OF ATTACK ON REAGAN

LD061145 [Editorial report] Nordic newspapers of 1 April carry editorials on the unsuccessful assassination attempt on President Reagan. All papers condemn the action and express sympathy with the President and the U.S. people, and make various analyses of the act. A recurrent theme is the free availability of firearms in the United States and the consequences this has for the growing violence in U.S. society. Oslo's ARBEIDERBLADET, in Norwegian, writes: "A society cannot protect itself 100 percent against killings involving firearms by means of regulations and controls--especially the U.S. society with its special firearms traditions. But there can be no doubt that tens of thousands of Americans who are dead today would have been alive if the United States had had a system of regulations along European lines. There is much to indicate that Ronald Reagan, his press spokesman, one of his security guards and a policeman would not have been lying in hospital."

Oslo's AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian, expresses its thankfulness that the United States was not left without a leader at such a sensitive time in world affairs, and asks what deeper significance the assassination attempt may have: "It is hard to have to say that in a democratic United States politics can be a field which can claim the life of the politician. The shots fired at President Reagan are a repugnant action, but even though they were the work of a sick individual, it is inevitable that they will lead to questions about the stability and inner strength of U.S. society. And it is only the United States' enemies who can have joy of such signs of illness."

Stockholm's SVENSKA DAGBLADET, in Swedish, also poses the question of possible effects within the United States: "The attempted murder of Ronald Reagan will also give rise to another debate in the United States questioning the efficiency of the burgeoning security services. Why was the young would-be assassin, who came from 'Reaganland' in the West, not registered as a security risk? When he was caught with three pistols he was about to board a plane for New York, where three presidential candidates were going to appear. What effect will this latest murder attempt have on a people who were just beginning to think that they were on their way to regaining their self-confidence after a series of national humiliations?"

Helsinki's HUFVUDSTABSBLADET, in Swedish, sees renewed support for Reagan as one of the probable consequences of the attempt: "It would come as no surprise if popular opinion were now to give greater support to Ronald Reagan than it did even on election day. And this could of course have a certain effect on the administration's actions, not least because the opposition's hands would be relatively tightly tied for some while in such a situation. However, it is to be hoped that we will not see any sudden changes on the political scene in the United States."

Stockholm's DAGENS NYHETER, in Swedish, speculates on the consequences for the present U.S. administration: "But the administration will also probably lose its rhythm. The lack of cohesion and collaboration between unpracticed functionaries that is now emerging runs the risk of seeming much greater the longer the President is unable to function as usual. Even if Reagan's recovery goes as the doctors have promised, many people will probably once again be reminded of the fact that at his advanced age he does not have an unlimited future in front of him. The prospect of George Bush as president, however, gives no promise whatsoever of a different U.S. policy."

The two Stockholm dailies also comment in editorials on 2 April on Secretary of State Alexander Haig's statement that in the absence of the vice president he was in control in Washington.

DAGENS NYHETER analyzes his action thus: "It is possible that the U.S. secretary of state, faced with a sensative situation in Poland, wished to prevent dangerous misjudgements of the U.S. capacity to act after the murder attempt. But in the face of possible security crises, it was a premature move to try to make Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger into a subsidiary figure. Haig had no right to do this. Many people see in his behavior a new example of his power struggle against other top men in the administration. Recently, Vice President George Bush was appointed chief of a new crisis body over Haig's head.

"At present the United States is naturally enough discussing Reagan's recovery and would-be assassin John Hinckley's fixation with film star Jodie Foster. But politically the most important consequence could be a serious deterioration in Haig's reputation which would make his high-flying plans impossible."

SVENSKA DAGBLADET, while conceding "the importance of Haig's sending a signal both to Moscow and to U.S. allies in Europe," is worried about the implications: "But if the current rivalries were to lead to a further undermining of the U.S. secretary of state's prestige, this would be a serious matter. Of course, there are circles in various parts of the world which would benefit if this happened. But this is not true of Europe. As a former chief of NATO's European forces Haig has won great respect among the European political leaders. To weaken Haig's position on the basis of what happened 30 March could lead to a situation in which the U.S. allies lost their confidence in the whole of Reagan's administration."

MINISTERS FAIL TO FIND NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE FORMULA

LD061029 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 1 Apr 81 p 6

[Sven Svensson Report]

[Text] The Nordic foreign ministers were unable to agree on a joint formula for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. This became clear yesterday when the ministers discussed world politics at Haga Palace. The section dealing with the nuclear-free zone had to be omitted from the press communique.

The question of the nuclear-free zone has been discussed in great detail recently, chiefly in Norway but also in Denmark. There is a connection with the decision to set up contingency stockpiles of NATO armaments in Norway.

In Sweden the Social Democratic opposition has requested the government to make contacts with the other Nordic governments to discuss a nuclear-free zone in the light of the Norwegian debate. The talks at Haga Palace showed that the governments of all the Nordic nations are positive in their approach to the nuclear-free zone, but that they have all made definite and divergent conditions for entering such a zone.

For Sweden, Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten has made it clear that a nuclear-free zone would require that other states affected by it should be willing to participate. A nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries must include nuclear arms intended for targets within the zone or which could be used on targets in the zone.

The Danish Government requires that a Nordic nuclear-free zone should form part of a general security area.

In Norway the government demands that the nuclear-free zone should be seen in the broader European security context.

The Finnish Government only calls for a Nordic zone. Finnish President Urho Kekkonen is also one of the men originally behind the idea of a nuclear-free zone.

The talks showed that the foreign ministers were well disposed toward the proposals for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries but that the realization of the plan is a long-term question. On the question of nuclear arms the foreign ministers contented themselves with demanding that real negotiations be started as soon as possible between the United States and the Soviet Union for a reduction of the number of nuclear arms in Europe. The talks will take place in Geneva.

Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen described this as an important stance. In the past, the foreign ministers have spoken of soundings with regard to nuclear disarmament, but they have now started to demand "real negotiations." One topic for the negotiations would be the medium-range missiles in Europe. The foreign ministers also hope that the United States and the Soviet Union will continue the SALT talks so that results might soon be reached on mutual troop reductions in central Europe.

The situation in Poland and the attempt on President Reagan's life were also discussed by the foreign ministers. They were convinced that the Polish people could find a solution to their problems themselves. The attempt on Reagan's life was described as a meaningless act of violence and the foreign ministers hoped for the President's speedy recovery. The foreign ministers hoped for a swift negotiated settlement in the Middle East and condemned South Africa's delaying tactics over the Namibia question.

DENMARK, SWEDEN READY PLANS FOR POLISH REFUGEES

LD031521 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 1 Apr 81 p 21

["H" report: "Denmark and Sweden Ready to Receive Political Refugees"]

[Text] Danish and Swedish authorities hope that it will not be necessary--but both on Bornholm and in southern Sweden, preparations have been made to receive Polish refugees, if the situation in Poland develops in such a way that the Soviet Union sends "military aid" to a regime under pressure.

"We do not want to be caught napping if anything should happen. This is why we have made preparations for one of the 'secret plans' and have arranged so that we could accept thousands of Polish refugees," said the acting police chief in Malmoehus Province, Mats Sjoegren.

Preparations have been made on Bornholm to receive a large number of refugees, some in Roenne and some in other localities around the island, and a plan for hospital treatment for the refugees also has been drawn up.

In Sweden, a number of holiday villages, youth hostels and sports halls in Skaane and southern Smaaland have been designated refugee camps in the event of the catastrophe happening.

Primarily, Ystad and Trelleborg local authorities are preparing contingency plans, together with representatives of the provincial government in Malmoe, the police, the Red Cross and the military. The military will be called on if Polish naval vessels or air force planes come to Swedish territory.

It is also expected that, if events in Poland were to end with a Russian military intervention, the Poles or Russians would attempt to form an effective barrier in the Baltic, so that flight could be a problematic course of action. But no one in Denmark or Sweden "wants to be caught napping" so the Polish refugee plans have been brought out and dusted off.

In Sweden, the following buildings have been given priority for Polish refugees, "if it happens": the holiday village at Ystad Sandskov, the regimental buildings in Ystad, the camp school at Balderinge, the old sports hall in Ystad, the unused school in Snaarestad and the youth hostel at Loederup.

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERS FINANCIAL AID TO POLAND

LD031306 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] The State of Finland will support Poland in its difficult economic situation with a maximum loan of 30 million markka. The loan will partly repay debts which fall due this year and it will finance the export of certain Finnish goods to Poland. In a bill submitted today, the government asks the Diet to authorize a state guarantee as surety for the repayment of this loan. In addition to the new loan now under consideration, talks are being conducted between Finland and Poland on consolidating old debts.

PRIME MINISTER SAYS GOVERNMENT WILL NOT RESIGN

LD061522 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1300 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto does not intend to tender the resignation of his government, even if the People's Democrats vote against the social package. In Koivisto's view, the fall of the government on such an issue would be too high a price for the comprehensive incomes settlement. Koivisto issued a statement on the matter after discussing the political situation with Finnish People's Democratic League [SKDL] Chairman Kalevi Kivistoe. Our political editor Pekka Hyvaerinen interviews Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto:

[Begin recording] [Question] Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto, you issued a statement today about the government situation. Do you now interpret matters so that it will not be necessary to tender the resignation of the government on account of the social benefits issue?

[Answer] Well, one can hardly say that I have not done everything possible to ensure the thorough implementation of the incomes agreement. I still think that it will be implemented, but we cannot be as confident of it as we would like. There is now the danger that we must pay too high a price for the incomes agreement, which could lead to the resignation of the government and possibly even to early parliamentary elections. That would be too high a price to pay.

[Question] In other words, your standpoint is that the SKDL can, if it wants to do so, vote against these bills?

[Answer] I have said that even if they vote against the bills, I will not on that account dissolve the government. I have expressed the wish for as complete unanimity as possible. [end recording]

The government groups and above all the prime minister's own party, the Social Democratic Party, have in the last few weeks demanded that the comprehensive incomes settlement should be approved unanimously. We shall hear more about the new development in the government situation in the radio magazine program at 1730.

STORTING DEBATE VIEWS U.S. LATIN AMERICA CHANGES

[Excerpt] "An important way of increasing understanding of human rights in Latin America is to strengthen ties between this continent and democratic Europe," Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund said in the Storting yesterday. Yesterday's debate on violations of human rights in Latin America showed that there is broad agreement in the Storting that Norway must work actively on these issues. The Storting's foreign policy specialists were skeptical of the signals from the Reagan administration which could indicate a change in U.S. Latin America policy.

The background to yesterday's Storting debate on these questions was a question from Labor Party Deputy Haldis Havroy, who wanted to know in what way Norway could exert pressure on regimes in Latin America which do not respect even the most basic human rights. In her address Mrs Havroy turned her attention principally to Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Bolivia, Uruguay, Argentina and Chile. She gave several instances of murder, kidnapping, violence and torture. She also expressed a desire that Norway cut its trade with Latin American countries which violate human rights, and that Norway exert pressure on the United States to stop the military aid to El Salvador.

Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund said that Norway has taken an active part in the work for human rights in Latin America, a line which the government will continue to follow. He pointed out especially that Norway has attached particular importance to helping individuals avoid prison or death sentences, and that the government will give support to the forces on the continent working to promote the protection of human rights. Frydenlund pointed out that the award of the Nobel Peace Prize to Adolfo Perez Esquivel was a positive encouragement to the champions of human rights, especially those inside the Catholic Church. Foreign Minister Frydenlund also said that Norwegian authorities have been reluctant to help industry and commerce to gain a foothold in the markets of Latin American countries where there are systematic violations of human rights.

Conservative Lars Roar Langslet, a member of the Storting Foreign Affairs Committee, commented on the new signals from the Reagan administration and said: "If concern for human rights were to be given much lower priority and replaced by generous support for despotic regimes, this would be a great disappointment for all who see the United States as the most important bulwark for democracy and ideal Western values."

Like Langslet, the parliamentary leaders of the Christian People's Party, the Center Party and the Liberal Party, and Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Reiulf Steen also touched on the Reagan administration's signals of a new Latin America policy. Foreign Minister Frydenlund was encouraged to hold fast to Norway's present course.

SWEDEN

NEWSPAPER SEES U.S. FOREIGN POLICY 'CONFUSION'

LD021211 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 27 Mar 81 p 2

[Editorial: "The Dual Command"]

[Text] It is part of the pattern that there is a certain amount of confusion in Washington every time a new president moves into the White House. When Richard Nixon appointed a group of lions from the world of Californian advertising to coordinate the nation's destiny there was a certain amount of anxiety that nothing would remain as it had been, and indeed it did not remain so.

The confusion was even greater when Jimmy Carter, with an often formulated dislike of the establishment, began to govern with the help of his boys from Georgia. But never in modern times has the confusion been so great or the rivalries so openly exposed as since Ronald Reagan settled into the White House.

According to the president's latest decree, Secretary of State Alexander Haig is his principal adviser on foreign policy. But when crisis clouds seriously begin to gather in the world, it is Vice President George Bush who will take command in the White House Command Center. Haig's function, according to the vice president, is to look after "the day-to-day foreign policy problems." It is difficult to see how this equation balances.

Alexander Haig, general and former commander in chief of NATO forces, is probably the man who knows most about national security problems in the Reagan administration, but up to now he has been more belligerent and dogmatic in his appearances, and this has frightened some of those around him. Even more frightening has been the general's insatiable appetite for power. This appetite has been such that increasing numbers of people have been convinced that what Haig is aiming at is to attempt himself to become president next time the United States has to elect one.

The presidential dreams have now been given a serious blow, and it would not be surprising if Haig disappears from the scene before he has time to create a major role for himself. According to reports from Washington he has already threatened nine times to "hand in his notice."

That there is such confusion surrounding the command structure of the foreign policy behavior of one of the superpowers must be a cause of deep concern to the U.S. allies. And the fact that the president's closest advisers are fighting like cat and dog gives a picture of Ronald Reagan as a weak president.

The dual command between the White House and the State Department in the formation of U.S. foreign policy has long been a U.S. problem. During the years when President Eisenhower governed from the golf course it was no problem. John Foster Dulles was omnipotent as far as foreign policy was concerned.

Henry Kissinger never allowed any strong man to steer the State Department. But neither as Nixon's adviser nor as secretary of state in his own right was he allowed to act on his own initiative. Before he fell into the Watergate swamp, Nixon was a strong president who knew how to control even so willful and ambitious a man as Kissinger. Later, under the weaker President Ford, it was Kissinger alone who determined U.S. foreign policy.

The rivalry between the White House and the State Department worsened during Jimmy Carter's term in the White House. Therefore when Reagan became president he was firmly resolved to reorganize the whole decisionmaking apparatus for foreign policy to avoid all the sniping between different groups within his administration. This makes it all the more ironic that the conflict has flared up so quickly and so vehemently. Alexander Haig has obviously opened his mouth too much. He has lost a lot of prestige, and this is regrettable not least for the U.S. European allies, who considered themselves to have good contacts with Haig and favorable experience of him from this time as NATO chief.

Haig may have acted more like a general than a diplomat, but despite his belligerent statements he has shown more tact toward his allies than Reagan's security adviser Richard Allen. The latter's view of the European government heads is that they are all too accomodating toward the Soviet Union or, as he so tactfully put it, they would "rather be red than dead."

THATCHER CABLES BREZHNEV ON POLISH SITUATION

LD061946 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1809 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] The growing threat of a Soviet invasion of Poland tonight provoked "hands off" warnings to the Russians from Britain's politicians, and trade union leaders-and from U.S. Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who is visiting this country.

It was disclosed that the prime minister had sent a letter to Soviet President Brezhnev and that the TUC's international committee had sent a message to Soviet bloc trade unions.

Meanwhile, in the House of Commons, Labour's Mr John Silkin backed the government's hard line and requested that parliament should be recalled-as it was when Russian tanks rolled into Czechoslovakia-if an invasion took place during Mps' Easter holiday.

Mr Weinberger threatened strong economic and diplomatic sanctions by the West against the Soviet Union if it invaded. Speaking at Raf Cottesmore in Leicestershire, he did however, deny that NATO had any plans to intervene militarily.

As he spoke, Whitehall officials were disclosing the contents of a letter Mrs Thatcher had sent to Mr Brezhnev at the weekend.

While not issuing any direct threats about the consequences of a Russian invasion, she insisted that the Polish people must be allowed to decide their own future peacefully, without outside interference. Poland, she told the Soviet leader, was "in the forefront" of her concern.

And in the Commons, shadow cabinet member Mr John Silkin urged the leader of the Commons, Mr Francis Pym, to recall parliament if an invasion of Poland took place. Mr Silkin reminded MPs that the 1968 invasion of Czechoslovakia had taken place during a parliamentary recess. If the same thing happened in the case of Poland, he urged Mr Pym to "bear in mind" the recall in 1968.

Mr Pym told MPs Poland was the "most startling event" affecting the world now. "Poland must be allowed to resolve its problems without outside interference of any kind," he said. "We must hope very much there will be no invasion or any attempt by anybody to interfere with events there."

Meanwhile, the TUC's international committee, headed by Communication Workers' Union General Secretary Mr Tom Jackson, "strongly reaffirmed" support for the Polish trade union Solidarity and said that "Poland should be left to solve its problems peacefully and free of any external coercion." The committee's message went to the central council of trade unions in the Soviet Union and to national trade union confederations in Eastern Europe.

PERUVIAN PRIME MINISTER ENDS 3-DAY VISIT

PY021515 Lima Radio America in Spanish 1130 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] Peruvian Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa Elias yesterday concluded his 3-day visit to the United Kingdom and held a press conference. During the press conference, he was asked about the possible sale of British arms to Peru. He indicated that this had not been the objective of his visit to the British Defense Ministry, but added that the United Kingdom is interested in furnishing modern materiel for the Peruvian Army. Minister Ulloa Elias indicated that Peru is concerned only about maintaining the defensive capacity of its armed forces, bearing in mind the protection of national interests. He added that President Belaunde Terry's administration does not want to engage in an arms race. The Peruvian prime minister concluded by stating that he hopes to attract new foreign investors by means of fiscal measures designed to aid enterprises which promise to reinvest their profits in the country.

CEAUSESCU WRITES KIPRIANOU ON MADRID CONFERENCE

NC061540 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1515 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Kiprianou, today received the charge d'affaires of Romania, Mr Marin Alexie, who conveyed to him a written message from President Ceausescu concerning the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

CONVENTION REACHED WITH ROMANIA ON TAX ISSUE

NC021118 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Text] According to an official announcement, between 26 March and 1 April 1981, delegations from the Socialist Republic of Romania and Cyprus met in Nicosia for the second round of negotiations, which started in Bucharest in June 1980, with a view to concluding a convention between the two governments to avoid double taxation.

The negotiations, the announcement says, were held in a friendly and cordial atmosphere and led to the preparation and initialing of a draft convention, which will be submitted to the two countries' governments for final approval and signature.

CENTER PARTY CHAIRMAN COMMENTS ON AAPSO MEETING

NC052010 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 5 Apr 81 pp 4, 10

[Exclusive interview with Vasos Lissaridhis, chairman of the Cyprus United Democratic Union of the Center and vice president of the Afro-Asian People's Solidarity Organization, by EXORMISI correspondent G. Stathis; in Aden; date not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] Which of the decisions of the AAPSO Committee's thirteenth meeting do you consider the most significant?

[Answer] I believe that the principal conclusion was that, with Reagan's rise to power, a new dimension has been added to international relations in addition to the existing dimension, namely, the efforts of the multinational companies and U.S. political-military circles to impose a guardianship on developing countries by surrounding them with bases, as has been happening in the area of Arab oil.

Currently, "gunboat diplomacy" has been added through the threat that, should the need arise, the United States will not hesitate to directly intervene in the area. This endangers not only these countries' security but also international peace, because currently there are no peoples who will not react to undisguised U.S. interventions.

Furthermore, the efforts aimed at the destabilization of those countries not prepared to play the game of U.S. policy are becoming even stronger. These efforts are not only directed at progressive regimes but also at countries that simply respect their national independence. Consequently, the struggle for national independence must become even stronger. This concerns the entire area, including Greece. Thus, the obvious duties are clear. A broader front should be created, as soon as possible, to react to these efforts for the transformation of certain areas into areas of direct exploitation and political guardianship and, consequently, the transformation of the people in those countries into second-class citizens.

The Cyprus problem was also discussed at the meeting. There is an even greater need for the forces that represent national independence to play a leading role and be in the government, because this is the only way for one to resist this all-out attack against the independence of various countries.

In Cyprus, this need is even stronger, because there will be greater pressures for us to follow a Camp David-type course, and for the implementation of solutions that will permit postcolonial powers to use Cyprus as they see fit, mortgaging the country's future to their will. The danger can be pinpointed to the fact that the policies of those powers are currently directly linked with Turkish interests--and will continue to be so linked even if oil loses its significance--owing to Turkey's proximity with the USSR--something which means that the mortgaging of Cyprus' political future to these circles is in essence a Turkish solution.

As I have said, the Cyprus problem was discussed and there was a specific resolution by the organization. It remains to be seen in what practical way at least some of these positions will be implemented.

[Question] From what perspective was the Cyprus problem presented and examined?

[Answer] The Cypriot side stressed that our problem is not purely Cypriot and that the Arabs should be equally concerned about Cyprus' fate given the fact that if the will of the imperialists prevails, the island will become a political and military springboard against their people.

However, the entire world should pay attention to this issue because if we accept that invasion, occupation and force create law, this will not affect only Cyprus but a great number of countries. I believe that this is well understood inside the circle of developing countries.

KYRENIA MAYOR CANDIDATE FOR COMING ELECTIONS

TA021255 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 2 Apr 81

[Excerpt] It has been announced that Girne [Kyrenia] Mayor Ziya Rifki will be the Communal Liberation Party [CLP] candidate for the presidential elections to be held on 28 June.

CLP Secretary General Ismail Bozkurt today issued a written statement in connection with the decision taken by the party council that met yesterday evening. Noting that various community problems as well as election and party problems were discussed at yesterday's meeting, Bozkurt added that the council decided to announce that Rifki will be the CLP candidate for the presidential elections.

FOREIGN MINISTER MEETS WALDHEIM IN NEW YORK

TA070947 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, who is on an official visit in the United States, is continuing his contacts. Turkmen met with UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim at dinner yesterday evening. Turkmen will meet again with Waldheim today.

Turkmen also visited Princeton University yesterday and made a speech on Turkish foreign policy. Assessing Turkish foreign policy in the face of the recent international developments, Turkmen drew attention to the contribution to be made by a strong Turkey to peace and stability in the Middle East. He added that significant achievements were made against terrorism in Turkey. Referring to international terrorism, Turkmen dwelt upon attacks by Armenian terrorists against Turkish diplomats and historic realities. Turkmen will leave New York for Philadelphia today.

VOTCP COMMENTS ON ILTER TURKMEN VISIT TO U.S.

TA070930 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Station commentary: "One Cannot Oppose U.S. Impositions, while participating as NATO's European Flank"]

[Text] Dear listeners, Foreign Minister Turkmen, who has been in the United States for some time, has concluded the official part of his visit. In addition to the Turkish-U.S. relations, the situation in the region and especially the situation in the Persian Gulf and the new U.S. strategic plan which the United States is trying to formulate in connection with this region were discussed at the talks held in Washington. What was the attitude adopted by Turkey on these issues? Dear listeners, it is beneficial to dwell on this important problem because the Persian Gulf is one of the current dangerous places of tension.

The one mainly responsible for this tension is the United States which has declared that this region, rich in oil reserves, is an area of national interest. The United States is constantly increasingly its military presence here with the goal of strengthening its positions and enhancing its sovereignty. The United States wishes to form bilateral or trilateral military pacts. It is trying to justify its adventurist policy, its tendency to coarsely interfere in the domestic affairs of people and its methods to crush national liberation and independence struggles through well-known lies and instigations such as trying to prevent communism from penetrating into the Middle East. The United States is using pressure in order to drag our country into its policy of adventurism, expansionism and pressure our country into its policy of adventurism, expansionism and pressure and to use it as a tool in its aggressive and hegemonist interests.

Turkmen's U.S. visit and the talks held in Washington again reveal the increasing U.S. pressure and impositions on and its plots concerning Turkey. As has also been stressed by the world press, both Haig and the other U.S. administrators reiterated that they envisage new duties for Turkey in the new strategic plan concerning the Middle East and that Turkey should play a more active role in the Persian Gulf. Dear listeners, in the language of our people, this means participating in the military force to be set up in the Sinai, saying yes to the military pact to be formed by Israel, Egypt and other reactionary Arab countries, and opening our territories to the Rapid [Deployment] Forces. In the face of these open impositions, Turkmen replied: The security of the Persian Gulf concerns the countries in the region. We cannot undertake a duty outside the NATO framework. Based on Turkmen's statement, the world press commented that a unity of view could not be reached at the Turkish-U.S. talks. Some agencies went so far as to report that Turkey did not submit to U.S. pressures on the Middle East issue.

Dear listeners, these views should not be disregarded. However, they should not be exaggerated either, because the United States holds the bilateral slavery agreement signed with Turkey. With this agreement, the United States has guaranteed the status of its bases on our territory for another 5 years. Furthermore, the whole of this slavery agreement approved by the junta reflects the hegemonist interest of U.S. imperialism over our region and Turkey. In addition, the agreement gives U.S. imperialism the possibility for armed interference in our country's domestic affairs.

On the other hand, Turkmen says that Turkey cannot undertake a duty outside the NATO framework. In other words, he takes into consideration the interests of NATO, the aggressive organization of imperialism, before those of Turkey and our people. There is another truth to be considered: NATO's main boss is again the United States. The United States is trying to expand NATO's field of operation from Turkey to the Indian Ocean and, thus, to realize the adventurist and expansionist plans it is pursuing in the Middle East. The United States has accomplished the first step by transferring the Rapid [Deployment] Forces to NATO command.

Dear listeners, while saying that they were trying to form bilateral or trilateral pacts with the participation of anticommunist regimes, U.S. Secretary of State Haig, who is on a Middle East tour, also cited Turkey. Doesn't Haig's statement raise the question: Was secret bargaining, which Turkmen did not wish to reveal, done in Washington? In short, dear listeners, one cannot oppose U.S. pressures and impositions relying upon NATO's European flank. This [words indistinct] is nothing other than deceiving our people and concealing the realities. Western European countries have their own plans in line with their interests. One of these plans is to make Turkey [words indistinct] among the reactionary Arab countries in the Middle East. In other words, our country is again being put forward as a springboard. Furthermore, isn't the NATOite policy one of the reasons that dragged our country into the current impasse? The most realistic attitude to be adopted in the face of U.S. impositions is to pursue a nonaligned peaceful foreign policy, to strengthen ties with the progressive Arab countries that support the new Soviet peace proposals and to respond positively to these constructive proposals. Such a policy is beneficial to peace and detente in the region as well as our national interests. Our national interests necessitate withdrawal from NATO, the abolishment of slavery agreements and the dismantling of the aggressive bases on our territory.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS BROADCAST BY BELGIAN RADIO

TA062041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Turkey has launched a protest with the Belgian Foreign Ministry and the Directorate of the Belgian Radio's French language network, RTBF, against the RTBF which reported the Armenian terrorists' attack against the Turkish labor counselor in Copenhagen, Cavit Demir.

The Turkish ambassador to Brussels, Haluk Kura, sent a letter to the Belgian Foreign Ministry and the RTBF stressing that the broadcast in question encouraged Armenian terrorism and ran counter to the pertinent UN resolution. ANKA reports that in his letter, the ambassador noted that such broadcasts could harm Turkish-Belgian relations and asked the authorities to check these broadcasts.

ENVOY TO GREECE TO RAISE ARMENIAN ISSUE

NC071000 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 4 Apr 81 pp 1, 7

[Report from Ankara]

[Excerpts] Ankara will draw the attention of Athens to the meeting held in Athens last week at which the Armenians expressed their longing for the establishment of an independent Armenian state on Turkish territory.

Sources close to the Foreign Ministry say that Turkish Ambassador to Athens Tahir Alacam has received instructions from Ankara to make representations to the Greek Government on this matter. In accordance with these instructions, Ambassador Tahir Alacam will draw the attention of the Greek authorities to the fact that they have remained indifferent to a meeting of this nature, which is directed against Turkey. He will stress that this is not compatible with the maintenance of friendly relations between the two countries.

This indifference on the part of the Greek Government, at a time when relations between the two states show signs of softening and at a time when both sides should refrain from acts that might spoil this atmosphere, has created various ambiguities in the minds of diplomatic circles. The Greek Government has maintained a similar attitude toward the activities of fanatical Armenian organizations against Turkey.

PLO OFFICIAL DENIES TIES WITH ARMENIAN TERRORISTS

["PLO Representative's Press Conference"]

[Text] Ankara, 6 Apr (AA)--Representative of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) to Ankara Abu Firas said they had no connection at all with Armenian terrorists. Firas claimed that some Turkish dailies had recently started an anti-Palestine campaign. "We appreciate the papers which reflect truth, but we condemn the others which quote from books by Zionist writers," he said.

He went on to say, "Some dailies publish material from the Israeli Embassy, which links PLO with international terrorist organisations like the Japanese Red Army, the Italian Red Brigades and the German Baader-Meinhoff and allege that PLO supports world terrorism. Some political forces are trying to damage the good relations between PLO and Turkey by publishing these false reports."

Firas reminded that the Armenians constitute a community in Lebanon with representatives in the Lebanese parliament and ministers in its cabinet. He denied the PLO had any special relations with the Armenian community in Lebanon as alleged.

Referring to recent developments in Middle East, Firas pointed out Israeli aggression started just after U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's current visit to the region. He said PLO gives training only to those people who want to fight for the Palestinian cause and should not be considered responsible for the terrorists returned from PLO camps.

"The youth who attempted to kill Ronald Reagan might have been trained by an anti-Castro group. In that case, who can say that Reagan, who established and supported this group, is responsible for this attempt?" he asked.

Firas said Turkish television also broadcasts news in a similar vein but he would not deny such reports because, "PLO did not tell these people to return to Turkey and take part in terrorism."

TURKISH CYPRIOT DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR TALKS

TA042026 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Text] A delegation composed of the leaders and general secretaries of political parties represented in the Turkish Cypriot legislative assembly arrived in Turkey today.

The delegation is composed of National Unity Party leader and Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, Communal Liberation Party leader Alpay Durduran, Democratic People's Party leader Nejat Konuk, Republican Turkish Party leader Ozker Ozgur as well as the general secretaries of these parties. The Turkish Cypriot delegation arrived in Ankara as the guest of the Turkish Government in order to have talks on the Cyprus issue.

Meets With Oztrak

[Text] Ankara, 6 Apr (AA)--A group of Cypriot politicians, currently in Ankara to contact Turkish officials, called on Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak today. The group includes leaders and general secretaries of all political parties represented in the Assembly of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

State Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak said they will exchange views on several questions of mutual concern, adding such contacts contribute to forming new political lines which will help protect the interests of the Turkish Cypriot community. Members of the Federated Assembly have been invited to Turkey by the Foreign Ministry. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen is currently in the United States for a visit and will return home next week.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER CITES ECONOMIC ACHIEVEMENTS

TA031718 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 3 Apr (AA)--Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal said Turkey's exports had gone up by 28 percent in 1980, and the export target needed for full economic recovery was another 35-40 percent increase over the next 3 years.

Ozar made the statement in an address to presidents of 254 local chambers of trade, industry and stock exchanges who met at the National Chamber of Trade and Industry in Ankara Friday.

Ozal believed the major accomplishment of the last 15 months was the curbing of inflation and improvement in the balance of payments. He attributed the current lull in the market to the extent of anti-inflationist measures. He believed government purchases in summer months plus stability measures would they should not expect further tax relief. [sentence as received]

NUCLEAR PLANNING GROUP REJECTS BREZHNEV PROPOSALS

LD071310 Hamburg DPA in German 1255 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Apr (DPA)--The United States hopes its European NATO partners will support its defense policy. This was indicated by senior officials of the U.S. Defense Department on the sidelines of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting in Bonn today. The U.S. delegation, led by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, pointed out that the current "pro-NATO" feeling in the United States is "fragile." If the European allies do not back the U.S. Government in its defense efforts, the government will lose the public support for which it has worked so hard and so long. At the meeting, which was accompanied by demonstrations in front of the main entrance to the Defense Ministry, the United States again drew attention to the Soviet Union's increased arms efforts. Moscow's arms level at present--after 10 years of detente--was higher than during the time of the so-called Cold War. The Soviet Union, stressed the U.S. Government officials, is making it too easy for itself when it "strikes up pleading songs for moderation abroad while playing martial music at home." Leonid Brezhnev's proposal to freeze medium-range missiles was clearly rejected at the conference as "unacceptable."

Chancellor Schmidt Address

[Text] Bonn, 7 Apr (DPA)--The moratorium proposed by the Kremlin is not enough in itself, in view of the Soviet arms drive, to dispel the "deep concern" of Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. Addressing the members of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group at a luncheon today at Schaumburg Palace, Schmidt added that the moratorium proposal could "naturally have a favorable psychological effect on the resumption of talks." The December 1979 twin decision by NATO to seek talks with Moscow on limiting medium-range missiles in Europe while at the same time bringing NATO armaments up to the Soviet level is inviolable and any doubts in this respect "also put in question the alliance itself in the present international situation." He has repeatedly told the Soviets that their superior Euro-strategic armaments represent an unacceptable threat. "Preparations for carrying out the two elements of the twin decision have been made. The fact that concrete steps are being taken with regard to talks with the Soviet Union, which are to be decided on at this conference, is a sign of the rapidity with which the United States has again assumed leadership after the change in president." Schmidt gave his assurance that the Federal Republic will make its contribution to maintaining the global balance of power in close cooperation with its alliance partners.

FRG Defense Minister Interview

DW080927 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1800 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Excerpts from interview with Defense Minister Hans Apel by ARD reporter Schawer; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The United States very much hopes for the support of the European NATO partners. It says that the friendly mood in the United States vis-a-vis NATO is fragile. This statement did not lead to disputes with other delegations?

[Answer] For me these statements were directed more at other European states, but we will certainly discuss that in May in Brussels.

[Question] The neutron weapon was not discussed. The matter seems to be closed. The central issue is the dual decision on counterarmament in the field of medium-range missiles.

[Answer] Most important to me is that the assembled NATO countries agree in their assessment of the medium-range problem. Soviet superiority exists. It must be reduced either through arms control results or counterarmament.

USSR'S TIKHONOV, KREISKY DISCUSS BILATERAL ISSUES

LD071724 Hamburg DPA in German 1616 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Vienna, 7 Apr (DPA)--Soviet Premier Nikolay Tikhonov and Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky met in Vienna this afternoon for a first round of talks, in which they discussed international and bilateral topics. Following the 1 and 1/2 hour talks, Kreisky told the press that the situation in Poland had not yet been brought up. It will be discussed tomorrow morning at a second meeting. Tikhonov made no statement.

Kreisky said that today's exchange of views was mainly devoted to outlining their positions with regard to international questions and to the discussion of bilateral economic problems. Kreisky said that he had brought up the North-South summit of approximately 24 industrial and developing countries planned for autumn in Mexico. He told the press that he had the feeling that the USSR is not very interested in this conference.

Kreisky said that in the economic sphere, Tikhonov had made quite specific offers, for example, in the shipbuilding sector, which were very interesting for the Austrian economy. Kreisky stressed that over the past 25 years, Austrian-Soviet relations had developed without a break and that at no time had there been Soviet pressure. Austria is a prime example of the fact that the policy of peaceful coexistence has substance.

Kreisky Addresses Press

[Excerpts from statement to the press by Austrian Chancellor Kreisky in Vienna on 7 April 1981--recorded]

[Text] On the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the Austrian state treaty, that is about a year ago, we declared that in the quarter century since the state treaty, the Russian-Austrian, Soviet-Austrian relations have been completely free of any friction, despite the various events which have occurred in our direct neighborhood. There have never been any pressures from the Russian side. In other words, we are a principal witness of the fact that the policy of coexistence has substance, and that it is feasible to pursue a policy of detente. And that is why one has to understand that we naturally have very strongly advocated Helsinki, and that we are of course supporters of the policy of detente.

That is very positive, it is something very positive that we are able to say that about ourselves--and as an example we are certainly valuable, as an example for all those who say that such a policy is pointless, that it does not produce any results, and so forth. Well, what I mean is that this is not so, in our specific case--but also in other cases--it did produce some results, indeed very essential results. And as an example of that, we are valuable.

SPY CHARGES AGAINST MINISTRY OFFICIALS DROPPED

AU071020 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 7 Apr 81 p 2

[Summary] The Vienna state prosecutor's office has called off the investigation against three Austrian Foreign Ministry officials who had been suspected by state security police of betraying state secrets and misuse of office. Foreign Ministry Pahr, who had suspended the three officials from duty when the investigation was launched, lifted the suspension and declared that there was not even any case for disciplinary action against the three officials--Juri Standenat, Helmut Wessely, and Donatus Koeck. They will resume their work at the Foreign Ministry immediately.

SCHMIDT SEES POLISH SITUATION AS 'GRAVE, UNCLEAR'

LD071612 Hamburg DPA in German 1503 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Apr (DPA)--Chancellor Helmut Schmidt regards the situation in Poland as still being grave and unclear. However, he told the SPD Parliamentary Group in Bonn today that he remains convinced that neither the Soviet side nor those in responsible positions in Poland, including the church and trade unions, would contribute to an aggravation of the situation.

FEDERAL CHANCELLOR VIEWS NATIONAL, WORLD PROBLEMS

OW071116 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 7 Apr 81 p 8

[Hans Reiser and Dieter Schroeder interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn; date not given]

[Text] SZ [SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG]: For several months now, Mr Chancellor, the coalition and the government in Bonn have not exactly shown great determination in the implementation of clear objectives. This also involves a leadership problem. In other words, have you lately questioned whether this is also your fault?

Schmidt: Surely, this is the fault of everyone involved, and consequently it is also partly my own fault. On the other hand, it is perhaps necessary to tell somewhat more specifically what this is all about.

SZ: There is a whole list of controversial subjects in which the coalition does not particularly convey the impression of being most determined. Let me only refer to the following catchwords: counterarming with medium-range missiles, arms exports, meaning tank deliveries to Saudi Arabia, nuclear energy, economic support measures, neglect in housing policy.

Schmidt: In connection with all the complex issues you just mentioned, I want to say that there have not been any differences of opinion within the Federal Government, which is made up of ministers from two parties. This is true not only for spring but also for the winter. Differences of opinion do exist among the German public and publicized views and also in the two coalition parties but not in these alone. The government and the chancellor cannot and must not seek to cut off the public discussion by any claims to power--if they were allowed to do so, they would not even be able to go through with it. I will not deny that I consider some of these discussions disturbing because in part they are not being waged very purposefully, because in part they are waged with the repetition of arguments, partially highly emotional arguments. Yet, all this cannot be changed by a leadership decision on the part of the Federal Government.

SZ: You yourself said in the last cabinet meeting that you'll take a firmer grip on the reins again.

Schmidt: No, what I did was appeal to my colleagues in the two parties to use their influence to prevent anyone having an idea on economic development or economic policy from turning it into an interview or a plan for the benefit of the public and presenting it to the public. In that respect, there are too many plans just now, and the press gladly prints them to show that unrest or a lack of unity prevail. Much of what you experience right now in the fields you mentioned springs from the publicity cravings of individual politicians, but much of it also reflects genuine concern and needs to be taken seriously. Take nuclear energy policy for example: The government has never changed its policy in this field. Contentions to that effect are not true. But it is seen all the time, indeed, that many people project their life's anguish onto nuclear energy. Nuclear energy makes them fear for their life or for the lives of their children or grandchildren, and it is necessary to make allowances for that anxiety. This anxiety cannot just be eliminated by a mere leadership decision of the Federal Government. Ideas along these lines are absurd.

SZ: Even your deputy, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, said that the coalition offers a diffuse picture. Don't you feel yourself that you have to govern against part of your own party?

Schmidt: This has always been the case. This is nothing new. It was, by the way, similar in the Adenauer era, and it happened to be so in the eras of other chancellors. Mr. Genscher sometimes speaks as party chairman and sometimes as foreign minister. In this particular case, he surely spoke as the party chairman.

SZ: Is the social-liberal coalition dying because it increasingly finds it difficult to reach understanding on what is necessary and what is practicable? How long can the principle of setting things aside and shelving them be overstrained anyway?

Schmidt: These are a lot of questions at one time. Really, we did not set aside or shelve very much.

SZ: Isn't it a fundamental impression that the coalition finds it increasingly difficult to reach understanding on what is necessary and what is practicable?

Schmidt: No, this is not correct. It isn't so hard to come to terms on what is necessary. Only, people expect--and journalists, politicians and political parties contribute to this end--the Federal Government to be able to cope with the world political and world economic difficulties by a mere decision, difficulties which do not affect us alone. It cannot do that. The German people are spoiled. For many years, they have had the least price increases, the lowest unemployment rate. This also holds true today, though unemployment has turned into a considerable problem in the past 2 years. Out of this situation of being pampered, people now would like it best if the government did something to make this disappear. There isn't a single government in all of Europe which could do that, nor has any government ever succeeded in doing so. This isn't possible theoretically, either. Some people are harboring erroneous, illusory ideas which a government just cannot meet.

All of us have been hit by a fundamental worsening of the economic situation. All of us need to assimilate by changing our industrial capacities and our service and production capacities. What this necessitates is not so much a decision by the Federal Government. The Federal Government says that industry must do that. This requires the decisions in many companies, large, medium and small, and also by the employees. In this respect, I am quite optimistic because the German company managements on the average have displayed a very high capability to change to new production lines, modern production lines, better service, better marketing than have enterprise managements in other regions of the world, and also because our trade unions react to such situations with an outstandingly smooth touch. It is not up to the Federal Government to intrude on individual companies, saying: Produce this sometimes and produce that sometimes. On the contrary, this would only make things worse.

SZ: The question is aimed at the climate in the coalition and on the lifespan which this coalition might yet have. After all there are some subjects which cause friction between the coalition parties, occasionally also in foreign affairs.

Schmidt: Not between the partners in the Federal Government.

SZ: Alright, this has somewhat calmed down again now. Yet, Mr Genscher, for example, deemed it necessary to come out with some utterances which have been interpreted to mean that he now plans on setting up a counterweight against certain forces in your party.

Schmidt: That may be so, but in any event, he had no cause to make remarks toward colleagues in his own government, toward his own chancellor. And he did not do that. And I would like to prevent this from being made the subject of speculation posto facto. It is a different matter when he makes remarks about the party of the coalition partner. I also have the right to make remarks to certain factions in the party about my coalition partner. I do not think much of it. And I desisted from doing this when, about 9 months ago, the FDP in North Rhine-Westphalia failed by the 5-percent clause. This will not gain anybody anything; mutual criticism will impair the cohesive force of a coalition. Criticism is necessary, of course, but it must not be exaggerated.

SZ: You are just about to enter into coalition talks about economic development support measures. The trade unions for a long time have been demanding massive economic development programs. This demand keeps cropping up in the SPD as well. Does your long public silence on the issue imply differences of opinion in the coalition or do you consider such programs altogether unnecessary?

Schmidt: I have said many times that all 10 governments of the EC states--and I am quoting you now--deem massive economic development support measures unsuited and wrong. This is what we found again lately in Maastricht, and I stick to my guns. And if some individual members of parliament advocate a different view, it still is no cause for me to yield to them. I stick to this finding which has been made several times. I already mentioned the assimilation of our industrial capacities to the new situation in the world economy. Part of this assimilation will have to involve measures which will decrease even further the consumption of energy in general and of oil in particular. In part, the production needs to be converted from oil to other forms of energy, and it may well happen that we decide to promote such adaptation investments in specific regions in one way or another. But this then will be something entirely different from a broad or massive economic development program. As for the German Trade Union Federation, the DGB unfortunately failed to say from where the financing is to come for the farflung program it puts up for discussion. This is a shortcoming.

SZ: What is most important to you presumably is the quarrel over the necessity of the NATO dual decision--involving the deployment of new U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe and the attempt to achieve an arms limitation agreement in this field through negotiations with the Soviets. Do you see, within and without the SPD, any parallels to the anti-nuclear arms campaign of the fifties?

Schmidt: One may see such parallels if one wishes to see them. As far as the Federal Government is concerned and the Social Democratic Bundestag faction, I do not doubt at all that the decision will be supported as adopted--both parts. It is the North Atlantic alliance's common intention to achieve negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States on the limitation, the numerical limitation, of nuclear medium-range weapons on both sides. The decision has not been made for the sake of pacifying anxious minds, but because it is urgently necessary to limit the number of arms on both sides.

Negotiations can be waged successfully only if and when the Soviet leadership realizes that it cannot maintain the fantastic lead it has achieved in this respect by its armament, because the West is capable of counterarming as well. The intention to counterarm must be serious, and it must wield its weight as being meant seriously on both sides of the table. Then we will achieve serious negotiations and also a mutual, numerical limitation. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that the Social Democratic Bundestag faction, just like the Federal Government, will not abandon this conviction.

SZ: In two instances so far, you failed to speak of the party.

Schmidt: The party is a different field. This also holds true for other parties, by the way, just as it holds true for many movements among the German people. Only, what we are doing here is governing in keeping with the basic law, and this basic law just does not provide for all sorts of movements and for writers in the journals STERN or QUICK to make the decisions. Decisions are being made in the Bundestag and in the Federal Government, as per the basic law.

SZ: The intention, Mr Chancellor, has been emphasized often enough, to be sure, as has been the fact that the NATO alliance agrees on rejecting the Soviet Union's moratorium proposal. Nevertheless, the question remains--a question which is reflected by doubts in the public and in your party--whether the alliance really is prepared for early negotiations. You said in the Bundestag that this must be energetically tackled. But we will not negotiate. So how can we induce the Americans to go to the negotiating table?

Schmidt: I said even more in the Bundestag. I said I was sure--just as sure as I had been in the Bundestag a year ago that the Russians would cancel their "no" to the negotiating offer, which they did on the occasion of the Moscow visit by the chancellor and the foreign minister in late July last summer--that the Americans, too, will resume the negotiations with the Russians started last October. I told the Bundestag that as far as I am concerned, it goes without saying, that a new government also needs time for preparations. I am quite certain, not only because the Germans demand this, but because it is the consensus of opinion of the French, the English, all European NATO partners, including the Americans themselves. We do not harbor any doubts about it. It is, furthermore, in the U.S. interest to avoid an arms race on European territory and to prevent the repercussions which it would be bound to have on the psychological situation in Europe.

SZ: Do you have any information as to how much time the United States will need, or in other words, are there any ideas as to when the negotiations will commence?

Schmidt: Surely, in the course of this summer or late summer. You cannot have any information about it except that the consultative group set up in the North Atlantic alliance at our urging for the preparation and attendance of such negotiations met a few days ago. It was convoked by the Americans and it has made headway in its work, so that we do not have any cause for complaint, at any rate.

SZ: Will it be difficult for you domestically if the opening of such negotiations is delayed, perhaps beyond the summer and the fall?

Schmidt: Should negotiations fail to materialize this year, this would not only make it more difficult for me domestically, but would also entail difficulties in the relationship with the U.S. Government. But I do not see this happening.

SZ: Difficulties can be visualized also with respect to the potential results of the negotiations. Obviously, segments of your party and of the public expect the Soviets to be prepared to make concessions rendering superfluous any questions concerning counterarming in Europe. Is this imaginable at all anymore?

Schmidt: The probability has not increased that any counterarming will become superfluous, for the Soviets have made great efforts beyond the degree assumed for 1979. They have deployed more than 200 SS-20 missiles in the meantime. And still left are about 400 SS-4 and SS-5 missiles with one warhead each; the SS-20 is even carrying three warheads. These are gigantic figures. If the Soviets were to reduce all this to zero, it would definitely be unnecessary here in the West to set up one single extra weapon. I do not think it is highly probable that the Soviets will reduce all this to zero.

SZ: Isn't it necessary to prepare the critical voices in the coalition for the realization that there will not be any such thing as a return to point zero?

Schmidt: It isn't very probable, and I said so, to make everybody see the realities. But one must say that in the course of the negotiations, the Soviets presumably will say: But part of these missiles is not intended for you at all. This may be. I told the Soviet general secretary and also the Soviet defense minister in a number of talks that I consider these arms targeted on West Europe and on my country.

SZ: Reverting once more to the relationship with Washington...

Schmidt: But you must not narrow the whole German foreign policy down to this dual decision. It is such a provincial narrowing. It is an important point, no doubt about that. It is also an important point in the relationshp with the Soviet Union...

SZ: U.S. Secretary of State Haig has termed the relations between the United States and Europe as good and as promising as never before. Would you agree with this assessment?

Schmidt: If Secretary of State Haig has said this for all of Europe, then I fail to see any reason why this should be doubted. From my own experience, I must tell you that tensions did occur occasionally, for instance, between Kennedy and Adenauer. When we here in Bonn began to go through with Ostpolitik in earnest in 1969, the cooperation with Nixon was not easy, but basically it worked pretty well. Tensions must not mean, however, that the great United States and tiny Germany cannot decently cooperate with each other.

SZ: There are different voices in Washington as well. Reagan's Security Adviser Allen claims to have discovered a pacifist trend in Europe, but particularly in the Federal Republic, and former President Ford spoke of a semipacificism. Aren't you concerned that this might turn into distrust?

Schmidt: No, this does not have any substance nor does this develop into distrust. Throughout the period of all presidents whom I have known, disputes necessarily occurred once in a while. But this has always been settled, and would be settled in the future, on the basis of the fundamental conformity of views, the fundamental awareness of interdependence.

SZ: You occasionally philosophize on the duty of the responsible politician to ponder ways and means that might be helpful in attaining an objective that has been recognized as correct. Take the example of the tank deliveries to Saudi Arabia. What was your objective and what is your objective, and was the resistance, above all in the SPD but also outside of it, not predictable?

Schmidt: The resistance in various quarters of German politics against the concept of our delivery of arms to Saudi Arabia had been foreseen, also because I myself do not believe that I can definitely weigh the pros and cons at the moment. At no time have we encouraged the Saudi Government to expect our approval. The goal I have in mind is clear. What I clearly see is, first, that Saudi Arabia is by far the world's biggest oil supplier. It is needed as a partner by many European states. Second, Saudi Arabia is the biggest creditor state which can grant credits defying all imaginable orders of magnitude, because it has surpluses unmatched by any other state. And third, I see a country which has an immense need for capital equipment. Quite a few German companies already have made considerable turnovers there. In the case of the German construction industry, probably 50 percent of the entire foreign turnover is made in Saudi Arabia.

All this having been the premise, let me now state my goal: making possible and bringing about as well and as reliably as possible a long-term economic cooperation between Saudi Arabia and the Federal Republic of Germany. I think this serves employment in the German capital equipment industry; yet, it is also a necessary target in the interest of our fuel supply and credits for our industry from the recycling of the so-called petrodollars.

SZ: But are you sure that that the delivery of 300 tanks really is necessary to attain these objectives?

Schmidt: I am not sure of it, but I will be hearing... I would like to add an important point. The political principles for the export of arms and equipment on the basis of the foreign trade law and the war arms control act which have been valid since 1971 have postulated as a highly important point of principle that the Federal Republic shall not deliver any arms and equipment to areas of tension. So far, the entire Middle East has been considered an area of tension. The Saudis are aware that under the principles now valid in the Federal Republic such arms deliveries are out of the question. They have been told so in no uncertain terms, when we first heard and talked about this. What prevails here is very frank communications based on mutual trust.

SZ: Apropos the guidelines: Have you formed an opinion already as to how the formula might be amended?

Schmidt: I don't think that the guidelines ought to be amended with a view to one single country, for instance, Saudi Arabia or Chile, to cite two particularly striking examples. The guidelines have been valid for 10 years now and they are being reviewed by an interministerial working group of the Federal Government in the light of these experiences. This working group has been provided with some details in advance by the Federal Security Council. One of the orientation points is the necessity to maintain the reserve thus far exercised by the Federal Republic with respect to this general and fundamental stipulation. Another is this: No expansion for the arms industry because otherwise we would burden ourselves with the followup orders. On the other hand, the jobs that might depend on 300 tanks are not of any interest in this context. Of interest are the jobs linked with the investments in Saudi Arabia and the jobs that will be jeopardized if there would not be any more oil. This indirect job procurement in other industries is of incalculably greater significance and is not at all ruled out by the principle of no arms industry expansion.

CDU'S MERTES INTERVIEWED ON EAST-WEST RELATIONS

DW081051 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0446 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Excerpts from reporter Limburg interview with CDU Bundestag Deputy Dr Alois Mertes; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev will come to the Federal Republic of Germany. He clearly articulated his interest. Does that possibly indicate two things: First, the will to have a dialogue with the West--particularly the Federal Republic--and second, an all-clear signal for Poland, indicating that Moscow does not plan an intervention at present because that would probably postpone indefinitely all negotiations, talks and visits?

[Answer] Regarding Brézhnev's wish to visit, it must be noted that it was voiced shortly after the talks with the German foreign minister, exactly at a time when a massive campaign was being launched in the Federal Republic by the DKP, which is loyal to Moscow, the socialists and the naive pacifists against the policy represented by the foreign minister in Moscow in agreement with the opposition.

I have the impression because of long years of observation of Soviet strategy and tactics that the popular idea of having a meeting between leading USSR and FRG politicians is supposed to be demoted now to a propagandistic-psychological offensive against our definite loyalty to the Atlantic alliance and German-American friendship.

It is obvious that Bonn is supposed to be directed step by step away from Washington and closer to Moscow. Moscow seems to consider NATO's dual decision of December 1979 so incompatible with its aims that it applies the carrot of courting and the stick of threats in all possible variations. These variations of the same theme, sometimes louder, sometimes more quietly, the luring of Bonn to leave the firm alliance with America and the security and disarmament positions of the West have just one aim: Intensification of Soviet influence on our long-term policy.

After all, Brezhnev was in Bonn just 3 years ago. A German-Soviet declaration was signed which later turned out to be one of the numerous ambiguous documents of the seventies.

The responsible people of the Federal Government and of the opposition pointed out to Brezhnev at that time that the continuous Soviet armament in the medium-range field aimed against West Europe will inevitably lead to Western counterarmament. Moscow has not drawn any consequence from this visit in consideration of Bonn's reminder. On the contrary, it has intensified its medium-range armament since Brezhnev's visit and it has invaded Afghanistan.

After Schmidt's visit to Moscow, which the Soviets very much welcomed because it created some moral relief for them in their international isolation after Afghanistan, a new Soviet political element set in, namely, the threatening of Poland in violation of the ban on threatening somebody with the application of force.

I would say that it is now up to Brezhnev to gain some more confidence through some action prior to visiting by ruling out any threat to apply force against Poland, by giving in with regard to Afghanistan and by attributing the proper place to human rights in the Madrid talks. I have the feeling that enough words have been said and enough state visits made. We want eventually to see acts of peace on the Soviet side.

[Question] So you contest that the Soviet Union is seriously prepared to negotiate?

[Answer] I contest that a state visit on such a high level, which is obviously part of a general campaign, will be useful in the current situation. A correct political assessment must differentiate between the aims or contents and the tactical appearance. The CDU/CSU naturally sticks with its opinion that the East-West dialogue must not be disrupted, particularly not in times of crises. That pertains also to relations between Bonn and Moscow. Solid diplomatic channels exist in this respect. There is also the method of a work visit. A summit conference can also be useful for such a dialogue.

It must be clear, however, that such a visit must serve real negotiations. It must not be some sort of side show aimed at weakening the political steadfastness and considerateness of the Western partner. I am under the impression that Brezhnev's state visit must be seen in this light, a visit he wants to make 3 years after his last one. We need real progress in the matter, in the substance and not only with regard to the atmosphere.

[Question] How do you assess chances to make some headway in the matter, such as the chance, for example, to achieve negotiations on medium-range missiles this year?

[Answer] I do not absolutely negatively assess the chances to achieve negotiations. But one must not see the value of negotiations just in itself, one must see the surrounding field of negotiations. We must drop that erroneous belief that negotiations as such represent some progress.

I would therefore agree with the federal chancellor who said in a SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG interview that the lead of the Soviet Union in the field of medium-range arms is so fantastic--he used this word himself--that a realistic politician must say the following: Prior to entering negotiations which will make sense, the Western position must be better than it is now. It has been indicated and demonstrated often enough that the United States, the West as a whole--and naturally also Bonn--are prepared to have negotiations. But unfortunately one must say that the time and the expectation of forthcoming negotiations have been continuously misused by the Soviet side to lull Western counterarmament efforts into security. Now the U.S. politicians have realized that one cannot continue along the way of misusing negotiations and that more serious and substantial prerequisites will be necessary than had been often thought in the past.

[Question] The chancellor said a few weeks ago in another press interview that counterarmament possibly could be avoided. Now he says in SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG that a certain counterarmament is in every case inevitable, even if negotiations come about. Do you consider that a certain rapprochement regarding the CDU's standpoint?

[Answer] I consider this a certain rapprochement to the plain truth and, thus, to the more realistic view of the CDU/CSU. Moreover, I believe that the federal chancellor sees matters internally much more clearly than he says externally. We criticize the fact that he talks to certain SPD groups and describes things much more positively and usually also ambiguously, and then he speaks to another group and describes matters differently again. At any rate, what he has now said about the necessity of counterarming demonstrates that he shares our standpoint in this matter rather than that of his numerous illusory SPD friends.

GDR, CSSR IMPROVE FORTIFICATIONS ON FRG BORDER

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Apr (DPA)--The GDR and CSSR continued last year to further expand their frontier fortifications with the Federal Republic. According to the latest annual report by the Federal Frontier Protection Service, by the end of 1980, 410 kms (393 in 1979) of the 1,378-km long GDR frontier were equipped with automatic firing devices. These devices are largely replacing the minefields which were reduced last year from about 292 kms to 232 kms. The GDR also continued modernizing its observation towers. But the end of 1980, the number of concrete towers, some of which are protected with mirrored or tinted window glass, increased from 583 to 645.

Despite the increasingly perfected security installations, 51 GDR citizens, including 9 members of the frontier troops, risked their lives escaping to the Federal Republic last year. In 15 cases, the Federal Frontier Protection Service observed the arrest of fugitives, 3 of whom were apparently injured by the detonation of automatic firing devices or by gunfire. According to the report, a further unknown number of failed escape attempts must be assumed. Last year, 11 people escaped from the CSSR into the Federal Republic, including 5 members of the Czechoslovak Armed Forces.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG VIEWS HAIG MIDEAST TOUR

DW071435 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 7 Apr 81 p 4

[Editorial by Manfred F. Schroeder: "Haig's Wrong Priorities"]

[Text] Alexander Haig came in troubled times. At his first Middle East tour as U.S. secretary of state, he already is needed as a mediator in a crisis which could still get easily out of control. This weekend, Israel gave a sharp warning to Syria with the help of the United States, urging it to maintain more restraint in the conflicts with the Christian forces in Lebanon.

The situation is still explosive: Israeli air action to the advantage of the Christians in the neighboring country (also in the north) cannot be ruled out. They are being considered as allied fighters in the conflicts with the Palestinians and Syria. Their protective power and their intentions to divide Lebanon meet with sympathy.

Israel does not want to touch off new controversies during Haig's visit. After a brief stopover in Jordan, the secretary of state will make a particularly important visit to Saudi Arabia, particularly important for American interests. Jerusalem takes that into consideration. Israel feels in the same political league with the Arab kingdom, although Riyadh threatened it with a holy war because of the dispute over the status of Jerusalem. The main reason for the American statesman's round trip through the pro-Western capitals of the Middle East is to bring about a strategic bulwark against Soviet penetration in the direction of the oilwells.

The secretary of state probably realized at the beginning of his tour what difficulties are waiting for him: Without a solution of the central problem of the Middle East conflict, the Palestinian problem, it will be difficult to weld together an alliance between Israel and its pro-American neighbor states, although cooperation seems possible because of the same world political interests. But the tensions in the region must break any such coalition. The collision with Lebanon was caused by the Palestinian problem as the first but not the only reason.

It was made clear to Haig in Egypt that the United States is setting wrong priorities by attributing more importance to the creation of a strategic alliance in the Middle East than to a peaceful solution. Similar considerations are being made in Jerusalem, although for other reasons. Without a peaceful settlement, rearmament particularly of Saudi Arabia seems a dangerous and questionable scheme. As long as no agreement exists with Riyadh ruling out a new war in this area, it will be hardly feasible to establish a common outward front.

In view of Saudi Arabia being supplied with most modern military equipment, financially weak Israel demands at least some compensation with arms and other forms of military cooperation. No jurists, diplomats and experts in political formulations characterize the talks with the U.S. envoy this time as was frequently the case in past peace negotiations. Next to top-ranking politicians, representatives of the military and of the defense establishment are in the foreground to confront Haig with their wishes. The secretary of state had to state that Israel will remain superior to its neighbors also in the future, because America is after all committed not only to defending Israel, but it considers the country a real "ally" in the fight against "imperialism inspired by the Soviet Union."

The establishing of an international peace force for the Sinai is under discussion. Half the force is to consist of American soldiers, and it is supposed to act after the Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai next year. The U.S. forces simultaneously are supposed to form the core of a rapid deployment force which could be needed at some time in this region. It is also supposed to protect Israel against unpleasant surprises from its neighbors.

Originally, Haig wanted to make just a fact-finding tour of the Middle East, particularly since no positive chances existed for further peace negotiations prior to the Israeli elections on 30 June. But without further Washington efforts aimed at detente, American plans for this part of the world will not have great chances for success. After the first half of his visit, Secretary of State Haig announced that the leaders of the four visited states will be separately invited to Washington after the Israeli elections.

GOVERNMENT REACTS TO SITUATION IN LEBANON

Special Envoy Dispatched

LD061544 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] France has dispatched a special envoy to Lebanon. He is Hubert Argod, former French ambassador to Beirut, who was entrusted by Valery Giscard d'Estaing a short time ago to go immediately to the Lebanese capital to examine with [President] Ilyas Sarkis what assistance France can give in the present situation.

Airlift Proposed

NC061846 Paris AFP in English 1842 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 6 Apr (AFP)--France has proposed sending two Transall transport planes, along with medical personnel, to evacuate Lebanese wounded for treatment in French hospitals, a presidential spokesman said here today.

The spokesman said the proposal was made by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing "in view of the continued fighting in Lebanon, and the high number of casualties."

In a communique Friday, the French president had urged all the parties involved in Lebanon's turmoil to respect the cease-fire ordered by Lebanese President Ilyas Sarkis.

Informed sources here, meanwhile, said France had no intention of bringing the Lebanon question before the United Nations Security Council.

SPANISH CP LEADER: POLAND MUST DECIDE OWN FATE

LD071218 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] The head of the Spanish Communist Party, Santiago Carrillo, is in Paris as a guest of the International Relations Institute. Bertrand Vannier met him this morning. Carrillo very firmly condemns in advance, as you will hear, any possibility of a Russian intervention, and says loudly and clearly that he would be willing to attend a communist summit proposed by the Czechoslovak Communist Party.

[Begin recording] [Carrillo] There is doubtless a campaign, a campaign which in my opinion is [word indistinct]. The Czechoslovak congress is just beginning; there is talk of a possible meeting of the heads of state of the Warsaw Pact. I do not know what could be the object of a meeting of all communist parties on Poland. These are Polish matters, and it is the Poles, I insist, who must settle them. But in any case, if there is such a meeting, perhaps we would attend to repeat our position, even if we would be a rather small minority at such a meeting.

[Question] Thus, you would not favor a summit that would give a warning?

[Answer] No, no. I think there is no reason for the communist parties to meet and decide on Poland's fate. It is Poland itself which must decide. [end recording]

AFGHAN REFUGEES IN PAKISTAN GIVEN FREE WHEAT

NC071945 Paris AFP in English 1932 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 7 Apr (AFP)--Economy Minister Rene Monory and Pakistani Ambassador to France Sahabzada Yaqub Ali Khan today signed an agreement under which this country is giving 12,000 tonnes of wheat to Afghan refugees in Pakistan, the Ministry of Economy announced here.

Part of the aid (9,000 tonnes) will be shipped out at France's expense and distributed free to the Afghan refugees. The other 3,000 tonnes will be shared out through the intermediary of the World Food Programme.

The ministry said: "The precarious situation and the increasing number of Afghan refugees in Pakistan calls for a special effort of solidarity by the international community. France, which had last year made a gift of wheat to the Afghan refugees, has this year increased the volume of its aid substantially and thus renewed its tangible support to the Afghan community (taking) refuge in Pakistan."

The refugees fled to Pakistan after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

LE MONDE VIEWS FRANCOIS-PONCET'S ROK VISIT

LD080957 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Apr 81 pp 1, 2

[R.-P. Paringaux dispatch: "Francois-Poncet Has Given Discreet Support to Seoul"]

[Text] Seoul--"Korea is one of the key countries of the future." It is "one of the great industrial powers of tomorrow....It is a country with which France must develop its relations more than with any other," especially since "the pendulum of history is going to swing from the West to the Asian-Pacific region as this century draws to a close." These remarks and predictions made by Francois-Poncet during his visit here confirm the stakes--political, economic and nuclear--which the French Government is placing on South Korea's future and on the development of its cooperation with that country. France is above all seeking economic and commercial advantages here--"an anchoring place in Japan's backyard."

In addition to economic and scientific cooperation, South Korea expects Paris to give it diplomatic support in its rivalry with North Korea's communist regime.

In all the talks he has had (with his South Korean counterpart, with the prime minister and with President Chon), Francois-Poncet has been able to gauge the obsession caused here by the perception of the military threat and subversion from the north.

France's policy is one of discreet support for Seoul's position, notably for its request for UN membership and for the promotion of its diplomatic relations in Africa, the Near East and East Europe. "France will do all it can to help the Republic of Korea establish diplomatic relations where it does not have such relations," Francois-Poncet explained. On the other hand, the French Government is not envisaging establishing diplomatic relations with Pyongyang (which only has a trade mission in Paris), at least not until the communist countries which support North Korea have accepted that the reunification problem must be settled by the Koreans themselves without foreign interference.

Francois-Poncet invited his counterpart Mr No to visit France. In view of the election situation in France, there was officially no question of an invitation to President Chon, which the South Koreans seem to want.

The French are hoping to obtain contracts to supply conventional (electrical) parts for the two power stations and to take part in the construction of two others for which bids are to be invited next year.

The trip can be regarded as a success on all these questions and both sides seem satisfied. On the other hand, questions relating to the most criticizable aspects of the Seoul regime's domestic policy--suppression of political freedom and freedom of expression, imprisonments, strict control of the election process--were approached officially by the French side with great discretion and in an allusive form. "France considers that in Asia's still unstable situation, the Republic of Korea will find its rightful place all the more effectively since, once it has overcome the difficulties encountered and has lifted the emergency measures, it will fulfill its ambition of presenting the image of a just, prosperous, democratic nation reconciled with itself," Francois-Poncet said during an official visit.

NICARAGUAN STATE COUNCIL DELEGATION VISITS EUROPE

Tour Itenerary Detailed

PA032218 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0010 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Geneva, 2 Apr (EFE)--A Nicaraguan State Council delegation is in Switzerland at the start of a visit to Europe in order to obtain "closer political ties and to explain the Sandinist revolution."

The group is headed by State Council President Carlos Nunez, who met this morning with the secretary of the IPU, Italy's Pio Carlo Terenzio, to request his country's readmission.

The second reason for the trip to Europe is to visit the European Parliament and its president, Simone Veil, next Tuesday in Brussels. They will continue on to Yugoslavia, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and to Amsterdam, where the delegation will attend a meeting of the Socialist International.

Carlos Nunez has rejected U.S. charges of Nicaragua's involvement in El Salvador, accusing the United States of granting $200 million in military aid to that country and of being responsible for a foreign intervention in the delicate situation of this Central American nation.

The Sandinist leader pointed out that his country upholds a policy of nonalignment within its sympathy for political liberation movements, as is the case of El Salvador.

Carlos Nunez hinted that Nicaragua's independence policy regarding the Soviet Union could reach the point of condemning an eventual Soviet intervention in Poland when he pointed out that "if such were the case, we would study our stance regarding Poland in the same way that we did with Afghanistan."

The delegation plans to establish closer ties with the European parliaments and peoples it plans to visit and it stressed Nicaragua's intention to "work solidly for peace" and to struggle for political and social stability in the nation's interior and in the Central American region.

The president of the State Council is accompanied by the vice president of the State Council, Plutarco Anduray; Secretaries Luis Sanchez and Carlos Garcia; and the State Council's legal adviser, Mario Lourdes Vargas.

Membership in IPU Sought

PA041523 Managua Radio Sandino in Spanish 1800 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] State Council President Commander Carlos Nunez Tellez has announced in Switzerland that Nicaragua has requested readmittance into the IPU.

Nunez is heading a Nicaraguan delegation on a tour through several European countries at the invitation of parliament members who have visited Nicaragua. He will visit Manila, where the IPU Council will study Nicaragua's request during its 20 to 25 April sessions.

It will be recalled that our country's IPU membership was suspended when the Somoza regime was overthrown and its parliament dissolved in July 1979.

It has been reported that the Nicaraguan delegation, headed by Companero Nunez, will be in Brussels on 7 April, where it will be greeted by Simone Veil, president of the European Parliament.

When asked about the suspension of U.S. aid to Nicaragua, Commander Nunez said our country will ask for food aid from other countries and that Mexico, Venezuela and Canada have already responded favorably.

DENMARK

SOVIET SEEKS CLARIFICATION OF MINELAYING POLICY

LD080849 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 6 Apr 81 p 7

[APN Denmark correspondent Aleksander Polyukhov "Panel" article: "Will the Danish Belts Be Mined if Reagan Moves Against El Salvador?"]

[Text] In recent months it has often been possible to read and hear politicians' and military men's views on the serious international situation and the changes this could bring about in Danish security policy. A key question in this debate is that of the mining of the Danish belts in a "crisis situation," that is, before a war has broken out. Neither I nor other foreign correspondents in Copenhagen have, however, been able to find out what is meant by a "crisis situation." Defnese Minister Poul Sogaard, Chief of General Staff General Jorgensen, press spokesman Borberg and other official representatives of the Danish defense forces prefer to skirt around this problem.

However, the question is of collosal importance both for Denmark and for the other Baltic nations, not least the Soviet Union, whose shipping makes frequent use of the Danish belts.

There can be no doubt that Denmark is within its full rights to ensure the defense of its national sovereignty in any way. It is also clear that Denmark could, as part of its defenses in a given situation, resort to mining its territorial waters.

However, it is worrying that the Danish statements about mining the belts make no connection between a "crisis situation" and a threat against purely Danish national interests. This lack of clarity leads to the supposition that "sealing" the Baltic could also come into the picture in a crisis which did not affect Denmark directly. When this argument is put forward, it is often said that Denmark as a NATO member shoulders a joint responsibility for its allies' defenses.

There is a flaw in this argument. It does not take into consideration the possibility that a serious crisis could arise outside NATO's own area of responsibility, and that the United States could become involved. Here the automatic mechanism takes over, as it so often does in conflicts in our age, and suddenly the U.S. allies are also involved. There are enough examples of this.

At present, the United States and Britain are advocating an expansion of the area of NATO operations. If this idea becomes a reality there would be a greater risk that the smaller nations would be drawn into a conflict in which they have no part. "The West's vital sphere of interest," which Washington talks about so much, would become the excuse through which a "crisis situation," no matter where in the world it arose, would lead to U.S. demands to the Danish Government to mine the belts.

President Reagan, who has chosen a policy of confrontation with the Soviet Union, is beginning to become more involved in events in the nations of the Third World and has been making growing demands on his allies. An obvious example of this is El Salvador, where the United states and the West European nations adopt different principle stances, but where Reagan through his missions has put pressure on the Europeans to get them to back the U.S. policy.

I do not think that the possibility can be excluded that Reagan will mount actions in connection with El Salvador. This could, for example, take the form of a military intervention in the country or a blockade of Cuba, which the Americans with their insufficient political understanding hold responsible for the Salvadoran people's revolutionary struggle.

In such a situation, the European allies would be faced with two alternatives--either to support the U.S. actions or to break their alliance commitments.

Any possible future U.S. attempt to strangle Cuba would be met by firm opposition from the socialist countries and from states in Latin America. The Soviet fleet is capable of overcoming a blockade, provided of course that it is not cut off from its bases.

It is here that Denmark's alliance commitments would come into the picture in the form of and U.S. request for the mining of the belts with the excuse of a "crisis situation." For Denmark is jointly responsible for the defense of the United States, a NATO nation, and this despite the fact that the conflict would be taking place in the Caribbean thousands of kilometers from Denmark.

During the last Cuba crisis, Soviet vessels in the Danish belts and sounds were "counted and escorted" by the Danish fleet. This time Reagan, who is seriously considering a blockade against Cuba, could ask the Danes to close the belts. If such a request were complied with, a "Baltic crisis" could very well arise, and this would not be in the interests of Denmark or the Soviet Union.

The ideas I have put forward here are of course only hypotheses about what events could develop in a future scenario, but the hypotheses are based on real facts and on the element of uncertainty contained in the magic word "crisis situation."

We would all be served by an unambiguous statement about what Danish policy on the mining of the belts is.

DEFENSE HIGH COMMAND BEGINS FORCE REDUCTION

LD070901 Copehagen AKTUELT in Danish 2 Apr 81 p 13

[Text] The defense high command has started to reduce its forces by around 850 men and close a number of institutions. This is made clear by the 1982 draft defense plan, which the defense high command has submitted to its personnel organizations.

The draft plan, which will mean a drastic economic halt, has been brought about because the budget proposition will be submitted to the Folketing in April. This means that the defense forces must expect an unchanged budget for 1982, because the political negotiations for a new defense agreement have not yet been completed.

The draft plan is based on the new proposal for the negotiations which Defense Minister Poul Sogaard yesterday put forward at the resumption of the political negotiations. This proposal is based on an unchanged budget.

It will mean that the defense forces will have to tighten their belts, even though they have not given up hope of an increase in the budget, because such an increase would not come until long after the budget proposal.

The savings plan would mean, for example, that the forces under the Danish eastern command as of 1 January 1982 would be reduced by two armored battalions and an artillery division. This means that the Sjaelland defense forces would be reduced from two brigades to one--unless more money was forthcoming.

The defense high command also wanted to reduce the defense forces on Bornholm by a motorized infantry company in 1982, but has had to abandon the plan because of political opposition.

According to a government decision Antvorskov, Naestveo and Vordingborg barracks on Sjaelland will be maintained. This means that the army will have to close establishments in north Sjaelland instead of the Vordingborg barracks. For this reason, units from north Sjaelland will have to be moved to south Sjaelland. According to the plan, the Sjaelland artillery regiment will be moved in 1982 from Bolbaek to Sjaelsmark barracks and there be merged with the crown's artillery regiment.

In Jutland, there are plans to move the 6th Signal Regiment from Randers to Fredericia. The staff of the Jutland Signal Regiment will also be sent to Fredericia. However, the king's Jutland infantry regiment will be moved from Fredericia to Haderslev and be merged with the Schleswig infantry regiment. The staff and the headquarters company of the 3rd Jutland Brigade will be moved from Haderslev to Randers.

Privates' training and the antitank company in Haderslev will be disbanded and distributed between other authorities and units.

In the future, drafted armored infantry companies will form part of the standing army's armored infantry battalions.

The navy will continue phasing out the motor torpedo boats of the Sea Lion class and also of two of the eight minesweepers of the Sound class. Investigations are also being made as to whether the navy's logistic support structure could be altered and made cheaper, and the removal of workshops from Holmen will continue.

Alterations in the support structure for a small number of arms systems are also being considered in the air force. Here there will be a smaller reduction in personnel. The air force station at Kagerup on north Sjaelland will be disbanded, and an aircraft radar center will remain unmanned.

All in all, these changes in the three services will mean a saving of around 200 million kroner compared with 1981. But further small savings may be necessary.

These savings have principally been achieved through personnel cuts. It is assumed that around 850 jobs will be axed, primarily in full-time personnel within the army, but also to a lesser extent among reserve offices under contract. The largest part of this reduction will be achieved by limiting recruitment in 1981, and for this reason there will already be drastic cuts in training for privates in August this year. There will be no recruitment at the Sjaelland life guard regiment, the Danish life guard regiment and the Sjaelland artillery. In other recruitment, the main emphasis will be attached to local recruitment, that is draftee recruitment.

It is also assumed that there will be fewer civilian personnel, and for this reason there will in principle be no expansion of civilian personnel in 1982.

Including the reduction in the number of draftees this year, a total of around 2,400 posts in the defense forces have been left vacant. The new plan will mean that these posts will now disappear completely, and that the defense forces' personnel ceiling will fall from a theoretical 44,086 in reality 41,461 to a total of 40,535 men.

The defense minister's plan envisages a further reduction before 1985 of around 2,000 men, so that the defense forces' total strength will be 38,617 men. This reduction is more or less evenly distributed between personnel groups, but will hit civilian employees hardest. Their numbers will be cut from 9,408 this year to 9,358 next year and 8,779 in 1985.

COMMUNISTS APPLAUD POLISH DECISION ON STRIKE

LD031217 London MORNING STAR in English 3 Apr 81 p 5

[Report by "MORNING STAR reporter": "British Communists Welcome Polish Agreement"]

[Text] Speaking in Manchester, Mr Gerry Pocock, head of the international department of the Communist Party of Great Britain, said: "The decision taken by the Polish communist party and the results of the negotiations between the government and Solidarity are welcome.

"Taken with the decision of the Solidarity national leadership to call off the general strike, they auger well for the continuation of the process of negotiation, compromise and agreement which has continued in recent months.

"The Communist Party of Great Britain has all along expressed the view that this process is the only way to unite Polish people and overcome the difficult economic and political problems they face. These problems give rise to justifiable concern among Poland's socialist allies.

"Nevertheless, the political and economic problems have developed mainly because of past errors by the government and the communist party.

"An important part of the overcoming of these difficulties lies in what the prime minister referred to as 'a period of broad social dialogue' when he made his proposals for 90 days' peace.

"Undoubtedly there are antisocialist elements in Poland, including in Solidarity, whose aim is to sharpen and deepen present problems. It is equally true that there has been provocation.

"The action that gave rise to the general strike threat was the violence inflicted on Solidarity leaders at Bydgoszcz. Such violence is unacceptable in any context.

"In Poland where recent history has included violence against workers, such action must give rise to strong emotion and anger, and plays into the hands of enemies of socialism inside and outside Poland.

"The four hours' strike last Friday was fully supported by many millions of workers, including thousands of communists. This response is strong proof of the depth of feeling on this issue which we believe the positive outcome of Monday's talks will help resolve.

"British communists will do all in their power to win understanding in Britain of the origin and nature of Poland's problems. One of the key issues here is to help reduce international tension, achieve measures of disarmament, and develop friendship and trade."

FOREIGN OFFICE ANNOUNCES NEW AMBASSADOR TO POLAND

LD030924 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0430 GMT 3 Apr 81

[Text] Britain is to change its ambassador to Poland, now one of the most sensitive posts in the diplomatic service.

The Foreign Service announced yesterday that Welshman Mr Cynlais James, 54, known to his colleagues as Kenneth, will take up duty in Warsaw in the summer. He will replace Mr Kenneth Pridham, 58, who will leave the post in mid-May.

The Foreign Office said there was no significance in the change. Mr Pridham had completed his three-year tour of duty. Mr James was consul-general in Saigon at the height of the Vietnam war.

TURKISH CYPRIOT DELEGATION RETURNS FROM ANKARA

TA072059 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] The delegation comprised of the leaders of political parties represented at the legislative assembly and these parties' general secretaries, which left for Ankara last Saturday as the guest of the Turkish Foreign Ministry, returned to the island today.

In a statement at Ercan [Tymbou] State Airport, the prime minister and National Unity Party leader, Mustafa Cagatay, noted that the Ankara visit was an ordinary visit and that an exchange of views was conducted during the delegation's contacts regarding the issues known as essential to the protection of the Turkish Cypriot community's existence. Stressing that there is an identity of views with Turkey in all subjects concerning Cyprus, Cagatay said: We are happy to observe again Turkey's undiminished interest in Cyprus. Replying to a question, Cagatay said that the forthcoming elections in the TFSC were also discussed during his contacts in Ankara and that the necessity to continue to maintain the unity of the Turkish Cypriot community was also stressed. Cagatay noted that it is Turkey's most natural right to conduct an exchange of views concerning the important decisions that must be made in the TFSC and that any factor beyond an exchange of views is inconceivable. Cagatay also announced that the Turkish deputy prime minister and Cyprus Coordination Council president, Zeyyat Baykara, will arrive in Cyprus on 18 April with a delegation and will hold talks on the economic and social situation of the TFSC.

Expressing his views on his Ankara visit, Communal Liberation Party leader Alpay Durduran said that the visit was very beneficial. Durduran noted that an exchange of views was conducted on all subjects and said: It has made us happy again to see that the Turkish Cypriot democracy is being appreciated in Turkey.

In a statement at Ercan State Airport, Democratic People's Party leader Nejat Konuk pointed out that the Turkish Cypriot community solves all its problems together with Turkey and said: Turkey is closely (?interested in) all the problems of the Turkish Cypriot community and is determined to ensure their solution. We feel very happy to point this out once again and we are very glad to see that there is no doubt that the Turkish Cypriot community will display its will during the elections to be held on 28 June without any pressures or outside influence and firmly reestablish democracy.

In his statement, RPP leader Ozker Ozgur said that there has been no change in the policy of the new Turkish administration since 12 September regarding the Cyprus issue and that Ankara respects the decision made by the legislative assembly on 5 November 1976. Ozgur noted that a solution to the Cyprus problem will continue to be sought through the intercommunal talks within this framework. Pointing out that Turkey views the Turkish Cypriot community as a whole, Ozgur said: An interference with the democratic process in the TFSC is out of the question. We did not see even the smallest indication of this and this pleased us.

The TFSC parliamentary delegation was received at the Ercan State Airport by Turkish Embassy officials, certain ministers, deputies and other officials.

AKEL OPPOSES ASSOCIATION WITH EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

NC080940 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 8 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Mr E. Papaioannou, the leader of the communist AKEL Party, speaking at an election gathering in Limassol last night, said that his party would press for the severance of Cyprus' association with the European Community and for nationalisation of fundamental items and services like the oil refinery.

The AKEL leader strongly defended the intercommunal talks again and said that Turkish intransigence was encouraged by the "imperialists".

If all effort for progress at the talks was exhausted, he said, there would be a new appeal to the UN General Assembly and the Security Council with demand for more active, support, including a call for an international conference under UN auspices.

Mr Papaioannou accused the rally of representing the extreme right and big capital.

He complained that no real purge has been carried out and the culprits of the coup have not been dealt with.

Referring to the economic scene, Mr Papaioannou said that his party would press for resolute measures to avert an economic crisis. He promised effective measures for arrest of prices, restriction of imports, narrowing of the trade gap, and an integrated energy policy.

The party, he said, would press for state land, church and monastery land to be given to landless peasants, for nationalisation of water resources for strict control of agricultural machinery and agricultural chemicals and fodders, and for taxation of idle property.

It would also strive for the severance of Cyprus association with the European Community and press for a trade policy in line with the nonaligned character of the country.

KHARAVYI: AKEL LEADER GIVES ELECTION PLATFORM

NC071037 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 7 Apr 81 pp 1, 7

["Text" of press conference given by AKEL General Secretary E. Papaioannou on 4 April upon announcing election platform--place not given]

[Excerpts] Question: Given the fact that the platform, and of course AKEL policy in general, consists of the country's more general policy and in specific further maneuvers for dealing with the Cyprus problem for reaching an auspicious result, I ask: Recently U.S. Ambassador Stone made certain statements. It seems that these statements on the Cyprus problem--through which he supports Cyprus' independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity--were not made independently but at the consent of his government. Given the fact also that these viewpoints appear to be, at least phraseologically, satisfactory, and given the fact that almost the same things are supported by the other superpower--the Soviet Union--and the nonaligned world, could we as the political world and the government promote a cooperation among the two superpowers and the nonaligned through the United Nations so that an agreement could be achieved by the superpowers--of course together with the nonaligned--in order to advance a solution for the Cyprus problem?

Answer: With regard to the Cyprus problem, in my opinion U.S. policy continues to rely on the notorious Acheson plan which envisages Cyprus' partition. Everything the U.S. side has done, ever since the Acheson plan was prepared, affirms beyond any doubt that U.S. policy insists on this plan. Even the notorious U.S.-British-Canadian plan, when examined carefully, confirms that it is based on the Acheson plan.

If U.S. policy were frank, it could contribute to the solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of Cyprus' independence. The opportunity was afforded many times to do so. The first opportunity was on 20 July 1974, the day when the Turkish fleet started landing on the Kyrenia shores. On that same day the Soviet Union proposed to the United States that they cooperate to avert an invasion and restore constitutional order in Cyprus by reinstating the elected president, Makarios. The United States rejected the proposal and the Turkish invasion followed.

From what I know, since then the Soviet Union has repeatedly proposed to the United States that they cooperate and implement UN resolutions on Cyprus. However, the U.S. Government again rejected these Soviet proposals.

Consequently we should not delude ourselves regarding U.S. policy on the Cyprus problem. It is a policy that is based on Cyprus' partition and its transformation into a military NATO bridgehead. Actually, very recently, after meeting with U.S. President Reagan, British Prime Minister Thatcher stressed that Britain would be ready to assist in the use of territories by the "strike force"--as they call it--and by this she certainly implied also the British bases in Cyprus.

To complete my answer to the question, I would say that U.S. policy has not changed in any way despite the fact that it was afforded the opportunity to do so. I feel that people who stress that it is the West which can solve the Cyprus problem should bear in mind that the West can solve the Cyprus problem but will solve it in its own interest and not in the interest of the Cypriot people. I mean, it will partition Cyprus and transform it into a NATO bridgehead. This is not the solution for which the Cypriot people have been struggling. The Cypriot people are struggling for a Cyprus that will be truly independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal in its internal structure, nonaligned and demilitarized. All the people who agree with this solution and are sincere have the opportunity to do so. However, I reiterate, we must not have any delusions regarding U.S. imperialism's policy on the Cyprus question. This policy has been proved beyond any doubt. The coup was a CIA job, the Turkish invasion was a CIA job and all the rest of the jobs of the U.S. Pentagon, of course in cooperation with other reactionary forces within the NATO area.

Question: Mr Papaioannou, with my question I did not claim that the West will solve the Cyprus problem for us. I said can an agreement be achieved through which both superpowers, together with the nonaligned, can cooperate through the United Nations to promote a solution, of course based on UN principles? In other words, I did not support a solution emanating from the West.

Answer: I did not say that you have supported something of the kind, but there are people and political forces in Cyprus who claim in fact that only the West can solve the Cyprus problem for us. Extending my reply, I should say that every time a delegation of the National Council goes to the United Nations to brief UN member states on the Cyprus problem, it does not neglect to meet with representatives of the West, representatives of the United States. It does not discriminate. Whenever a National Council delegation was sent to the United Nations it had meetings with the West, the socialists, and the nonaligned countries. However, all of you know what the results of these contacts were. The Western countries either voted against or abstained from resolutions approved by the UN General Assembly.

Question: Mr Papaioannou, the people who claim that the West can solve the Cyprus problem argue that this can be done because the West can exert some pressure on Turkey since it gives it large sums in economic aid. They also claim that because of Turkey's current difficulties, the United States and the West generally can influence it to a greater extent than any other power.

Answer: Yes, but subsidizing Turkey with money and arms, and reactivating the bases in Turkey--because the Americans have reactivated their bases on Turkish soil--means that they are attaching immense significance to Turkey, that they want to use the Turkish factor, and that they are using Turkey in the eastern Mediterranean area and the Middle East as a kind of gendarme and ally to the plans which the U.S. imperialists and generally NATO imperialists have prepared. Actually, Turkey is in a position--and the Turkish leadership knows this--to blackmail the West in many ways because it knows that the West attaches great significance to Turkey's role. Otherwise, the West would not supply Turkey with all the things you mentioned.

Question: Mr Papaioannou, I would like you to comment on the fact that also the Soviet Union appears to be attaching immense significance to the Turkish factor and is giving it great economic help. In fact, with their recent statements, Soviet officials claimed that the military coup in Turkey was "necessary." I would like your comment on this fact in conjunction with the fact that like the countries of the West, especially the United States, the Soviet Union has not condemned the Turkish invasion of Cyprus either.

Answer: It is untrue that the Soviet leadership has claimed that the military coup in Turkey was "necessary." There has been no such statement by any Soviet leader. The Soviet Union must take the existing situation in every country into consideration. It cannot choose the government it likes. Turkey is a country neighboring the Soviet Union and naturally the Soviet Union wants to have good neighborly relations with Turkey as with any other country.

For this reason, Brezhnev's recent speech to the 26th CPSU Congress stressed that the Soviet Union wants to develop closer relations with Greece, Cyprus and Turkey. This is natural because Soviet policy is based on the policy of peace and good neighborliness with various countries and has no aggressive goals. Consequently, what is being said about the Soviet Union having done the same thing is not correct. The Soviet Union is doing everything in its power to enable the implementation of UN resolutions on Cyprus. All the statements by USSR delegates inside the United Nations, and outside, stress precisely this fact: the need to implement UN resolutions on Cyprus. However, the Soviet Union bears in mind that the West headed by the United States, is encouraging and breeding Turkish intransigence, and it is precisely for this reason that the Soviet Union has repeatedly proposed to the United States that they jointly cooperate in order to implemet the UN resolutions on Cyprus.

Question: Can you tell us at what level these proposals were made?

Answer: At the highest possible level. The Soviet Union has made such proposals at the ministerial level and at a much higher level. Of course, there is also the agreement reached in Vladivostok with Ford, which Carter did not want to repeat at the Vienna meeting. At the Vienna meeting it was proposed to Carter at least to repeat this agreement which Brezhnev and Ford had concluded at their Vladivostok meeting, but, Carter rejected this proposal.

Question: Mr Papaioannou, if the West were to respond to the Soviet proposals for cooperation in the implementation of the UN resolutions, would you cooperate with the Democratic Rally Party?

Answer: As I have said, the Democratic Rally's policy is, and I believe will continue to be, even more pro-NATO, pro-imperialist. We support a nonaligned foreign policy and we shall adhere to this policy because we believe that Cypriot interests are better served by a nonaligned foreign policy.

SOMALI FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES FOR VISIT

NC061210 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 6 Apr 81

[Text] Somali Foreign Minister Barre arrived in Athens at 1130 today. He was welcomed at Ellinikon Airport by Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, who will hold the first meeting with Mr Barre this afternoon. Tomorrow afternoon, Mr Mitsotakis and Mr Barre will sign an interstate agreement for economic and technical cooperation between Greece and Somalia.

Agreement Signed

NC072019 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] At 1800 today Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and Somali Foreign Minister Abdurahman Jama Barre signed the framework of an ecoomic, technical and trade agreement between the two countries. This agreement is within the framework of cooperation in various fields, such as Greek technological assistance to Somali and cooperation in the fields of fishing and technical education.

On the conclusion of Barre's visit, a joint communique was released stating that the Somali foreign minister met with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and discussed internatioal questions. The two foreign ministers also discussed questions of bilateral cooperation, and, particularly, the prospect of developing economic relations between Greece and Somalia. The framework of an agreement for economic, technical and trade cooperation was signed during these talks.

Responding to a pertinent appeal from Somalia, Mr Mitsotakis announced the decision to give Somalia appropriate pharmaceutical aid, food supplies, ambulances, and other items, to meet the needs created by the refugee problem in Somalia.

The Somali foreign minister called on Prime Minister Rallis and also met with other ministers. He also visited various industrial units. Mr Abdurahman Jama Barre officially invited Mr Mitsotakis to visit Somalia. The Greek foreign minister accepted the invitation.

MITSOTAKIS, SOVIET ENVOY DISCUSS SHIP REPAIR DEAL

NC021828 Athens NEWS in English 2 Apr 81 p 2

[Text] Foreign Affairs Minister Mitsotakis discussed bilateral subjects with the Russian ambassador in Athens, Mr Kaboshkin, whom he received in the ministry Tuesday. Among the subjects discussed was the renewal of the agreement for repair of Russian commercial ships in Neorion [shipyard], Siros Island.

Reliable sources announced that though the agreement has not been renewed yet, repair of Russian ships in Neorion, Siros, continues. The sources added that the agreement will only concern Russian commercial ships.

ROMANIAN PARTY CONTACTS KKE FACTIONS ON CSCE

Message to KKE-Interior

NC071751 Athens I AVYI in Greek 7 Apr 81 p 1

[Text] Yesterday, Romanian Ambassador Ion Brad called on Bambis Dhrakopoulos, secretary general of the KKE-Interior Central Committee, and handed him a message from the Central Committee of the Romanian Communist Party referring to a new initiative by the Romanian Government to achieve positive results at the Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe that is being held in Madrid.

The Romanian initiative, which takes place in the form of proposal to the governments of the countries participating in the Madrid conference, aims at undertaking all possible effort to restore international affairs to the path of peace, detente and national independence. The Romanian proposal provides for the holding of a conference that will deal with and will work out measures to strengthen confidence and to promote disarmament in Europe.

For the effective preparation of this conference, the Romanian proposal provides for the convocation of a preliminary preparatory conference of experts from all the countries which have signed the Helsinki Final Act. The Romanian Government suggests Bucharest as the venue of this conference and states that it will ensure suitable conditions for the smooth holding of the conference.

The Romanian proposal also refers to the Brezhnev proposal and stresses that is is a good basis for concluding an agreement in connection with the convocation of a conference on disarmament in Europe.

The message of the Romanian Communist Party Central Committee refers to the current shape of relations between the Romanian Communist Party and the KKE-Interior--relations which are the result of meetings and talks held at various times between the leaders of the two parties, Nicolae Ceausescu and Bambis Dhrakopoulos. The message expresses the hope that the Romanian initiative for peace and detente in Europe will enjoy the support of the KKE-Interior as well as that of the Greek Government.

In the meantime, yesterday L. Kirkos, KKE-Interior parliamentary spokesman, submitted to the Chamber of Deputies a question addressed to the foreign minister in connection with the Greek Government's attitude toward the question of recent proposals by Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev. Kirkos' question to the foreign minister is as follows: "Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev has put forward concrete proposals to the Greek Government in connection with the use of nuclear arms. These proposals have been supported by all the opposition parties.

"The government is asked whether it intends to utilize this initiative, particularly as the question of the presence of nuclear arms in Greece is left vague by the Greek side; thus implying that such arms really exist--without the Greek people's knowledge--and creating inestimable dangers for our country's very existence."

KKE-Exterior Approached

[Text] Comrade Kh. Florakis, KKE-Exterior Central Committee secretary general, was visited at the Central Committee offices, by Ion Brad, Romanian Ambassador to Athens, who handed him a message from the Romanian Communist Party Central Committee to the KKE-Exterior Central Committee. The Romanian Communist Party's message refers to the need of a positive conclusion of the Madrid conference's work and the convening of a European conference for adopting security and disarmament measures in Europe.

PASOK CRITICIZES EEC PRICES FOR GREEK PRODUCTS

NC031547 Athens NEWS in English 3 Apr 81 pp 4,12

[Excerpts] The Greek delegation is satisfied, on the whole, with the farm prices adopted by the EEC farm ministers, and considers them as the most favorable result for Greek products that could be achieved under present circumstances, the ATHENS NEWS AGENCY (ANA) reported from Brussels.

Upon his return from Brussels, Agriculture Minister Kanellopoulos told reporters at the airport that he was generally satisfied with the level of farm price increases decided upon during the ministers conference. He said both subsidies and readjustment rates for Greek products were satisfactory, and claimed that the abolition of the principle of shared responsibility was a clear victory for Greece.

Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK) President Andreas Papandreou yesterday described the EEC ministers decision on farm prices as "a huge blow for our country's farmers," and said they entail a drastic drop in Greek farmers' real income for the 1981-82 period.

To correctly assess the consequences of the new farm prices, Papandreou said, one must take into account that last year farm prices increased by 21-31 percent, that inflation is running at a current annual rate of 26.5 percent, and that production costs in Greece have gone up by more than 30 percent in the last year.

Mr Papandreou blamed the government for ignoring his party's repeated warnings, in the past, of the disastrous consequences of EEC accession for Greek farmers, and said that the Greek farmer's fate in the Community has now become, for the first time, crystal clear. He predicted the Greek people would hold the government accountable in the next elections and would vote for a change of policy and for a different path for the country. "Change has now become a condition for the country's survival," Papandreou concluded.

Asked to comment on Mr Papandreou's statement, a government spokesman said last night the main opposition leader was apparently unaware of the detailed announcement on the new far prices by Agriculture Minister Kanellopoulos. At any rate, he said, the government will respond to Mr Papandreou tomorrow (today).

FRG PAPER INTERVIEWS MITSOTAKIS ON POLITICAL ISSUES

DW071227 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 6 Apr 81 p 7

[Interview with Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis by Athens correspondent Gerd Hoehler]

[Text] Question: Greece has been a full-fledged European Community member for 3 months now. What does the current balance look like from your point of view--were your hopes fulfilled?

Mitsotakis: It is too early to draw a balance. Not even the Community can draw a balance regarding its 25 year of activities. We can say, however, that our first impressions of our participation in the institutions and other organs of the Community are rather positive. I believe that both sides are currently passing through an interesting process of learning.

Question: Greece still has some problems in adapting to new regulations and stipulations. It seems that bureaucracy has not yet fully caught up with Europe. Was one sufficiently prepared everywhere for the time after 1 January?

Mitsotakis: We have never said that the adaptation time would be simple matter. Naturally some preparatory work was done before.

This is demonstrated by the fact that all spheres function in a satisfactory way, which means that the transmission belts pass on the necessary motion. We need time until everything will start functioning smoothly. This time is necessary for us as well as for the Community. We try our best and we hope that the first malfunctions which sometimes are natural will be eliminated within a reasonable period.

Question: The community is at present not in particularly good condition--quarrels everywhere and higher and higher costs for the taxpayers in Europe. The political union seems at present to be farther away than ever before.

Mitsotakis: These difficulties are a burden, not only for the Community but for the whole world--the East and the West, the North and the South. I do not agree that a political union is far away. On the contrary, I am firmly convinced that the best reaction to this international crisis will be intensified political cooperation, solidarity, mutual assistance in the framework of the Community.

Question: Greece's foreign political problem No 1 remains to be relations with Turkey. One negotiates at present on the solution of bilateral problems. Has any substantial progress been achieved?

Mitsotakis: The time that has elapsed since my last meeting with my Turkish colleague is not long enough for achieving substantial progress in our relations. But in the meantime we achieved an atmospheric improvement, which is a prerequisite for a peaceful settlement of our problems. That is a positive step already. One must not ignore the fact that some of these problems are complicated, demanding much time, patience and mutual good will for their solution.

Question: What an effect did the Ankara change of power on 12 September 1980 have on mutual relations?

Mitsotakis: Although the basic positions remain unchanged, one can say that negative Turkish statements have been curtailed in past months, which were an unnecessary burden of our relations in the past.

Question: Greece still vividly remembers the experience stemming from the times of a military dictatorship. How do you assess the current domestic political situation in Turkey?

Mitsotakis: It is not up to me to censor the domestic political situation in Turkey. Just because we have experienced with a dictatorship, I would wish the Turkish people to be able to quickly reestablish its democratic rights. That would serve not only the interests of our mutual relations but those of the entire region.

Question: Signs indicate that the new U.S. Government will give Turkey very massive military and economic support. Your government stated repeatedly that one will not accept increased military assistance for Turkey. What possibilities do you see to implement this standpoint?

Mitsotakis: Greece has basically nothing against military help for Turkey. But we stick with our demand to maintain a balance in the Aegean Sea. The current practice was so far a ratio of 7 (for Greece) to 10 (for Turkey), which must be valid as before. I want to stress that this balance touches not merely on relations between Greece and Turkey but on the entire most sensitive region. Upsetting this balance would involve not merely Greece but all who are interested in preserving peace in this region.

Question: Elections will take place in Greece this year--in the fall at the latest, maybe even in early summer. Are not there good reasons for your government to have elections in the next months? Many observers believe that the economic situation would rather deteriorate up to this fall--which could curtail the election chances of your government.

Mitsotakis: We must make an end to announcing earlier elections in Greece without any special reason. We want to stick with the 4-year legislative period as prescribed by the constitution. Moreover, prognoses for further economic developments are not bad. I believe that the current achievements of this government are acceptable--also in the field of economic policy. Our high inflation rate must be considered mainly as the result of the necessary corrections which were due after our joining the European Community. It means that we must transform from a subsidized economic to a freely functioning market. A positive side of our economic development is the low unemployment figure. One can say as a whole that if we will pursue a good information policy, the voters will positively assess our economic policy.

Question: All observers actually believe that the "New Democracy" party, which represents the government at present, will suffer losses at the forthcoming elections. This is at least indicated by opinion polls.

Mitsotakis: The "New Democracy" rules the country since 1974. Naturally some voters are tired of this government. On the other hand, however, two important factors must be considered: No credible alternative exists at present with regard to the New Democracy. The oppositional "PASOK" is characterized by an orientation which is politically unstable, economically inconsistent, ideologically unclear and foreign politically not corresponding to Greek interests. This situation rather creates mistrust and displeasure than confidence and optimism. The jump to such uncertainty is too great for the voter. Second, one must consider that the "New Democracy's" opening toward the liberal center creates particularly good possibilities for gaining votes from this camp. Those voters who are "tired of government" and who might possibly leave us, could be replaced by those from the center.

Question: Will there be an absolute majority in Parliament after the next elections? Or do you think that Greece's next government could be a coalition government?

Mitsotakis: I fail to see who would form a coalition with whom if no party achieved an absolute majority of seats. The communist party and PASOK with their current programs are ineligible for a coalition as long as they insist on these programs. Such basic problems as the European Community, NATO, free trade and the liberal economic system cannot be the subject of negotiations for a coalition. We will not negotiate on that.

Question: Where do you see--hypothetically--a coalition partner for your party?

Mitsotakis: I must tell you first that with the exception of the communist party every other party could be a potential coalition partner for us--certainly under the prerequisites I have just mentioned. It depends on the current concrete situation. The center parties would be our natural partners. No basic differences exist between us. But unfortunately I see no chance for them to survive the next elections.

GOVERNMENT DENIES MILITARY ACTION AGAINST IRAN

TA071622 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] The reports being spread in Iran to the effect that Turkey will carry out a military operation against Iran have been denied. Replying to a question, State Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Jihan Oztrak said that these allegations were unfounded and that they were being spread deliberately by certain circles! Oztrak said nobody should believe such rumors which are fabricated with the aim of casting a shadow on the close relations of friendship and good neighborliness between Turkey and Iran.

SECURITY ZONE SET UP IN EASTERN BORDER AREAS

[Text] A 10 km-wide security zone has been established along Turkey's borders with Syria, Iraq and Iran in order to prevent smuggling. The transportation of live or slaughtered cattle or sheep and every type of oil is now subject to permit regulations.

According to a Council of Ministers decision published in the Official Gazette today, the citizens of regions within the security zones of Hatay, Gaziantep, Urfa, Mardin, Hakkari, Van, Agri and Kras provinces must report the amount of livestock and oil they possess to the mukhtars of their villages. However, citizens do not have to obtain permits for or declare the livestock and oil for their personal use. The quantity of livestock and oil to be used for personal needs will be determined by the provincial smuggling committees twice a year. The Council of Ministers decision also stipulates that the transportation of livestock to and among Hatay, Gaziantep, Urfa, Mardin, Hakkari, Van, Agri and Kras provinces be reported to the relevant authorities ahead of time.

AMBASSADOR WARNS GREECE ON ARMENIAN MEETING

[Text] The Turkish Government has drawn the attention of the Greek Government to the anti-Turkey speeches made during the Greek-Armenian youth meeting held in Athens on 29 March. Our correspondent in Athens reports that the Turkish ambassador to Athens, Fahir Alacam, has delivered the Turkish Government's oral warning on the issue to the Greek Foreign Ministry secretary general, Stavros Roussos. In its warning, the Turkish government stressed the necessity of refraining from such activities which have a negative effect on Turkish-Greek relations.

Armenian representatives from Lebanon, France and Cyprus participated in the 29 March meeting organized by the Greek-Armenian youth organization. During the meeting the participants took an oath to struggle until the Armenian cause is recognized at the international level. Also, certain anti-Turkey speeches were made.

HURRIYET: GREEK CYPRIOTS, ARMENIANS OPPOSE DENKTAS

NC071812 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 4 Apr 81 p 7

[Excerpt] The snare prepared by the Greek Cypriots and Armenians for Denktas aims at degenerating the democratic struggle being waged in northern Cyprus. They plan to extend "side" support to the presidential candidates opposing Denktas in the coming elections and to ensure that Denktas, the undisputed leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, gets less than 50 percent of the votes. If this happens, they will be able to launch a campaign to the effect that Denktas does not represent the Turkish Cypriot community.

The Greek Cypriots and the Armenians do not hide their intention to make every possible sacrifice toward this goal. Can this snare produce results? We need not even discuss it. The Turkish Cypriot community, which has managed over the years to forebear all kinds of privations and destitutions, will again know how to foil this Armenian-Greek Cypriot conspiracy by fully supporting its leader.

TURKISH CYPRIOT DELEGATION CONCLUDES VISIT

TA071712 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] The TFSC parliamentary delegation, which has concluded its contacts in Ankara, returned to Cyprus in the afternoon. Before its departure, the visiting delegation met with state and deputy prime minister Zeyyat Baykara, the president of the Cyprus Coordination Council. In a statement at the meeting, Baykara said that Turkey is continuously in contact with the federated state officials. Baykara also announced that he will go to Cyprus in the near future in order to study on the spot the problems of the TFSC.

In his statement, Turkish Cypriot National Unity Party leader and Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay, who is a member of the delegation, expressed the belief that the Turkish aid to the TFSC will increase according to needs.

GOVERNMENT ADOPTS OECD INVESTMENT STANDARDS

TA072050 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Turkey's objection since 1976 to the principles agreed upon by OECD countries concerning multinational corporations and international investments has been lifted.

In a statement at the OECD meeting in Paris, Turkey's permanent representative at the OECD Amb Memduh Aytus, said that Turkey will comply with the general principles regarding foreign capital in accordance with the economic policy implemented in Turkey. Pointing out that formalities have been decreased in Turkey in order to encourage foreign investments, Aytus added that the development of the private sector is one of the main goals.

COURT CONFISCATES ISSUE OF ECEVIT'S WEEKLY

TA071601 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Ankara, 7 Apr (AA)--The last issue of the Ankara weekly (ARAYIS) (QUEST) was confiscated by court order for an article on torture signed by ex-Premier Bulent Ecevit today.

The prosecutor for the press obtained the court order for confiscation of No 7 of the weekly, claiming that the article violates Article No 159 of the penal code, which considers an offence any "contempt of the moral identity of the Turkish nation, republic, or government, the military and security forces of the state or its judiciary."

OZTRAK ISSUES STATEMENT ON NATO ANNIVERSARY

TA041056 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 4 Apr 81

[Excerpt] NATO's 32d anniversary is being marked today. The North Atlantic alliance was established following an agreement signed in Washington on 4 April 1949. Turkey joined the alliance in 1942. In a statement he issued on NATO's anniversary, State Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak said that the greatest achievement of the alliance has been that it had kept the war threat away from its area. Noting that the basic aim in the establishment of NATO was to create a deterrent force that would prevent war before it actually started, Oztrak stated that the alliance has attained this goal.

Recalling that Turkey joined NATO in order to ensure its security in the face of the external threats it was facing, Oztrak said: Since that date, Turkey has enjoyed the security insured by the alliance on the one hand, and has made very important contributions to the alliance's defense as a powerful and trustworthy member on the other. Great Ataturk's principle of "peace at home, peace in the world" which has been guiding Turkish foreign policy is in complete harmony with NATO's principle of developing international relations in peaceful ways.

Ilhan Oztrak stressed that Turkey considers NATO as one of the basic factors of its foreign policy and defense. He added that defense cannot be considered separately from economic development. The acting foreign minister also said that for Turkey to be able to continue to make effective contributions to the alliance, cooperation in the field of Turkey's defense industry must be increased.

TCP'S BILEN GREETS CZECHOSLOVAK PARTY CONGRESS

TA071124 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Message by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Comrade Bilen to the 16th Congress of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia; dated 6 April--read by announcer]

[Text] To the 16th Congress of the Communist Party of Czechoslovakia [CPCZ]: Dear comrades, on behalf of all Turkish Communists and the working class, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee greets the 16th CPCZ Congress with the most sincere feelings.

The CPCZ Congress has met at a time when the U.S. administration and the NATO sovereign circles have increased their efforts to undermine detente and to step up their policy of confrontation with the socialist countries. The persistent peace policy of the socialist countries lead by the Soviet Union is the greatest source of security and power for all peace-loving forces. The TCP greatly values the attempts made and steps taken by the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic to develop security and the cooperation process in Europe. We Turkish comrades are very proud of the activities of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic aimed at socialist construction under the administration of the CPCZ, which will celebrate the 60th anniversary of its establishment, and of the success achieved in this direction. The Czechoslovak people are looking into the future with a sound security as a result of the increase in the economic potential, the continuous increase in the people's standard of living and the development of socialist democracy since the 15th congress.

Comrades, imperialist forces and the most aggressive and expansionist circles of NATO want to use our territory for adventurist purposes by taking advantage of the profound crisis in our country and of the conditions prevailing under a military dictatorship. They are instigating anticommunism and activating domestic reaction in a bid to crush certain realistic tendencies in foreign policy and to achieve their goal. The TCP is struggling to secure a single front of all national democratic forces against imperialist impositions under strenuous conditions, dependence on NATO, the exploitation of monopolies and the pressure applied by the military regime on the democratic forces. Our party is working for the development of relations between Turkey and the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic and for strengthening the friendship between the peoples of the two countries.

The TCP and the CPCZ are tied with brotherly ties based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. Comrades, we wish great success to the 16th Congress of the CPCZ. Long live the CPCZ! Long live Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism!

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General Bilen.

REPORTAGE ON NUCLEAR PLANNING GROUP MEETING

Schmidt, Weinberger Comments

LD072208 Hamburg DPA in German 1533 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 7 Apr (DPA)--The Soviet arms drive fills Chancellor Helmut Schmidt with "deep concern," which even a unilateral moratorium by the Kremlin (postponement of the deployment of medium-range missiles--DPA) could not dispel. Addressing the members of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group, Schmidt added, however, that such a moratorium could "naturally have a favorable psychological effect on the resumption of talks."

U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger urged the Europeans to make greater defense efforts and pointed out that the U.S. defense budget for 1982 provides for an increase in real terms of 15 percent over the 1981 budget. Weinberger said that he is not basically against arms control negotiations with Moscow, but he strictly rejects the unratified SALT II agreement. It isn't balanced and doesn't contribute to stability. Weinberger warned the Europeans that the American people will not tolerate a further slackening in the defense efforts of the European states.

Weinberger gave his NATO colleagues a detailed report on the situation in Poland.

Statement on Poland

LD081148 Hamburg DPA in German 1113 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Apr (DPA)--A Soviet intervention in Poland would "undermine" the basis for arms limitation negotiations, NATO Secretary General Josef Luns stated at the end of the 29th meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group [NPG] in Bonn today. Luns said that the NPG defense ministers are of the opinion that a Soviet military intervention would have far-ranging effects on all aspects of East-West relations.

At the beginning of the press conference, Luns read the so-called Poland statement. He said it is the joint opinion of the defense ministers that in the past few weeks the Soviet Union had initiated inceasingly threatening troop movements and other dangerous measures. An actual intervention and the use of or the threat to use military force is "incompatible" with the Soviet Union's own statements, and also with the Helsinki Final Act and the UN charter. According to Luns, the defense ministers stated that "Poland ought to be free to decide its future."

Luns stressed that the NATO ministers expressed concern at the growth in Soviet missile forces. The ministers noted with satisfaction the efforts being made by the United States to strengthen the strategic forces.

The Nuclear Planning Group was united in rejecting the moratorium on medium-range missiles proposed by Moscow. All the defense chiefs stressed the significance of the two parts of the NATO twin decision of December 1979.

U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger also subscribed to the statement that the basis for arms control negotiations will disappear if the Soviets intervene in Poland. He said he had no new information about the situation in Poland. It would be a considerable improvement for international relations if the Soviet Union withdrew to their garrisons the troops that had been drawn up around Poland.

AFP Account

NC081244 Paris AFP in English 1233 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 8 Apr (AFP)--The main points from the NATO Nuclear Planning Group:

"Ministers emphasized their concern about the unrelenting Soviet build-up and improvements in the whole range of their nuclear forces and discussed the consequences of these developments for the East-West balance."

"This continued growth in Soviet forces, and in particular their preponderance of theatre nuclear forces, is potentially destabilising.

"Ministers reiterated their regret that the Soviet superiority in the long-range theatre nuclear forces continues to grow by increases in the already large numbers of SS-20 multiple warhead missiles and Backfire bombers. Due to their extended range-up to 5,000 km Soviet SS-20 missiles deployed in some areas of the non-European part of the Soviet Union nevertheless threaten NATO Europe.

"While still maintaining some 380 SS-4 and SS-5 missiles, the Soviet Union presently deploys about 220 launchers for SS-20 MIRVed missiles. With their SS-20 missiles alone, the Soviets have already deployed some 660 warheads--more warheads than are planned for NATO's long-range nuclear force modernization programme (the first systems of which will not begin to be deployed until later 1983). They are continuing these deployments at a rapid pace."

"Ministers emphasized that NATO will move ahead with its planned schedule of long-range theatre nuclear force modernization while at the same time making efforts to reach balanced, equitable, and verifiable arms control agreements limiting such forces as was decided on 12th December 1979. They expressed the hope that the balance could be achieved at lower levels of armaments."

"Ministers emphasized that the recent Soviet proposal for moratorium (....) could only perpetuate an imbalance unacceptable to the alliance, contrary to the principle of equality established in the December decision as essential to arms control."

DPA Report

[Excerpts] Bonn, 8 April (DPA)--In the event of Soviet intervention in Poland, the North Atlantic alliance sees no further possibility for disarmament negotiations with Moscow. The NATO defense ministers made this plain at the end of the 29th meeting of the alliance's Nuclear Planning Group in Bonn today.

The final version of the communique was delayed by over an hour because, according informed sources, there were differences of opinion about the degree of concern over the Polish situation. The defense ministers finally decided, at the insistence of the Europeans, to replace the American version of a "threat" to possible negotiations with the word to "undermine." It was also said here that obviously the notion at the back of the Americans' minds was that given the existence of a "threat," negotiations were completely pointless. After a press conference, Defense Minister Hans Apel pointed out that a possible "threat" from Moscow could also last for a long time after all. In such a case, if one were to follow the American standpoint, disarmament negotiations would be blocked for the near future. Apel made it unmistakably clear that if the Soviets were to intervene, it would be a "decisive blow" to East-West relations.

TALKS CONTINUE BETWEEN KREISKY, SOVIET PREMIER

AU081143 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Austria--Chancellor Kreisky and Soviet Premier Tikhonov met this morning for a second talk, which focused on world political issues. Yesterday's talks between the two government chiefs were devoted to questions of economic relations. At a reception for the Soviet guest late last night, Kreisky expressed Austria's concern over the exacerbation of the international situation. Kreisky declared that the peoples' right to self-determination must not be impaired by any interference from outside. Compliance with this principle, he said, is the most important prerequisite for peaceful coexistence and the policy of detente. In working talks with Trade Minister Staribacher, USSR Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Komarov confirmed that the USSR is interested in Austria's participation in the Siberia-West Europe pipeline project. Austrian pipe deliveries could be effected in exchange for Soviet natural gas deliveries, he said.

Further Details

[Excerpts] Vienna, 8 Apr (DPA)--According to Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, the Soviet Union is "well aware" of the importance of the Polish question. After a second, 2-hour talk with Soviet Premier Nikolay Tikhonov, Kreisky said in Vienna today that the Soviet premier noted that claims about an imminent intervention by the Soviet Union had also been made in connection with the Warsaw Pact maneuvers in Poland. These have now ceased.

Kreisky said that from his exchange of views with Tikhonov he concluded that Moscow does not want to worsen the atmosphere as regards possible negotiations on limiting the buildup of missiles and wants to preserve the conditions for further talks.

At the dinner on Tuesday evening, Tikhonov said that his country is prepared to resume negotiations with the United States on strategic arms limitation "without delay." According to Kreisky, the USSR is also interested in a positive result at the Madrid CSCE followp conference.

Tikhonov, who arrived in Vienna on Monday and who has invited Kreisky to return the visit, will remain in Austria until Friday. On Thursday he will visit the former concentration camp of Mathausen and the Voest steel works in Linz.

Neutral Austria is the first West European country officially visited by Aleksey Kosygin's successor as Soviet head of government.

POLISH REFUGEES SEEKING ASYLUM, INCREASE PREDICTED

AU081335 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 8 Apr 81 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Summary] Vienna--The tense situation in Poland is reflected in Austrian refugee statistics: In the first 3 months of this year, 1,400 Poles arrived in Austrian refugee transit camps, three times as many as during the corresponding 1980 period. As a result of this massive influx, the regulations regarding granting political asylum are now being more strictly applied. Since the traditional immigration countries are increasingly curbing their immigration quotas in view of current economic difficulties, the large number of refugees is causing additional problems for Austria. Altogether, 1,686 citizens from East European countries--excluding the USSR--were registered in Austrian refugee camps as applicants for political asylum, as against only 650 a year ago. Experts expect a further increase in refugee arrivals from Poland during the summer months.

SCHMIDT CLARIFIES ISSUES AT CABINET MEETING

Brezhnev Visit 'Conditional'

LD081526 Hamburg DPA in German 1420 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Apr (DPA)--The intended visit to Bonn by Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev is, as far as the Federal Government is concerned, conditional on the situation in Poland "not changing." This was made clear by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at today's meeting of the Federal Cabinet.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker once more made it clear to the press that the date of the visit is still open. Everything written in the newspapers about the date is speculation. But certainly no date prior to the Chancellor's visit to Washington on 20-23 May can be considered.

According to Becker, during the cabinet discussion of the situation in Poland, the question was raised of whether after the ending of the Warsaw Pact maneuvers, the troops would be withdrawn or whether they would be given other missions and remain in their present positions. It also was noted in the discussion that Moscow's "tolerance threshold" in the Polish question is "tending to rise." Becker said this results from the Soviet Union's interest in the CSCE followup conference in Madrid, and, on the other hand, Brezhnev's planned visit is also a means of assessing the Soviet attitude toward Poland.

No Support for Wider Talks

LD081716 Hamburg DPA in German 1507 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Apr (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt does not support the Soviet Union's intention to extend to the forward-based systems the planned negotiations on a reduction of medium-range weapons and on the land-based systems.

According to Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, Schmidt made this emphatically clear today at a meeting of the Federal Cabinet. The occasion was a report by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher on his talks last week in Moscow. Genscher told the cabinet that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko had spoken of the impression that Schmidt already had accepted the extension of negotiations desired by Moscow.

According to Becker, Schmidt wanted it to be made clear that in June of last year during his visit to Moscow he had pointed out to Gromyko and Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev that such an extension would only complicate the negotiations, because then Soviet weapons of a similar type would have to be included in the negotiation process.

Genscher once again stressed in his report that Brezhnev's proposal of a moratorium in the stationing of medium-range weapons did not have for Moscow the "nature of a precondition." Foreign Minister Gromyko assured him that this had been a proposal to supplement the disarmament debate.

PAPERS VIEW WEINBERGER SPEECH, NATO MEETING

DIE WELT

DW081217 Bonn DIE WELT in German 8 Apr 81 p 6

[Commentary signed RMC.: "Follow the Example"]

[Text] Secretary of Defense Weinberger's first appearance in the club of the allies has sent more clear signals--demanded by some and feared by others--with regard to the new security and foreign policies of the United States under President Reagan.

First, the United States expects clear preparedness to cooperate from the Soviet Union. Otherwise, Washington will campaign even more decidedly than now for the partners' acceptance of Moscow's power policy challenge.

Second, it is definitely clear that the SALT II agreement in its present form will be accepted neither by the administration nor the Senate in Washington. New negotiations will be necessary on strategic as well as "Eurostrategic" arms.

Third, the United States expects the Europeans to demonstrate "political leadership." Reagan has "educated" his voters to realize that the decade of "detente" as a whole contained advantages for Moscow, and he demands that the political elite of West Europe educate its populace in a similar way. The question is whether the old continent will hear the West's urgent call demanding the strengthening of Atlantic security.

Press Review

DW081109 Cologne Duetschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 8 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] The editorial of the KONSTANZ SUEDKURIER says: The meeting of the NATO defense ministers has two goals: preparing a nuclear strategy and expounding the political intentions of the Western military alliance. Nothing will be known about the nuclear planning. Whatever is said about policies is intended to be heard everywhere, and above all in Moscow. What constitutes another aspect of the meeting in Bonn's Hardthoehe are the appeals of the Americans to the European allies to step up their defense efforts. They must be careful in choosing the right tone of voice, however, for some allies do not like being told that the Americans possibly might not be prepared to assume defense burdens to the advantage of the Europeans. What is at stake is common burdens and common defense--and this must be kept in mind on both sides of the Atlantic.

LUEBECKER NACHRICHTEN comments: Weinberger's appeal is a warning to those European NATO allies who would like to dodge the counterarming jointly decided for balancing the Soviet missiles superiority. But this is also addressed to those SPD circles who fight Helmut Schmidt's approval of the dual decision because in their belief in the harmlessness of the Soviet intentions they deem negotiations alone sufficient.

MUENCHNER MERKUR states: The Federal Republic will keep trying to exert a decelerating influence on the Reagan administration. After all, Chancellor Schmidt already has implored Washington to open disarmament negotiations with the Soviets before the end of the year, lest he incur increased domestic difficulties and lest trouble with the United States crop up. Weinberger's Bonn speech reads like an answer to this: the American people will not understand unless all partners pull together. Reagan has revived the old U.S. will for self-assertion. Fortunately, he does not seem to be prepared to let it wither away again just because some politicians in Europe at large and in Bonn in particular are reluctant to admit that their detente policy has failed.

Essen's NEUE RHUHR-ZEITUNG, in contrast, argues: Granted, there must not be the slightest doubt about the reliability of the Federal Republic as an alliance partner. But, by the same token, it must be clear that armament here cannot be carried out at the expense of social security. For, it is solely thanks to this social security that communism does not stand a ghost of a chance in this country.

The Federal Republic justly may take pride in this, and in this respect, it is also making a better showing than many other NATO states. It is an achievement which at the same time benefits the entire alliance. So far the U.S. protective power has always appreciated this. The Federal Government must keep endeavoring until U.S. President Reagan and his Secretary of Defense Weinberger, too, have mustered understanding for this state of affairs.

As a matter of principle, FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE notes: For 4 years, the Soviet Union has recklessly exploited the Western standstill on the lower margin of the strategic arms category. Granted, Europe need't make up for lost ground with respect to the quantity of these weapons. There is no need for an arms race. Yet, on our side, a minimum is needed for closing the gap against Moscow's attempts at blackmail. For this reason, the moratorium suggested by Brezhnev is useless. It is false, in the double sense of the word [as heard].

PRESS REACTS TO BREZHNEV SPEECH IN PRAGUE

OW081034 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 8 Apr 81

[From the press review]

[Text] MANNHEIMER MORGEN comments: The Poles are being subjected to a hot-cold shower treatment by their brothers in arms in the Warsaw Pact. The day before yesterday, Prague party boss Husak threatened them, in hardly veiled phrases and to the applause of Brezhnev, with interventions to prevent a counterrevolutionary overthrow. Yesterday, Brezhnev in the manner of a benevolent uncle averred that he trusts that the Poles will solve their problems by their own strength. This and the conclusion of the Warsaw Pact exercises indicate a sort of all-clear signal in the Polish crisis. From this, we may draw the conclusion that we need not fear an intervention by Moscow at this moment. Yet, the danger probably is hardly banished for good. After all, the Brezhnev speech in Prague contains ample warning and threatening elements.

BRAUNSCHWEIGER ZEITUNG writes: Applauding, the great master from the Kremlin on Monday assigned to his Prague vassal, Gustav Husak, the role of the terrier permitted to bark at the Poles, while the boss himself on Tuesday took pleasure in playing the role of the serious statesman and champion of socialism. This skillful distribution of parts once again subjected the Poles to a hot-cold shower treatment so that they do not know what their loyal allies and dear comrades all around them are really scheming. Alert yesterday--all clear today. But what about tomorrow? Lech Walesa already shows that he no longer fully measures up to these attribution tactics, for these tactics carried insecurity and thus disunity into the ranks of his Solidarity as well.

The editorial of the Leutkirch SCHWAEBISCHE ZEITUNG reads: Moscow is treating the Polish disease with hot and cold showers. The hint with the biggest bludgeon is followed by verbal stroking for the Warsaw comrades. Husak's threat of action is followed by a Brezhnev displaying reserve again; alarming reports by Western intelligence services on massive troop reinforcements in and around Poland are followed by the announcement that the uncanny, long-lasting maneuvers have been concluded at long last. Hence, the all-clear signal for the Poles? We must warn against rash optimism. In Dubcek's CSSR, similar staff exercises were concluded 10 days before Brezhnev's tanks smashed the dream of socialism with human features. Nobody should push this recollection aside. It teaches that the conclusion of a military exercise does not indicate the end of the threat. What now matters for the West more than ever before is not to say or do anything that might induce Brezhnev to assume that a rape of Poland would not cost Moscow any more than did 21 August 1968.

The Kassel Hessische NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE emphasizes: Unlike the Prague spring of 1968, the Kremlin may assume that the Polish state leadership is loyally devoted to it. There is no Dubcek in Warsaw who proclaims and individual course toward socialism. Thus, for the time being, Brezhnev can do without the ultimate means of pressure, the military intervention. The Kremlin boss will be pleased by this circumstance all the more because he needs to seriously take the predictable U.S. reaction to a Polish adventure. Obviously Reagan's warnings have born fruit after all. Brezhnev is aware that he would risk not only detente but also the disarmament dialogue in which the Soviets are vitally interested.

SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG states: The Soviet party boss is not exclusively fixed on Poland. He has not abandoned the hope that a meeting with the U.S. President can be arranged, and he displays amazing haste in coming to the Federal Republic. In all this, the propelling force is the Soviet desire to prevent the counterarming by the NATO states, also by encouraging the nuclear weapons opponents in the West.

AIRCRAFT STRAYS INTO CSSR; FORCED TO LAND

[Text] Wunsiedel, 9 Apr (DPA)--A light aircraft from the Federal Republic has been forced to land a few kilometers beyond the CSSR border by a CSSR jet fighter. According to the Bavarian border police today, the pilot strayed into CSSR airspace near Wunsiedel in the Fichtelgebirge. The single-engine plane was impounded. The fate of the pilot is unknown.

POLL MEASURES POPULARITY OF CURRENT LEADERS

DW081235 [Editorial report] Mainz ZDF Television Network in German at 2105 GMT on 6 April 1981 in the program "Political Barometer" carries the results of an opinion poll carried out among 1,064 persons. The poll reveals:

Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's popularity has decreased since September 1980. In March 1981, he scored plus 2.2 points, "the worst rating in 3 years."

Foreign Minister Genscher's popularity increased in October 1980 and then decreased up to February 1981. The March 1981 rating was plus 2.2 points, "for the first time as high as that of the chancellor."

CDU/CSU opposition leader Helmut Kohl's rating appeared to be stable. The March rating was plus 1.4 points.

CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss, popularity decreased slightly in March to a rating of minus 0.3 points.

GISCARD ON COMMITMENT TO INTERNATIONAL DIALOGUE

LD080837 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Apr 81 p 12

[Excerpts] Nancy--The first meeting of Valery Giscard d'Estaing's provincial campaign was held late in the afternoon on 31 March at the Metz sports complex and was attended by between 3,000 and 4,000 people.

Giscard d'Estaing presented the "10 proposals for France" which he intends to develop during his campaign. These proposals are divided as follows: "Three things to be maintained: preserving freedom, maintaining security and defending peace and France's place in the world. And seven things to be accomplished: ensuring employment, improving education and research, making our industry more competitive, developing agriculture, increasing solidarity by reducing excessive inequalities, reviving republican life and simplifying the French people's daily lives."

With regard to defending peace and France's place in the world, Giscard d'Estaing stated: "What surprised me most about the early stages of this campaign is that people have chosen to criticize the president of the republic for the efforts he has made to defend peace and ensure France's security. As long as dialogue is useful, I will maintain dialogue for peace. On what grounds do people want to prevent the president of the French Republic from being the interlocutor of the superpowers? On that point, I will obtain broad support from French men and women who support the majority and the opposition: I will maintain France's peaceful dialogue."

With regard to Poland, he said: "Poland must be allowed to live. It is up to the Poles to overcome their problems themselves, free from any interference." The head of state concluded: "In this campaign, I intend to propose an alliance between the heart and the head. What can the heart do without the head and what is the head without the heart?"

MITTERRAND INTERVIEWED ON ELECTION CAMPAIGN ISSUES

LD080951 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Apr 81 p 8

[Report on French television channel 1 interview with PS presidential candidate Francois Mitterrand on 31 March: "France Needs a Great National Upsurge"]

[Excerpts] Questioned first on the personal risks which politicians run, Francois Mitterrand said he does "not think about it" in his "daily activity." After recalling that he once advocated that there should be a vice president of the republic, the Socialist candidate discussed the "very strict conditions" posed by Georges Marchais and asked whether these are preconditions for the PCF standing down in his favor. Mitterrand replied:

"I don't think it is possible to open talks and negotiations either before the first round or between the first and second rounds on the way in which public affairs will be run after the election. I do not, therefore, intend to open negotiations with anybody....
At present, we are all rivals, there are candidates and everybody is upholding his position as he thinks fit. I think that things will be seen in a new light after the first round."

He added: "First, I think that alternation, in other words political change, is deeply desired in France--the need for alternation, for a change of president and policy. The ability to change policy, team and president is the sign of a healthy democracy. Why should we be indefinitely doomed to the same people, especially since when you talk of changing the president, you also have to consider that the president goes with various teams, that new teams are required from time to time.

"In short, I would say that this is necessary. Yes, I stress this, once every 7 years is not too much to have a new view on public affairs. This need is felt all the more if the record of the man ending his 7-year term is a disastrous record or if it is simply a bad, embarrassing or faulty record."

"Great Popular Current"

Mitterrand then said that if he is elected his first task will be to appoint a "transitional government" comprising "those who have approved" his "options" during the election campaign. He explained:

"I intend to remain faithful to the battle which I have been waging, people will say, for 15 years--this is significant--15 or 16 years, in any case since 1965. Because I think that it is absolutely essential to rally and unite, and if possible, reconcile divided people's forces whose division, it must be admitted, leads to the right's victory and that is why the right is now in power. There is a sociological majority which has not yet managed to find its political majority. In my view, the time is now right. I will not turn my back on my past pledges, but what am I supposed to do? A dispute has arisen among the main leftwing political parties in the past 4 years and this dispute must be settled if we want to govern in a sufficiently harmonious and efficacious way in the interests of French men and women....

"I have asked questions and am awaiting answers. I am not in any hurry for them....I said first the PCF leadership must return to the leftwing union which it, unfortunately, broke. I said that the PCF leadership must end this constant and frantic antisocialist campaign. I said that the PCF leadership must also stop playing a double game between the right and the left--as has been seen in some circumstances--and then, regarding foreign policy, a number of open and clear stances must be adopted which show no form of alignment or imitation of foreign countries' policy. I am thinking, in particular, of the Afghanistan affair....But it is not for me to negotiate such things. After the presidential election, after the formation of the government, it will be up to the political parties (that is a proper understanding of the regime!), the political parties and, especially the Communists and Socialists (my definition does not exclude other political organizations), to study and discover whether they are capable of preparing for the elections with a view to forming a majority together."

Mitterrand added: "I have said because I intend to pursue the action which I have been following for many years, through three candidacies for the presidency of the republic, for which I am sometimes criticized and in which I feel some pride in that I have been able, I have had the historic opportunity for so long to represent a fundamental political choice. That is why when I put clear questions, which may seem rather brutal, to the PCF leadership I nonetheless tell the millions of Communist voters that the policy I will follow is a policy in keeping with fundamental and important pledges, in other words that people's movement which probably does not rule out anybody a priori. I mean any of those who would like to join it, and it starts with a program, proposals, action and the rallying of social strata which does not permit confusion....You have mentioned Mr Chirac. You could have mentioned other names.

I am not rejecting anybody, I want a different policy and I am simply asking those who would like to join me whether they accept that policy."

Questioned next on the composition of the team which would surround him and on the possible choice of Michel Rocard as premier, the Socialist candidate replied: "That would be a very good choice."

However, he rejected the idea of a "ticket" similar to the one which Mr Defferre and Mr Mendes France established in 1969. He added: "You name a number of my advisers, those who generally prepare the documents from which I draw my inspiration: It does not all come from my brain, I am surrounded by many good experts. When I think of Michel Rocard, whom you mentioned (I respect him greatly), when I think of Claude Cheysson, when I think of Jacques Deloras, Pierre Uri, Jacques Attali or Pierre Lalumiere--who are all recognized to be among the best in their various fields--I feel that I have a good team capable of taking over, especially in the economic sphere...."

Questioned again on the composition of the government following the dissolution of the National Assembly, which he would announce if he was elected, Mitterrand replied: "No one political party has ever obtained a majority alone in France, not even at the most euphoric point in General de Gaulle's government. (Note 1--in the June 1968 parliamentary elections, the Union of Democrats for the Republic only won 43.65 percent of the votes cast but that result nonetheless enabled it to have an absolute majority in the National Assembly with 293 seats out of 487.) In our democratic system--and this is good--there must always be an association or coalition between general political groups to secure and attain the famous absolute majority without which it is fairly difficult to govern. I would hope that it might be possible to revive the people's movement which I mentioned; there is a big gap between my wish and reality, as I have often sadly observed. I think, therefore, that the Socialists will be like me, in other words they will ask political questions, they will say: Supposing we win, we are going to launch into a great social policy accompanied by a great economic policy, which I hope we will discuss shortly. Anybody who wishes to come with us can do so. It is only natural for there to be discussion among the leftwing parties. In any case, the Socialists will not reject it. Could that take the form of an agreement on standing down in elections? Could it take the form of a government contract if those parties have a majority? I do not know.

Regarding French foreign policy and Giscard d'Estaing's attitude during the Warsaw meeting (note 2--Giscard d'Estaing indicated on television channel 2 on 20 March that he had placed the account of his Warsaw talks with Mr Brezhnev in the National Archives), Mitterrand indicated: "I believe we will have to wait 30 years to know what has been deposited in the National Archives. I think that, in this great national competition known as a presidential election, it is much simpler for Giscard d'Estaing to be honest enough to tell the French people what he said to the Soviet Union's chief representatives."

After reaffirming his stance on Poland--"It is up to the Polish workers themselves to decide what is useful to their cause," he said--and, recalling that he would like a summit conference on Atlantic alliance partners, Mitterrand concluded: "I also criticize the outgoing candidate, who has so much talent and great qualities, for not understanding that it is impossible to spark off, arouse and successfully effect a country's awakening, to arouse the great national upsurge which I want so badly, in injustice and inequality and that a head of state who does not try to remedy poverty, who does not try to balance the nation, has no chance of succeeding in a difficult situation...."

ELECTION OPINION POLLS GIVE DIFFERENT FORECASTS

NC081311 Paris AFP in English 1235 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 8 Apr (AFP)--Two public opinion polls published here today made contradictory forecasts on the outcome of the French presidential elections.

One survey, published in the weekly Paris MATCH, said President Valery Giscard d'Estaing would win the election in the second round with 52 percent of the vote over Socialist leader Francois Mitterrand.

The other poll, in the weekly VSD [VENDREDI, SAMEDI, DIMANCHE], forecast a Mitterrand win with 52.5 percent of the ballots.

In a hypothetical second round contest between Mr Mitterrand and Gaullist Party candidate Jacques Chirac, the Socialist leader was seen as winning handily.

MINISTER COMMENTS ON DETENTE, COMMON MARKET

NC090918 Paris AFP in English 0910 GMT 9 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 9 Apr (AFP)--France considers that the "conditions for pursuing East-West detente are no longer available at the present time," Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Pierre Bernard-Reymond told a dinner given by the "Vivre en Europe" (Living in Europe) Association.

France's wish to maintain dialogue, and particularly to keep its relations with the Soviet Union within the framework of detente, "has often been taken as a synonym for weakness, naivete and even abandon," he told the meeting last night.

"It is quite the reverse. We have an offensive conception of detente...As the rules of the game are not being kept by one of the parties, we consider that the conditions for pursuing detente are no longer available at the present time."

He recalled the "increase of tension due to the attitude of the Soviet Union in certain countries in the world: invading Afghanistan, threatening Poland and omni-present in the Third World."

He noted another reason for increased tension in East-West relations. "The rather unfavorable evolution of the balance of military power," stressing that France was very much in favour of a balance of power "even though her strategy is sometimes very different from its Atlantic allies."

Referring to problems faced currently by the 10-nation European Common Market, Mr Bernard-Reymond said that the enlargemmet from the original membership to six had to been successful.

"The graft, so far as Britain is concerned, has not taken," he said.

He added: "The rules of the Agricultural Common Market were made for producer countries. But we have accepted a nation which is essentially a consumer and which has an historical tendency to but its products outside the Common Market.

"Adaptation, at present, is very difficult."

The minister added: "There is another difficulty--little by little we are reaching a situation where the Agricultural Common Market will be self-sufficient at a European level. We will be called on to become an export power outside Europe."

But he praised progress made over poltical cooperation between Common Market members, pointing out that before the entry of Greece (January 1, 1981) their votes at the United Nations were more than 66 percent in agreement.

GISCARD SAYS MEDICAL AID, ENVOY SENT TO LEBANON

LD090845 Paris LE MONDE in French 8 Apr 81 p 6

[Excerpt] Two French Air Force C.160 Transall aircraft carrying medical aid were due to take off for Beirut early 7 April after the Lebanese Government accepted the offer of aid made by President Giscard d'Estaing on Monday morning. The head of state also sent former Ambassador in Beirut Hubert Argod to the country.

According to the Defense Ministry each of the planes will carry 5 doctors, 2 nurses, 62 stretchers and medicine. They will bring back--on an unspecified date--Lebanese victims of the Zahlah bombardments, who will be treated in French hospitals.

Explaining these decisions, Giscard d'Estaing said at an election meeting in Montreuil (Seine-Saint-Denis) on Monday: "This morning I once again considered the sad situation in Lebanon--a country which, as you know, is our country's brother and in which there are Christian communities which have our religious and linguistic tradition. It is a country which presently is being torn apart by fratricidal confrontations and bombardments once again. So it was first necessary to decide to send humanitarian aid to Lebanon. Then it was necessary--and I did this this afternoon--to send a French envoy to the Lebanese president to see what could be done on a political level to end these bombardments and confrontations and to bring the matter to the attention of international bodies at the most effective levels."

PEACE-KEEPING FORCE FOR LEBANON MENTIONED

LD081524 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 8 Apr 81

[Text] France's special envoy in Beirut, Hubert Argod, left the Lebanese capital this afternoon on an Air France plane which took off earlier than scheduled because the shooting in Beirut is now threatening the airport's operations. Mortar fire is raining down on the residential area of Beirut at a rate of 10 shells an hour.

The former French ambassador in Lebanon said that France will give the country political and humanitarian assistance. In diplomatic circles in Paris, it is thought that France is planning to form a new international peace-keeping force for Lebanon if, of course, the Lebanese authorities ask for it. However, this would also depend, among other things, on UN Security Council approval for the creation of such a force.

STIRN TALKS WITH BARBADIAN FOREIGN MINISTER

FL071701 Bridgetown CANA in English 1654 GMT 7 Apr 81

[Text] Paris, 7 Apr (CANA-REUTER)--Barbados Foreign Minister Henry Forde today discussed the situation in the Caribbean region and Franco-Barbados relations with French Deputy Foreign Minister Olivier Stirn, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said. Mr Forde, on a visit to France, spent part of the morning in talks with Mr Stirn before the two men held a working lunch, the spokesman said.

Mr Stirn visited Barbados last year when it was decided to maintain regular bilateral contacts and increase cooperation between the two states. Mr Forde is due to visit a number of public and private enterprises during his visit to France including the National Solar Energy Authority's installations.

[Text] Rome, (INA)--Iraq's oil minister, Tayih 'Abd al-Karim, said Arab countries' great contribution to world economic progress and stability through the supply of energy should be looked at in parallel with the sacrifice given by these countries to achieve its economic development objectives.

Addressing "the seminar on development through cooperation among OAPEC, Italy and the south European states" opened in Rome today, the minister said the Arab countries, as developing nations, do its best to develop its economic resources on modern basis to narrow the existing gap between these countries and the developed countries.

Iraq's oil minister, also member of the Revolution Command Council (RCC), explained that the Arab countries look forward through its relations with other nations to achieve wider aspects of noble cooperation in the field of raising the efficiency of its cadre and obtaining the latest technological know-how.

The minister said that when the Arab countries try to preserve the real value of its oil royalties, through the preservation of its power of purchase by means of compensating traces of world inflation and the effects of currency fluctuation, they endeavour to gradually rectify oil prices in parallel to the alternative energy resources prices taking into consideration the rates of world inflation and economic development besides currency fluctuation.

Having in mind that "oil is a depleted wealth, we have to work hard to build solid economic basis capable of developing our economy through the existing plans of development adopted by us in different fields", the minister pointed out.

Iraq's oil minister called on the developed south European countries to leave the door open for the Arab countries to get the needed knowledge for the development of their self capabilities and assist them by rendering consultations or implementing their projects of development.
